But instead of the bonus, I demanded that he give Lionel the part of the organ grinder in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird" in which Uncle Jack was to open in September. It was a wonderful part and I knew Lio could play it superbly. Mr. Frohman had ready decided on someone else, but I sa "Well, that's all I want and I really thi Lionel should have it." And at last M Frohman promised to let him do it.

I had another lovely summer (in Englan staying with Millie Sutherland at Staffo House and with her sister Daisy at Warwi Castle and with Lady Randolph Churchi Winston Churchill's mother. I kept seei Winston there and everywhere, and the frien ship that began between us then has last ever since.

He was in the House of Commons, and and some other more or less unruly you members, Hugh Cecil, Lord Salisbury's so and Ian Malcolm and others, were known The Hooligans.

Winston and Henry James and Ha Rosslyn, Millie's brother, were at her cotta one weekend when I was there. At lun Millie made the mistake of saying to Her James, "Did you have a pleasant walk th morning?"

And he said "Yes" in two and a half pag of monologue with hardly a semicolon a never a period—a superb performance.

I saw Henry James quite often that summ and we got on tremendously well together loved to ask him questions and hear his lon rambling answers. My appearance alwa seemed to amuse him; he said I was rath Gothic and reminded him of a cornice on Gothic building.

After that summer in London I did not s Henry James again for several years. Then o day, as I was walking along Fifth Avenue hansom stopped near me and suddenly son one jumped out almost at my feet, sayin "Hello." It was Henry James.

"Peter Pan" was playing in London w Pauline Chase as Peter, and with Gerald Maurier as both Captain Hook and M Darling. I was in Mr. Frohman's office at t Savoy Hotel when he and Barrie were dec ing to take the play to Paris for one perfor ance. Barrie said, "Why not take little Eth along with us?"

And they did. It was the first time that I h ever been to Paris, but I paid almost no atte tion to it; I was too excited about being wi the company and seeing the play.

In London I saw "A Country Mouse," light satiric comedy which was to be my ne play. Then I went to Dunrobin in Augu stayed with Margot and Henry Asquith o my way down to London, and then can back to New York.

"The Mummy and the Humming Bird" ha opened and Lionel, as I had been sure would, was making an enormous impressi

"I told her she couldn't cook. And she agreed with me."

Every time you brush your teeth refresh your eyes with a 2-drop bath of MURINE

Eyes tired? Two drops of Murine in each eye refresh them in seconds! Murine's seven tested ingredients make it gentle as a tear—use it daily, regularly, as often as your eyes feel tired. It makes your eyes feel good.

MURINE for your eyes

as the organ-grinder. Florence and John Magee asked me to go with them to see the play. They were taking an Italian count, a Roman, with them, and I asked Florence to put me next to him because I wanted to see what effect Lionel's performance—he didn't speak a word of English in the part—would have on a real Italian.

In the play Uncle Jack was supposed to be a gentleman expecting a lady to dinner in his rooms in London. There was a beautiful table ready for her but she was late and finally, when he realized that she wasn't coming, he angrily told his servant to go out to the street and bring in the first person that he saw, man or woman. The servant brought in Lionel with his organ and his monkey. With neither Uncle Jack nor Lionel supposed to speak or understand a word of the other's language, the scene between them was terrific and Lionel was simply superb in it.

After the first act I turned to the count and said, "What did you think of the Italian?"

He said indignantly, "He is not an Italian. He is a Sicilian."

Probably the best notice anyone ever got!

It was while I was playing in Washington in "A Country Mouse" that Theodore Roosevelt amazed me by his extraordinary memory. Alice Roosevelt was a friend of mine, and she had asked me to lunch at the White House, where I sat next to Mr. Roosevelt. He had seen the play the night before, and seemed to know it as well as I did. He quoted speech after speech from it, absolutely verbatim.

ALICE and I were going to the matinee at Keith's after lunch with Nick Longworth and Marguerite Cassini and when Alice went upstairs to put on her hat, I went with her. The White House elevator in those days was an old-fashioned, self-service one, operated by a rope. Quentin and Kermit, Alice's little half brothers, thought it would be funny to open the doors so the elevator couldn't move. They kept us between floors for over an hour while they roared with laughter. We could not make anybody hear us.

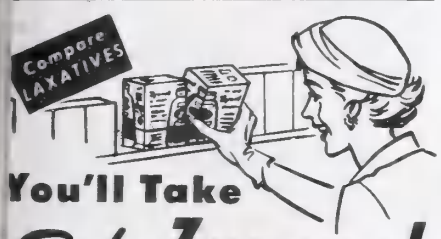
During all this time Nick was downstairs with Marguerite Cassini, one of the most attractive girls in Washington. Alice was not amused. Almost immediately afterward she and Nick were engaged. Alice was and is brilliant, attractive, arresting. Her marriage to Nick Longworth was the marriage of two of my very dearest friends.

Some years ago, about three presidential elections back, I was in Washington again and a newspaperman asked me who I was for in the election, Roosevelt or Dewey. I never had liked Mr. Dewey very much, and I said, "Roosevelt." So, for lack of news, I suppose, they printed it in the newspapers.

As I walked into my room, back at the hotel, the telephone was ringing. I went to it, picked up the receiver, and the voice said, "Traitor!"

I said, "Hello, Alice."

"How dare you!"



I said, "Come over here and don't be silly."

She was over there in about two minutes. The close friendship between us has always continued, in spite of some differences of opinion. Whenever I was playing in Washington I used to go with Alice practically every day and sit in the Senate gallery and listen to the debate.

The year that I played "A Country Mouse" in New York I lived in the first place I had ever been able to call my own. It was an apartment on West 59th Street, overlooking the park—a place I love to remember. There were eight rooms and the rent was $100 a month. Years later I had another apartment in the same building, on Central Park South, three doors down from the Plaza, with three rooms for $300 a month.

I remember that I had a wonderful time buying the furniture, especially the piano, which was the first of the series of Steinways I have owned and loved. Already I had a lot of books and a really considerable collection of music.

There was a music room opening off from the living room. I bought a "Winged Victory" and hung copies of my favorite paintings on the walls—"The Pearl Diver," which I had seen in the Louvre, and some of Whistler's.

You'll Take Safe Zymenol

Choice of Many Doctors

Zymenol is used by thousands and thousands on doctors' recommendations. For safe, natural regularity in your family, always use Zymenol.

Efficient
Safe for all ages

for a Wealth of Health

- Easy to take
- Sugar free
- Contains healthful brewers yeast
- Non-habit forming
- ECONOMY SIZE: $1.25

If you prefer handy tablets or tasty granules, ask for Zymelose . . . $2.

Your druggist is in business for your health. Buy from him.

OTIS E. GLIDDEN & CO., INC., Waukesha 8, Wis.

Write for facts about the dangers of constipation

Copyright 1955, Otis E. Glidden & Co., Inc.

FALSE TEETH
That Loosen
Need Not Embarrass

Many wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wobbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (non-acid) powder, on your plates. Holds false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

Now...a new kind of comfort for every homemaker!

COSCO
SUPER DE LUXE
Posture Step Stool

MODEL 40-A $16.95*

Adjustable for individual comfort

Up and down . . . in and out . . . tilts automatically!

● Now the comfort adjustments of modern office seating have been brought to the kitchen . . . in this new Cosco Step Stool! Provides firm, fatigue-relieving support in the small of your back . . . helps you stay fresh and fit all day long. Roomy, sloping seat is 24¼" high . . . just right for ironing board, range and sink. Rubber-treaded "swing-away" steps make a safer, six-leg ladder for reaching and climbing. At leading department, furniture and hardware stores. Get one in your home right away . . . and make yourself comfortable!

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION ■ COLUMBUS, INDIANA

*Slightly higher Colorado and west, and in Canada.

Shown above: Model 40-A: Chromium-plated legs; washable Duran upholstery in red, yellow, green or charcoal. Also: Model 40-AB: Black enamel legs; upholstery in coral, chartreuse or charcoal.

Left: COSCO also offers two Posture Kitchen Stools, Models 9-G and 9-GB (shown), with comfort adjustments and color selections identical to those of Models 40-A and 40-AB respectively. $12.95*

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Buy with Confidence
THIS IS A GENUINE COSCO PRODUCT
Famous for Quality and Value

Other COSCO Stools as low as $3.45*

CHOOSE

Revere Ware...

THE "WORLD'S FINEST"

SKILL WITH SKILLETS!

Revere's skill in making copper-clad stainless steel skillets is one reason why "Good Cooks Everywhere Choose Revere Ware"! There are four sizes plus the popular Breakfast Units with egg poacher. All feature the famous Bakelite sure-grip handles and knobs . . . and copper on the bottom for better cooking.

Look for the Revere Ware display with the full line of sauce pans, tea kettles, double boilers, coffee makers, sauce pots, mixing bowls, handy pans, canisters, gift sets ... the "World's Finest" cooking utensils! Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated, Rome Manufacturing Company Division; Rome, N. Y.; Clinton, Ill.; Riverside, Calif.

COPPER ON THE BOTTOM MAKES THE DIFFERENCE

The walls of the apartment were white and I had a dark red sofa. I remember wanting a gold-colored one because Mummum had had a dull gold brocade sofa in her house and my mother had had one in London, but I couldn't afford it or the kind of furniture to go with it.

In those days, as I began to be well known, girls of my own age or near it began dressing like me, imitating my hats and the way I wore my hair. This was a surprise to me; I had not been aware of it until reporters began writing that it had become a prevailing fashion. My hair was straight, so I wore it that way. It was brown, so I wore it brown, simply arranged—just as it is now except that it has been cut and then it was in a knot, low at the back.

During all those years when it had been necessary for me to count the pennies that I spent on clothes I had decided that the cheapest way to dress, both inexpensively and well, was to wear black or white or gray. So I wore black or white or gray, and kept on doing it more or less long after expense had ceased to be so important.

I HAD some other ideas about dress and still have them, the same ideas. I would say to an interviewer today very much the same things that I said to Gustav Kobbé when he came to interview me in that apartment on Central Park South. In the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL for June, 1903, he quoted me—accurately—as saying:

"It is the way a dress is cut and made and worn that makes it pretty; the material doesn't matter much. Put good work into the most ordinary material and you have a pretty dress. I once had a dress made of hop sacking—just the rough, common kind. I had it well made and well cut, and it was as much admired as any dress I ever had. Take this red corduroy I have on now. I could just as well have had it of red velvet. It would have cost much more. But I preferred it of corduroy; first, because it cost less, and second, because I like to take an inexpensive material and make something pretty out of it."

I had to make my own clothes long enough to learn something about dressmaking, and when I could afford to have a dressmaker make them for me, I was able to tell her what I wanted and just how it was to be built. I had begun to design, not only my own dresses, but those I wore on the stage.

While I was furnishing the apartment I began rehearsing in "A Country Mouse" in which, for the first time, Bruce McRae was my leading man.

The play was a success in New York and on tour. When we were in Boston I got a letter saying, "Would it be possible to give me an hour or maybe two? I would like to do a drawing of you and I would be so honored to present you with the drawing afterward." The letter was signed John Singer Sargent.

Of course it was the most exciting thing. He was working on his "Prophets" for the Boston Public Library and was staying with the Montgomery Searses. Mrs. Sears had given him the whole top floor of her house for his studio, and that is where he made the sketch of me. I remember that he always had trouble with the self-working elevator. It would stop and go, stop and go, and finally get there.

He was delightful, humming around the room while he worked. He would sit down occasionally while in the midst of the drawing and play little snatches on the piano and then come back to his work again. He found it was very hard to draw my mouth. He would say, "I try to draw a delicate line and I produce a beam." He gave me the drawing, which he said later was his favorite charcoal. It is quite my most treasured possession.

It was during this season that I saw my father on the stage for the last time. I can remember having seen him in only two plays. Once, when I was quite small, I was taken to see him as Armand in "Camille" with Olga Nethersole. The only other play in which I can remember having seen him was the last one in which he appeared. He was superb as Rawdon Crawley in "Becky Sharpe" with Mrs. Fiske.

I have always regretted that I saw so litt him. I remember his superlative beauty how engaging and gay he was, but I hear the amusing anecdotes about him and stabbing wit only from other people. Ever though, it is good to remember them. On them that I like best is the story of the po ous man who kept saying, "I'm a self-m man, sir. Sir, absolutely self-made."

And my father said, "What interru you?"

Father wrote a dramatization of "Les sérables" and wanted to play Jean Valjea it. Someone said to him, "But, Berry, can get a New York manager to produce it?"

"Produce it?" father said. "I can't g New York manager to pronounce it!"

But in the best of all the stories about it is my mother who carried off the hon One Sunday morning as she was leaving house on her way to church, she met my ther on the doorstep just coming in. He still in evening clothes, top hat, white tie tails, buttonhole, very jaunty. He said, "W Georgie, where are you going?"

And she said, "I am going to Mass and can go to hell."

A really proper convert!

Father wrote a play called "Najezka" sent it to Sarah Bernhardt in Paris. Two ye later "Tosca" was produced and it was pr tically father's play even down to the cand Bernhardt dismissed his protests. He ne got over it. When he was dying, he still tal about it.

Father's friend Tyrone Power pla "Najezka" in Australia and it was also pla in London.

Sometimes when father was in Philadelp he would come to the c vent and take me out lunch, but he could ne take me to his hotel beca he always lived in terri ones. He had to, beca he always traveled with animals—a mongoose, raccoon and some monk and birds—and had to to some hotel that would take in his menage

How can you have friends if you don't let people impose upon you? —C. R. CALLIHAN

I shall always wish that I might have s him oftener and known him better.

In August I began rehearsing my new pl "Cousin Kate," a light comedy by Hub Henry Davies. What I remember best abo the tour of "Cousin Kate" was something t happened when we were playing in Bost Sir Henry Irving was there making his fi tour of America, by himself, without El Terry. He was playing Louis XI; I had ne seen it and I very much wanted to see him in it, so one night I dashed over to the st door of the Colonial Theatre, and they smu gled me in. I hid behind the black velvet c tains and watched Sir Henry die on a sto bench. The curtain stayed down as it alwa did when he died on the stage. And he look up under his eyebrows and said, "Is that t little Bullfinch there?"

I WENT over and sat on the bench with hi He said, "And so you're a great star now."

I said, "Oh, no, Sir Henry. That's the sy tem here."

"What's the matter?" he said. "Aren't y happy?"

"No, not very," I said.

"What do they say about you?" he said.

"Oh, they say I look all right and I ha this and that and the other, but that I a always Ethel Barrymore."

He put his long, delicate hand on mine a said, "See to it that they never say anythi else."

Those words have carried me through all t years. No notice ever made me miserab again.

The next summer when I went back London I took an apartment in Charles Stre in Berkeley Square and Jack spent part of t summer with me there.

Sommie Somerset, who was one of t "Three Gringos" in Dick Davis' book, w married to Lady Katherine Beauclerk, daug ter of the Duke of St. Albans, direct descen ant of Charles II and Nell Gwyn. Kitty thoug it would be fun if she and Sommie and Jac

CONTINUED ON PAGE 167

igidaire brings you the hinking Top to take the watching and waiting out of surface cooking —automatically

We saw how meal making kept you jumping . . .
then designed this new Frigidaire Electric Range ou had to run back and forth too much—turn-ıg heat up or down. You had to wait too long -for coffee, for warming foods. You, we decided, eeded surface units with automatic temperature ontrol. Faster heat, too! And here they are!

lew Heat-Minder Unit automatically controls emperatures within-the-pan. Keeps heat comletely even, indefinitely. Shortening never gets oo hot, too cool, but just right for perfect golden-rown frying. Slow-cooked foods need no stir-ing, never burn, on this automatic unit.

lew Speed-Heat Unit heats up double-quick, hen automatically goes to exact cooking speed ou have pre-selected. Sears in seconds. Makes offee perk, quickly. Warms foods swiftly.

Other "thinking" features include a Multi-Duty Thermizer with adjustable thermostat. Gives perfect deep fat frying. Makes a deep-well cooker, a steamer, small oven and corn popper.

Automatic appliance outlet has your coffee ready when you get up. Imperial Cook-Master cooks dinner automatically in the bigger of two Even-Heat Ovens while you're away! And every feature helps you to quick, easy cleaning. Surface units lift up, oven parts slide out!

Just $4.75 a week, after a minimum down payment, brings you this Frigidaire range. Other models as low as $1.92 a week. For exact terms see your Frigidaire Dealer. Ask about all the wonderful Frigidaire appliances Arthur Godfrey recommends on radio and TV.

Frigidaire

Built and backed by General Motors

The sterling that blends tradition with today

Classic Rose

A sterling marriage! This pattern combines a functional modern shape with a deeply carved rose—symbol of chivalry and romance. A 6 piece setting, $31.00.*

Silver Sculpture

Here is beauty that could come only from the gleam of silver itself. Reed & Barton's dramatic new pattern is sculptured sterling silver. A 6-piece place setting, $32.50.*

Silver Wheat

Reed & Barton's inspired new "Americana look" in sterling gives you both contemporary simplicity and true warmth of feeling. A 6-piece place setting is only $29.75.*

*Price per 6-piece setting is for knife, fork, teaspoon, soup spoon, salad fork, butter spreader, Federal Tax included. At all leading silverware stores. Write Reed & Barton, Dept. J-51 for information and free booklet.

REED & BARTON

SILVERMASTERS SINCE 1824 • TAUNTON, MASSACHUSETTS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 164

l went off and took rooms at an inn here without any maids or valets. So ent to a small place on the river where all the rooms they had. When Som- ck and I went down to dinner, there Kitty and after we had waited a long r her, I went upstairs and found her before a dressing table crying. She said, t know how to put up my hair."

it up for her and we went downstairs. uelo Vanderbilt Balsan's book says tty resembled her Stuart ancestors, but she looked amazingly like some of the ts of Nell Gwyn.

e I was in England that summer I had funny experience, staying at Warwick with a large house party. I had been everal times before but this time I was huge, magnificent room, the kind of ou look at and say, "Queen Elizabeth ave slept here." I think Daisy gave it to ause there was a bathroom down the real bathroom. I had put on a dressing screwed my hair up tight on top of my nd, with a sponge in my hand, started the famous for the bath- Turning a cor- alked straight a group of can tourists stle was open public every ay, though I know it). Just as flying by, I a girl say, , mamma! was Ethel nore!" What a ing and star- xperience for who had ex- to see the of Queen Eliz- at least.

ther thing I re- er that year Anthony and Hope giving a r for Millie erland, for they had hired , very ancient They coached atiently to an- e "Her Grace, chess of Sutherland" but when the time he was tongue-tied, so Millie came in, ng, and announced herself.

as always trying to let myself get mar- There was a friend of many friends of named Harry Graham, a gay, brilliant re of great charm and attraction who ritten several books of verse. He liked o, and there I was again with a faint that this time was it.

family were extremely kind to me. They n the House of Lords end of the Houses liament. His father, Sir Henry Graham, ome legal position in the House of Lords. rst time I met him I saw him come hurry- rough the Gothic halls leading from the of Lords to his own domicile to be in or tea to meet Harry's young lady. He n a full-bottomed wig, slightly askew, flowing gown. Whenever I dined there, enry would go to the piano and sing songs, of which he had an enormous ory. Something about him always touched ry deeply.

PT on meeting Harry at the different ry houses where I stayed and also in on. When Barrie had a cricket week— s versus writers—Harry was there as an r, along with many others. Some of us d at Barrie's house and the overflow d at an inn. We all ate at the house—in rden, in the sitting room and in the din- om. There were a great many of us: Ed- Abbey in white flannels, rather fat, dash- ound catching cricket balls, or rather not ing them; and Maurice Hewlett, playing et rather romantically. And, of course, e himself. It was a wonderful party. After et when we came back to the house Barrie used to play croquet on the lawn. Little Michael Davies, the grandson of George du Maurier, never left Barrie's side. He was about four or five years old. Barrie, with his pipe in his mouth, holding a croquet mallet in one hand and the other clasping the little boy's hand, would walk quietly and silently all over the lawn.

One of Harry's cousins was the Duchess of Portland. She was very beautiful. She wore huge, pale pink carnations called "Malmaisons" that came from her greenhouses. The duke was Master of Horse for King Edward. We went to lunch there one day, and I was delighted and charmed by the tall, powdered-haired footmen in their scarlet coats. Apparently anyone connected with the royal household dressed their footmen in scarlet coats. Perhaps an English girl would have taken it as a matter of course, but it was rather like a fairy tale to me.

I had hoped that I would be able to bring myself to marry Harry Graham and so did all our friends. But although I really agonized about it because it was a fine and rare human being that I was hurting, I knew I might have hurt him more if I married him without being far surer of myself than I was. I will always be glad that we remained friends all our lives.

I want to make it quite clear that I have written about having been engaged to Harry and to Laurence Irving and Gerald du Maurier only because so much has been written, often so inaccurately, about these three engagements. Growing up, as I did, in a household where personal affairs were never spoken of—much less discussed—made this goldfish-bowl existence a horror for me. Of course there were no columnists then, but I hated people peering. I had practically two lives, side by side, the theater and the other, my private life, which doesn't exist any more but which I, for many years, clung to.

The goldfish bowl has been one of the hardest things I have had to cope with. It is growing, or the vulgarity of it seems to be growing, and it is not limited to the theater; it goes, apparently, with making a mark of any kind. Nowadays there are paid publicists; I gladly would have paid not to be written about.

Back home to America in September again for work. I was successful enough now to be sure that Mr. Frohman would always have a play waiting for me, and this year it was "Sunday."

I had to invent an accent for "Sunday." In the play I was a foundling who had been brought up by four miners, three of them old, one young, who all talked like Bret Harte characters, so I talked like that, too, with hard r's and my own idea of a broad, frontier accent. Before my first entrance, when one of the miners called to me to know where something was, I answered from off stage, "It's on the bew-rah."

There was a very distinguished old critic, William Winter, who said I was particularly good in this play because it suited my form of speech!

In the second act, which took place in England, I read aloud to my English relatives a letter from the "boys" who had brought me up. I came to a part that I didn't want them to hear, and I stopped and my aunt said, "Go on, Sunday."

According to the script I just ran off the stage without answering, so at one of the early rehearsals I said to Mr. Frohman, who was

FIGHT COMMUNISM

with

"Truth Dollars"

Join the millions of Americans who are fighting Communism behind the Iron Curtain with "Truth Dollars"... dollars that support Radio Free Europe broadcasts to 70 million freedom-hungry people. Send your "Truth Dollars" to Crusade for Freedom, c/o your local Postmaster, today.

MATICO Confetti

new, rugged, plastic fortified asphalt tile stays lustrous under the most trying circumstances.

gay, sparkling new tile flooring vivid new Confetti pattern sets a new floor fashion ... rich looking, tasteful, colorful. You'll love it!

in step with fine home decoration so practical ... lively, decorator colors are made to last and last. Cleaning is quick and easy.

QUALITY CONTROLLED MATICO PRODUCTS Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SC 216

Who'd ever guess it costs so little?

You pay such a small price for beauty when you ask for MATICO Confetti. And it's easy to install it yourself for big savings.

now in "no-scrub" VINYL

For the first time, MATICO's famous Aristoflex vinyl-plastic tile is available in Confetti Patterns! This superlative new flooring combines the magic of vinyl with the striking beauty of Confetti in tile that doesn't ever have to be scrubbed. So wonderful to look at! So easy to live with!

Visit your MATICO dealer soon! You'll find his name listed under "MATICO TILE" in your classified directory.

MASTIC TILE CORPORATION OF AMERICA

Joliet, Ill. ▪ Long Beach, Calif. ▪ Newburgh, N.Y.

Manufacturers of: Confetti • Aristoflex • Parquetry • Asphalt Tile • Cork Tile • Plastic Wall Tile

CLOROX makes linens more than white...

it makes them sanitary, too!

Yes, homemakers responsible for family health depend on Clorox to make cottons and linens snowy-white, hygienically clean. For Clorox removes dinginess, stains, even scorch and mildew . . . and disinfects, too! No other home laundering product equals Clorox in germ-killing efficiency!

And Clorox-clean linens are so fresh and clean smelling, because Clorox deodorizes, eliminates musty odor . . . even when you have to dry indoors. Clorox is extra gentle, too . . . free from caustic, made by an exclusive, patented formula. There are no gritty particles in Clorox, a liquid, to damage your wash or washer.

New kitchen beauty and health protection, too, with CLOROX! Clorox is a favorite of millions for routine cleaning of kitchen surfaces. It removes stains, deodorizes, disinfects...all at the same time...all without scrubbing. And the Clorox type of disinfection is recommended by hundreds of public health departments! For many helpful hints, and directions, see the label.

When it's CLOROX-clean . . . it's SAFER for family health!

sitting down in the orchestra, "It seems so rude just to run off without saying anything. I think I ought to say something to her."

He said rather testily, "Well, what do you want to say?"

I said, "Oh, maybe something like 'That's all there is. There isn't any more.'"

For some reason that line has been given an importance far beyond its merit or its meaning. I had forgotten all about its origin until one time when I had promised to do something in an Actors' Fund benefit and decided to do an imitation of Cissie Loftus and Elsie Janis imitating me. Cissie Loftus always imitated me reading the letter from "Sunday," and I went to Mr. Frohman's office, where the bound manuscripts of all the plays that he ever produced were on file, to copy the passage that I needed. But when Mr. Reilly, who was in charge, let me see the manuscript of "Sunday" that passage wasn't there. Then suddenly I remembered how I had made it up at that rehearsal. It had never been typed into the manuscript of the play!

It was while I was playing "Sunday" in Philadelphia that Alf Hayman came over to tell me that my father had died.

We closed the play for a few nights. Mr. Hayman brought me back to New York where I met Jack. He and I telegraphed Uncle Jack to ask if we might bury father in the Drew family plot in Philadelphia and he said we might. So we brought father back to Philadelphia, where only Jack and I and some old family retainers we hadn't seen for years were at the cemetery. This ended a chapter in my life that has always seemed tragically incomplete.

When we reopened the play Jack joined the company and played the young miner, Jacky, for the rest of the long tour. He was awfully good sometimes, when he wanted to be, but he was not taking the theater very seriously then.

On that tour we had quite a little trouble with Jack, and several times I had to telephone Mr. Frohman to telegraph Jack that he was fired. Then Jack, who hadn't been speaking to me for days, would come and say, "Here's a telegram from Charles Frohman. You've got to do something about it." And I would say, "You've got to pull yourself together," and he'd say, "I will." And here and there he did.

After the tour was over, someone persuaded me to do a matinee of "A Doll's House" in Boston. Jack was staying in Maine, but I got him down to play Doctor Rank. That was when I knew he was always going to be good, and more than good. This was even before he attempted the light-comedy parts in which he was so successful. People thought they discovered him when he played in "Justice," but I discovered him long before in "Sunday" and in "A Doll's House."

AT the end of the season of "Sunday" I went back to London. "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" was playing there with Ellen Terry taking the mother's part and Irene Vanbrugh in the part of the daughter. I went to see the play and a little one-act piece which preceded it—"Pantaloon," also by Barrie, and played by Gerald du Maurier. This one-act play so devastated me and made me cry so hard that I could not stay that night to see "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire." I remember going to Gerald's dressing room and bawling on and on. I had to come back another time to see "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" without seeing "Pantaloon" first.

Of course Mr. Frohman had these pla America and he wanted me to take the p the daughter in "Alice," as I was then twenty-one years of age. But Barrie in that I play the part of the mother. I cou understand why Mr. Barrie wanted me t this part, so I asked him.

He said, "Because I see you playing hear you saying all those things in the last

BARRIE said that I had "the mother t and he had his way. I had white in my ha wore long earrings and tried to believe looked forty, but the other day I saw a p graph of me in the part and I didn't look I looked eight. Apparently, though, it w right. The play was a success.

I remember how Barrie and Mr. Fro used to sit together hour after hour in Frohman's rooms in the Savoy Hotel in don, sometimes talking and sometime uttering a sound for, oh, spaces of time.
I would be with them and would wonder they were thi about, if anyth Barrie eating his pipe and Mr. F man smoking cigars, and not s a word.

One day after B had gone Mr. F man said, "Wasn wonderful? Wha you suppose he thinking about?"

I was still p young and I sai don't suppose he thinking about thing." Mr. Froh didn't like that.

Jack had a pa
"Alice-Sit-by-Fire" and also peared with Lion
"Pantaloon," so when we opened a Criterion, all thre us were at least ir same theater, w was the nearest ever came to b in the same
Lionel was superl
Pantaloon and so
Jack as Harlequin would leap across room and land cr legged on a ta although he had n done it before.

It was during this season that Lionel g nervous terror of the theater and became most obsessed with the idea that he was go to forget his lines. He never did forget th but the fear was so strong in him that he ca to me one day and said he must stop. He stop acting for several years and went to in Paris to study painting, but eventually, I glad to say, he came back to the theater, wh he belonged. He was only a fairly good ar but a really great actor, so I was very ha when he came back to his own field, in wh
I have always felt he was superb.

We were scheduled to end our tour in spring with two weeks in Boston, but I suddenly stricken with appendicitis and Boston engagement had to be canceled. Th
I took a cottage at Cornish, New Hampsh a place of beautiful gardens where many art and authors lived. To me the most exciting them was Saint-Gaudens'. He was then do his wonderful Lincoln, and he used to let watch him work. The head was finished, an never could look at it without wanting to c Saint-Gaudens was very ill that summer—fact, he was dying. I have always felt it a gr privilege to have known him at all.

My house belonged to the Harry Fulle she being Lucia Fairchild who painted su beautiful miniatures. It was a most charmi place with a swimming pool in the garde surrounded by a brick wall, and I had enormous studio. Richard Harding Davis a his wife came to stay with me, and also friend, Mrs. Wolcott, from Buffalo.

NEXT MONTH

"I won't be mad," Linnea told herself, "I won't say nothing to Olaf—he can't help it!"

Linnea didn't mind—much—that Olaf's other wife was prettier, or even that she could make better dumplings. But when Sigrid's acid tongue and lifted eyebrows caused trouble for Linnea's angelic children, it was indeed enough to try the patience of a Latter-day Saint!

Church and state had declared against polygamy, but a man with two wives and two families did not wake up and find one family vanished just because of the Manifesto. All the problems, laughter, heartaches and happiness were still there—in duplicate. So, with amnesty granted to already established plural marriages, Olaf Ecklund tried honestly to divide his time, money and love evenly. Half he spent down home with Sigrid and their meek daughter: the other half belonged to Linnea and her rambunctious brood who lived

UP HOME

By ARDYTH KENNELLY

beginning in the April JOURNAL

Kenyon Cox made a painting of my head that summer for a figure of "Justice" which he was painting for the Newark, New Jersey, courthouse. I was fascinated by his enormous studio, and by his climbing up on ladders to do his huge canvases. I had never seen anyone doing a big mural before.

I went over to Dublin, New Hampshire, which is about fifty miles from Cornish, to visit Joseph Smith, the artist. They were having some kind of garden fete and I was to be a sprite coming up from a fountain. Mark Twain was one of the guests that night. It was the first time I had seen him in white evening clothes. I met him with Bob Collier at dinner in New York shortly afterward, and he was still in his white evening clothes. I saw him again at some big benefit at an opera house where there were booths. He was sitting in the bookstall, signing things, when I passed by. He called out, "Oh, there's the water sprite!"

I remember, too, Mrs. Winston Churchill, the wife of the American Winston Churchill, the novelist, asking me if I would drive her beautiful horses in the horse show. I had never driven at all, but I had seen a lot of horse shows and driven with good drivers. I knew how to hold the reins, so without thinking I said yes and won the blue ribbon. How extraordinarily cheeky I must have been!

That winter I went on tour with "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire" and I think it was the following spring that Mr. Frohman took me to London to play in a piece by Hubert Henry Davies called "Cynthia." I remember being very terrified and wishing that I had not done it. The play was not a success.

That fall in New York I played in "The Silver Box," the first Galsworthy play to be produced in America.

I was living on West 40th Street. A friend of mine, Chloese Hatch, asked me to come out to Tuxedo for lunch on Sunday. I discovered that there was practically no way to get to Tuxedo except in a car, so I decided to hire one for the day.

On Saturday evening Chloese called me up and said a man was coming down for lunch, too, and his car had broken down. Would I stop for him and bring him down and back? So I did. After lunch he wandered off into the woods with a very pretty girl, and they came back engaged. Everybody was very pleased about it. I drove him back, deposited him at his door and went on my way.

He turned out to be George Baker, one of the richest men in the world. It always struck me as ridiculous that I should be the one who paid for the automobile.

In September I was to begin rehearsing in "Lady Frederick." Before going down to spend the weekend with Uncle Jack at East Hampton, I was having lunch at Sherry's with him, Aunt Dodo and Bee and two or three other people who were also coming down for the weekend. A young man strolled by the table and Uncle Jack said, "Hello, Hungry. Sit down."

So Russell Colt sat down. He was spending the weekend at East Hampton, too, and rode down on the train with us. After we got there he drifted away, but he came back to Uncle Jack's after dinner and after that, well, it just happened. That's all. Quickly. Very quickly. It didn't take long for me to discover that this was it. And this time there was no escape.

I don't remember that during the six months of our engagement I even tried to escape. Russell had tremendous humor and at first his lighthearted irresponsibility—he never really grew up—seemed only to add to his tremendous charm. It was a happy time for me, untroubled by any doubts.

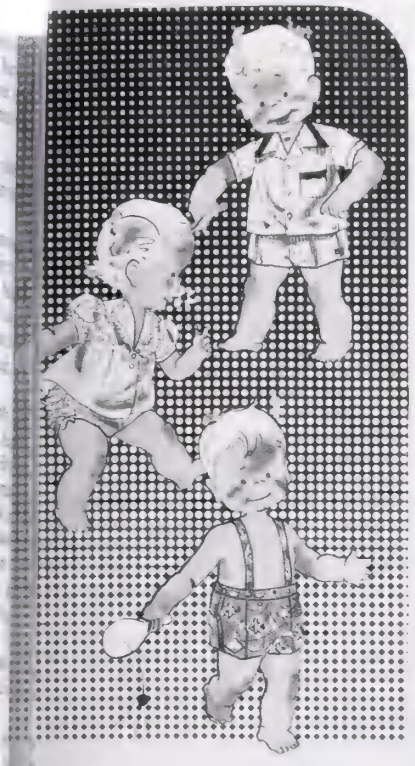
Colonel Colt, Russell's father, however, was not quite so untroubled. This was just after what was artlessly considered in those days to be a panic and like many other men who had been very rich, Colonel Colt was for the time being feeling very poor. He asked me to come and see him at the old Holland House where he was living in one room, and when I met him there, in the huge parlor, two stories high and a thousand miles long, he said, "I can't understand why you want to marry my son. I have no money."

I said, "I don't want money."

He said, "How are you going to live?"

I said, "I make enough money, but I think it would be a good thing if Russell had some kind of job."

And Colonel Colt arranged with H. L. Horton and Co., a Wall Street firm in which he had an interest, that after we were married Russell was to be a junior partner.



We decided to be married when "Lady Frederick" was playing in Boston, and I went to see Bishop O'Connell to arrange for a dispensation to marry a Protestant. The bishop—who was later to be cardinal—completely fascinated Russell when Russell went to see him to sign the necessary papers. When he came away, Russell said, "That's the most charming man I ever met. How do you get to be a Catholic?"

But he never did anything about it.

I had red dispatch boxes filled with letters from everybody I had ever known. I tore them all up. It seemed to be the thing to do, to make a clean break. I felt that all my energies must be devoted now to my new life which was going to be my married life, and to my work in the theater. I had those two things to do and they seemed to be enough.

Next Month: The difficulties and rewards of the double role of mother and famous star—making her first motion picture—her efforts to save her marriage.

veet as spring

ing-fresh baby fashions in fabulous rics that practically keep themselves, ch complete with famous handi-panti, original plastic-lined diaper slipcover.

handi-panti*
fashions by alexis
*Handi-panti is a registered trade mark atlanta, georgia

HANKSCRAFT Automatic STERILIZER SET
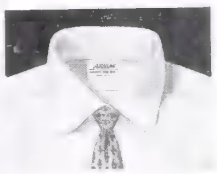
For regular sterilization or terminal method — bottles, nipples, caps and formula in one operation. 8-bottle capacity. Includes everything needed to prepare formula. MODEL 201 — $12.95
Model 200 (Sterilizer only) — $10.95

Best for Baby!

BOTTLE WARMER and VAPORIZER
Heats formula quickly, shuts off automatically. Vaporizer brings quick relief from colds. Pastel colors.
MODEL 1013-C $2.50

At drug, department, appliance, and baby shops everywhere.



Hankscraft
BABY HELPS
HANKSCRAFT CO., Reedsburg, Wisconsin

Arrow Sussex-B.D. Wide spread, button-down collar. Junior, $2.95. Grad, $3.65.

Arrow Radnor-E. Soft, rounded collar. Junior, $2.95 up. Grad, $3.65.

Arrow Newport. Soft, spread, rounded collar. Junior, $2.95 up. Grad, $3.65.

ARROW SHIRTS for lads... measure up to Dad's...

for perfect looks... perfect fit!

They're in exact sleeve lengths and collar sizes to give the men in your family good fit and "the custom look" at any age.

Above is a fine Arrow Par for boys. It's just like the one Dad is wearing. Same fine material . . . same wonderful Arrow tailoring. Same reassuring "Sanforized" label. The boy's Par is priced at $3.50 for Juniors and $3.65 for Grads. Dad's Par is $3.95.

Get Arrow Shirts for boys today. Junior sizes 4 to 12; or collar sizes 10½ to 12½ and Grad collar sizes 12½ to 14½.

ARROW
SHIRTS FOR BOYS
by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

For easy Lenten days

You can make
Seven Seas Casserole
with TUNA,
SALMON, SHRIMP,
LOBSTER
or any sea food—fresh, frozen or canned!*

Product of General Foods

SEVEN SEAS CASSEROLE

Made only with Minute Rice—ready in minutes!

1 can condensed cream of mushroom (or celery) soup
1¼ cups water or milk • ¼ teaspoon salt • 1⅓ cups (or 5-ounce package) Minute Rice
1 can (or ½ lb.) sea food* • 1 box frozen peas, thawed • Cheese slices

Mix soup, water and salt in a saucepan. Bring to a boil over medium heat; stir occasionally. Pour about half into a greased 1½-quart casserole. Then, in layers, add Minute Rice (right from box), sea food, and peas. Add remaining soup, top with cheese, sprinkle with paprika. Cover. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 20 minutes. This Minute Rice masterpiece serves 4. (Note: For extra flavor, add ¼ cup finely chopped onion and 1 teaspoon lemon juice to soup mixture.)

Remember, for "easy days" any day, there's nothing like Minute Rice—it's perfect rice without cooking.

* Sauté fresh or frozen sea food in butter about 3 minutes.

"MY SONS LIVE ON MISERY STREET"

This is the story of a working mother, an unemployed father and three boys in a struggle to stay alive and grow up decently in poor surroundings.

Misery Street is real. The New York Times gives the name to East 101st Street between First and Second avenues in Manhattan. The Times calls it "an Atom Age anachronism, a dark and grimy stretch of rookeries." One Hundredth Street in this block is much the same—and so is 102nd. These streets are alive with sounds and smells and swarms of hungry-looking children of many races. Most of them are United States citizens from Puerto Rico. Almost any morning at the corner of East 102nd Street and First Avenue you can see multihued youngsters eating rotting vegetables from the gutter, heaped there by peddlers who have cleaned out their carts.

This is Misery Street—real, but also the symbol of misery streets everywhere. Misery Street in Manhattan ends where the prewar East River housing project begins, and the new George Washington Houses between Second and Third avenues from 97th to 104th Street are now almost completed. Eventually all the misery streets in this neighborhood will be razed and rebuilt, but many such

BY G. M. WHITE

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

"No matter how I fix these rooms, they don't look nice." A tired, the 90-pound mother serves supper in shifts, scrubs the bathtub, beds her family on couches and in a black bedroom. T no sheets. Scarcely enough food. Never enough money to need a streets in New York and other cities grow steadily worse. While misery streets remain, the families who inhabit them are a part of living America.

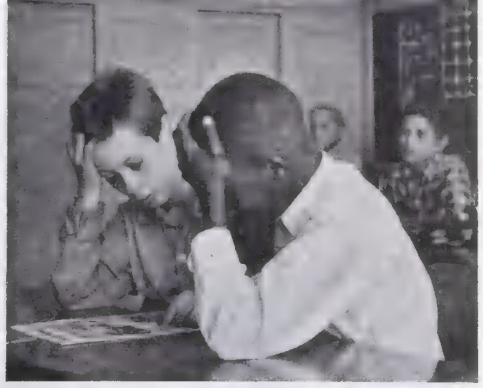
This is a report on one such family—an unemployed husband, a working wife, and their three sons, aged ten, twelve and fourteen years. The point of view of members of the family is reported in their actual words, in so far as it has been possible to record them.

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES



She janitors to get housing and $10 a month. The boys help shovel coal, scrub halls. Her unemployed husband does odd jobs, or sits at a window, blaming a world of enemies for his fate.

MOTHER SCHAEFER is a tiny wisp of Irish, weighing no more than ninety pounds. Illness and care have aged her far beyond her thirty-nine years. Her expression is most often harried or resigned, but a strong spirit is apparent in her eyes. They are intelligent eyes, faded-blue, deep-set but alert and expressive. A quick, unexpected glint of amusement comes into them occasionally; sometimes her redheaded temper rises, but flares only briefly. When she talks about her life and children, she speaks easily and well.

"Why do you want to know about me? Nobody wants to know about me. I thought you was interested in the boys. They're all that matter to me. Well, I'll tell you—you've caught me at a bad time. This tulip fever, they call it, on my hands and I don't know when I can get back to work—I pack bulbs in a florist's warehouse—and the new owner taking CONTINUED ON PAGE 174 Trash cans are the trees of Misery Street. To some, they gi To others, a place to climb or sit. In the life of the street th death and worse things. To keep alive: "Never squeal. Neve

Just living can get you in trouble on Misery Street. At school you try to get along with everybody and have a good excuse if you are absent. Fred can't say "no" when anyone urges him to play hooky.

The boys' only beacon is their mother's teaching: "Don't hate, don't steal, and don't take dope . . . tomorrow maybe things will be better."

Outside, the street is littered and dirty, crawling with shrill and hungry-looking children. Inside a bare storeroom, called a Social and Athletic Club, better-off men play cards. The boys are let in to watch TV. Crime shows are closer to the realities they know than home-life comedies.

Boys stay on the street to save their father's nerves, but have to be in by 10 P.M. "Wash up before bed," their mother reminds them. Herald Tribune Fresh Air Fund gives boys their only taste of life outside the city.

"Flats Fixed" sign and a ball make a game. It's better than just standing around, waiting for something to happen. You wait a lot on Misery Street.

When street lights go on, talk to pals. But watch out for guys you don't know. Around here they carry switchblades, razors or zip guns and don't hesitate to use them.

No grass grows on Misery Street.
Cement and iron streets are playgrounds of the poor.

"I'm sorry I'm not able to earn a living and take care of things. . . . Got no education, feet hurt—I answered them jobs . . . more than anything I want a job, something to do . . ."

You watch for nameless dangers.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 172 over the building and all. And my husband getting that summons for disturbing the peace. Disturbing the peace! He has to go to the magistrate's for a hearing tomorrow. Well, you know about that. He says he won't go. He says he'll wrap an ash can around that welfare fellow's head. He don't mean it. He's a very nervous man. The slightest little thing upsets him—me, I forget it, just rolls off me like off a duck's back.

"I was born in San Francisco. I've never lived in anything but a furnished room or rented apartments. I'm not complaining. My mother died when I was six years old. I hardly remember her. My father died in 1928. Then my sister and I—she was much older than me, a nurse—came to New York City. She was like a mother to me. Then she died too. I had CONTINUED ON PAGE 224

"Mommy, you can't even make an honest living any more." Freddie paces under the el. Bill lone-wolfs it. Paulie stares at pet windows. Would crime pay better? "They're at a crossroads," says a minister. Or is it a one-way street?

The mother says: "Schools can't do it all, I always say. Parents have to do some. I used to go to P.T.A. meetings, but I don't have time now with the two jobs and all."

1955

Pream is also available in glass jars in some areas.

New easy thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN INSTANT POWDERED FORM

Rich and delicious! Made entirely from fresh sweet cream and other milk products. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful. Keep handy in cupboard or refrigerator.

So economical! Costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! Only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream.

Instant dissolving! Put Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir and enjoy!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

"Makes gracious serving so easy," says SALLY ROSS, Pream Home Economist.

"This Knife-Server makes it so easy to slice cake and pie beautifully. Its wide blade is stainless steel with a serrated edge that stays sharp.

"I offer this wonder server at cost, so you'll try the new dairy wonder—Pream! Delicious for creaming hot beverages, it's marvelous for cooking, too. You'll discover just how marvelous when you read the new Pream Recipe Folder sent free with every Knife-Server."

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY TO:

SALLY ROSS, P. O. Box No. 1410, New York 46, N. Y.

Please send me_____Cake and Pie Knife-Server(s) and the FREE new PREAM Recipe Folder. I enclose 35c in coin with the number copied from inside a PREAM can lid, or the label from a PREAM jar, for each Knife-Server ordered.

Name_____

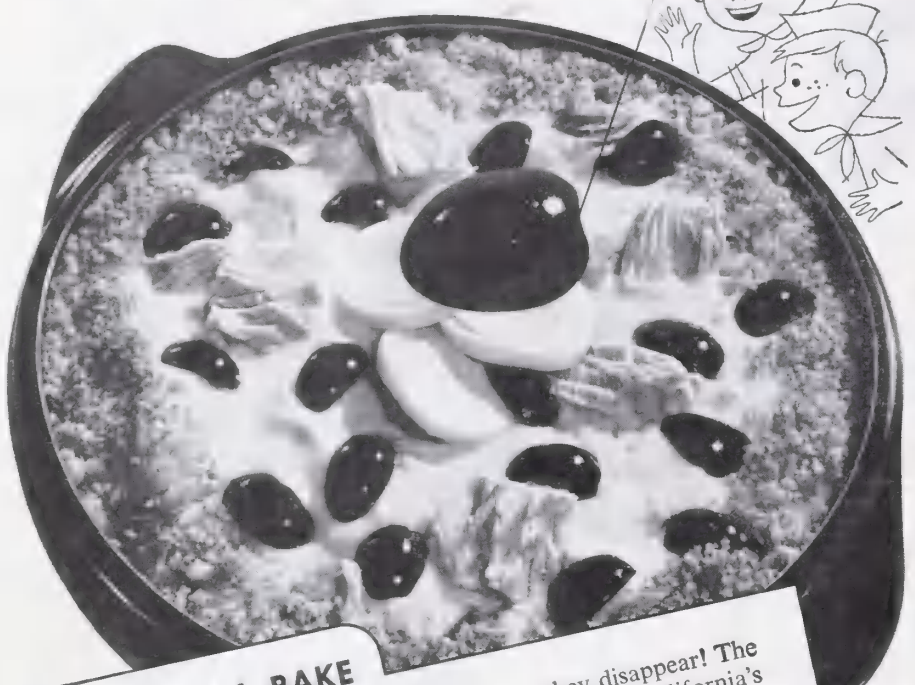
Address_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

Can Lid No.(s)_____

THIS OFFER EXPIRES JUNE 30, 1955 Offer void in any state, or municipality where prohibited, taxed, or otherwise restricted.

HURRY! SUPPLY LIMITED!



Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska and Hawaii.

© 1955, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

For Hearty Eating and Happy Eaters —

TIOGA TUNA BAKE

...singing with California Flavor

TIOGA TUNA BAKE

Serve heaping helpings—and watch how fast they disappear! The reason is the sunny, specially satisfying flavor that California's own ripe olives add. Taste it here—flavor you can easily give to many fish, cheese, and egg dishes.

1 cup ripe olives
2 hard-cooked eggs
1 (6½ or 7-ounce) can tuna
1 tsp. grated onion
1 tsp. prepared mustard
¼ cup milk
½ tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 (10½-ounce) can cream of mushroom soup
¼ cup diced pimiento
Buttered dry bread crumbs

Cut olives into large pieces. Dice eggs. Drain tuna and flake coarsely. Stir onion, mustard, milk and Worcestershire into soup. Blend in pimiento, olives, eggs and tuna. Spoon into baking shells or shallow baking dish and top with crumbs. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 20 to 25 minutes, until thoroughly heated and browned on top. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Free Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet. Write today for your free copy of the beautifully illustrated 16-page booklet, "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Address: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-56, 24 California Street, San Francisco 11, Calif.

For eating by hand, remember ripe olives are an easy appetizer before dinner ... an easy tasty "relish" at table. And when friends drop in, set out an inviting bowl of California flavor ... a "welcome bowl" of ripe olives.

ripe olives* make meals SING with California flavor

*RIPE, GREEN-RIPE ... WHOLE, PITTED, CHOPPED, SLICED

TROPICAL FLAVOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 99

¼ teaspoon tarragon, ⅛ teaspoon Tabasco, and 1 small clove garlic, crushed. Stir until sauce is smooth and seasonings are well blended. Makes 1½ cups of sauce. If you like lettuce cups better'n chiny or glass,why not?

I'll make good now on that chicken and you go ahead and fry or broil a fine chicken, and serve it with a Mexican sauce which is done this-a-way:

MEXICAN MOLE SAUCE

Put through a food grinder, using the coarse blade, these vegetables and nuts—that's the first thing: 2 green peppers, seeded and cut into strips; 2 peeled onions, cut into quarters; ½ cup blanched, shelled almonds; 2 peeled cloves garlic; 1 quart canned or stewed tomatoes (these may go through a sieve instead); ¼ cup coarse cracker crumbs; and one half of a 4-ounce can pimiento. Heat ¼ cup salad oil in a skillet. Add the ground mixture. Then add 1 cup stock made from 1 cup water and 2 bouillon cubes or 2 teaspoons beef concentrate. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon chili powder, a dash of pepper, ⅛ teaspoon cinnamon and ⅛ teaspoon ground cloves. Simmer slowly ½ hour, stirring occasionally as it cooks. Add more seasoning, to taste. At the end, ½ ounce unsweetened chocolate is added to make it authentic Mexican mole sauce. Also because it's a real guessing game in sauces, and good.

Saffron, listed with the herbs, is yellow. The flavor is subtle and every good cook has it on her herb-and-seasoning shelf. And one of the uses it's put to, when the tropical foods abound, is saffron-bewitched rice, which comes out an intriguing color. Here is your receipt for

SAFFRON RICE

It could be from any of the countries where rice is a staple—the Bahamas, West Indies, Bermuda and so forth, for instance. And what those folks have, we may have too. Cook 1½ cups rice in 6 tablespoons butter or margarine until light gold color. Stir as it cooks. Add 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon saffron and 3 cups canned chicken broth. Mix well. Bring to a boil. Cover and cook over low heat until the rice is tender and all the broth has been absorbed. Place a clean towel between the pan and the lid for a few minutes before serving to help absorb any excess moisture. The rice will be yellow, just a beautiful yellow, and fluffy. Makes 6 servings.

Where the palm trees grow, and that's where it's warm and sunny, grow naturally the hearts of the palm. These look like pure white asparagus, although the stalks have no "tips." They taste like hearts of palm, nothing else. We get them in cans, and though they are a little costly, you will remember that when a pa gives up its heart it gives up its life. So y don't mind it if they do cost a little more th turnip greens and act accordingly. There ar number of things to do with these hearts, a one of the best is to introduce them to the otic avocado and serve as a salad on lettu Or fill the hollow halves of the pears with hearts cut into small pieces and serve wit sharp French or a Russian dressing.

It's nice to know that wherever you go— rather, wherever I go—I can find, ker-sma the ices and sherbets and ice creams tha guess everybody likes and looks for. A down in Florida they make a double-feat sherbet, which is a honey of a dessert to e and a picture of Susie in her christening r to look at. Now take notice of

TANGERINE SHERBET

Soften 1 package unflavored gelatin in cup cold water. Place over boiling water; a ¾ cup sugar; stir until dissolved. Pour in large bowl. Add a 6-ounce can frozen ta gerine-juice concentrate to gelatin; refill c three times with buttermilk (2¼ cups); a to juice mixture; stir well. Pour into 2 free ing trays and put in freezing compartment refrigerator. When mixture is partially froze remove to bowl and beat until smoot Return to trays and continue freezing un firm. Yield: 1¼ quarts.

FLORIDA SHERBET AMBROSIA

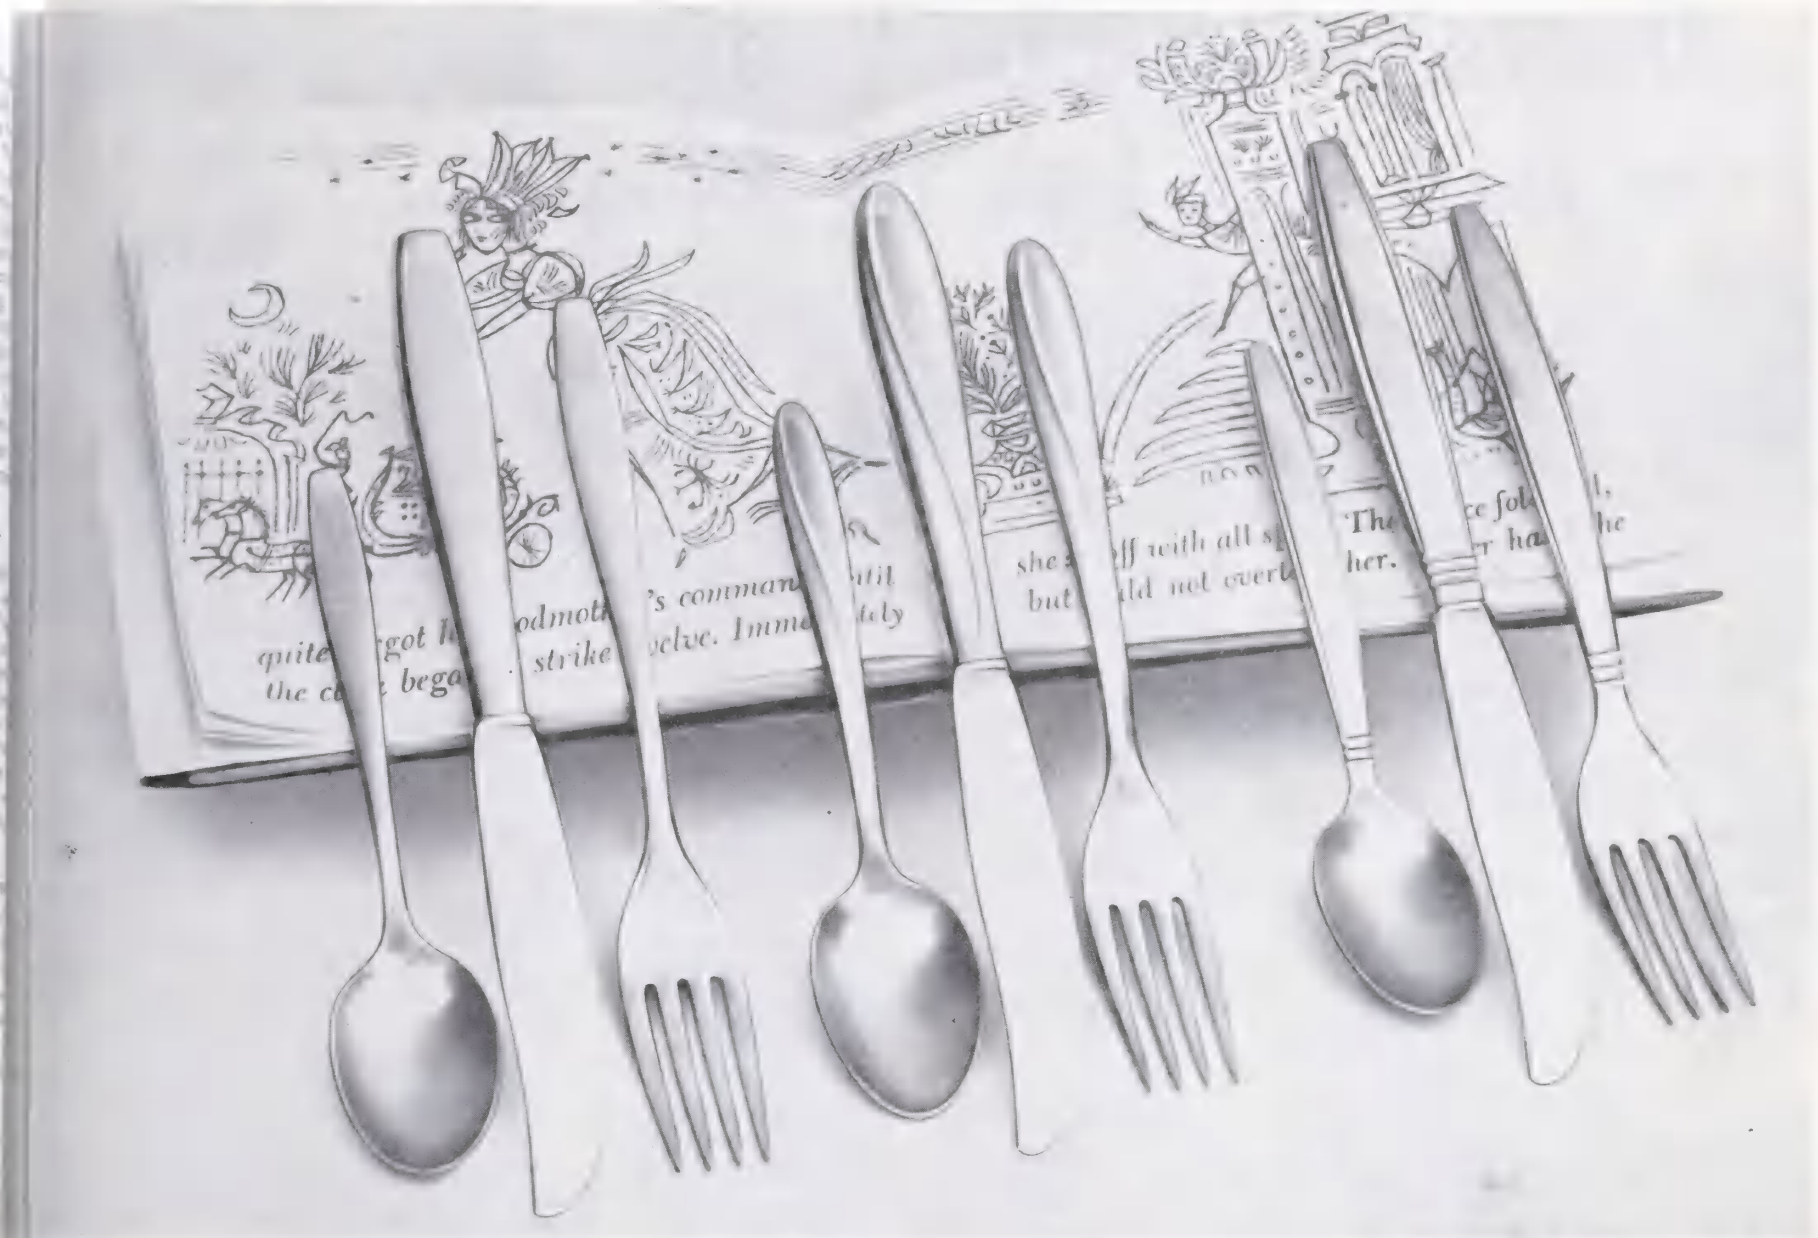
Cut 3 medium-sized grapefruit in half. Ca fully remove the sections and set them asid Remove all the membrane from each grap fruit half. Line the entire inside of the she with a layer of tangerine or orange sherb about ½" thick, leaving a small cavity in t center. Freeze until firm, then smooth ov the sherbet with a spatula to make it eve It takes about 1 quart sherbet to line grapefruit halves. When the sherbet an shells are thoroughly firm (about 2 hours fill the centers with a mixture of 2 cups grap fruit sections, 1 cup sliced strawberries an ⅓ cup shredded coconut. Top each grap fruit half with shaved Brazil nuts and ga nish with mint. Makes 6 servings.

Well, you see the ubiquitous chicken an hen and rooster get into the act no matt what land you journey to. The small fry mak the pickets and the next-door garden just usual. Hens in frantic disarray round up the broods and cackle their senseless gossip in th same old way. And where on earth doesn't th rooster strut his drum-major way in dust an heat and boss the roost as all male creature do—or think they do? It's the same every where. That's why we gave you chicken! Wit chocolate, no foolin', in the sauce.

Good-by now,
YOUR ANNIE.

TROY IN GREEN

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN



Old stone wall, old apple tree
Bearing wormed apples doomed to fall,
Chipmunks have the pick of the crop,
A child could jump the tumbled wall.

A wall that keeps no truant cows
Out of the corn, and no corn there,
The house, the people gone to earth,
Not even an old man left to care.

This is the tale of Troy in green,
The fall of a russet Babylon:
Heaped-up stones say, "Men were here";
Run-out fruit says, "Men are gone."
Life and the law are sorrowful;

Here a Helen of red clover
Stared one day in her kitchen glass
At a face which time had furrowed over

And knew that love a farm away
Was on the wrong side of the sea,
That ends of kingdoms and princes are
A broken wall and a wormy tree.

Smart new International patterns with lustrous velvet finish; (shown left to right) TODAY, CHRISTIANIA and STOCKHOLM. 5-piece place setting, $8.00.

It's a Cinderella story...

AND YOU LIVE HAPPILY EVER AFTER!

ALL PATTERNS MADE IN U. S. A.

ONCE upon a time stainless steel was a kitchen drudge. Today, transformed, these gleaming International Stainless patterns set the tables in the finest homes in the land!

This wonderful worksaving, timesaving tableware will not tarnish, rust or stain in normal use. The same element that imparts color to precious rubies gives International Stainless its incredible hardness and resistance to corrosion.

The patterns are pure grace, adaptable to any setting. Their rhythmic lines dramatize the brilliant beauty of the steel. The smooth contours of the crisp, contemporary designs emphasize the flawless craftsmanship.

International Stainless is made by the world's foremost silversmiths with the same skill and artistry that go into the making of the finest sterling. Each piece is hand-finished and polished to perfection—right down to the tines of the forks and the edges of the spoon bowls. The hollow-handle knives have forged steel blades.

Let every meal find your tableware clean and shining. Ask your dealer to show you International Stainless. There is a quality for every requirement...a pattern for every taste.

International Stainless

Mastercrafted in Steel by The International Silver Co.

NEW DAWN and SPRING LILY. 5-piece place setting, $6.00.

MASTERPIECE, AMERICAN FASHION, LORDSHIP. 5-pc. place setting, $4.00.

This is the quicker Wesson way to start your fish fry tonight...

SHRIMP

FISH

CROQUETTES

Quick start — you pour this light, sparkling salad oil. Wesson is ready to use; no digging out shortening, no melting. Thrifty, too—you pour just what you need.

Surer to be digestible — because you can fry with Wesson Oil at far higher temperatures than with costliest solid shortenings — and still Wesson will not smoke or burn. (Smoke can mean shortening is breaking down, becoming hard to digest and harsh in flavor.)

In all the world there's no oil or shortening with the same fresh delicacy, the same sparkling lightness as Wesson. Another big reason Wesson fried foods make mighty fine eating. See for yourself—tonight!

BREADED SHRIMP OR FISH

Dip shrimp or fish in mixture of 1 slightly beaten egg, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, and ½ teaspoon salt. Drain, then roll in crumbs. Dry for 5 minutes. Fry shrimp in deep Wesson Oil* heated to 375° F. for 2 to 3 minutes; fish at 350° F. for 5 to 8 minutes.

Fry Blue Plate Brand Frozen Breaded Shrimp, too, in delicate Wesson Oil.

TUNA SURPRISE CROQUETTES

2 cups cooked rice, cooled
1 can (6½- or 7-ounce) tuna, flaked
2 teaspoons minced parsley
½ teaspoon soy sauce
1 egg, separated
6 stuffed olives
2 tablespoons water
½ cup dry bread crumbs
Wesson Oil for frying

Combine rice, tuna, parsley, soy sauce, and egg yolk. Shape into fish-shaped croquettes, using a stuffed olive inside for a hidden surprise. Add water to egg white; beat slightly. Dip croquettes in this mixture, drain, and coat with bread crumbs. Let coating dry a few minutes. Fry in deep Wesson Oil* heated to 375° F. for 2½ to 3 minutes, until golden brown. Drain on absorbent paper. Arrange on hot platter for serving. Garnish with a slice of stuffed olive for the eye, and a sprig of parsley for the tail. Makes 6.

Frying kettle should be filled just ⅓ full of oil. Do not fry more than one layer at a time.*

Wesson Oil

AMERICA'S FAVORITE

for Frying, Salads, Chiffon Cakes, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust and Biscuits

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

...campaign on the risers of subway steps. ...ry day . . . Each step of the way . . . For ...n and happiness . . . Here to stay . . . ...MATIV! Doctors say!" And then, always, "S...nativ MEANS Vitamins!"

I can remember when they put it to music for the first time. It's not really so long ago ..., it's just that everybody in the world has ...d it so many times, it's coming out of the... ears. Mother asked me if I was in any wa... responsible for it, and if so, to please find an... her job, but then mother didn't appreciate it ...all. She isn't the Snimativ type.

...jobs go, it was very interesting. The plant wa... nice and modern, and set in a park. It wa... far from my house in Northern New ...ey, which made it ...nvenient, but lots of pe...ple were glad to ...rel quite a way just to ...able to work there. The company made it fun... the whole place wa... air-conditioned, and the... was music piped int... every department. We had interoffice bri...e tournaments, and ba...ball and basketball an... bowling teams. The... were picnics and da...es, and really, your so...l life was practi-ca... taken care of. And be...use Mr. Kelcey pre-fer...d big healthy peo-ple... there were enough tal... men around too.

...fter a while, I dated or... Fred Donovan. He w... a chemist who wo...ked in the lab, and ve... nice too. He was ta... r than even daddy, ar... was Snimativ's star ce...er on the basketball te... I loved to watch ni... play; for all his si... he was really very gr...eful and good-look-in... I loved the idea that he... was a scientist—he w... doing research—and th...gh I don't under-st...d anything about it re...y, I honestly love the la...guage and atmos-ph...e around scientists. F... l, in his white smock, w... his thoughtful eyes, h... a kind of glamour. ...Well, I saw Fred all ti... time. He lived in E... Orange, and his folks were acquainted w... my folks, and while it wasn't a real en-g...ement, there was a sort of understanding.

...verything was going along just fine until S...nativ went into television. I had a wonder-fu... vacation that summer, and when I came b... the whole advertising department was in a ...erfect tizzy about the TV show. I hardly h... to tell you that it was Brogan Brown, b...ause I mean Brogan is such a household ti...ure these days, you can hardly remember w...n he wasn't around.

...ut it was all brand spang new about a year a... There were a million conferences, till th... decided on the name for the show: "...ogan Brown Doing the Town." Mr. Saun-d...s, who is head of the advertising depart-m...t, claims credit for the name, and I guess it... really his. He likes everything to rhyme, if ...ossible.

I didn't know much about Brogan Brown, e...ept that he was the critic and lecturer. But I ...appened to be relieving at the reception c...k when he paid his first visit to the plant. I w... proofreading some copy, and it was pleas-a... and quiet. Schubert's Serenade was com-i... over the public-address system, which was r... favorite piece of music, and I was absently l...f humming it.

"Do you like that sentimental twaddle?" a v...ce said suddenly, in icy-cold cultured tones.

I got up automatically, too jolted to answer, staring hard at what could only be described as a distinguished caller standing before the reception desk. I realized he was talking about the music.

"Sorry if I startled you." He smiled wryly. "Please tell Mr. Saunders that Mr. Brown is here."

I backed up to the inner office, still speechless, my wide-open eyes taking in every detail of his appearance. He was extremely slender, and it gave him a super-refined look, pure aristocrat. His mustache made him look quite a lot like Anthony Eden, and he wore a very dark suit with no shoulders, and a Homburg hat. He was definitely not the Snimativ type.

Mr. Saunders greeted him as though the trip from Manhattan was too much to expect from any civilized person.

"Wretched transportation," Brogan said accusingly.

"I know," Mr. Saunders said, all sympathy, accepting the blame as his own. They retired to his office, and the door closed.

I exhaled. I felt lightheaded. This man was a vision—never had I believed there existed such suave assurance, such polish.

I know it sounds silly, but in those few minutes I fell in love. Just like that.

We had afternoon coffee break at Snimativ, and I went down to the cafeteria, practically floating all the way. Fred was sitting at our regular table waiting for me.

"Hey-Nanny!" Fred greeted me. This was his special name for me—a weak joke, I'll admit, but it had charmed me. "I was thinking about you this afternoon. I heard the Schubert thing ——"

"Oh, that sentimental twaddle!" I broke in airily.

The words were out before I realized it. I didn't mean to repeat Brogan, I didn't mean to hurt Fred, but—well, there you are. Life is sometimes unpredictable.

Fred's eyebrows flew up. "What? I mean, you told me you loved it!"

"Love it one day, leave it the next," I giggled, feeling slightly mad.

"What's with you?"

How could I tell him I had just seen a dream man, that I had just fallen in love—and not with him? How?

"Got to get back to work," I gulped, and left him. I hoped to get another look at Brogan.

I needn't have worried. Brogan spent the rest of the day with Mr. Saunders, and they were still talking when they emerged from his office at four-thirty.

"We'll send the stuff over to your New York office," Mr. Saunders was saying.

"Thanks. It will save a good deal of time." Brogan Brown was clipped, crisp and elegant. The two men left, and I started to breathe again.

I have the most wonderful luck at times, really. I spent the rest of the day praying I would be the one to go to New York with Brogan's material, and all night I dreamed about Brogan and Snimativ. And the next morning, Mr. Saunders handed me a Manila envelope and Brogan's address. Since Mr. Kelcey insists that every little job at Snimativ have a title, there I was: TV Liaison.

BALLAD

By ELIZABETH MCFARLAND

"Oh who will wear my silver ring
And never sigh for gold?
Whose soft young eye can warm a tear,
Though other eyes grow cold?"

He sang upon an old guitar
In a springtime, tree-dim place,
And the sun threw down, like luxury,
Gold coins across his face.

He trimmed his balsam fire by night
Till the coals shone ruby-red;
She wore, when she stepped within their light,
His wreath upon her head.

Then their narrow feet, in deerskin shoes,
Danced to an antique measure.
Oh, he had not dreamed, who had dreamed alone,
She would marry him for his treasure!

For better professional laundering and dry cleaning

...look for and patronize the laundries and dry cleaners that use these processes...

Pennsalt's SPARKLING white PROCESS — Keeps Whites Whiter

Pennsalt's BRIGHT color PROCESS — Keeps Colors Brighter

Pennsalt's Controlled Power-Pak Dry Cleaning PROCESS — Freshens Fabrics

Pennsalt's textile SERVICE for PROCESS TESTING — Keeps Quality Up Fabrics Live Longer

Modern professional processing is your assurance of better laundering and dry cleaning.

Operators displaying the emblems seen here are customers of Pennsalt. They have available the services of Pennsalt's trained field technicians backed by Pennsalt's famous Whitemarsh Research Laboratories.

From fiber to fabric to cleaning—Pennsalt research provides better service and supplies for Textile Mills, and Professional Laundries and Dry Cleaners.

TEXTILE MAINTENANCE DEPARTMENT
1043 Widener Bldg., Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Pennsalt

Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company

I congratulated myself on the foresight I had shown in wearing my new blue suit. It helped prop up my confidence, which was shaking nervously.

Brogan's office was the first floor of his house, a remodeled brownstone. A maid showed me in, and asked me to wait. I had never seen anything like that room, except in a magazine; and even there, not very often.

It was stark—that's the only word for it. There was a huge desk, actually hanging from the ceiling. It was an odd shape, and it was suspended from five brass rods going up to the ceiling. A long low sofa was built on one wall, and bookshelves lined another wall. There was one huge painting; it had four black lines and a blob of red paint, no more, no less.

It was stark, and austere. But it was also elegant in a superrefined sort of way, and it struck me immediately that it was just the kind of room for Brogan. I loved it.

When he walked in, I almost choked. He looked every bit as wonderful as I remembered him.

I cleared my throat tentatively. "I'm Miss Matthews, from Snimativ."

"Oh, yes." He smiled. "I remember you. Schubert's Serenade."

"I have the material here." I gave him the envelope, and hoped I hadn't blushed at his crack. He took it, and sat down at that enormous desk. I perched on the edge of a contour chair, and tried to keep my balance as he went through the papers.

"Well, Miss Matthews," he said, finally looking up, "this looks all right, as far as it goes. Have you seen any of it?"

"No sir, I haven't." I put on my brightest expression, and waited hopefully.

"Well ——" He riffled the papers with his well-manicured hands. I just happened to notice that they were manicured. I mean, it's not the kind of thing a girl looks for, and it was a surprise, in a small way. I couldn't imagine Fred with a manicure, in a million years. "Well, the format is outlined fairly well. But I'd like to get your opinion."

"Mine?" I asked as I almost fell off the contour chair.

"Yes," and he smiled warmly and encouragingly.

That smile did things to me that I can't possibly describe. I knew that he was only being pleasant and friendly and that's all. Still, it affected me so that I could hardly talk.

"You're a television fan, aren't you?" he went on. "What kind of programs do you enjoy, Miss Matthews? Oh, come now," he prompted, as I hesitated, "this isn't one of those ridiculous quiz shows. I just want to know what you think."

Well, I really like those "ridiculous quiz shows," up to a certain point. I think they're fun in a way, and build up quite a lot of suspense. But obviously he didn't like them. I told him I loved a good play, and I told him which comedians made me laugh, and why I couldn't stand mysteries, and that most interviews on television bored me.

"This program will be built around celebrity interviews," he cautioned, frowning a little. It made him look terribly distinguished.

"I don't mean all interviews, of course," I said hastily. "It's just the ones where the guests don't have anything to say. You know, like the Hollywood star who says she's just come East, and then they repeat the name of her new picture eighty-eight times, so you'll never forget it, and then she says she is just going to the 'theater! theater! theater!' while she's here, because she's mad about it ——"

Brogan laughed suddenly. "That's really superb," he said, still chuckling. "Excellent."

WELL, we went on from there. I sat with a pencil and notebook, and didn't write a line. I just answered all Brogan's questions. What about reviews of new plays and movies? Would book reviews have a place? Were theatrical people necessary for glamour? What about broadening out—inviting a psychiatrist? Anthropologist? Explorer? What about politics—should it be kept out entirely?

I talked a blue streak, I must admit. He was so interested in everything I said that it was really flattering. He lived in a superglamorous atmosphere, and yet there he was, hanging on practically every word I said.

"You've been a big help, Nancy," he said at last. By then, we were on a first-name basis. He looked at me for a minute. "Y'know," he speculated, "you really ought to do something with that splendid hair you have."

That special zingy feeling hit me in the pit of the stomach again. Nobody had ever called my hair splendid before. I mean, it's nice and shiny and brown, but not what you would really call splendid.

"What would you suggest?" I breath he had told me to shave it off, or braid i a queue, I would have, and willingly.

"Cut it off," he said decisively. "Most Get one of those supposedly casual cut are really art." There was no questionin authority. "And," he went on, looking new suit, "that medium blue is not your Maybe a very pale blue, once in a while you'll be better off with coppers and yello and black, of course."

FOR once I was speechless. I mean, never heard a man give a girl advice on and haircuts. I don't think Fred ever n what I was wearing. I know positively daddy didn't. Daddy doesn't even see a dress on mother till it's at least six month But Brogan saw everything. Here he was, a real mind, full of books and plays an portant people, and yet he had time to se You know, to really look at me.

He bowed me out in his own special c way, and I floated down Madison Av After knowing Brogan, and seeing his a ment, I knew elegance meant Right after d that night, I st to make a li things I would for my new " Daddy was sn at the newspape way he always and mother working on he dle point. She doing the fifth pieces, to cove dining-room c

Fred cam about eight o'c He often did, ar would just sit ar and talk. You k nothing special

"Hey-Nanny about a soda?" greeted me.

"No," I promptly. "I'm ting too fat."

"Where?"

"All over."

He just smil me fondly.

"She's seri Fred," mother "She didn't hav sert tonight. It was chocolate pie, an Nancy that's a real sacrifice."

"You're nuts," he said to me succinct "I want to be thin."

"You're thin enough."

"No, really thin. Like a model, for inst You know, I've got a twenty-eight waist."

"I'm not impressed. You're a big girl sides, you're just not a model type."

Daddy snorted very loudly. "Models a thin. They're skinny."

"I should be skinny like that." I s smugly.

"Fred's got sense," daddy said, p down the paper. "More than I can sa you. You are not a model type."

"I know, I'm the healthy type, and I it." Suddenly I felt all choky and teary. sick and tired of being so darn healthy.

"For heaven's sakes," mother said. "W wrong with being healthy?"

She stared at me, and I stared right "Can't you embroider something be flowers and bowers?" I demanded, compl unreasonable.

Mother's eyebrows flew way up, an looked at her needlework. "What's the m with flowers?"

All I could think of was Brogan's clea apartment, and how he would loathe the c ful bouquets. But I couldn't tell her tha there was only one other thing to do. I sto up the stairs in tears.

I could hear them in the living room, didn't bother to listen. I made up a v bunch of lists of things I had to do to ch my type—which I was determined to do

1855 YWCA 1955

CENTENNIAL

One hundred years ago, two groups of young women met in London: one to pray for "princesses, domestic servants and factory girls," the other to found a home for nurses returning from the Crimean War. Today, with three million members in the United States and uncounted others in sixty-five nations abroad, the Young Women's Christian Association is the oldest and one of the largest women's organizations in the world.

You can help support the Y.W.C.A. program of health, education, recreation and faith by sending contributions to: Young Women's Christian Association of the U.S.A., 600 Lexington Avenue, New York 22, New York.

excelLENT MEAL with WAFFLE* APPEAL

DOWNYFLAKE SHRIMP NEW ORLEANS

Cook until tender ¼ cup chopped onion and ⅓ cup chopped green pepper in 2 tablespoons shortening. Add 1 can tomato soup, ¼ cup catsup, ⅓ cup water and dash of black pepper. Simmer over low heat for about five minutes, stirring occasionally. Add 1 pound cleaned, cooked shrimp (frozen or canned). Cook for five minutes more. Spoon shrimp and sauce over toasted DOWNYFLAKE Waffle. Cover with another DOWNYFLAKE Waffle and top with remaining shrimp and sauce. Serves four.

*the DOWNYFLAKE kind!
no batter, no bother just pop into toaster 'n serve

Downyflake Waffles are much more than a hurry-up Lenten meal idea. Ordinary Lenten meals become extraordinary meals with crisp, golden-brown Downyflake Waffles as the star attraction. Plain dishes take on added eye appeal and flavor fascination. Plan your Lenten meals around Downyflake Waffles.

special Lenten recipes in every package of Downyflake Waffles frozen Downyflake 1-minute WAFFLES

©Waffle Corp. of America

t wasn't too hard, really, when you come to k of it. A lot happened to me in a few eks. Pierre cut my hair. You've heard about h: he wears only green clothes—green shirts l ties and even suits—and they say his ole apartment is green, every inch of it. In eral, he is slightly wacky, but terribly chic, d I decided he was the man for me.

don't want to bore you with the wisecracks ple made when they saw the hairdo. Nody liked it at first, but everybody agreed it s different.

t was three weeks before I was sent over to gan's again, and by then I had got used to haircut, and I had also lost almost ten pounds. My new black dress was still a little tight, but I hoped to diet off another ten pounds and fit into Size Twelves more readily.

"Nancy, it's hard to believe," Brogan marveled. "You look absolutely divine."

Fred said I looked like a scarecrow; daddy screamed I looked like an atrocity case. Who cared?

I smiled modestly. At that moment I was so hungry, I felt faint.

"Divine," Brogan repeated quietly, coming up close to me.

My heart turned over, whether from love or hunger I will never know. He looked straight into my eyes, and I knew something was about to happen, if I would let it. For some reason, I suddenly got cold feet.

"Lunch," I murmured feebly. It broke things up, and I offer it, free, as a tip to anybody that might need it. There's nothing like the mention of food to break a mood.

By this time, Brogan's program had been on the air for a week, and it had a sensational reception. All over America, people were taking their coffee cups into the living room, so they could finish dinner while listening to a half hour of the latest. That was Brogan's strong point—the latest. He talked about Scrabble before most of the rest of the world knew what it was. The ink on the books he mentioned was hardly dry. He discussed not only the big Broadway plays, but the little off-beat productions. You remember—Symphony of Sounds, the play where nobody said one single word. And Love Triumphant, where everybody in the play ended up divorced, and marriage appeared to be an invention for peasants only.

Daddy and mother watched Brogan, of course, partly because I did, and partly because everybody else did too. "He's cracked if he thinks he'll get me to spend good money on shows like that," daddy growled.

But Brogan's program was balanced. The night Doctor Wright was the guest, daddy beamed, because daddy is an enthusiastic gardener, and Doctor Wright's views on compost heaps were fine. The program had something for everybody; the fan mail was terrific.

At that point, I was spending practically all my time on the show, and was shuttling back and forth between the plant and Brogan's office daily. I began to attend rehearsals, and then the actual broadcasts. There was an awful lot of detail to attend to, and I willingly assumed the responsibilities.

At first that consisted mainly of checking the scripts and the cue cards. Cue cards are terribly important in a show like Brogan's. They remind him of all the points to be covered, and in what sequence. Usually they are flipped, one at a time, by a girl out of sight of the camera.

I became quite a big shot at the studio, and frankly, I loved it. I sat in the sponsor's booth during the show, and took notes, and gradually had more to worry about. I made the frenzied last-minute telephone calls and contacts that seem to be an inevitable part of a five-times-a-week show. I saw Brogan every day—and I loved it all.

I CAME up with my big inspiration about then, and if you want to shoot me for it, I give you permission, because, really, you suffered plenty with it. "Start to LIVE . . . with SNIMATIV!" Remember, to the tune of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony? It was awful, but it rhymed, and Mr. Saunders adored it. They pushed it like crazy, with thirty-second commercials day and night on radio and TV, both. It was a terrific success, and I got a bonus for it. I promptly went out and bought myself a pair of drop earrings—triangles so long they almost brushed my shoulders, but the salesman said only a tall girl could get away with them, so naturally I fell for them.

"Why don't you have your nose pierced?" daddy asked. "Then you could get a matching set."

"They're vulgar," mother said. She likes pearls and button things. "But," she went on considerингly, "maybe with that hair ——"

"I'll look vulgar all over," I prompted.

"I didn't say that," she protested.

"To think," daddy went on bitterly, "that you got a bonus—a bonus—for that horrible limerick! What a crime against the American people!"

"It sells," I said serenely.

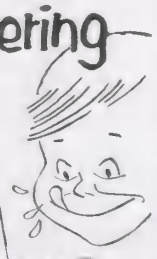
"So will marijuana, if you let people buy it."

"Daddy!"

That was just his opinion, which was very strong, as usual. Around Snimativ I was quite the little white-haired girl. Mr. Saunders was proud of me, and I got a raise, and a little gold engraved sign on my desk: Miss Matthews. It looked quite chic, and Fred came up from the lab to admire it.

"Hello, Miss Celebrity!" No Hey-Nanny, and I noticed it. "Do you have time for lunch these days?"

"Hello, sweetie," I said in Brogan's best casual-friendly manner, knowing it would irritate Fred. The earrings made a big clanking noise. "Can't possibly. I'm off to New York on the twelve-fifty-seven."



"Have an early lunch," he suggested agreeably.

"Oh, noon is such a dismal time to lunch, doll face."

"The way you eat these days, it doesn't matter anyway. You could just as well have your celery hearts now."

"Sorry, darling." I shook my head in deepest regret, the earrings banging me solidly on the sides of my neck. It's a good thing I'm strong; I could never have supported them otherwise.

ow to give MEAT LOAF more Mouth-Watering Flavor!"

Top your favorite MEAT LOAF dish with B in B Mushrooms! It will taste better . . . look better, too! B in B Mushrooms are low in calories, low in cost as well.

Use B in B Broiled in Butter MUSHROOMS

hen you plan your next low-cost meal, see w B in B Mushrooms can add new taste peal! For B in B Mushrooms are hothouse own . . . broiled in butter to a golden brown . then packed in their own de- ious, savory broth. Thrifty, o—because there's no peel- g, no trimming, no waste!

3 Convenient Styles!

B in B Whole Crowns
B in B Sliced Mushrooms
B in B Chopped Mushrooms

EADY TO HEAT AND SERVE!

Brush a RICH BROWN CRUST ON FISH

with KITCHEN Bouquet

For a tempting broiled-brown crust, brush your fish with Kitchen Bouquet—and broil as usual. Recipes in the package for steaks, chops, hamburgers, poultry, roasts and gravy. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 75 years.

Costs So Little . . . Adds So Much!

"Here's why I use Roylprints for all casual dining."

says MRS. MARIO BRAGGIOTTI, socialite of New York and Southampton

"Except for those few special occasions, informal dining is the rule in my home. That's why I make it a rule to serve on Roylprints Paper Place Mats. The modern, colorful patterns give my table that smart, fresh touch . . . and I save a remarkable amount of time. Just think—no linens to fuss with, nothing to wash or put away. I just toss out the used Roylprints after each meal. The low cost is remarkable too:—Just about 5¢ for a setting of four." Available at Variety, Supermarkets and Department Stores everywhere.

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn 1, N.Y. Manufacturer of Roylies Lace Paper Doylies, Royledge Shelf Lining Paper and Edging All-in-One. (A subsidiary of Eastern Corp.)

Roylprints Paper Place Mats

Roylies Lace Paper Doylies

DESIGNED FOR Royal LIVING EVERY DAY!

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

IMAGINE getting heavy, luxurious Broadloom Rugs or wall-to-wall Carpeting . . . for about half the price you'd usually pay! Well, you can . . . thanks to the OLSON Rug Company's famous patented process of reclaiming the valuable seasoned wools and other materials in your discarded carpets, rugs, clothing, blankets, etc. . . . then blending with choice New Wools and weaving lovely, thick, deep-textured, two-sided Broadlooms any woman would be proud to own. Naturally you SAVE REAL MONEY because most of the material (and it doesn't matter about the colors!) in your beautiful new OLSON Rug is supplied by you. What's more, the OLSON people guarantee to please you . . . or pay you for your materials. But learn all about it . . . by sending for this:

FREE Booklet

FREE BOOK called "Rug Magic"! A 40-page full-color book that tells all and shows 44 new rug colors, designs and patterns in model rooms. I'll also send you a GIFT COUPON along with your FREE Book . . . so check OFFER #1 in box below and mail it to me today!

ARE YOU EMBARRASSED when your friends can't make your lovely table lighters light because they need fuel? Well, you can avoid that embarrassment . . . thanks to the exclusive new "Switch-Spout" on the RONSONOL can! You don't have to wait for your husband to fill your lighters . . . you can do it yourself easily in seconds! That's because the new RONSONOL "Switch-Spout" ends complicated, messy lighter filling . . . and there's no cutting or piercing, no little cap to worry about. You simply flip it open, flip it shut . . . and it's sealed air-tight. Best of all, RONSONOL is the finest, most famous lighter fuel made . . . it lights instantly, burns cleanly, smokelessly and lasts so much longer. It's pleasingly scented, too . . . and the price is still only 25c a can . . . so buy 2 at a time! And get RONSON extra-length flints to keep your lighters sparking brighter . . . for they're 40% longer than ordinary flints and give 500 more lights!

NO FOOLING . . . there's no folding when your baby wears REDI-FOL* Gauze Diapers! That's because they're pre-folded . . . and my own experience proves this saves hours of work each week. Furthermore, they're thin where they pin . . . padded where they protect! And REDI-FOLS are made of top quality surgical-type gauze that's whisper-soft and are sized to fit any baby. REDI-FOLS wash in a wink, too, and always dry wrinkle-free . . . are really a joy for both baby and you! And let me remind you again that REDI-FOLS are made by a Johnson & Johnson Company . . . makers of famous Chix* Gauze Diapers, Chux* Disposable Diapers, Chix* Crib Sheets and Chix* Diaper Liners. So look for them at your Favorite Store in the familiar blue candy-striped box. And be sure to take advantage of this:

SPECIAL OFFER of a SAMPLE REDI-FOL Diaper to try . . . for only 35c! See OFFER #2 in box.

Trademarks

YOUR HAIR IS LIKE A CANDLE . . . for if it's bright and glowing, it draws people to you . . . but if it's dull and colorless, no one knows you're there. So keep yours shining brilliantly . . . by using MARCHAND'S Rinse after every shampoo! That's what I think every woman should do . . . because MARCHAND'S "lights" hair with color and brightness . . . makes it shine with such natural loveliness it's truly magnetic. There's a MARCHAND'S shade made just for you, too . . . in your choice of 12 safe, Government-approved colors with special tints for beautiful white hair. All are temporary, of course . . . they wash out easily with each shampoo and leave no tell-tale stains around the hair line. And how silky-soft and satin-smooth your hair is after a MARCHAND'S Rinse . . . what a perfect angel to manage. So remember that color attracts . . . and use the MARCHAND'S color Rinse that will do the most for you. 25c for 6 Rinses, 10c for 2.

SPRINGTIME IS CLEAN-UP TIME . . . when every woman wants her home to sparkle like the glorious days ahead. But remember . . . all the scrubbing and rubbing in the world won't clean the air of unpleasant odors. But GOOD-AIRE will . . . in fact, nothing I've ever tried beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear! Easy-does-it, too . . . you just push the lever on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . odors from cooking, bathrooms, pets and the nursery, along with odors from stale air and tobacco smoke fade away. Sounds incredible, I know . . . but with a mere touch of the finger offensive odors are gone and the air is delightfully inviting! That's why GOOD-AIRE is good etiquette . . . and I hope you'll use it regularly as a courtesy to your family and guests. Costs 98c for the regular size, $1.89 for the large economy size at Drug, Grocery, Hardware and Dept. Stores. It's made by the makers of Bridgeport® Aer★A★Sol Bug Bomb and other Aer★A★Sol products.

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J-1, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

☐ OFFER #1 . . . FREE BOOK . . . OLSON'S "Rug Magic" . . . and GIFT COUPON.

☐ OFFER #2 . . . SPECIAL SAMPLE of REDI-FOL Diaper. Please enclose 35c.

"Sure. I understand. You've no time to eat—you're too busy feeding lines to Brogan."

"Nobody has to feed Brogan lines. That's just silly."

"Is it?" He pointed to the sheaf of papers on my desk. "All his famous wit is right there, in black and white. I've watched that guy night after night. If he didn't have a road map, he couldn't make it from his office to the studio."

"Why, Fred!" I said in mock horror. "You're jealous!" I picked up my yellow coat, and shook my hair. Pierre said that was better than combing it.

"I honestly think you're nuts," Fred said. "Whoever heard of a short-sleeved winter coat? And I wish you'd let that crew cut grow out." Now he sounded wistful.

"Cheer up," I said, drawing on a fresh orange mouth. The lipstick was Pierre's too; it came in a bright green case.

To tell you the truth, Fred made me nervous. A lot of things made me nervous those days. I guess it was partly because I was always hungry, and partly because I was constantly crashing around like a lunatic, between my home and the plant and New York. And I suppose that I felt guilty about keeping Fred on a string, as it were. I had a lot on my mind.

The conferences with Brogan went well. At this point, I would just hand him an outline of the show, and he would proceed to fill in with the latest play, book, symphony and so on. Then we would go over it, and think up bright remarks, wherever possible. Lots of the so-called ad libs were figured out in advance.

I was flattered that Brogan accepted so many of my suggestions.

"You seem to understand the American mind, Nancy," he said quite seriously. "If any proof was needed, there's that commercial of yours. It's a natural—insistent, revolting, tasteless, and leaning on a classic."

I knew Brogan pretty well by then, and I knew he could be a mean critic, using very strong language just for dramatic emphasis. Still, I was miffed.

"Well, it's making money," I said, apologizing only slightly.

"Ah, the final word—money! How American!"

"Brogan, you sound like a foreigner."

"Sometimes I feel like one," he sighed, and we went back to program planning.

It was two-thirty before we got out to lunch, and by then I was no longer hungry, just faint. I noticed once again that he took a little white pill before he ate. Sometimes he took the trouble to do it surreptitiously, and sometimes not. I knew he took another pill after he ate. These were the little things I felt awfully tolerant about. I knew it was a studio joke that he sprayed his throat before each broadcast, a that he took pink lozenges every four hour it was a dry day, and yellow lozenges every f hours if it was humid. He was nicknamed P box Brogan, and word went around t Snimativ hired him to eat up all the surp samples.

Anyway, we finally went to lunch. The r taurant was dimly lit, even though it was s early afternoon. There were tons of silverw on the glistening cloth, and rows of drink glasses, and thick carpets and quiet music. sat side by side on a banquette, and I felt v happy.

"Let's talk about us, Nancy," Brogan s cozily. I guess he was under the same ma influence.

"M-m-m-m?" I said as invitingly as I cou

"I think we complement each other," said thoughtfully. "You have the drive, energy, the outgoing friendliness that is mi ing in me."

"Oh, Brogan," I protested modestly. And all honesty, I added, "You have so much never will begin to even know about."

He didn't bother to deny that. "But gether," he went on, "together, we make u well-rounded personality."

My heart flipped and started racing. I dizzy, and gnawed at a bread stick, trying keep my hands from shaking. I was way ahe of him, thinking, as silly girls do everywhe Mrs. Brogan Brown. Nancy Matthews Bro Nancy Brown. And so on.

He was talking about how we made a tea a unit, a complete entity, but I didn't hear ery single word. I just got the gist of it, sinc was lost in my own private dream world. I h learned long before that if you couldn't thi of a bright remark, a secret kind of smile wor wonderfully. I sat there, a dead ringer Mona Lisa.

He leaned very close to me, and I realiz that for a cold type of person, he was bei very emotional. He kissed me, lightly, tender meltingly, and the whole room rocked.

Our clam cocktail arrived at that mome and we both started squeezing lemon slices told you, there's nothing like food to break a mood, and nothing I could do brought back to that momentary tenderness.

My diet was a phenomenal success. I l twenty-two pounds in less than three mont To tell you the truth, after a while I really l my appetite. Part of it was tension abo Brogan, and then there were the responsib ties my job created. All my old clothes hu like rags, so the most natural thing in t world was that I should spend most of my no handsome salary on new clothes.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 184

"Your between-snack meal is on the table."

EVERY PIECE OF Lenox IS A COLLECTOR'S ITEM

FOR THE CAMBODIAN EMBASSY—PRECIOUS LENOX

Demi-tasse from the regal Lenox service made for the Cambodian Embassy. Another of the famous "Command Performances" created by Lenox.

FOR YOU—PRECIOUS Pine

Clear magic! Feathery boughs of pine with fine green needles fanning out from rich brown cones . . . fresh and delicate against the gleam of Lenox. Pine is the identical quality of china as in the brilliant Cambodian service, for Lenox makes only one china—the finest! Choose your Lenox pattern from the wide selection at the finest stores. In years to come, you'll appreciate more and more the timeless perfection of design and the amazing durability of Lenox!

Place setting consisting of dinner, salad, and butter plates, teacup and saucer . . . $18.95

FOR HELP IN CHOOSING YOUR FINE CHINA—send for the name of your nearest authorized Lenox Dealer. Write Lenox, Inc., Dept. C-74, Trenton, New Jersey. Enclose 25¢ if you wish "The Reference Book of Fine China" and full-color pattern and price leaflets.

COLONNADE—5-piece place setting, $16.95

CATTAIL—5-piece place setting, $18.95

Lenox China AMERICA'S WORLD-FAMOUS FINE CHINA

Gentle as a Mother's Kiss

...yet so Fast you need a stopwatch to time its Speed!

No other pain reliever can offer you Bayer Aspirin's double proof of gentleness and speed!

When you're in pain you need relief that's gentle—want relief that's fast. And only Bayer Aspirin offers you this double proof of both:

1 Bayer Aspirin's gentleness is proved not only by the fact that doctors prescribe it even for small children, but also by its record of safe use by millions of people—a record of safety that no other pain reliever can match.

2 And Bayer Aspirin's speed is proved by dropping a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water. Almost instantly—so fast you need a stopwatch to time its speed—the tablet starts disintegrating. It does the same in your stomach. And that's one reason why Bayer Aspirin makes you feel better—fast.

So when you have an ordinary headache, neuritic or neuralgic pain, do as millions do—take Bayer Aspirin.

Get the best—get

BAYER ASPIRIN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 182

"You seem determined to make yourself as angular as possible," mother sighed, as I modeled a new dress.

"Won't they sell you anything but black?" daddy complained.

"Black is classic," I explained patiently.

"For mourning, yes. Ye gods, you look like a model for Halloween, one of those skinny witches!"

You must admit that I got very little encouragement at home. And Fred was no better.

"You're getting so brittle-looking," he said. "Like you're wasting away with some awful disease. What kind of diet did you go on, anyway? Maybe you need some vitamins."

"Oh, no!" I really laughed at the thought. The worm would turn, and I would end up taking Snimativ myself.

"Wouldn't be a bad idea. You know, you can't do without food entirely." And he started on a semiscientific discourse on the relation of food to the body, and the place of the carbohydrate in the human diet.

As he spoke, I felt the cogs in my brain suddenly mesh. It was pure inspiration. "Snimativ Speaks!" had been born that very moment.

Mr. Saunders and Mr. Kelcey loved it at once.

"And to think I hired you myself," Mr. Kelcey purred, marveling at his perspicacity.

I was wearing the black dress, and the huge earrings, and eleven bracelets all on one arm. Both gentlemen beamed at me approvingly, and nobody suggested that I looked like a witch. I put on my best mysterious-type smile.

The Snimativ commercial spots had consisted mainly of a doctor type in a white coat, muttering mumbo-jumbo, and laboratory shots, showing boiling test tubes and exotic concoctions, and so on. I thought that instead we could have Brogan interview some of the people from the huge Snimativ family: maybe a truck driver, and a packer, and a technician, and a chemist—that's where Fred came in, and how I got the idea in the first place.

Well, if you think Mr. Saunders and Mr. Kelcey were enthusiastic, you should have heard Brogan.

"It will be a real thing," he exclaimed, positively glowing. "A real, real thing. Positively inspirational. Folksy." He looked at me admiringly. "You're a genius, you know. A natural type of genius. Folksy."

"Oh, come now," I protested mildly, pushing up the load of bracelets. They weighed a ton.

"Not that you look folksy, darling." He smiled approvingly. "Anything but."

At the sound of the "darling," I smiled hopefully, inviting more.

"You're really a remarkable girl. I told you before, I think we make quite a team. You supply the necessary warmth. Too much intellectuality isn't good."

Well, he started on the folksy commercials again, and nothing I could do would get the conversation back to my natural warmth.

NEED I tell you about "Snimativ Speaks!"? I'm sure you've seen quite a few of them. You know, the truck driver, who drives I-don't-know-how-many thousand miles annually for Snimativ; the pretty girl inspector, planning to get married in June; technicians, office personnel, cafeteria employees, and so on. Judging from the mail we got, they were a tremendous success.

It was my idea, and naturally it was up to me to line up the people who were to appear on the show. We had a five-minute spot, and it was treated as a guest interview, rather than a commercial. Of course only a certain number of jobs were glamorous, and they had to be spaced out to sustain interest. It was a couple of weeks before I talked to Fred about appearing.

"You leave me out of your clever program," he said testily. "One ham actor in your life should be enough."

"Why, Fred," and I ignored his nasty crack, "I thought you'd be pleased to do it." Everybody else had been thrilled to death, practically.

"If this Snimativ boy speaks, you'll be cut off the air."

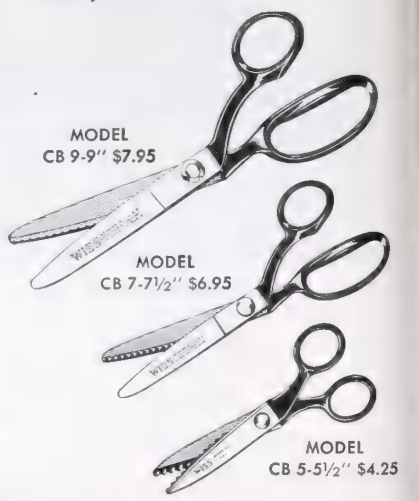
"You're head of the lab," I protested. "I assumed ——"

"You've been assuming too much. I won't be made a monkey of, in front of millions of viewers." Honestly, he sounded just like daddy in one of his moods.

Of course when Mr. Saunders and Mr. Kelcey got after him, he broke down. He was reluctant, but he agreed to do it.

At that point, I lived, breathed and existed on "Doing the Town." Both Brogan and Mr. Saunders relied on me almost entirely for the million details involved in each program. I did most of the script, and a lot of the leg work. I prepared interviews, and rehearsed with guests; I tried to spare Brogan petty details as much as possible. When show time came,

Summer Blossoms "in the pink"



FLOWERS ARE THE FASHION — Gay, decorative and easy to make with bright felt and your Wiss Pinking Shears. Put them on a summer hat, bag or skirt—for fun as well as fashion.

SEND 25¢ to Wiss, Dept. K30 for Pattern No. 124 for all flowers shown.

For that professional look use

WISS
PINKING SHEARS

The quality shears that guarantee a clean, ravel-resistant or decorative finish on all fabrics—single or several thicknesses. Choose the Wiss pinkers best for your needs. In 3 sizes: 5½" to 9". $4.25 to $8.95. At notions departments, better hardware and cutlery stores.

J. WISS & SONS CO., Newark 7, N. J.

Manufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Shears, Metal Cutting Snips and Garden Shears pected everything to move like clockwork. was quite a job.

Fred and I conferred, and he made it clear at this was a business conference only. He's t clever about hiding his feelings, and I knew was sore. I didn't care. All I wanted was him the show—and I won.

With only five minutes, Fred felt he couldn't too much about what he actually did. We ally boiled it down to a few hundred words out Snimativ's impeccable standards of nufacture, and the unending research that nt on in the labs.

"You'll wear your white lab coat, of course," aid.

"Why? It's not a costume party, is it?" He s immediately belligerent.

"I think it will add a lot," I said firmly.

"O.K., boss. If I say no, you'll just get Mr. lcey after me again."

I smiled as sweetly as I could. He was right; at's just what I would have done.

The night Fred was to appear, I had a cold I uldn't shake, and all I wanted to do was awl into bed. But by the greatest effort of ll, I dragged myself to the studio. It's a good ing I did too.

First of all, the card girl—the one who flips e cue cards—was sick all of a sudden and ere was a big to-do about a substitute.

"I'll do it, for heaven's sakes," I volun- ered. I felt sure I was sicker than the girl who d gone home. It's really pretty simple; all u do is sit on a stool and turn over the cue rds one by one. I can't imagine why this is nsidered a glamorous job, but it is.

Well, there was a sigh of relief all around, d we had a quick run down on the show, th me flipping the cards. There were a few inor adjustments, as usual, and I penciled em in on the script, and rearranged the cards cordingly. Fred watched silently and I was nscious that he was observing everything refully.

We had a couple of minutes till air time, and ed lit a cigarette.

"No smoking," Brogan commanded im- riously. Fred shrugged and put it out. Where's my stuff, Nancy?"

By that he meant his pills and spray, which always used immediately before going on. ith a sinking feeling, I realized I had for- tten all about them.

"Aren't they there?" I asked as brightly as ssible.

"If they were, would I be imbecile enough to k?" He slammed his desk drawer shut im- atiently.

"Sixty seconds," one of the men called.

"I forgot," I said miserably, thinking that I eeded the stuff more than he did. I sneezed ightly.

"Don't come near me with that cold!" rogan yelled.

"Sorry." I had been helping him look, and rew away.

There wasn't time for any further searching. he introductory music started, I grabbed the t of cue cards, and we were on.

"Good evening, ladies and gentlemen," rogan started in his fine, cultivated voice. He eared his throat, unnecessarily. He looked at he card I was holding, and his eyes betrayed im. The little disruption had upset him.

I suppose I was sicker than I knew. Brogan ill never believe that it was unintentional, ut somehow or other the cue cards got mixed p.

NE always started with "Around the own." But he began with the book review, nd when I glanced down to the card I was olding, I realized in horror it said "Luttinger look," which wasn't due for seventeen min- tes. He went bravely ahead, and I frantically ried to rearrange the cards.

When he looked for the next cue, his face ent perfectly blank for a couple of seconds. On a TV show, a couple of seconds is equiva- nt to a couple of hours anywhere else.

He started on the book all over again. I die when I even think about that awful moment. The card said "Book," but it referred to a new book acquired by the Metropolitan Museum, dating from the Middle Ages, and beautifully illuminated.

I suppose he was mixed up, and I certainly was. Everybody in the background was scurrying around like crazy, aware of the fluff. In desperation, I pulled "Commercial" out of the deck of cards. It was way too early, but I thought if he settled on the commercial for a minute, I'd have a chance to adjust the cards again.

"It is my great pleasure, ladies and gentlemen," Brogan said, with a nervous smile, "to introduce our guest for the evening."

I sat perfectly still, my jaw wide open in amazement. Poor Fred! Here Brogan had introduced him, never starting the commercial at all. He just dumped Fred in the audience's lap. Fred—with no experience—and Brogan in no condition to help out. I shivered, and thought the nicest thing that could happen to me would be for me to suddenly fall through the floor.

Everybody was shattered—except Fred. Unless you happened to see him that night, you'd never believe how calmly he took over.

"Advertising is a funny business," he started, smiling gently. He looked wonderful in his white coat. "We get involved with what they call 'hard sell.' We repeat our trade name, over and over, hoping you'll never be able to forget it. And we get hold of a few superficial facts, and repeat them over and over, hoping you'll be impressed." He paused, giving just the right dramatic emphasis.

"The curious truth is that the claims that are made are well founded. The scientist with the microscope, the chemist with the test tubes, the rows of guinea pigs—you've seen these over and over. But they're not figments of an advertising man's imagination. They exist." Fred smiled winningly. "I'm one of those scientists. All I do, day in and day out, is work on methods of making our products the best of their kind. This work involves microscopes, test tubes and guinea pigs, among other things. It's not just so much malarkey. Maybe sometimes you get fed up with the advertising, but the product is good ——"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 187

new! deep magic

facial cleansing lotion by Toni cleans your skin up to 3 times cleaner than soaps or creams

now you can have a clearer skin

because you can have a cleaner skin. New Deep Magic actually deep-cleans your skin as much as three times cleaner than soaps or creams—without soap drying, without cream greasiness!

It leaves your skin far cleaner, radiantly clear the very first time you use it. Lanolin-gentle Deep Magic actually replaces natural oils, leaving behind an invisible powder base.

Try Deep Magic today. See the wonderful magic it works on your complexion!

(60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, wherever cosmetics are sold.)

non-drying—contains no soaps, no detergents, no alcohol

No other cleansing method leaves your skin

So clear, So soft, So radiant

Tissue-Test proves it!

After you think your usual cleansing method has cleaned your skin, use a few drops of Deep Magic. Then look at your tissue. See all the clogging make-up that only Deep Magic can remove . . . Proof that Deep Magic cleans deep, deep down—where beauty begins!

NEW! PFAFF

the FIRST and only COMPLETELY AUTOMATIC sewing machine

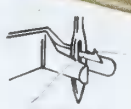
NO DISCS TO CHANGE

Even Threads Itself!

The design of this new Pfaff Automatic zig zag sewing machine is sheer genius. There are no discs to change. No extra attachments are necessary. Everything is built-in—from the exclusive automatic needle threader to the exclusive automatic Dial-A-Stitch. No other sewing machine is as easy to use. You just push a lever to thread your needle. Just dial to sew anything from a simple straight stitch to hundreds of beautiful decorative stitches. The new Pfaff Automatic makes every other sewing machine old fashioned, because no other machine is so completely automatic.

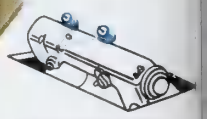
The Pfaff makes beautiful sewing so simple, clothes never need have a home-made look! You can make these delightful, distinctive Easter outfits with the fabulous new Pfaff Automatic even if you've never tackled anything more complicated than an apron!

There is a Pfaff to suit every purse and purpose in a variety of beautiful cabinets and portables. See them now at your nearest Pfaff dealer and get a free Easter corsage pattern for your Easter outfit!



P. S. We pronounce our name Pfaff—as in fashion!

EXCLUSIVE PFAFF AUTOMATIC



DIAL-A-STITCH

MAKES BEAUTIFUL SEWING SIMPLE . . . ENDS "HOME-MADE" LOOK!

Built-in Needle Threader
Only the Pfaff is so automatic it threads itself!

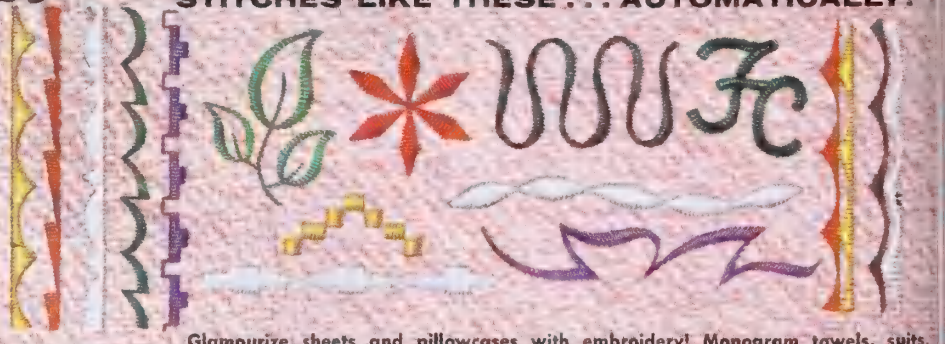
Fingertip Lift!
Lifts itself into sewing position at the touch of your finger!

PFAFF®

© 1955 American Pfaff Co.

...famous for quality the world over since 1862

ONLY WITH A PFAFF CAN YOU DIAL EVERY STITCH OF THESE SMART EASTER OUTFITS!



EMBROIDER YOUR EASTER CORSAGE
FREE! Get these and other free corsage patterns at your Pfaff dealer today.

MAKE PROFESSIONAL CORDED BUTTONHOLES
Essential on a well-tailored suit! Easy to make on a Pfaff!

plus

HUNDREDS OF OTHER FASHION STITCHES LIKE THESE . . . AUTOMATICALLY!

Glamourize sheets and pillowcases with embroidery! Monogram towels, suits, blouses! Make clothes original and distinctive with beautiful decorative stitching!

373 Fifth Avenue, New York
216 N. Canal St., Chicago
Service guaranteed by over 2000 dealers in the United States and Canada.
Look in the classified telephone directory or write Pfaff for the dealer nearest you!
1142 S. San Julian St., Los Angeles
1015 St. Alexandre St., Montreal

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 185

e went on and on, for almost ten minutes. It ok that long for Brogan to gather himself to her; the cameraman thoughtfully focused or red, and Brogan wasn't even visible on the sc n. It was Fred's program. Nobody had to pr mpt him—he talked easily and naturally, as th gh this was a thing he did every day in his li It was wonderful.

watched in open-mouthed amazement for a w minutes, and then threw down the cue ca s, and retired to the back of the studio, wh re I could watch on a monitor—a regular te ision set, that shows the picture as you see it your home.

rogan finally took over, of course. He sig- na d the cameraman, interrupted Fred sm othly, and went on fr n there. I've been told by others that the show w n't as terrible as I had th ught.

t last we heard the lo ly Snimativ music—B thoven's Fifth and " art to Live—with S MATIV!" The whole st io started to talk at o e, and three seconds la r all the phones there started ringing. ooking sullen and disgusted, Brogan was g ering up his papers. "Well!" he declared, ir gnation personified, as he saw me. "What- e possessed you tonight?"

was a rhetorical question, and I felt too li to answer, but I said tentatively, "I don't fe well."

That's the cheapest excuse in the business. Y u really fouled me up, you know. And th's a job any moron can handle!" It was in ulting, to put it mildly.

felt so tired, all at once. I was tired of be- i used, and tired of complementing his per- s ality, and tired of not feeling my natural s . I didn't even want to begin to defend my- s . I made a beeline for Fred.

Take me home," I pleaded.

To his everlasting credit, Fred asked no q stions. "Sure, honey," he answered right a ay. "Sure."

First, though, we had to talk to Mr. Kelcey on the phone. He was clamoring, and I thought—and so did Brogan, I'm sure—that we'd all be fired. But Mr. Kelcey was practically weeping for joy. "What a public-relations man! What a marvelous job! I want to see Fred first thing tomorrow morning!" And Mr. Saunders, and about a million others, all equally enthusiastic. Fred was a hit, all right. Solid.

All the way back home, in an extravagant taxicab, Fred patted my back while I cried and cried and cried. We were almost in East Orange before I had recovered enough to let him kiss me.

"I have a cold," I murmured.

"I'll take Snimativ's anticold tablets," he said, kissing me firmly on my mouth.

"I feel dizzy," I said, catching my breath at last.

"Well, thanks, darling. I'm the powerful Snimativ type."

I laughed softly. "Fred," I said, "I'm so hungry."

"Poor kid." He chuckled. "We'll have to feed you up," he told me.

By the time the cab pulled up in front of my house, I felt firmly and positively engaged.

I just want you to know that nothing is ever a complete waste. When I was shopping for my wedding dress, I got a phenomenal bargain in an imported Italian gown, just because I was five feet eleven inches tall, and weighed only one hundred and nineteen pounds. There probably wasn't another girl in the whole world who could wear it. Even the bargain price wasn't terribly low, but daddy didn't mind a bit, because he was so delighted with the thought of Fred for his son-in-law.

You know, daddy and Fred are quite a bit alike. I bet Dr. Sigmund Freud would have found some interesting things to say about me, because of that. You know, the father image, and all that stuff. Oh, well.

I couldn't begin to squeeze even half of me into that wedding dress today. END

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 82 & 83

Vogue Design No. 8501. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8549. "Easy to Make" coat; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8535. One-piece dress and reversible collar; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8565. One-piece dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8494. "Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 40; 30 to 40. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 7694. Skirt, 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8560. One-piece dress with detachable collar; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8479. "Easy to Make" suit; 12 to 42, 30 to 42. 75c.

8501 8549 8535 8565

8494 7694 8560 8479

Who has the Baby-Soft Skin?

BOTH HAVE!

Both use Cuticura—mildest of all leading soaps by actual laboratory tests

Is your complexion less than perfect? Then perhaps you have thought Cuticura Soap is just for guarding babies, healing blemishes or tending damaged skin. The fact is Cuticura Soap is valuable daily complexion care for all types of skin, all ages, all members of the family. Ask some young-looking grandmother her secret and chances are she'll tell you she has used Cuticura Soap every day since babyhood. Naturally, her own children and theirs too use Cuticura.

Actual laboratory tests prove Cuticura mildest of all leading soaps. Only Cuticura is superfatted to maintain the natural moisture and normal, healthy acidity of the skin. Cuticura may even be used safely on a just-born baby!

Does more for your skin. Emollient Cuticura Soap is also mildly medicated to protect, preserve. Exquisitely fragrant too—hard-milled, long-lasting, one of the finest soaps made!

See thrilling results in 7 days. Do as hundreds of doctors and thousands upon thousands of women recommend – lather-massage a full minute twice daily. If blackheads, externally caused pimples, flaky dryness, oily shine are a problem, use Cuticura Ointment too every night. See exciting new softness, new freshness, radiant new loveliness in just a few days! Do start Cuticura care today.

Available in Canada

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Cuticura

Proved Way to Lovelier Skin

Enchanting tops to wear under the jumper, as separate jackets. Ours, in embroidered organdy, gingham, Vogue Design No. 8541.

One wonderful jumper has many ways of looking. This pattern includes a simple blouse (we like it in a flannel-and-jersey combination). For evening wear without blouse, neckline filled with beads. Model was photographed one week before baby due.

For summer: A short version in linen or denim. Vogue Design No. 8540.

YEAR-ROUND MATERNITY CLOTHES

DESIGNED to look pretty, to be comfortable; your choice of fabric names the season. For those who like a one-piece costume, our jumper will serve many purposes; it's suitable for many fabrics—flannel, faille, linen, denim and many others. The prettiest fashion details are evident in all of them . . . a special favorite is the satin-ribbon bow detail on our two-piece dress (whose skirt, though slim in front, has two giant-size walking pleats in back). The most comfortable clothes are the most becoming, we think, for you never feel self-conscious in them.

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Necklines should be flattering, changeable. This short jumper has two versions. One with short sleeves, a bias fold at the neckline. The other, sleeveless with a blouse underneath. Ours is corduroy. Vogue Design No. 8555.

For summer, make in rough cotton with striped chambray shirt, pearl button in back.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Patterns on page 194. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order, from Vogue Pattern Service, Put... Conn., Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto. Some patterns slightly higher in Canada. (Conn... sales tax.) If you desire ... please include 5¢ ... for each pattern ordered.

The line of this two-piece dress is bound to be becoming to most figures. Gores fall from a yoke accented with satin bow. The skirt, a slim U cut in front, boasts two pleats in back—a reader request. Vogue Design No. 8550.

SHARLAND

For summer, in white piqué accented with ribbon. Be sure to build up underarm at least ½" for sleeves.

Keep hair shining bright for days

The shimmering highlights are there in your hair, so easy to bring out with Mary King Liquid Creme Shampoo—delicate, pure, concentrated—so gentle on your hair. Billows of lather in hard or soft water; leaves tired hair gloriously refreshed.

Use Mary King Hair Dream, a sensational new hair dressing that restores natural sparkle, keeps your hair bright and lustrous, easy to manage, silken-soft. Ever so delicately perfumed.

Welcome your Watkins Dealer, who brings these Mary King hair-care preparations directly to your home, along with other cosmetics and products of distinction.

You will like the Mary King Home Permanent, with instant Permarinse Neutralizer, for smooth, lasting curls. Tested and recommended for all types of hair by the Mary King Beauty Salon.

Watkins

SINCE 1868

THE SHOPPING CENTER THAT COMES TO YOUR HOME

J. R. WATKINS COMPANY...WINONA, MINNESOTA • NEWARK • MEMPHIS • OAKLAND • MONTREAL • WINNIPEG • AUSTRALIA • NEW ZEALAND • SOUTH AFRICA

MLLE. MALO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66

every evidence of being a good copyist, might he then reasonably be allowed to do a radish, perhaps, from Nature." He also pored over treasures of Oriental art, which were just coming into vogue. In the portrait of Mlle. Malo, for example, Japanese prints taught him how to compose with the sitter placed off center, how to balance the design with the shower of yellow and white chrysanthemums on the left, and how to achieve a surface pattern with areas of light and dark.

Even his pleasures were closely connected with his studies. He loved the opera and the ballet, but he loved them for professional reasons. In their performance or rehearsal he found a kaleidoscope of shifting forms which stimulated his sense of design. The dancers tying their shoes, exercising at the bar, practicing their steps were an inexhaustible inspiration.

Mlle. Malo was a dancer, and with her he formed a close friendship. When he journeyed to New Orleans in 1872 to visit his uncle and brothers, who were in the cotton business, he corresponded with her. She puzzled him and he communicated his bewilderment to a mutual friend. "I thanked her warmly for all her goodness to me. Why does she wish me more calmness in my ideas? Am I then an unusually excitable person?" When he returned to Paris he continued to see her and at this time painted the portrait reproduced. One of his most distinguished works, it remained in his possession until he died.

Never practice what you preach. If you're going to practice it, why preach it? —LINCOLN STEFFENS: from The Autobiography of Lincoln Steffens (Harcourt, Brace)

Was there more than friendship in Degas' feeling for Mlle. Malo? Probably not. He seems never to have been in love. "This heart of mine has something artificial," he wrote; "the dancers have sewn it into a bag of pink satin, pink satin lightly faded, like their dancing shoes." His affections belonged not to a single ballerina but to the whole corps de ballet, not to an individual but to all the performers at rest and at work.

Though Degas might deplore the artificiality of his heart, he could boast of the sincerity of his eye. And to the functioning of this organ, to its cold, analytical penetration, his personal life was sacrificed. From morning to night his single overwhelming passion was to record on paper or canvas what he had seen. And it was this lust of the eye which brought about its own tragedy. His vision had always been weak, and with incessant work he became almost blind. In the end he was a pathetic figure, wandering around Paris, unkempt and careworn, unable to draw even with pastel, which he had come to use instead of oil as his eyesight faded.

He once advised Vollard to marry. "You do not realize how terrible it is to be alone as you grow old," he said. But, as for himself, he couldn't marry. "I could never bring myself to do it. I would have been in mortal misery all my life for fear my wife might say, 'That's a pretty little thing,' after I had finished a picture."

Degas never painted a "pretty" picture. Austere, detached, aristocratic, his art re-embodies the high ideals of the Renaissance. He himself stood aloof from the fashions of his time. He believed "one should work for a few people, as for the others, it is quite immaterial." If in his blindness he was lonely, he was also proud. Like Yeats he had "cast a cold eye on life, on death"; and the record of his observations gave him a deep sense of accomplishment. He knew that his detached, analytical vision, while it lasted, had enabled him to change the course of art, to introduce as a new goal for painting the immediacy of the essential gesture. —JOHN WALKER, Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art.

NEW!
DOCTOR'S DEODORANT
DISCOVERY SAFELY STOPS ODOR
24 HOURS A DAY!

PROVED IN UNDERARM COMPARISON TESTS MADE BY A DOCTOR

- Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours.
- New MUM with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

New MUM with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).
2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.
3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.
4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.
5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture. New MUM won't dry out in the jar.

NEW MUM
cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3
(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

A FEELING OF RESPONSIBILITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 73

e kind of magazine which digests its l for its readers, and which can, by ick of apparent understatement, some me it plays with its dignified two- format, make the most extraordinary seem like straight reporting.

indicated this magazine with a wave and and said, "It's this thing about a at. Have you read it?"

nd not read it, he said. She found the or him and started to pass it over to e made no move to take it. "It isn't ry for me to read it, is it? Can't you ell me? You say it's about a cat?"

about how animals find their way to ney want to go," she began. Her voice d dramatically as she added, "and it is y horrible." She tapped the magazine. people moved from someplace in Cal- to someplace in Oklahoma. They eleven hundred miles. And before they lifornia, they gave their cat to the who had bought their house. A per- atural thing to do. Just what we did, we left our Plush with Tom and Joan e came here from Pennsylvania, and nted our farm from us. And that cat n California for two weeks." She re- him owlishly. Like a child frightening th a ghost story, he thought.

cat in the magazine, you mean, I take Plush?" He was trying for the light solving that as soon as he could de- change the subject he would suggest out to a movie somewhere.

weeks," she repeated emphatically. n that time the trail—whatever trail traveling in an automobile over main may be said to leave, for heaven's got cold. Or old. Or something. So fter the two weeks, the cat vanished s home in California. And, fourteen later, it appears in Oklahoma, purring and weaving itself around their ankles cats do, and they know absolutely that eir cat, because of a malformation in its hipbones." She shivered. "I hate said, in a low, frightened voice.

why get so upset?"

ause no cat ought to have to be that Extrasensory perception in cats—I ear it. I don't know how to say it the eel it, but it is above and beyond what reasonably to be expected of a cat. It ch a terrific responsibility on people." ked at her uncomprehendingly. She forward intently. "You don't see it at you, darling? Well, for one thing, I now what we'd do if Plush came to us Chicago."

sh? Here?"

one thing, we'd have to move." He t she was entirely serious. "And just as ad an air conditioner installed too! But tainly could not keep a cat here. They ven allow budgies!"

etimes, John Hill reflected, the most e women go completely haywire! "Plush a house cat," he said, choosing his with care. "What's more, Edith, he was a house cat. We not only could not im here, we could not keep him in any ent, anywhere. What's more, you never he cat very much, and neither did I. o you suddenly keep harping on Plush?"

"ause I have this feeling," she said. since I read that article, I have had this rdinary feeling."

his time he was breathing hard, but he ed to ask her what kind of feeling it was. id that it was a feeling of responsibility. l right. All right. What are you respon- *?"

n't shout! If a cat travels hundreds and ds of miles to get to us, do you think we live with ourselves if we didn't take it hat would you do? Board it at a vet's? it? You would not. You'd just be stuck he cat, that's all."

d you are the girl who laughed at the table tipping!"

said solemnly, "I wish I could laugh at don't want to go on for weeks and weeks looking over my shoulder to see if Plush has just turned up!"

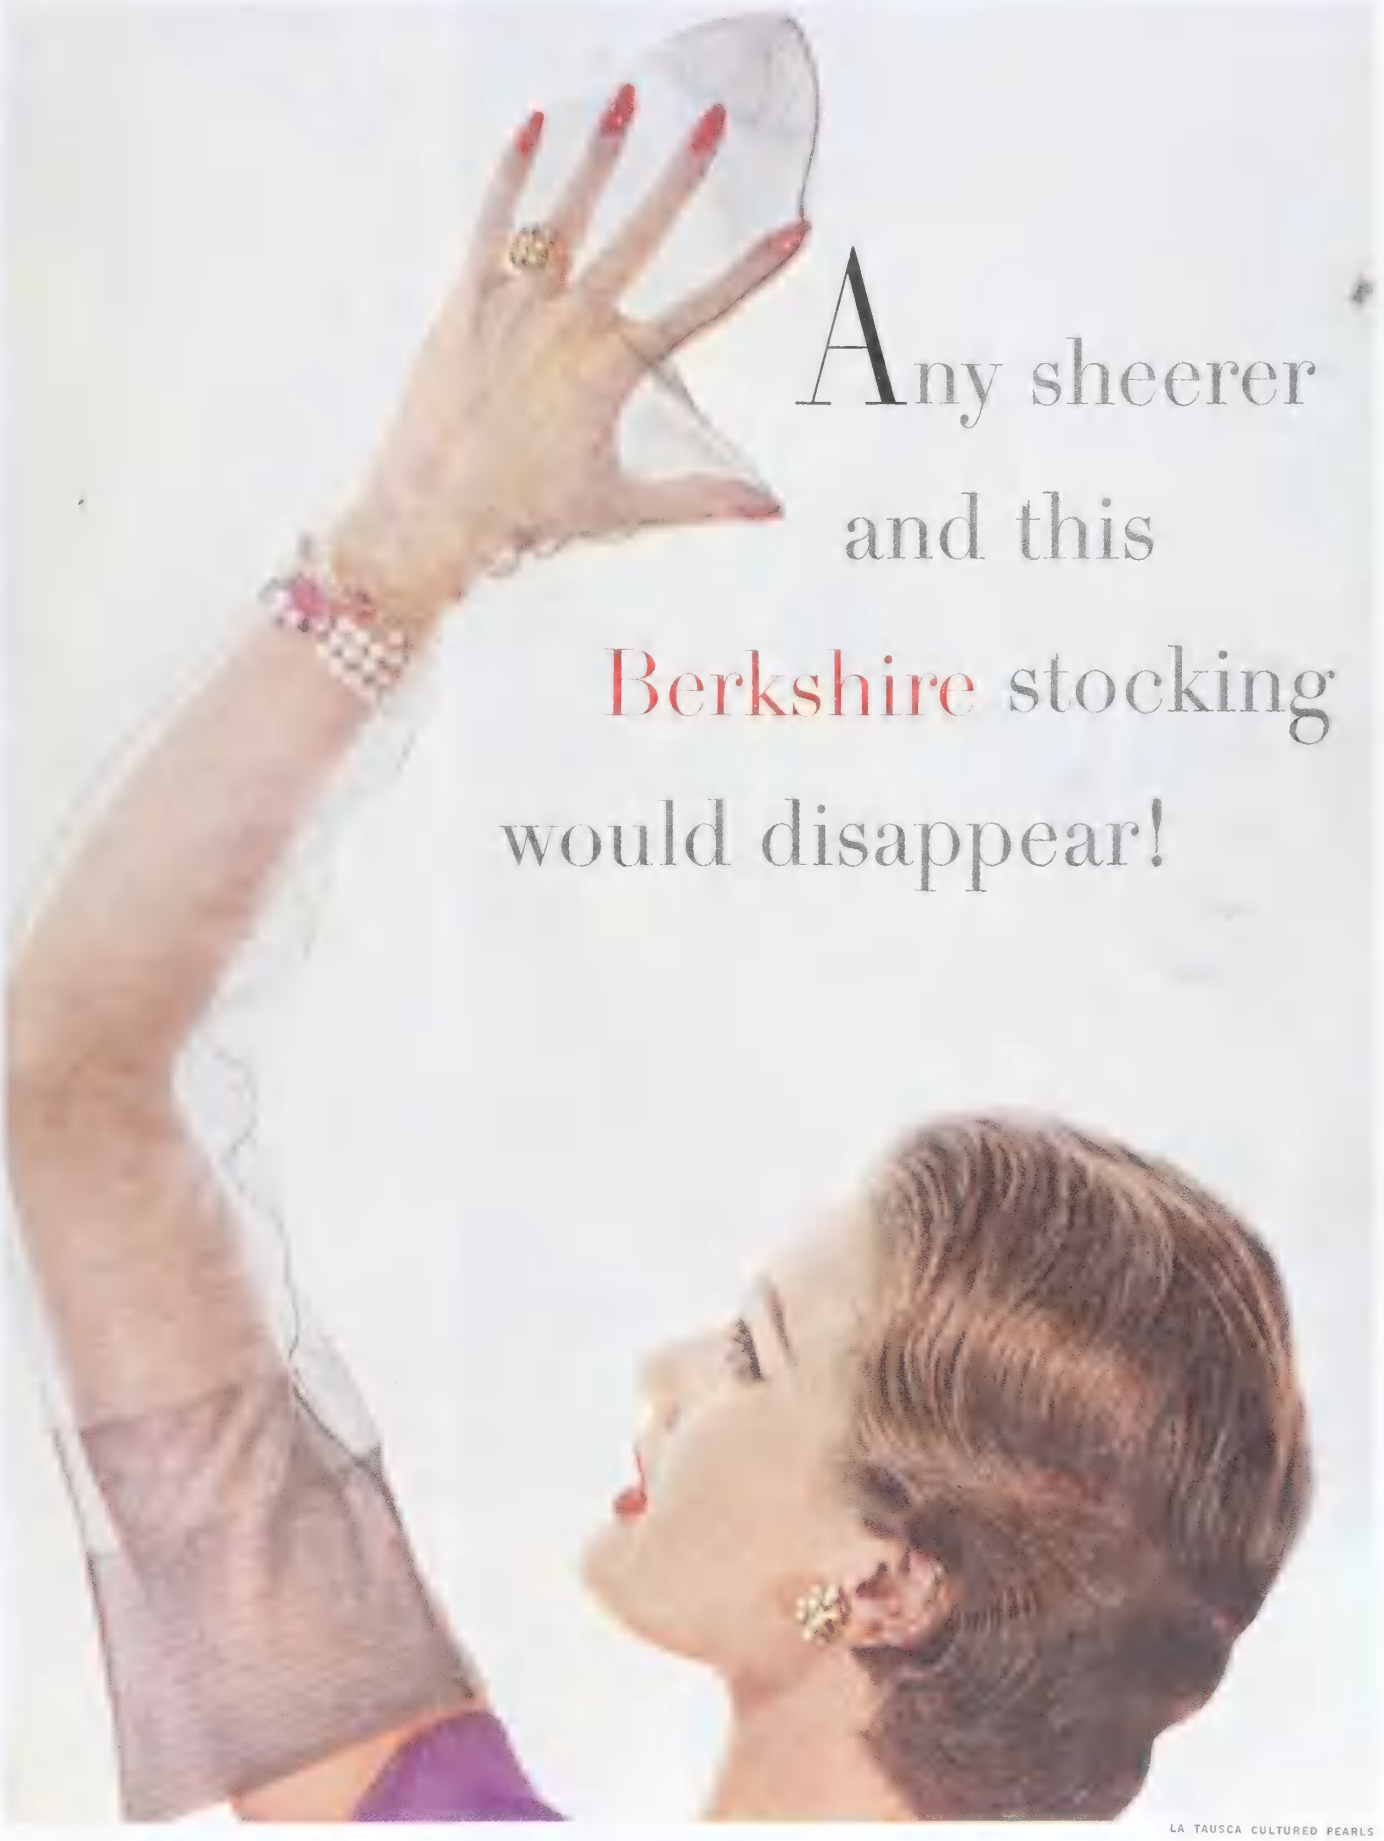
"Look," he urged reasonably. "Plush was just a perfectly ordinary, plain, dumb cat that we had when we lived on a farm and had to have cats to catch rats. A dumb cat!" he repeated. "And if you think he could follow us to Chicago, you, my beloved, are dumb too. It is impossible. Now will you please forget all about it? How would you like to go to a movie somewhere?"

"I wouldn't," she said promptly. "But you may go. After all, we aren't Siamese twins."

"And what will you be doing?" he demanded.

"Oh—going on thinking this thing through. If I can. Trying to figure it out."

"Trying to figure what out?"



"What I ought to do. There is something I ought to do."

He clutched at his hair with both hands. "You are being so absurd."

She was meek, but stubborn. "I'm not, really. The article itself is all about animal instinct, how ants find their way back to anthills, and about bees, and about salmon and spawning—every bit of it is factual and really well written. And then, at the end, this piece about the cat ——"

"But, look here," he said rashly. "Let's not be bizarre about this. There are two perfectly good reasons why Plush will never track us down. In the first place—look at it rationally for a moment—how is he supposed to be coming? Remember how we came? We went out to Long Island first, visiting your sister for five days. Then we went over to New Jersey. Remember? We drove up through New York State, and into Canada. We stopped at the Falls."

"Please don't yell."

LA TAUSCA CULTURED PEARLS

These are full-fashioned 10 denier nylons, the sheerest stocking you can buy. And because Berkshire makes them, you'll find they offer you the same dependable Nylace Top and Toe-Ring protection against runs that start from top or toe, as the Berkshires you buy for every day. Proportion-knit, of course. sheer sheer BERKSHIRE STOCKINGS

The look is upper bracket, the price is downright wonderful!
Two lovely new Ship'n Shore's for the dress-up days of Spring, done in definitely elegant fabrics.

3.98

Ship'n Shore®
BLOUSES

Left, lustrous pima cotton in foulard-type print, 3.98, sizes 30 to 40. Right, imported pure Irish linen, 3.98 (also in fine pique at 2.98), sizes 30 to 38. Girls' blouses in sizes 7-to-14, from $1.98

"I'm not yelling. Will he take all those interminable detours we hit? Or do you think he would rather come by the Turnpike?"

He went over to her, took her in his arms, gave her a little indignant shake and kissed her.

"What I mean is," he said, "we are discussing the silliest ——"

"I know it," she said. "But you asked me what was bothering me, and this is what is bothering me. I keep thinking how I never, as you said, really did like Plush much. And about that gruesome little tink-tink noise he used to make when we had put that bell on him to warn the birds, and he tried to keep it from ringing. I honestly don't know what we'd do if he came ——" She broke off abruptly. "But," she said, "you said you had two reasons—two perfectly good reasons why he would never track us down. What was the other one?"

"If he came to Chicago," John said, "he'd naturally go to where we lived first, wouldn't he? Up on the north side. Haven't we crossed him up by moving? We lived for all those months up at thirty-eight hundred north, before we moved down here to the near-north; and if he went anywhere, I should think he'd head for the old address. Unless," he added facetiously, "he is in touch with some cat detective agency here in town."

She looked at him unhappily. "I don't know," she said. "Maybe he is up there." Her eyes widened. "Maybe that is just where he is."

"Don't," he begged, "have this sudden attack of woman's intuition! Please! When I said that, I was only trying to be funny. I was only trying to make you see the complete and utter absurdity ——"

She said, "Oh." She said it in a small voice. She looked hopeless.

"I'm sorry," he said. "I'm sorry I tried to be funny. Will you forgive me?" She said there was nothing to forgive, that she knew she was being stupid. He said, "Do you want to drive up to where we used to live, and look around? Would that help?"

She looked slightly less hopeless. "Would you mind doing that?" she asked.

"Not at all," he lied. "The air will do us good, and the car needs gas, and I'll buy some while we're out."

Edith looked at him broodingly. "Maybe this is exactly what I was supposed to do," she said.

HE caught a glimpse of the two of them in the mirror in the downstairs lobby as they went out a few minutes later, and he thought, We look like perfectly rational people, as people go. We look as if we were going out for an evening's pleasure, and not as if we were hunting through the city for a cat we left behind about a year ago in Pennsylvania. Makes you feel as if you could believe anything about anybody!

"We'll park," Edith planned almost cheerfully, "and really make a thorough search. We won't just stand out front and call. We'll go down around the back and through the alley ——"

"Call?" he yelped. "I draw the line at that. I'll drive you up there, and I'll wait, if you want to look around for a minute or so. But I am definitely not going to go around c kitty-kitty-kitty-kitty ——"

She said firmly, "Well, I am."

And she did. He sat in the car in front place where they had lived at first, lig cigarettes and disgustedly stubbing then and telling himself that this was just thing Edith had to get out of her system she called, patiently and a little bashful thought, in the alley between the two ment buildings.

"HERE, kitty-kitty-kitty-kitty," she cal the artificial voice one uses to call a cat. "Plush!" She went farther into the alley kept calling.

The stubborn little mule, he thought. doesn't she give up? People should not let selves believe —— And then, sudden could not hear her and he was out car and racing the alley, his hea his throat. "Edith called. "Are yo right? Edith!"

"Sh-h-h!" She out of a black sh her hand at her t "I didn't know i you—I just heard one running." Sh whispering. She shaking. "I'm so was you, John," sh him.

This, he though gone far enc "Look," he said. don't have to wh You aren't comm a crime. This is ish—but so far th no law against it. one who hears yo ing a cat will s think you have a call. But you hav don't you see? haven't."

"I really don't I have," she said. just to be sure, I a ing to go down the the length of the

"I'll wait here,' said, elaborately p When she came he asked, "No

"Put it another she suggested. "S cat." She laughe feel like me again said. "It was . . . crazy, wasn't it? were . . . obsess something. But I much better now.

They were in th They were st home. "I must John commented, "that I am glad you do this sort of thing often. You've never this way before—irrational, hysterical His voice implied that it would be fine never acted this way again. "You mu allow yourself to believe that sort of thin said paternally.

She nodded. "I honestly don't know hit me. But you were wonderful. You d the right things." She added hesitantly, see, the California cat waited fourteen and reached the new place fourteen m later; we left the farm in June, Plush eleven days before he disappeared, an May now ——" She broke off. "You see said, "there sort of did seem to be a craz of perfect timing about it."

They parked, and started over toward apartment. Edith walked lightly, as one from care. John followed her more s There is a crazy sort of perfect timing ab he was thinking, and he started to say so wife.

But he never even got the words ou there, as if summoned by his belief, on doorstep, big, black and obviously waiti them, was . . . Plush.

TELEPHONE

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

My heart lurched at the warm
Hello—
And then it was not you.
So listlessly my gaze went forth
To seek the gentians' blue,
To find the mocker in his pine
(I heard his liquid call);
I let my voice go on and on
And did not hear at all.

Careless words, light and lilting,
But the violets are wilting!
"Will you come?"
"Yes; I will . . ."
But a shadow's on the sill!

How could I dare to hope, how dare
To dream that he was you?
How could my blood so flood with fire
When in my heart I knew
That you will never call again,
That you will never come
To fill my hands with violets,
My arms with strange wild plum?

Still the voice, keyed politely,
But the tears will tear me nightly!
"Then at eight?"
"Yes; good-by . . ."
Quick! I saw the mocker fly!

Make your dream of owning a Mink come true!

Lux Mink Contest

$150,000.00 IN MINK PRIZES

12 mink coats

72 mink stoles

320 mink scarves

STYLED BY NATIONALLY FAMOUS Annis Furs

4 Weekly Contests

You can win a fabulous mink, just like the one Susan Hayward is wearing here!

ENTER THE LUX CONTEST RIGHT AWAY!

There are four weekly contests. Every week—3 of these lovely mink coats, 18 mink cape-stoles, and 80 mink scarves will be given away.

And it's so easy to win! All you have to do—in twenty-five words or less—is complete this statement: "I like Lux Soap because . . . . . ."

Here are the kind of statements that could win. You might say, "I can depend on Lux—it's gentle, mild, really good to my complexion"... or..."I like Lux Soap because it's the finest complexion care I've ever had"... or... "I'm in good company—Lux is the soap of the Hollywood stars and it's mine, too!"

But use your own words. Give your own reasons. And remember, the prizes are well worth your entering right now.

Here's all you have to do to enter

1. In 25 additional words or less, complete the statement: "I like Lux Soap because . . ." Use plain paper or the entry blank below. Write or print plainly your name and address.

2. Mail entries to "Lux Contest," Box 145, New York 46.

3. There are four weekly contests ending March 12th, March 19th, March 26th and April 2nd, 1955.

4. Send as many entries as you wish in each of the weekly contests. But be sure to include with each entry, three wrappers from any size cake of Lux Toilet Soap.

5. The Lux contest is open to all residents of Continental United States, Alaska and Hawaii. (Detailed rules for the Lux Contest are available at most grocers.)

You don't have to be a movie star to have a movie star complexion

that's the beauty of LUX

Complete this statement in 25 additional words or less:
"I like Lux Soap because _____

_____

_____

_____"

MAIL TO LUX CONTEST, BOX 145, NEW YORK 46, N. Y.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

With each entry enclose three wrappers from any size Lux Toilet Soap

SUSAN HAYWARD starring in

"UNTAMED" a 20th Century-Fox Production in CinemaScope

Color by DeLuxe Labs

BRIGHT IDEA, THIS GOSSARD BRA WITH SUCH DIVINE DESIGNS ON YOU! And prettiness is just the beginning. See that front inset? Its two seams give a double assist to the bias-cut sides for nth-degree fit. And the lift is high, round and fashionable. Even the shoulder straps are new—stitched to stay flat. All in all, the bra achievement in both cotton and nylon that you should see now—to enjoy from now on.

at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

#1826 in fine cotton with embroidered cotton inset, $2.50. Also #2426 in nylon, $3.50. Both in white and A, B, C cups

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H. W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 ▪ New York ▪ San Francisco • Atlanta • Dallas • Toronto

MIDNIGHT OF A BRIDESMAID

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63

doubtful that she could substitute a flow of ink for the tears that never seemed to stop, but presently she began to write:

My dearest love: This letter is not really for you. I will never send it. It was written only because tonight I cannot sleep. Today you were married and everyone said it was a beautiful wedding. Had I been the bride I would be the happiest woman alive, but I was a bridesmaid and the difference between a bride and a bridesmaid is sometimes the difference between ecstasy and despair. For me it was despair because I love you.

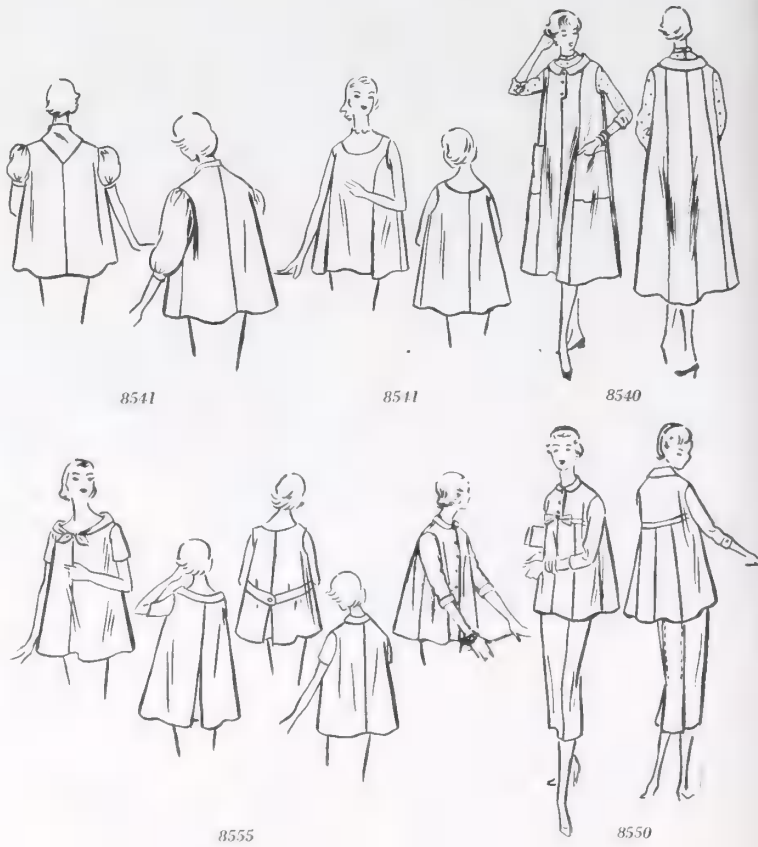
I realize now and I have realized for some time, of course, that you never loved me. I thought you did. Perhaps that was because I hadn't the will to think anything else. I kept telling myself that you loved me but that you weren't yet aware that you did. I kept telling myself that there was something real and solid building between us and that someday you would recognize that it was love. I kept waiting for you to show a sign of jealousy, a gesture of possessiveness, but it never came. On the occasions when you called and I said I was going here or there with Frank I hated the pleasant, careless way you'd say, "All right, honey. I'll call again. Have fun." If only once you'd shown disappointment or pique I would have walked on air. You never knew the hours I sat close to my phone praying for your call. You never knew the times I accepted a date with Frank only because I couldn't bear sitting alone all evening thinking of you. And, darling, you don't know the times when I made dates with Frank, then called him back and canceled them because you had called in the meantime with a casual, "Hello, honey, what are you doing tonight?"

I remember well every place you and I ever were together. The shows we saw, the places we ate, the parties we went to and the crazy night we had a picnic on the beach and danced in our bare feet like children. You remember, don't you? That night you said it was be with me and I treasured those w though they had been a passionate decl of love. I had so little to treasure, my I loved you and you didn't love me. Y thought I was fun to be with. You li way I looked, the way I dressed, the danced, and I was your favorite date w were waiting for love to come along.

I didn't know then that you were wai Barbi. Neither did you. I went on dr and buying clothes that I thought yo and I had my hair cut Italian because mired a stranger one night whose hair But you never noticed my haircut.

And I'm going to tell you a secret n about girls and how they dress an they do their hair. Men always think things are frivolous matters. Nothing c farther from the truth. The girl in t dress with the plunging neckline may b shopping for a washing machine as she so sensually upon the dance floor. S know very well that it takes this dress that fellow to let her wash his clothes washing machine he's going to buy wh are married. If the red dress is frivolou so is love, and life, and nature itself. intended to explain something abou darling, to explain why I was fun. I la and swam and danced and played tenni all in the world I wanted was to dire energy toward running a house for you. I a fireball. I'm not really fun. I'm very e and serious-minded. I like to read. You know that, did you? I like quiet evenin long-hair music, but with you I coul lived forever under neon with the S Finnegan orchestra playing us through

On the nights I went out with Frank I my breath for another round with you. and I would eat in a quiet place and j and talk. I never even danced with hi I was too tired. I'd just sit a little daze weary listening to his good conversatio



OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGE 188

Vogue Design No. 8541. "Easy to Make" maternity blouses; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8540. "Easy to Make" maternity jumper dress, tunic and blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c. For contrasting neckband, ½ yd. 1″ bias piqué edging (buy by the yard).

Vogue Design No. 8555. Maternity tunic and blouse; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8550. Maternity two-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c. The skirt has a U cut in front and two pleats in back.

ing up. And the next night—if I was ky—there I was being fun again, darling, ing around with you, loving it because I with you and trying, oh, so very hard, get that washing machine.

And then you discovered Barbi. Of course d known her all our lives. I can remember at my sixth birthday party. You were re too. And Frank, of course, and everyone who belonged to what I suppose could called our circle. You never paid any attenn to Barbi for years and years. Nobody did ept Frank, who's so kindhearted that he d to take her out in high-school days when had to be home at half past nine. Maybe u'd have noticed her sooner except that her ther—being a little out of step with the hes—made her dress in dear little quaint ngs with cap sleeves and anything else she ld think of that would keep Barbi looking e Alice in Wonderland. I think Barbi was led a drip in those days. No make-up, no chaperoned dancing—in short, no fun. But ngs change. So did Barbi, and in time you covered her. I think I knew the first time I v you two together that I could stop dream-g. I didn't admit it to myself, you under-nd. I kept saying that you had always ken other girls here and there, that your tes with Barbi had no special significance. t after a time I just had to notice that your lls were becoming less and less frequent. At st I wouldn't go out at all, but that paid off no direction and I got Frank to take me aces where I thought you might be. I was so raid, my darling, that you'd forget me com-etely if I were not around. And there is no ed to seek the logic in that statement, for ere is none. Only a woman in love might allow the stupid notion that a man who uld forget her could also be aflame at sight her. Nevertheless, Frank and I went where u might be and often you were there, my ve. You were there with Barbi. There would a crowd at your table the way there always and there would be laughter and we would ave and you would come to us and invite us er and sometimes you would dance with e. Oh, darling, it was so wonderful when you sked. I would wonder if you noticed how eautifully, how naturally I fitted into your rms and I would dance in silence knowing ell that if I spoke it would only be to plead ith you to call me, to make me your favorite ate once more. After the dance I would ask rank to take me home because I could not atch Barbi dance with you after you had eld me in your arms. And you would always bject to our leaving, you were so cordial, o friendly, so anxious for us to remain. I ould have stayed and tortured myself for I ould never say no to you, but Frank, who robably believed in the headache or the leepiness I always pleaded, would get me out f there.

AND then of course Barbi's parents an-nounced the engagement. I can't lie. I was sick about it. You don't know this, but it is almost an impossibility for a person to believe that a deep love is not returned. You feel stunned and for a while you're incapable of accepting the truth. You think that it can't be so, that you couldn't love a person that much without it affecting his feelings for you. And when you finally accept the truth, I want to tell you that it is far worse than the stunned feeling. Much worse. But you have to live. You go through the motions anyway. You eat and sleep and buy clothes and you go places. It's tough but it gets tougher. You're asked to be a bridesmaid and you accept with thanks. But that isn't enough. You're invited to a preview of the house that Barbi's parents have bought and furnished.

Frank took me to that. He was some kind of master of ceremonies, I suppose, being your best man. He showed the rest of the bridal party around while you and Barbi argued over where the barbecue should be installed.

So I saw the house, darling. I hope you both will be happy forever in it. It looks like you and Barbi. It doesn't look like me at all. I remember in the car going home I remarked to Frank that it looked like a happy house and he said, "Yes, but it's impractical for the future. The bedrooms all open on the patio and when there's a party going on it'll be awfully noisy for the children." I laughed because it was so silly for anyone to think you should have considered the children. When and if you and Barbi become parents your children will get along just fine. You'll be generous and amiable and of course fun, but if they expect to live in a quiet world they're going to get a terrible shock. Naturally, being your children and Barbi's, they won't want quiet. They'll adore you and they'll think comments like Frank's pretty stuffy, which perhaps is true, but I agree with him about the bedrooms just the same. I don't think people ought to design houses purely for party giving. I think houses ought to look more like homes. But I'd live there, darling, without complaint if I could live there with you. Barbi is a lucky girl. I hope she knows it.

AND as I write this it occurs to me that she probably does know it. I'm sure she loves you very dearly. I remember how she looked today when you were clowning with Debbie Smith. Barbi didn't think it was funny when you said to Debbie, "Oh, I'll still be seeing you. This was my wedding, you know, not my funeral." Only I noticed the expression in Barbi's eyes—a little frightened, a little hurt. You weren't serious, of course. How could you be serious about Debbie, especially on your wedding day? I know and naturally Barbi knows, too, that Debbie is only a flirt and a little fool besides, but Barbi loves you and she wasn't amused. She hasn't had time to realize you're truly hers forever and a day. She hasn't yet completely grasped the fact that the game is over and she's the winner. It may take her a couple of years to be absolutely sure of you. You know, darling, you're quite a prize for a girl to capture and it's no wonder if Barbi can't quite believe that out of this whole world she's the one with the lucky number. It may be that she'll never believe it, that she'll always wonder and worry about the Debbie Smiths who'll want to steal you from her. It will be a hard life for Barbi if she doesn't learn to trust you, for in time even Barbi will falter and will come to think well of a quiet evening and a stack of records to which nobody could possibly dance.

And I suppose I am searching very hard in my mind for reasons why I should not envy Barbi. Well, I do envy her, for she has you and I am sitting here alone with nothing but the love that you did not want. Darling, you cannot know the anguish that I feel, the emptiness of knowing that I have lost you. It will never again matter how I wear my hair or what dress I put on or what perfume I choose. The telephone has no further meaning because you will never again call my number. Nothing in the world will ever be ——

She put her pen down and listened. Not at this hour surely. It couldn't be the doorbell. There it was again. Yes, the doorbell. She moved cautiously into the foyer. A girl living alone couldn't be too careful. There were things in the newspapers all the time that were very alarming.

"Who's there?"

"It's I. Frank."

"Frank? What on earth ——" She opened the little brass interviewer and peered out through it. Her caller was indeed Frank. Reluctantly she opened the door. "I'm not dressed. I was just going to bed."

"Sorry. Hope you'll forgive me." He had the grace not to look at the dressing gown or the unpowdered face. "I had to see you."

"Well, all right. Come in." She led the way toward the sitting room and gestured toward the big easy chair. "Sit down. What's the matter?"

He smiled thinly but said nothing.

"I asked you what's the matter, Frank?"

"Nothing that need distress you. Really. I'm just a little distressed myself. I had to see you." He fell silent and she used the moment to gather together the pages upon which she had been writing. When she turned back to him he had risen and walked to the window.

"You said you had to see me. Why?"

He lighted a cigarette. "Give me a minute, will you? I wanted to talk, but now that I'm here it isn't so easy."

She watched him with puzzlement and impatience. "Now, look, I don't understand this the pantie girdle

your legs can't feel

Pantie fan or not, you'll be completely won over by this completely different new Gossard. It combines 3 (!) kinds of elastic to ensure absolute leg freedom plus fine figure control. Of nylon tissuenet with satin elastic panel and lacy elastic finish at the legs. White (Petite-S-M-L), $7.95. Black (S-M-L), $8.50

curved and lacy
so it never,
never binds your legs!

seated low so it holds
you in—beautifully!

paneled so it smooths your tummy—unbelievably!

at leading stores and shops or write us,
we'll tell you where

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H.W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

Long-wearing proportioned Cannon nylon stockings are your best buy—from $1 up. Full-fashioned—with a snag-guarding Cannolin finish—at your neighborhood store. CANNON

The Clothes You Wear

Packing, whether for short trips or long, always poses a problem. Everyone's idea of the perfect packer is the person whose clothes remain completely unwrinkled through a series of one night stands. If you're not an experienced packer, or are all thumbs, when it comes to doing a proper job your best bet is clothing made of fabrics marked Tebilized for tested crease-resistance. On arrival, all you do is hang them out. You'll find that any slight creases will disappear overnight.

The cotton broadcloth you wore as a child has changed its character completely. New and newly beautiful, it no longer crumples like paper after a brief wearing, but emerges well-groomed, unruffled at the end of a busy day. It has a whole new life because it's marked Tebilized for tested crease-resistance. It is currently appearing in magnificent, rich colors and some of our best designers are making it into wonderfully wearable (and washable) all-year-round clothes. To put it briefly, broadcloth's gone haute couture.

Variety of weave, fiber, color and pattern give fabrics their interest. This variety extends to their crease-resisting properties. Silk and wool resist and recover from creasing naturally. It is one of their special charms. Now that cottons, linens and rayons are treated for crease-resistance they also have this special virtue. You will find that these cottons retain their freshness through hours of wear. So do rayons. Linen is not quite as crease-resistant, but there is an amazing improvement over linen that has not been treated for crease-resistance. In all cases, however, it is vital that the fabric be marked Tebilized. They're tested and check-tested by experts in an independent testing laboratory to make sure that they have superfine crease-resistance that will last the fabric's lifetime. Tebilized-marked fabrics are also sold in Canada.

FREE . . . for samples of fabrics marked Tebilized, snippets of the latest colors and prints in these fabrics and stores near you that carry them, write to:

T. B. Lee Company, Inc., Testing Dept. LH-2, 101 W. 31st St., N.Y.C.1

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... ZONE .....

STATE .....

The Tebilized mark is applied only by permission of the owners of the mark to those fabrics which conform to specified standards of crease-resistance and quality established by them.

fabrics marked

TEBILIZED®

for tested crease-resistance

at all. I let you in only because I thought something had happened. I wish you would explain and then leave. I ——"

He said, "Don't be cross. I know I shouldn't be here. I know this isn't your problem but I have no one else that I can ——"

"Then something has happened? I didn't mean to be cross, Frank. Do you need help? What is it?"

She went to him and touched his arm. After all, this was Frank. They had known each other always. What was all this silly, outraged propriety she was exhibiting? Frank was her friend. He had come to her because he needed her and here she was acting like Lady Vere de Vere out of a Victorian novel.

"What's the matter, Frank?"

"I saw your light was on. I didn't think you'd mind my coming. I couldn't sleep. I wanted to talk about it to someone."

"About what, Frank? You wanted to talk about what?"

"The wedding, of course," he told her. "The wedding."

"Oh."

She sat down suddenly in the chair she had offered him. She had thought that the pretending was all over. Now here it was again. She would have to go into her act once more. Yes, indeed, the wedding. Wasn't everything just perfect? Did you ever see things run more smoothly? Everyone looked simply divine. She hadn't expected anything like this from Frank. Good heavens, you'd think he was one of those fat old ladies who just love to talk about weddings and funerals. Who'd guess that Frank would take the job of being best man so seriously that he'd be unable to sleep and would have to discuss his part in the performance? Childish. Oh, well, it was easy to say, "You were just wonderful, my dear. You graced the wedding in spectacular fashion." Only a beast would tell him that no one even noticed him. But really, now, was Frank that much of a fool? Could he possibly be on the point of asking how he looked, how he performed his duties? No, it just couldn't be. Or could it?

"It was a beautiful wedding," she said.

"Was it?"

His tone was bitter and she thought, Oh, dear, yes, he made some kind of trivial error and he thinks he ruined the whole wedding. What a baby even the biggest man can be. I wish I had a lollipop to give him in case he starts crying.

"YES, it was a beautiful wedding, Frank. Why did you say 'Was it?' that way? Didn't it seem beautiful to you?"

"No, it didn't." He walked across the room to an ash tray and destroyed his cigarette. "It was the toughest assignment I ever had in my life."

"Being best man, Frank?"

"Yes, being best man at Barbi's wedding."

"Why, how could it possibly be any tougher because it was Barbi's wedding? After all, she ——" It took that long for his meaning to penetrate. "Frank! No, no. I misunderstood. Skip it."

"You didn't misunderstand. I saw Barbi get married today and, believe me, it was an experience I"—he turned from her and lighted another cigarette—"I never wanted anyone to know, but I can't take it all alone. I needed someone to talk to."

She was still staring at him in amazement. "You and Barbi!"

"Yes. Funny, isn't it?"

"No, my dear. I don't think it's funny at I'm so sorry for you. So sorry."

Why had it happened to him? He was kind, so decent. Why did he have to l Barbi? She wasn't for a quiet, though man like Frank. She'd tear him to pieces break his heart. And why did he want h Frank, who was so clever, so well-read and interested in things that really count.

"Frank, I'll be glad to listen if you want talk."

He said, "I guess I always loved Barbi started back before anyone else had covered how great she really was."

Great? Barbi? Oh, well.

"DO you remember the clothes she used wear? Little-girl things when the rest of glamour-pusses were all togged out like slin sirens?"

"I remember."

"I loved her then when not a fellow in bunch would date her. I dated her."

"I remember that too. I thought you w being kind."

"No. To me she was always the sweet the most wonderful girl alive. That sour gushy, doesn't it don't really care i does. It's the wa feel about Barbi, way I always felt.

She dropped eyes and did meet his gaze. Yes sounded gushy, only because wor were inadequa things. They cou give no hint of misery there was the business of l ing alone. The wor were symbols th represented certa emotions, certain a onies, and the sy bols could be re only by one w knew the shape pain.

She considere Frank as he stoo there with his hea ache. He was n smiling tonight, b she knew well th slow pleasant smi of his, the nice w he had of looking at a girl with interest a admiration, how he gave his whole attentio to what she said and respected her opinio enough to argue if he did not agree. What crime it had been to offer such riches Barbi—rather like handing a priceless fir edition to a friendly chimpanzee.

"Did you ever get to take her out once s was discovered by the other fellows?"

"Oh, yes; she was fond of me, I feel sur but not fond enough. I took her lots of place I was selfish about it. I never took her whe the gang goes. Isn't that a line from a song?

"Yes, something about sugar and tea."

"That's it. When I Take My Sugar to Te It was like that. Excitement and hope and dis appointment, but always the feeling that noth ing was as great as just being with her. You' never been in love, have you? You don't kno what ——"

"I have tea. Would you like some? Or coffe perhaps?"

"A little later maybe. I just want to tal now if you don't mind. Honestly, you don' know what this means to be able to tell some one. I tried to sleep. It was murder. I got u and dressed again. I thought of you and drove by. It was like the answer to a prayer t see your light still on."

"I'm glad to help if I can, Frank."

"Oh, you can. You have. Just to get it all of my chest is something. You don't realize wha this thing is like. You hear about love but you don't believe it." He fixed her with his steady blue gaze. "Honey, you don't know what it i to love someone who doesn't love you."

"I can imagine, Frank," she said.

"No, you can't. Not really."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 198

NEXT MONTH

"I thought I had lost you," she said. "I thought I'd lost everybody. Oh, Lawrence, I've done such a dreadful thing."

Thus Lawrence Hearne, whose whole life was dedicated to truth, found himself in a situation where he must live a lie. There was no real choice; he had to act as though Vera were not guilty of the crime he knew she had committed. And deception must always breed deception—that was the evil he was caught in.

UNJUDGING LOVE

By FRANK BAKER

Novel complete in the APRIL JOURNAL s Dancing Highlights in Your Hair!

EW FORMULA OUT-LATHERS, UT-SHINES OTHER* SHAMPOOS

MAKES YOUR HAIR EXCITING TO TOUCH!

Billows of Fleecy Foam Leave Hair Shimmering, Obedient, "Lanolin-Lovely"

You'll discover an amazing difference the moment this revolutionary shampoo touches your hair. For never before has any shampoo burst into such mountains of snowy lanolin lather—lather that actually polishes hair clean. Only Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo brings you this foaming magic.

No old-fashioned "lazy-lather" shampoo can shine your hair like this—'til it shimmers like satin in the moonlight!

Try This Test

The radiance of hair lathered this new way will be instantly visible to everyone—but you, yourself, are the best judge of results. After you've dried your hair and brushed it take your hand mirror and stand in a strong light. You'll see how much more brilliance dances in your hair, thanks to Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo.

This shampoo is so good for your hair . . . because there's twice the lanolin in it! It can't dry your hair or leave it harsh, brittle and hard to handle. No indeed! Instead, it leaves your hair in superb condition—supple, soft . . . easier to manage after your shampoo than ever before.

Tangles slip away at a comb's touch . . . your waves ripple back into your hair deeper, firmer, more pliantly lovely than ever.

So let this sensational new shampoo formula bring out the thrilling beauty hidden in your hair! The vibrant, glowing tone. The natural softness. More manageability than ever before! Treat your hair to the richer lather of this amazing, gentler double-lanolin shampoo. Get Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo today—29¢, 59¢ and $1. On sale everywhere!

OCEANS OF LATHER EVEN IN HARD WATER!

An amazing built-in water softener in this Lanolin Lotion Shampoo gives you piles of lather that rinses quick, leaves hair bright—even in the hardest water!

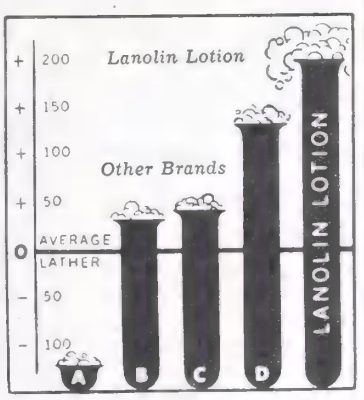
...les Its Romantic Softness With Double Lanolin



...so satiny after a rich Lanolin Lotion Shampoo it irresistibly calls for a love-pat! You can't always wear a satin ...ng dress for the man in your life—but now, with Lanolin ...n Shampoo he'll see the satiny beauty of your hair every ...You'll find that never in your shampoo experience has ...hair had so much shimmer and softness!

...le Lanolin Is The Reason

...iches Your Hair With Beauty ...tead of Drying It!

...lin Lotion was pur...s...y formulated with ... as much lanolin as ...ary shampoos. That ...s double the lanolin ...ction against dryness ...uble the lanolin polish ...beauty for your hair. ...even problem hair — ...that's had its beauty ...ried away . . . washed ... . . . bleached away . . . ...its astonishingly from ...double-lanolin lather. ...t only feels twice as ...-it actually is twice as ... Don't confuse this ut- ... new Helene Curtis ...lin Lotion Shampoo ... any so-called "lotion" ... lanolin" shampoo ...e ever tried before.

PROOF THAT NEW SHAMPOO OUT-LATHERS OTHER BRANDS

Rigidly scientific Cylinder Foam-Test shows Lanolin Lotion Shampoo led four other brands tested by actual volume of sudsiness.

Double-Lanolin Magic

HAIR OBEYS— NO SNARLS— NO WISPS!

"With little children, tangled hair after shampoo can be a tearful problem. But now snarls slip away . . . my five daughters and I all like Lanolin Lotion Shampoo best of all!"

MRS. JOHN STERNIG
Glencoe, Illinois

Mrs. John Sternig, Glencoe, Illinois

"With my casual hair-do, it's important my hair falls easily into place and Lanolin Lotion Shampoo did the trick for me. I find this shampoo leaves my hair far shinier and far easier to manage right after a washing."

PATRICIA CURRAN
New York City, N.Y.

Miss Patricia Curran, New York City, New York

Now break the painful grip of muscular

BACK ACHE!

Product of Bristol-Myers

CONTAINS 3 DOCTOR'S-PRESCRIPTION INGREDIENTS . . . PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

When muscle strain or over-exercise leaves your back stiff, sore and aching . . . get deep-down relief with new, greaseless Minit-Rub!

New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with soothing lanolin —in a special vanishing cream base.

So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn your skin—yet its penetrating heat sensation relieves pain even deep-down.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains—and as a chest rub for cold miseries, too. All drug counters, 39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 196

She said to herself that she wouldn't argue the point. He at least had been in a better position than she. He was a man. He could have fought for Barbi, swept her off her feet or done a dozen other things that were man's right. Women were laughed at when they stormed the castle and were repulsed. Nobody laughed at a man who plainly showed his devotion. Even if he failed in his endeavor, nobody laughed.

"Frank, did you ever ask Barbi to marry you?"

"No, I waited too long. I wanted to give her everything under the sun—a fine house, all the trimmings, you know. By the time I could do it, it was too late."

She glanced around her apartment. It was nice. A real cute apartment, people always said.

But I hate apartments. I want a house. I want to buy things for it—curtains and flowerpots and shelf paper and tool chests and bassinets and play pens. But I have no house. Everybody wanted to give Barbi a house. It isn't fair. It isn't fair. And now I'm so dreadfully sorry for myself that I'm forgetting Frank, who came to me for support and sympathy. What shall I tell him? That he's better off without Barbi? No. That isn't true. No one on earth is better off without love.

She said, "Frank, you've run into a rough one. I wish I knew a magic word to say that would help you. Believe me, I would say it no matter what it cost. Only there is no magic word. You love her and she doesn't love you. That's all there is to it. Nothing in the world will make you feel better tonight or tomorrow or next week. You'll get over feeling the way you do, but it will take time."

That was a lie, of course. There wasn't enough time to get over love. But why tell him that? Let him feel better tonight. Tell him anything so that he could sleep and forget for a little while that Barbi was lost to him for always.

"I keep remembering little things about her. Things she said, the way she looked at certain times. Silly things, I suppose, but ——"

"I know. You can't help remembering."

"You know something? I'm not going to be here when they get back. I haven't got what it takes to visit them in their house, to stand on the side lines and watch her being someone else's wife. I'm going to leave town."

"What?" She looked at him in astonishment. "You must be crazy. You mean that after working like a dog to get a big job in your company you're going to throw it all to the winds and start all over in a new town?"

"I guess that's what it amounts to. I can't help it. I can't go on here."

"Oh, Frank, you mustn't think that. You have to pull yourself together."

She was shocked by the thought that a man like Frank, a valuable man of tremendous capabilities, was willing to toss away a hard-earned position simply because Barbi had married someone else. Barbi who wasn't fit to shine his shoes. How could he possibly care so much for her? She was only a big-eyed doll. True, she had a sweet manner and good looks and abounding energy, but did this make a man of Frank's character blind to her shallowness? It evidently did.

"Let me go fix some coffee, Frank. I'll be back in a minute."

In the kitchenette she prepared the percolator, then peered disconsolately into the little refrigerator. Coffee it would be, and nothing more. There wasn't anything else worth offering to him. That was apartment living for you. I used to bake cakes, she thought, when mamma was alive and we had the house. I used to fix all kinds of fancy sandwiches and salads for my friends. I'm ashamed that I've nothing to offer, but he won't notice. Not the way he feels tonight.

When she walked back to the living room he was dreaming into space and did not notice her. She spoke to him and he was startled.

"I'm sorry," he said. "I was just thinking about things, you know."

She nodded. "I understand."

"Well, it's nice of you to try, anyway."

When a man tries himself, the verdict is usually in his favor. —E. W. HOWE

By the time the coffee was poured a sat across from each other at the bridg she had made up her mind. Frank was Not really, of course. But in this Barbi He thought he was in love with Ba really wasn't. He couldn't be. There wa ing about Barbi that was right for hi was an infatuation, a madness that wou It made no difference that it had gone so long a period; it was still only a de something from which he would reco the meantime he must not do anythi would be harmful and irrevocable.

"Frank, I want to talk to you very seri

"About Barbi?" he asked eagerly.

"Naturally. What else could hol attention?"

He smiled ruefully.

"She's gone, Frank. You've lost h the world doesn't stop just because s you care for has gone out of your life.

"It's stopped for me, honey."

"No, it hasn't. You only think it ha

Be careful. You're getting awfully saying that he doesn't really lov her. D that. He wouldn't believe it tonight wi he's going through. Someday he'll reali he never did truly love her, but no on convince him of that tonight.

"Frank, don't quit. Don't leave tow

"I can't stay here and the job mean ing. I only wanted to get ahead for Barb it doesn't count any more."

"But it has to count, Frank, becau count. Don't you see that?"

He shook his head. "No, I don't. I d what I or anyone else would gain by m through the disma cedure of facing th every day from here a strange place a I ——"

"But you'd ha friends, no ——"

"I'm not going t any friends here eitl

"What do you me

"Well, I'd have to cut everybody ou you before I'm not going to put myself t the ordeal of seeing him and Barbi —

"Oh, Frank, you don't have to see

He stirred his coffee thoughtfully a not meet her eyes. "What shall I do Just work and sit alone at nights? If yo mind my saying so, I don't think yo upon the ideal formula for happiness know you tried. Thanks just the sam we talk about something else now? awfully good coffee."

"I wonder how much you'd enjoy poured a cupful over that thick skull o No, we won't talk about somethin Frank, you have to realize that you ment's a little wacky at a time like th have to believe other people, you have them. You have to take advice."

He nodded soberly. "You have eve to say that and every right to offer advi didn't come to me and just butt into fairs. I came to you. Now I'm sorry I

"Oh, thanks a lot."

"No, honestly, I should have had m restraint, more sense. It wasn't your p What could you do about it? You coul anything but offer a whole lot of tri gestions and worn-out words of c There simply wasn't anything else yo do. I don't know what I expected."

She was silent. There was no ansv course he was right. Suppose someo tried to ram down her throat that hea talk she'd given him? Pain will pass, s told him. The world keeps turning must work and watch for the bluebird ray of sunshine and the daffodils on the something like that. Well, maybe she actually said that, but the implicati been there. It occurred to her that he' it all mighty well, considering.

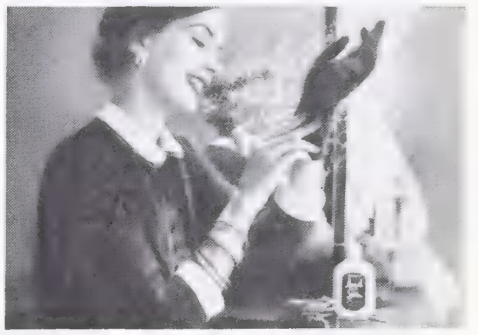
"I guess I wanted you to plan a nic prehensive program for me. A fine co tive working chart on how to carry a g torch. I think I'll go now. I'm sorry kept you awake."

He got up from the table and wal ward the door. Her eyes followed him

CONTINUED ON PAGE 200

New lotion—scientifically years ahead

Actually heals chapping!



Skin's "protective cloak" damaged—important substances of skin's lubricants destroyed by cold, exposure, and the harsh alkali effect of detergents

Angel Skin's corrective softening—restores instantly certain substances important to the skin's "protective cloak." Angel Skin heals chapping!

Rough, puffy "detergent hands"—Angel Skin is the only leading lotion with this formula that neutralizes the harsh alkaline effect of today's detergents, helps prevent irritation Never sticky! Unlike old-style lotions, new Angel Skin has no gummy "thickener." Angel Skin contains an ingredient that speeds penetration—goes into your skin at once!

25¢, 49¢ sizes. Also, giant size with free dispenser, only 89¢. Plus tax. (Slightly higher in Canada) nstant "corrective" softening—— not just superficial smoothing!

his is a revolutionary new kind of lotion! or Angel Skin's remarkable new formula is medically-matched" to the skin's own oftening lubricants!

Doctors say that the skin is constantly rebuilding its softening protective cloak. But ften the skin can't rebuild fast enough to revent damage—cold weather "cracking," etergent dryness.

Softens instantly!

ngel Skin instantly restores certain impornt substances, known in medical terms as active hydrogen ions." This is why Angel kin's ingredients—"matched" to the skin's wn softeners—act more effectively to bring mooth, white hands.

Angel Skin's rich goodness counteracts at once the harsh alkaline effect of today's soaps and detergents—as no old-style hand lotion can! It heals chapping! It penetrates at once—softens deep down!

See its amazing effects on your skin. Get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin today!

NEW DISCOVERIES show the skin's "protective cloak" normally has, in medical terms, a biologically-high concentration of hydrogen ions.* Harsh detergents lower the concentration of hydrogen ions. Chapping begins. Cold, wind further aggravate skin.

Angel Skin's exclusive softening lubricants contain billions of hydrogen ions—instantly restore the skin's normal concentration of hydrogen ions.

This is why Angel Skin heals chapping as no old-style lotion can.

*Concentration of hydrogen ions is measured scientifically in terms of pH. Angel Skin is the only leading hand lotion with a pH rating allied to the pH rating of human skin.

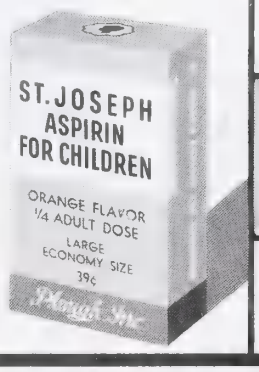
Angel Skin

by POND'S

Now! miracle formula in hand cream form

All the amazing benefits of Angel Skin lotion—now in this new hand cream! Light-cream texture—so extra-soft, so near-fluid—that its rich goodness sinks in at once!

See on your own hands how Angel Skin Hand Cream gives more wonderful results than any old-style hand cream can give! 49¢, 25¢, plus tax (Slightly higher in Canada)

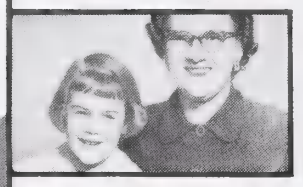


America's Mother-and-Child Favorite

MRS. GLORIA YORK, New York, N. Y.—"My doctor says St. Joseph Aspirin For Children is among the gentlest medications for a child. It does the work, too. My children like its orange flavor."

Approved By More Doctors Than Any Other Brand

Follow the example of millions of mothers—buy the best for your child. With St. Joseph Aspirin For Children you give dosage "just as the doctor orders" without cutting or breaking tablets—each is 1¼ grains, the preferred standard of accurate dosage measure. Your child will like its pure orange flavor and take it willingly. Always look for the "St. Joseph" name. Refuse substitutes. Buy it today.



World's Largest Selling Aspirin For Children

COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

A PLOUGH PRODUCT

MRS. DONALD CROW, Houston, Tex.—"My sons hated ordinary adult aspirin. No fuss now, I give St. Joseph Aspirin For Children."

MRS. G. F. ENGELKING, Minneapolis, Minn.— "It's so easy to give exact dosage of St. Joseph Aspirin For Children. My child likes it."

For Your Family's Regular Aspirin Needs... Get the BEST for LESS · · · St. Joseph ASPIRIN

200 tablets 79¢
100 tablets 49¢
12 tablets 10¢

EXTRA PROFITS! You can enjoy extra profits this season by joining our staff of independent representatives. Send a postal to the address below, and you will receive complete details about our offer. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 879 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Your children ought to wear carefully made shoes like these!

you can afford Acrobat SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

$4.95 to $6.95 according to size

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

They're the best because they're designed and made by parents of active children who have studied the wear points of their own kids' shoes. Combining roomy comfort and durability with smart styling, they have come up with shoes that the children love. And you'll like their price as well as their style. See these carefully made Acrobats before you buy shoes for your children this Spring.

You can count on Friendly Acrobat Shoe Company * Division of General Shoe Corporation * Nashville 3, Tennessee thought how he was going out to walk with loneliness and heartbreak. He would fling aside all that he had worked for and take his chances among strangers in another town. This decent, worth-while man would ruin his life if someone didn't think of a way to help, and he had come to her.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 198

"Frank, have another cup of coffee."

"No, I'd rather let you get some sleep."

"I'm not tired, really. Please stay awhile."

He came back to the table. "I'm sorry for being a bore," he said. "Let's pretend I just arrived. Have you been to a concert lately?"

"Yes," she said. "With you. Last week. Remember?"

"I remember."

"Did you enjoy it?"

"Very much. Didn't you?"

"That doesn't matter. The point is that you enjoyed it, Frank. How was that possible? You knew then that Barbi was getting married. You knew then that you had lost her and yet you enjoyed the concert."

"So?"

"So doesn't that mean that you still have a capacity for getting something out of life? It's what I've been trying to tell you, Frank, you have to live even if ——"

He said, "To tell you the truth, I have no talent for solitude. I could not go alone to the concert and enjoy it. I must share things. I'm that kind of person. Your appreciation and understanding of the music made the concert enjoyable to me."

She stared at him, her brows raised, her eyes wide. "Well, I didn't get married, Frank. I can still go to concerts with you."

"That's sweet of you, but concerts do not really fill a person's life. And what shall I do on other evenings?"

"What would you do in a strange town?"

"Move about freely without fear of encountering Barbi and him. I need people, honey; or at least I need a person I can be with, someone whose life I won't ruin by taking up every free moment of it. Maybe I'll meet some such person somewhere. Certainly here there isn't a soul I could impose upon to that degree."

"Are you saying you wouldn't care to see me too often?"

"Oh, you're being very kind, but you know as well as I that ——"

"Listen, Frank, I'm offering you that nice comprehensive program you wanted, that constructive working chart. Here it is: Frank, if you'll stay in this town and stick to your job you need never be alone and you won't have to be with the crowd either."

"What'll I do? Join a bridge club?"

"I'll tell you something. I'm pretty sick of our crowd myself. I'd like a rest from them. You seemed to like my companionship. Let's make this apartment headquarters for a while. I have a phonograph, a TV set, a radio. Come every night. Call it home."

HE reached across the table and patted her hand. "That's the sweetest offer anybody ever made. But you know I couldn't take you up on it."

"Why not?"

"How could I tie up your time like that? How could I possibly expect you to give up dates and parties and why would you want to?"

"Because we're friends, Frank. You came to me for help and I think I have it to offer. We could do lots of things together. We could go places when you get tired of sitting around here. I know the hideaway places. So do you. Try it, Frank. It wouldn't be bad."

"You're a sweet kid, but it wouldn't work."

"Why wouldn't it? We've had lots of pleasant evenings together. Good heavens, people don't have to have romance between them to enjoy a ball game or a symphony, do they?"

"No."

"Well, then? Look, I want to save you from doing something you'd regret the rest of your life. Give it a whirl. Be my guest, as the saying goes. Be a hermit in my apartment till you can look at the thing squarely again."

His eyes met hers and he smiled gently. "I don't know what to say. You're a pal, and I mean it."

"You've been one, but you never knew it."

HE looked at her in puzzlement. "I've been a pal to you? When? What did I ever do?"

"Someday I'll tell you all about it, Frank. Right now we're talking about you. Look, this is the way I see it: You have your job, I have mine. We'll meet here in the evenings. Come for dinner and ——"

"I couldn't do that."

"Oh, do. I beg of you. If you knew how sick I am of cooking just for me. Of course you can invite me out sometimes too. I'll go willingly. We'll have nice evenings, Frank. You'll see. And as time passes you'll get to feeling better about Barbi and maybe you'll even meet someone who ——"

"I'm a one-woman man."

She shrugged. "Well, that's your business, but I'd like to feel I at least helped to keep you at your job. Kept you doing the things that you have to do to stay sane. Frank, I like you. I want good things to happen to you. Will you give my plan a chance?"

He did not answer immediately. She studied his expression and read that her plan appealed to him very little, that he thought it a foolish, girlish attempt to help.

He wishes he hadn't come, that he hadn't got himself tied up in this. She saw him sigh and make the effort to appear pleased with the prospect.

"Yes, I'll give it a chance, honey," he said.

Good. He's going to humor me. I'll save him despite himself.

"Fine. Frank, we'll get it rolling right away. Will you come for dinner tomorrow night?" She glanced at the clock. "Actually I mean tonight."

"Yes, I'll come for dinner."

"That's the spirit. We'll have broiled chicken. Do you like broccoli?"

"No."

"Asparagus?"

"Yes."

"O.K. I won't tell you about dessert. That'll be a surprise."

He said, "Are you finished with your coffee?"

She didn't answer, her brow was furrowed with thought. Maple flavor or orange? Which? He got up and cleared the table, carrying the cups very carefully. He remembered them from the old house where they had sat so smugly in the china closet and never seemed to have been touched by human hands.

She said, "Oh, you needn't do that, Frank. I'll wash them in the morning."

"Let's do them now. Then you won't have to face them at the crack of dawn."

"O.K."

He washed and she dried and he said, "Listen, I can't have you laying out dough for the meals every other night or so. What arrangements can we make?"

"Oh, just bring me something occasionally if it will make you feel better."

"You mean like flowers?"

"No, I mean like steak."

He laughed and fiddled with the faucet. "That needs a new washer," he said. "You'd better tell the superintendent."

"I did, but he seemed bored."

"I could fix it."

APRICOT IN A CITY COURTYARD

By VIRGINIA BRASIER

Four walls of windows look with love
And doting fondness from above
This small precocious tree in bloom,
Like four old relatives whose gloom
Is lessened by one cherished child
Who brings the springtime to their room.

BABY COMING?
Smart gift ideas!

Nice for baby . . . nice for mother—The gifts mother wants for her baby. "SLEEPY-BYE"*—the original all-purpose over-sleeper! Why pay more for a grow-feature t when "SLEEPY-BYE" with the Exclusive "Baby-Gro" Feature, that lets g ment grow with baby from 6 months t 3 years is only $2.98! Keeps baby w rm, comfy, without blankets! No more c ds from kicked-off covers! No pins! Z s over baby's regular garments. Big s e pleats, roomy bottom! Lots of wigg room! Safe! No tiny legs caught in c b bars. "Best of its kind" says Nurse L ise Zabriskie, Director of the N. Y. I ternity Consultation Service. 5 nurs y colors. Washable flannelette and c l seersucker.

W h Baby-Gro feature (fits baby from 6 n s.-3 yrs.) $2.98
L ette-Size (0-6 mos.) $1.98
R gular (individual sizes) in gay print—6 8 mos.; 18-36 mos. $2.98

A department and infants' wear stores.

Mother wanted gift . . . ew, Different . . . ther will love it! It's "SLEEPY-DRYE"* e all-cotton diaper er that solves baby's tness problems! Made th durable water-pellent MAGICAL PELTHAL!† Worn over diapers. iple-reinforced crotch locks wetness diaper! No more wet beds, wet nightthes! No hot plastic or rubber lining! ts air in—lets irritating ammonia out! more diaper rash! Now baby's body eathes! Approved for lasting repelncy by the Better Fabrics Testing reau. Won't crack, peel, stiffen! Washle! 5 nursery colors. Sizes to 5. $1.25. y "SLEEPY-DRYE", the diaper er that really works.

SLEEPY-BYE" and "SLEEPY-RYE" are styled by MODELLA.

"Sleepy-Bye" and "Sleepy-Drye"

MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.

*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg. Co. atent No. 2,638,900 ‡Patent No. 2,695,615

THUMBSUCKING
since infancy caused this malocclusion.

ACCEPTED FOR ADVERTISING IN PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

THUM broke the habit and teeth returned to normal position.

THUM TRADE MARK

Get Thum at your drug counter. Only 60¢.

RITZ CLOTHS

A Ritz quality cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store.

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 Franklin St., N.Y. 13

RITZ Since 1892

"You mean if I play my cards right you will?"

"It's possible."

She looked at him from the corner of her eye. It occurred to her that he had responded a little already to companionship and sympathy. Certainly he was more like himself than he had been an hour earlier. And it occurred to her that this was what she had needed, too, something else to think about besides her own heartache. I wanted something to do, something more important than dusting the apartment. Well, I got it. I got a man to save from his own stupidity. And she thought that this was a worth-while task, for there weren't many men better than Frank.

She watched him as he carefully spread the dishcloth to dry and she smiled a little because the kitchenette looked awfully small with Frank in it.

"Well, I guess I'd better go now," he said. "It's pretty late."

"I know. Think you can sleep?"

He shook his head. "I don't know, honey. But it's something to know that someone's rooting for me and standing by."

"I'm doing that all right, Frank. Don't forget dinner, now, tomorrow night."

"It's awfully nice of you to go to so much trouble."

"What's a friend for?"

"You're not a friend. You're an angel. I'll bring some records over, and a couple of books I've liked recently."

"That'll be fine. Good night, Frank."

"Good night and thanks a thousand times," he said.

"Go straight home and try to read yourself to sleep. It helps sometimes."

"I'll try. Good night again."

He turned from her and she patted his arm encouragingly. It wasn't likely he'd be able to read with his mind so full of Barbi—Barbi who was on her honeymoon.

But when she looked down from her window and watched him walk toward his car she felt that she had helped considerably. It was a pleasure to observe that he was whistling and his step was that of a man who has experienced not heartbreak but the joy of accomplishment. His shoulders were squared, his manner confident. He walked for all the world like a man who is happy, whose prospects are bright.

Bless him, she thought, I've helped him already. Poor dear, how could he have ever fallen for Barbi? She's such a featherbrain and Frank—well, I may be wrong, but I always thought Frank was so terribly clever.

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22

looking so oddly tropical in our damp chilly woods by the tumbling icy brooks; and for the first quiet dogtooth violets to poke up; and above all, for the golden smoke of willows—still I think the dark branches against that dark sky are breath-taking.

When I open the door and all the dogs fly out, the air has a special flavor—so fresh, so incredibly pure. There is still an edge of ice in it—and I may say "This feels heavenly" if I have just been over the stove for a time getting supper. I am as hot as a baked potato, and then I look out and the brave March wind tumbles my hair and it is wonderful!

My little chickadee with the bent wing takes a last nip of sunflower seeds in the window feeder, and I am glad he has stayed another winter with me, he is so cocky and quick and never minds that wing at all. I tell him any minute now the red-winged blackbirds will take over the whole yard, clacking and chittering and shaking the trees in their excitement. He will manage, he says, cocking his little head.

A windy star comes out over the barn. Jill puts another log on the fire and asks me if anything is burning. While I stand adreaming, I forget the parsnips—and parsnips are such quick things.

Sister and Jonquil and the Irish come booming back in, hungry again! But Hildegarde sits neatly by the fire, being a lady.

A wild month, a dark month, but an exciting month, says Especially Me! END

No more tears
from "soap in the eyes"

NEW WON'T BURN
or IRRITATE eyes!

- Leaves hair shining, easy to comb
- Pure, gentle, safe
- Wonderful for all the family — 59¢

Timesaving Du Pont Nylon in party clothes means more play for children, less work for mother. Nylon stays neat lots longer, launders easily, needs a minimum of ironing! Nylon is one of Du Pont's modern-living fibers.

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

"Why not sweets? I don't want to be a Scrooge to my children."

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

ONE of the people working on our staff at the Arsenal Health Center in Pittsburgh is Dr. Milton Nicholson, a forward-looking professor of dentistry who is intensely interested in preventive dentistry. He and I are always commiserating each other on our failure to convince any parents—as far as we can see—that it's better to keep candy, soda pop, cookies and such sweets away from children as long and as much as possible.

You can't keep sweets away forever, because children go to parties and they go to school past candy stores. Then, good parents, even though they limit sweets a lot, have to allow them sometimes, because they don't want to act like Old Scrooges.

What are Doctor Nicholson and I fussing about anyway? There is a great deal of evidence that refined sugar is the principal cause of caries or decay of the teeth. Researchers believe that the actual holes are dissolved out of the teeth by lactic acid. The lactic acid is manufactured by a species of bacteria that lives on sugar. Of course there is sugar in many of the foods we eat; not just the sugar that we add in cooking or at the table, but natural sugars that occur in all fruits and even vegetables. But there is evidence that these natural, unrefined sugars, as they are found in foods, do not favor the lactic-acid bacteria, perhaps because of the action of other substances mixed with them. It's the refined sugars like granulated sugar and the refined sirups that are used in candy making which are considered particularly harmful.

You can see why sweet cookies and cakes, which leave wads of sugary dough wedged into crevices of the teeth for hours after the meal, and repeated drinks of pop and pieces of candy, which keep the teeth bathed in sirup for hours between meals, provide a field day for the lactic-acid bacteria.

Most of us parents know these facts in a general way and yet most of us don't seem to pay much attention to them (in my family too). We aren't careless about our children's health in other respects. We call the doctor for illnesses, take our children for inoculations, give them expensive vitamins to grow strong bones, and would be willing to flee for hundreds of miles, if it would do any good, to avoid polio.

The best explanation I can figure out is that there's a very close connection in our minds and hearts between sweets and love. When we were children our parents often showed approval or affection for us with something sweet. "You ate all your vegetables, so you can have a big piece of cake." . . . "You were such a good boy while mother was downtown, you can have a piece of candy." . . . "Mother was proud of how brave you were at the doctor's [or even at the dentist's! . We'll stop at the soda fountain on the way home." The doctor, who of all people should set a good example, may reward the child who behaves well in his office with a lollipop.

So the feeling—that sweets mean love—is implanted in us early in childhood. It gets built into us deep and strong. Later, the young man gives his girl a heart-shaped box of candy on Valentine's Day. A grown woman feeling lonely and unappreciated may be able to comfort herself a great deal by buying herself and eating entirely a large box of chocolates. Two of our fondest endearments are "sweetie" and "honey."

When we come to have children of our own we can't easily brush this deeply ingrained attitude aside. We have an overpowering desire to show affection to them the way it was shown to us. We may hear in our ears the words when our dentist or doctor or an article explains that sweets harm teeth, but the words don't get through to what you might call the heart.

In other words Doctor Nicholson and I and all the other professional people who are trying to stem the sirupy tide are up against powerful forces. We are like hunters trying to stop elephants with air rifles.

Is it possible to be a kindly mother who humors her children's between-meal cravings and still doesn't sacrifice their teeth to the lactic-acid bacteria?

From infancy onward you can serve them desserts of stewed fruits that are not oversweetened, and raw fruits. You can keep them ignorant of cookies and cakes for a long time, and even after that you can avoid tempting them by simply not having such foods around the kitchen—if the adults don't demand them.

You can keep candy out of the house except on a few special occasions. I'd forbid my child to regularly buy candy or other sweets coming home from school (or any other time). Above all, you can avoid using candy or sweet desserts as a reward or bribe, which only increases the child's craving for them.

You can have ready for after-school snacks not only the nonsweet foods (such as whole-wheat crackers or bread) and milk, that most children like, but also naturally sweet drinks like real orange and grape juice and naturally sweet raw fruits. Then there are a lot of dried fruits, most of which children love to munch from their hands but which are seldom made available by parents: prunes, raisins, apricots, dates, figs.

All these foods are easy on the teeth; and besides, they have real food value.

There are other aspects of tooth decay that should be mentioned while we are on the subject. One is tooth brushing. The main job to be accomplished is not sweetening the breath or polishing the teeth to a high shine—however nice these results are. (In fact, that green or brown film that forms on some teeth has no connection with decay at all.) The main job is to get lumps and collections of food dislodged from the crevices of the teeth. Therefore the sensible time to use the toothbrush is after meals, three times a day if possible.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "You don't have to have experience to do a wonderful job with a baby—all you need to start with is a friendly spirit."

CHILDREN IN TROUBLE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 69

of months ago. That child had been in a family that had been on agency rolls ever since she was born—and by the time she was twelve she had had so much sex experience that it meant no more to her than shaking hands. She could work her way to California and back with no difficulty.

She was sent to training school, where it is doubtful she will do well, but if we had had her five or ten years ago, we could have done something for her. There are two younger children in that family that may be helped while there is still time.

MISS HICKEY: How do we reach such a little girl before she is completely lost?

MRS. WOODWARD: The agency worker has the right, when the agency grant is given, to determine whether the home is a suitable one. This is an enormous problem—you don't want the agency worker to decide on a superficial evaluation that this isn't a suitable home and get the children out. It may be suitable even though there may be some things about it that do not meet good standards. An expert, properly trained and well-supervised social worker is most important.

JUDGE SMYTH: Before the court can do very much there has to be some overt act or some demonstrated condition that measures up to our legal definitions of delinquency. It is very much the same with the protective agencies.

MRS. MEYER: Actually these families are not helped early enough because most agencies haven't got enough staff.

MRS. CHAPMAN: I think there is something more basic than just going into the home when a breakdown is evident. I think there has to be an education for parenthood, an educa for homemaking, which many young pe don't now receive. Some people, even if have difficulties, resent a social worker's c ing to their home. They don't want any side interference unless they get to the p where the judge or the sheriff says, "Th what must be done."

"He is Still My Father"

MRS. GOULD: There is something very po ant about the importance of the home— need of belonging, which is what the h supplies. Judge Smyth, what has been experience with children under foster car

JUDGE SMYTH: Well, when children have to be removed from their homes placed in foster homes or institutions are leased, usually when they are sixteen, invariably return home. There the real tie affection are, no matter how inadequate home may appear to you and me.

One little girl was brought in to us as a linquent. Our supervisor of case work lear that this little girl was running away from h to escape her father, who was having impr sex relations with her. The mother was in terror of the situation that she accused child of being delinquent. We brought daughter in as a neglected child, and in time brought the father before the grand and had him indicted and convicted. But little child came in to see me. She wante go to Sing Sing prison and see her fathe said:

"In spite of all that he has done to yo She answered, "Well, he is still my fath

MR. CLENDENEN: Recently a writer cam see me in Washington. In Washington have slums some two or three blocks from Capitol building. This writer said, "Isn really a matter of delinquent parents, Clendenen? If these children only had right kind of parents, wouldn't they all g up all right?"

I turned around and pointed out window—it happens to overlook a gro deteriorated Negro slum area—and I as him whether he thought that he co guarantee that his two children would become delinquent if they were liv there, in an overcrowded one- or two-ro apartment, where youngsters are posed to every form of adult corrupt and vice.

JUDGE SMYTH: Anyone who has lived New York City, as I did when I was a and a young man, can see the deteriorati areas that used to be some of the fine secti of the city. They have become tremend slum areas now, gang-infested.

There is nothing to offset all the evil t abounds in those neighborhoods. Th isn't any adequate recreation or charact building opportunity for the child there, none nearly adequate to offset the damage done by allowing them to in wretched conditions that hold so li of inspiration and hope for them.

MR. TABER: We have homes that are wh but where the tension is so rife that the ch sometimes becomes a pawn between pare A home in turmoil can be worse than a bro one.

MRS. GOULD: With the breakdown of neighborhood, the community group, living in a small home, the young mother day with two or three children carries a hea burden than in almost any other soci There is no room for grandmother now—s many of them are working! There is no to help the young wife. I think that is so many young mothers take jobs. They c not take the unremitting demands of moth hood. It seems to me that society must evo some safety valve for the very hard-pres young mother who has no one to help h Even when she is sick she often has no ass ance in her home.

MRS. BASS: Miss Hickey, I hope we going to explore the factor of work mothers. There is a large number of moth who are working with no very special pro sions made by the community, or by mother herself, to supervise her children.

MRS. GOULD: In our society so much pr tige and so much value are attached to a car

Carter's
for your growing boy

If there's suddenly a gay blade around—it's time you switched him to Carter's grow-ups. Pajamas with "man—that's comfort" room. Briefs and shirts with muscle room . . all carefully knit of purest, strongest cotton for long, boy-proof wear. New! Famous Carter's now in Tattersall prints. Same easy washing . . . and no ironing. Carter-Set® . . . won't shrink out of fit.

Front to back

SHORT-STOP KNIT PAJAMA. Nevabind® sleeves. Tattersall print in red with charcoal; blue with copen; brown with cocoa. 4-18 yrs. $2.95.

BOYS "TRIGS": NEW V-NECK T-SHIRT. Nevabind sleeves. White. 26-38. $1.25. BRIEF. Neva-Vex® front. Tattersall print in red, blue, brown. 24-34. $1.00.

JR. BOYS "TRIGS": SHIRT. Styled and priced for the younger boy. White. 2-12 yrs. 59¢-75¢. BRIEF. White. 2-12 yrs. 75¢-95¢.

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

Carter's
for your growing girl

Look like your princess? Then now's the minute for her Carter's grow-ups. Carter's gives these soft cottons particular care—an abundance of comfort . . . not too many ruffles. Neat and nice designing to suit her kind of ideas . . . her special kind of figure. Beautiful to wash, Carter knits need no ironing . . . stay just as sweet as she is. Carter-Set® . . .won't shrink out of fit.

Front to back

SHORT 'N SWEET GOWN with matching pantie. Puffed sleeves. Pastel ruffle trim. Gay pink, blue or yellow rosebuds. 3-16 yrs. $3.00.

JUMPA-JAMA. For romp or rest. Gently elasticized ruffle trim. Coin dots in powder-puff colors. Blue, red, mint or yellow on white. 2-16 yrs. $2.00.

SPANKY PANTS®. Elasticized leg, waist, nylon-reinforced cuffs. 2-16 yrs. 6 bright ribbon colors, 69¢. (Rosebuds, too, 79¢.)

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

Keep him rash-free

Keep him happy with lanolin-rich, oil-rich that the prestige of the mother in the home taking care of her children has diminished. There may or may not be actual neglect of the child, but the emphasis on material things, on satisfactions outside the home, has damaged the entire structure of the home, it seems to me.

MRS. MEYER: The child that knows his mother is working to support him actually takes pride in her work and understands that she is making sacrifices for him. But I find that the upper-income-bracket child whose mother works because she wants more money, or because she considers it more "stimulating," often hates her with a frenzy that he doesn't understand because he feels that his mother prefers this thing called a job to him. The mother then gives him more money than he should have to compensate for her neglect.

When the teacher says, "You don't take care of Johnny," she says, "Well, look at all I do for him." And the teacher says, "But Johnny wants mother's love." Then the mother gets furious.

The point I want to make is that the child who is neglected by his mother when it isn't necessary in order to support him gets a deeper emotional upset than the poor child who understands that he is being helped by his mother's work outside the home.

JUDGE SMYTH: I think that may be very true, but in my experience a good mother is a good mother at all times. If she has to work, she somehow imparts to her children her own strength of character and manages to provide for their proper care while she is away,

"I don't like to use the words 'juvenile delinquency' because I have a very firm conviction that the term ought to be translated into parental failure. The problem is one of the most complex facing the nation, and is one filled with heartbreak."

—DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

whereas the weak mother, who would be a weak mother whether she was working or not, is just a weak mother.

MISS HICKEY: If the home breaks up because of illness, divorce, cruelty or neglect, Judge Smyth, what are the provisions for dependent children?

JUDGE SMYTH: Well, they can be handled by the voluntary action of the parents, if they are intelligent enough and willing to do it, in conjunction with the department of child welfare, but ordinarily the service of the court is required.

The first thing needed is a good children's court, I would say, and it must be a good children's court in contrast to the picture Mrs. Meyer has given us of what she has observed in her travels around the country, and we need ——

MRS. MEYER: May I interrupt? You know perfectly well that many of the institutions to which these children are committed are abominable. If the dependent child in an institution has no chance of adoption, at the age of sixteen, in many communities, he is sent to a training school just as though he were a young offender because at present they don't know what else to do with him; then he is marked as a criminal through no fault of his own.

MISS HICKEY: Granted that we have a good judge, what about the institutions to which the child can go? Do we have adequate institutions?

JUDGE SMYTH: May I say first that the good judge is important, but he is only part of it, and he has to have a thoroughly good staff, an intake service that knows what it is all about, and a probation service that is the ultimate in good social service.

You have your choice, in dealing with children, of putting them under the supervision of social workers or probation workers, or placing them. When you place them, you have to place them in either foster homes or institutions. On the whole, I agree with Mrs. Meyer that the situation across the country is rather deplorable. Our correctional institu-

Who gains most from Childcraft?

America's Famous Child Development Plan...

Precious are these moments "between the dark and the daylight." Moments for growth and for growing together. Moments to be retained in growing memories.

Childcraft helps to make each minute live. It helps you guide young minds and active bodies. It helps you understand and anticipate every phase of development. For Childcraft gives you the services of 150 leading experts in child psychology and education.

Even the infant is learning . . . its bright eyes wide to the wonders of color and the magic of words. The three-year-old is in another world . . . her imagination expanding at the turn of every page. The kindergartner is embarked on a project . . . translating what his eyes see into action with his hands.

And there's music and poetry and art and science in the Childcraft plan for child development. It's the foundation for a full, well-rounded life, starting from the cradle. For Childcraft is a design for living, development, and guidance.

Who gains most? What price your pride, pleasure, and satisfaction?

Send NOW for FREE BOOKLET!

Please send me FREE, without obligation, my copy of the new 24-page booklet, "Their Future Is In Your Hands," which contains a summary of "Education Is A 'Round The Clock Process." Address: Mr. George Smith, Childcraft, Box 3565, Dept. 373, Chicago 54, Ill.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

My children's ages are_____

There may be an opportunity to represent Childcraft in your neighborhood on a full-time basis. Free training, good income and future, no investment required. For full information, write Mr. George L. Freeman, Childcraft, Dept. 473, Box 3565, Chicago 54, Illinois.

Field Enterprises, Inc., Educational Division, Merchandise Mart Plaza, Chicago 54, Ill.

tions leave much to be desired, to put it mildly. Let Mrs. Meyer tell us about it.

MRS. MEYER: To begin with, we don't have enough good foster homes. The child is therefore sent to a home for dependent children which is crowded and where the children are under severe emotional strain.

I was in such an institution only a few months ago. One of the children sidled up to me, took my hand and said, "I want to whisper to you."

When I leaned down the child said, "Take me home, take me home!"

The inadequacy of our institutions and of our foster-home-care program is shocking. I think we could get more good foster homes if people realized what a tremendous contribution they could make to the future of these dependent children.

If the great importance of foster homes were recognized, we could appeal to the middle-aged woman of intelligence and training whose own children have grown up, and make her realize that she has an empty room and time on her hands, and that she could make a wonderful contribution to society if she would care for a dependent child. We are never going to get enough foster homes unless we dignify foster care as an important function in our society.

"I Can't Stand This Child Another Minute!"

MRS. WOODWARD: The child-placing agency has the tremendous responsibility of evaluating the situation—first in an attempt to keep the child in its own home by using some of these bolstering resources which we hope are available or, if that cannot be done, to work out a plan for the child's relief.

In some foster-home agencies I know about, it seems to me that sometimes the child is taken one day because the agency has some money and there is a foster-home vacancy. The next day a much-more-desperate case will be turned down because there isn't any money and there isn't any vacancy. There isn't any actual evaluation of which child needs placement most, for how long, or how the parent will stay in the picture. Then you have the desperately bad situation of a child too hastily placed, moving into a poorly studied foster home, and not properly supervised. At six o'clock on Saturday evening the foster mother may phone and say, "I can't stand this child another minute." Then the child is placed in another equally unknown foster home. That child may be sent to fifteen or twenty different places before it finally lands in an institution. Then the institution superintendent says, "Why didn't you give him to me five placements ago when I could have helped him?"

MRS. GOULD: Is that a rare experience?

MRS. WOODWARD: I wish it were, but it isn't. I would say that with the child-welfare load in Texas, the child who is in a foster home may have at least three or four placements during a year. Foster-care agencies recognize and are doing their best to remedy this, but it is still far too prevalent.

"Most children who get classified as delinquents come from homes that have failed. It is their parents who are delinquent—either too poor to care for the child, or mentally or morally deficient, or have criminal tendencies themselves. Parents fail by neglect, ignorance, and unwillingness or inability to direct their children. They don't want to, they don't know how, or they can't—because of poverty, hopelessness, or some other cause."

—1954 Annual Report,
St. Louis Police Department

MR. TABER: Would you amplify the importance of fitting the foster home to the child?

MRS. WOODWARD: It seems to me the placement of the child into a foster home has to be as carefully done as in adoption. If you put the right child in the right home, he will get the kind of care he needs, the kind of pushing he needs. If you don't do that, either nothing happens or you have a series of difficulties.

MRS. GOULD: On the whole, are you satisfied with the type of foster homes you get?

MRS. WOODWARD: At the moment, in my own small agency, I am tremendously impressed by the kind of people who through the Presbyterian Church are willing to give an entirely different type of home than I have ever worked with before—because they have been caught by the idea of giving service to children. We are getting for the first time in my experience the type of home Mrs. Meyer mentioned. A worker, in order to find the most helpful foster home for each child, needs foster parents with all kinds of personalities and cultural and social backgrounds, not just the low-income home upon which we have too largely depended.

MRS. GOULD: Three placements might be average for a child in a year, you say. What is the cause of that change? Is it that the child was already in trouble when he went into the home and is therefore difficult?

MRS. WOODWARD: All children separated from their parents are troubled children. The success of the placement depends on under-Fashion's popping out all over E-Z Animal Fair!

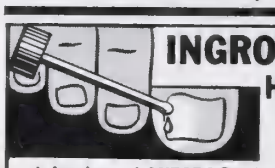
Such a joyous brand new print of pets and petals! So pretty for your youngster . . for gifts. And so soft, sturdy, sensibly priced . . the same fine E-Z quality mothers have chosen for generations. See E-Z underwear and sleepers at your favorite store now . . they're the greatest show for your money.

labeled for correct size by child's weight..

E-Z

TOM'S all set for [illegible] warm days in sturdy Swiss-rib shirt and brief. Both, soft as bunnies, of finest combed yarn. Sizes 2 to 8, shirt 49¢, brief 55¢. Sizes 10 to 16, shirt 59¢, brief 65¢.
ANN'S dainty smocked dress, sweet as a flower . . with famous EZ-ON neck . . and matching Synthetic-lined water-proof panties. Animal Fair print. Sizes 6 months to 2, 2.39 the set.
PAT'S EZ-ON gown is as practical as it is pretty in new Animal Fair print. With snug convertible mitten [illegible] removable draw-tape at hem. Infants size, 1.49.
PEG'S gay rayon-sleeve short kimono in Animal Fair design . . charming cover-up for E-Z tie-neck or pullover shirt and FIT-EZ panties. Kimono, infants size, 1.09. Panties, 1 to 3, 49¢.
AT LEADING STORES HERE AND IN CANADA . . E-Z MILLS, INC., NEW YORK, N. Y.

IF YOU SUFFE PAIN of HEADACHE NEURITIS NEURALGIA



get FAST RELIEF WITH

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recomme

Here's Why... Anacin is like a doc prescription. That is, Anacin contain just one but a combination of medi proved active ingredients. No other p uct gives faster, longer-lasting relief pain of headache, neuralgia, neu than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® to INGROWN NA Hurting Yo Immedia Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief fr tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO tou ens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail be cut and thus prevents further pain and disco fort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counte MOJUD® for beauty!

MOJUD® "Magic-Motion" Stockings

They cling closer... make your legs more beautiful... because there's Magic Motion... extra "give" and spring-back in the knit!

©1954 MOJUD CO., INC., N.Y.C.

the child and how he feels about the n. It depends upon how he has been for the separation and the place-depends upon the kind of foster is sent to. Then the social worker has le to get in to help often enough to e problems before they become in-table.

GOULD: There are some people who payment to foster-home mothers
e kept low so as not to give a money
. Mr. Clendenen, do you have any out that?

CLENDENEN: Indeed I do. We have at ent time in this nation about 175,000 in foster-family homes—that is, deand neglected children. As Mrs.
rd has indicated, it is common for ldren to be moved again and again n, and, as Judge Smyth, I am sure, ear me out, eventually the youngster a confirmed troublemaker before the rt.

urse there are many reasons why we uble in getting foster-family homes of type. In some cities, under zoning ster homes are classified as boarding-nd therefore cannot operate in certain hoods. But I think one grave fallacy, comes to your specific question, is the at people should take foster children of their love for children—indeed, inancial sacrifice to perform this serv-ne, this is like saying that the psychia-uld take that same child under treathout pay and only because of his love

SMYTH: Problem children who canust in foster homes often cannot get en in some of our modern institutions fess to be for the care and treatment of ally disturbed children. They come ck to the courts.

k that it is important for any judge to hat in nine cases out of ten those chilin court without legal representation, y can't get it. They have to be advised rights, and the judge has to lean over rd to see that they have protection, the because very seldom can they afford al from his decision.

GOULD: If you could have the best on for placement you know, would better than a foster home, Mr. en? I would like Mrs. Meyer's and oodward's opinion also.

CLENDENEN: My answer would be might be much better than a poor ome. On the other hand, a child who nefit from a substitute family-type n will be much better off in a foster-home than in an institution. But some children have been so damaged in their human relationships that an institution is the only answer.

JUDGE SMYTH: Yes, it depends on the child's needs. Some children cannot identify with the foster-home parents, and they are better placed in institutions. Foster homes are needed for small children and babies.

MRS. MEYER: As a matter of fact, when you sum it up, the court has not enough probation officers to keep contact with the child, and there are not enough good foster homes or institutions of the right kind for the dependent child, the mild offender or for the serious offender.

Children in Cages

MRS. GOULD: What are the provisions for the temporary care of children?

MRS. MEYER: On the whole, children are sent into a receiving home and there they sit sometimes for thirty days, because the court is so overloaded that it cannot get around to the case—an innocent child, mind you, who simply has no home and has never offended in any way. For lack of space and staff this child is brought into contact with mild and serious offenders and even criminals. Again the need for legal advice for these children comes up, because if the child can afford a lawyer its case is brought before the court immediately.

JUDGE SMYTH: That is a disgraceful situation.

MRS. MEYER: You know it exists all over the country.

MRS. WOODWARD: May I go back to Mrs. Gould's question? I think it would be hard to say whether a poor institution or a poor foster home does more damage. I would hate to see a swing back to wholesale institutional care as a reaction against the poor foster home. What we would like to do is to improve both and use whichever one is better for a particular child.

For example, I am in the process of taking a family of four children from a mother who is seriously feeble-minded. I could use a cottage type of institution for those children, but I am deliberately putting them in good foster homes because I want them to have normal affectionate family relationships in a normal neighborhood and go to a public school. I wouldn't use an institution for those children, no matter how good the institution was.

MRS. CHAPMAN: The situation is different in every state and every community. I have seen some wonderful receiving homes. But in some places, children are kept in jail. We made a survey in one state and found one town where they were trying to keep the children separate from the hardened criminals—they had them in a cage in the basement of the jail!

I am on a board of a home for dependent boys. We have one boy there who had been in a jail for three years because that county had no other place to keep him!

Then, too, there are few juvenile courts in the country compared with the number of county judges. There are very few boys' courts or juvenile courts or family courts. These are only in the large cities and in not all of them.

MRS. WOODWARD: In this question of foster homes or institutions, we are not using all the knowledge that we have. For instance, we know that babies should not be placed in institutions, but there are still a great many babies who are in institutions.

MRS. MEYER: We are not using the knowledge we have in any area of child care. We know that we should have better co-ordination of public and private welfare agencies. We know exactly what we should do about the courts. We know what we should do about the institutions, but we just don't do it.

The apathy of the American people on this question is shocking. I think they don't know what is happening to children in their own communities, nor how important the solution

HOW AMERICA LIVES—

WITH RED CROSS HELP

● Mr. Mayeski and his family, of Baltimore, Maryland, are typically American—a handsome couple with five youngsters, who don't consider themselves "misfortune prone," but simply the victims of streaks of bad luck at inopportune moments. In the past ten years, they have had as much trouble as most families have in fifty. During World War II, Mr. Mayeski was in the Air Force in this country, Panama, and in Okinawa and the surrounding islands, and was injured in service. While he was overseas, the family had money troubles, sickness, a new baby, and everything that brings anxiety to a closely knit family.

The Mayeskis believed they had all the hard luck scheduled for them, but the last blow was Hurricane Hazel, which whipped through Maryland in October, swept through their home, ripping walls, shattering furniture, leaving them homeless.

Said Mr. Mayeski, an electrician at the Glenn L. Martin Company, "Have you ever been flooded out—everything you own a sloppy, soggy, muddy mess? The house was on the water and what Hazel didn't wreck, the water took care of. The Red Cross worker helped us get this new place, the furniture and clothes. We hardly had anything left that we could use."

Recalling the past ten years, he said, "I guess you could call us a Red Cross family because I don't know where we'd be without the help they've given us."

March is Red Cross month. Support the Red Cross drive for funds and assistance in your community. The Red Cross depends on you. You can depend on the Red Cross.

New nursery beauty!

Mennen lanolized baby oil cleans gently, without harsh rubbing

Next to baby, the new Mennen Baby-in-the-Rose package is the loveliest thing in the nursery! And this pure, lanolized baby oil actually loosens diaper matter. It cleans baby gently, without harsh rubbing.

Never greasy or sticky: can't stain clothes or linens. Use it as baby's special body cleanser. Works wonders against cradle cap, too. 25¢, 49¢, 98¢. No tax.

Slightly higher in Canada.

Diaper Rash Protection
Mennen satinized Baby Powder in a new Baby-in-the-Rose package. 25¢. 49¢. No tax.

Mennen . . . Baby Specialist since 1880 of these problems is to the future of our country.

MRS. GOULD: And, Mrs. Meyer, they don't know where to get hold of it. We are trying to get our teeth into that.

MISS HICKEY: How can we discover and assist the potentially difficult or dangerous child when he becomes of school age, Mr. Taber?

MR. TABER: No agency occupies a more strategic position than do our schools. In the first place, we see all children, we see them daily, intimately, in the most formative years of their lives. The teacher who is oriented in mental health can be alert to the symptoms of deep-seated problems of children in the classroom. Good teaching in itself is good mental health.

MRS. MEYER: And a good teacher is the best guidance expert because she has so much experience with children. But I wonder whether you wouldn't agree that a child that goes from an overcrowded, broken home to an overcrowded school has very little chance to go straight.

MR. TABER: I would agree that such a child is in for double trouble. However, school counselors can help alleviate the problem. Teachers know children intimately, but they cannot be expected to have the specialized skill, the time and the knowledge of welfare agencies to give extensive individual help. Teachers and counselors, working as partners, can assure appropriate help at the strategic time. Truancy, for instance, is a forerunner of delinquency, and the attendance officer as well as the counselor can serve as the link between home and school.

The gap between home and school is far too great. It is essential that schools provide for periodic conferences between parent and teacher to discuss such questions as: "Where does my child stand? How can I help? If my child has a problem, is there anything I should do?"

MRS. GOULD: Once you have dete child who is in trouble and you ha formed the customary services of t this child's family situation to the a of certain agencies, suppose it is a that this child is doing more harm tha to his classmates; what can you th What is customarily done?

MR. TABER: If the child doesn't res specialized help such as that of a child-g clinic, we take the child into court and placement. But there are many thing before that. For instance, in Philadel have approximately ten thousand chi special classes for the slow learner, th cally handicapped and children in nee cial discipline. We should like to o classes for the emotionally disturbed ch is not delinquent but is in such a turm he doesn't fit into another group.

MRS. MEYER: One of the reasons w dangerous child is in the public sc that there is for that child really n that would have a constructive inf In many cases, a teacher may have classroom a child that has crimina encies and a court record, but the is not told about it because the secre rounding juvenile courts forbids it

MR. TABER: In Philadelphia we also Case Review Committee which the tendent of schools started six years meets every Friday morning for three with the superintendent chairing the m The director of medical services and th tor of special education and myself ar group. We go over the cases of what potentially dangerous children. We o priority at a child-guidance clinic, or a hearing at the court instead of the usua We accelerate placement in institutio agencies and institutions appreciate t committee is working with children s from acute behavior disorders and they prompt treatment.

this baby will sleep
as nature intended

. . . relaxed, with back straight, well supported in comfort. For Kantwet's exclusive Dorsal Construction, a built-in, straight-line foundation at the heart of the mattress, gives lasting level support for growing bones and muscles. And Kantwet's exclusive Firm-O-Flex innerspring unit gives additional support yet is comfortably resilient. Kantwet lets baby sleep with the good crib posture nature intended.

the only crib mattress with DORSAL CONSTRUCTION
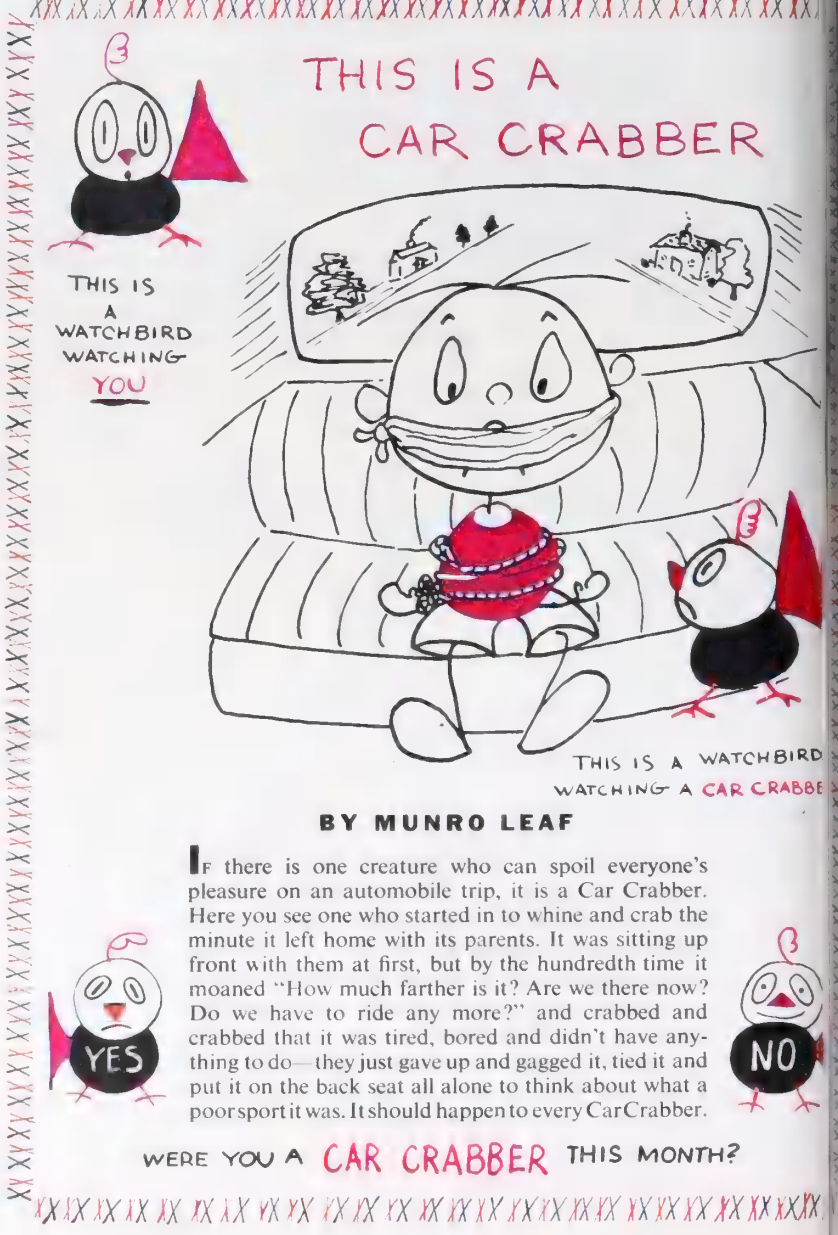
for good crib posture



$17.95

Other KANTWET made mattresses, $12.95 to $25.95

THERE IS ONLY ONE
POSTURIZED KANTWET
CRIB MATTRESS

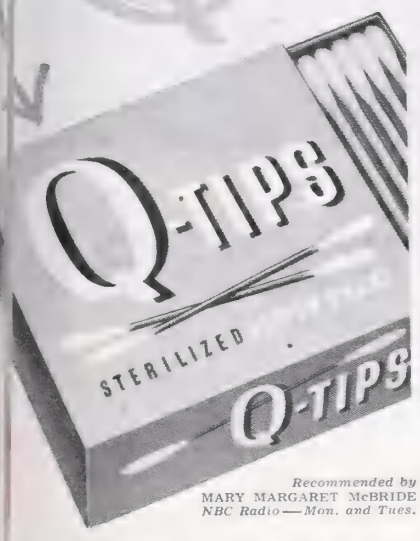
Made and sold throughout the United States and Canada

© 1955, Rose-Derry Co.

BY MUNRO LEAF

IF there is one creature who can spoil everyone's pleasure on an automobile trip, it is a Car Crabber. Here you see one who started in to whine and crab the minute it left home with its parents. It was sitting up front with them at first, but by the hundredth time it moaned "How much farther is it? Are we there now? Do we have to ride any more?" and crabbed and crabbed that it was tired, bored and didn't have anything to do—they just gave up and gagged it, tied it and put it on the back seat all alone to think about what a poor sport it was. It should happen to every Car Crabber.

Shopping memo for mothers



More doctors and mothers have used 'Q-TIPS'...

More babies have been cared for by 'Q-TIPS'...

...than all other cotton swabs combined!

Q-TIPS

Recommended by MARY MARGARET McBRIDE
NBC Radio—Mon. and Tues.

The box for you is blue!

Look for this famous blue box. Only 'Q-Tips' has the strip-off safety-seal, handy sliding tray.

IT'S A BEAUTY OPERATOR, TOO!

Keep 'Q-Tips' on your dressing table to blend on make-up, erase smudges, touch up hair the easy way. It's a marvelous manicuring and grooming aid.

Also available in Canada ■ Q-Tips®
Mfd. by Q-Tips Inc., Long Island City, N. Y.

MR. GOULD: This is a very rare thing, then, not generally done.

MRS. MEYER: But it is what should be done everywhere. The public schools are expected to take over all family and community responsibilities for children. It can't be done, but it is expected.

In one area where I was doing research work, the kids would go to the empty apartments when both parents were at work and have parties, consisting mostly of sexual delinquency. When the parents discovered what had happened in their home, they went to the principal and said, "You are not doing the right thing by those children—or this wouldn't have happened!" People ought to realize that good schools are as much a part of our civic, moral and military defense as a good army—but the schools can't do everything that needs to be done. They can never take the place of a good home.

MR. CLENDENEN: I certainly concur with Mr. Taber that the schools are the one agency in any community that has an opportunity not only to know the child but to know the parents and the family as well. Actually, of course, I think that there is no question that the school is falling grossly short of performing its potential role. It seems to me that schools have three relationships, so to speak, to the problem of juvenile delinquency:

(a) There are a few schools that are in a position to do something about the problem; (b) there are a number of schools that manage to contain the problem—that is, they find some way of living with the trouble of the youngster without actually aggravating his difficulties; and (c) there are many schools that are in the business of creating juvenile delinquency by denying youngsters an opportunity for success and in other ways. When a child brings to school a full measure of difficulty in his relationships to other people, a lack of feeling that he belongs to society, if the school aggravates any of these feelings, to that extent will the school actually be contributing to this youngster's emotional maladjustment and his subsequent delinquency.

MISS HICKEY: Judge Smyth, do you support the type of program Mr. Taber has talked about—this relationship of the schools and the court?

JUDGE SMYTH: Oh, yes. We have worked hard on that for years. In Westchester County, in fact, we were sort of pioneers there in bringing into the schools the kinds of things he was speaking about—the individual counseling with the children and with the parents, and the psychiatric clinics in the schools. We established the very closest relationship between the schools and the court. We actually have the principals and teachers confer with the judge, and we have the probation officers go to the schools and confer with the teachers and the principals.

"For every child who is in conflict with society, the right to be dealt with intelligently as society's charge, not society's outcast; with the home, the school, the church, the court and the institution, when needed, shaped to return him whenever possible to the normal stream of life."

Children's Charter, Article XIV

"We Need to Hold Children Accountable"

MISS HICKEY: Mr. Taber, do you think the schools coddle these boys and girls that the court is trying to straighten out?

MRS. GOULD: Yes, what about discipline in general?

MR. TABER: Perhaps I should say that this is spotty. By and large, we do not coddle. I believe in firm but constructive use of authority. In discipline, I feel we need to hold children accountable. We do a dis-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 211

Tam O'Shanter

FOR FREE CATALOG, WRITE DEPT. L

BASQUETTES — superfine cotton knits that go-everywhere, go-with-everything. No-ironing-needed: just wash 'n' wear.

CHECKER-UPPER: contrast ribbon, novelty pin. Red, Blue or Charcoal Checks with White trim.
2 to 6X $1.98
7 to 14 . . . . $1.98

SCALLOP-TRIM BASQUETTE: scallop fringe front and back. Navy or Charcoal with White trim.
2 to 6X $1.79
7 to 14 . . . . $1.98

at better stores everywhere, or write TAM O'SHANTER, Inc. 5512 Empire State Bldg., N. Y. 1 · PLANT: Manchester, N. H.

Turknit®
Baby Goods
Shower Gifts

Bibs
Towels
Wash Cloths
Bath Robes
Bath Blankets

PUTNAM KNITTING CO., BOX L, COHOES, N.Y.

CORNS
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
removed by MOSCO

Amazing Discovery Tightens Plates Like "Living Tissue"

Not a paste! Not a powder! Not a cream or wax pad! But a new, soft plastic that holds plates firm and tight!

Just released — Amazing soft plastic SNUG Denture Cushions! Grip loose fitting plates tight and firm—yet feel and hold like "Living Tissue." Eases sore gums due to loose fitting plates. You eat, talk, laugh without embarrassment. SNUG stays cushion-soft—can't harden and ruin plate. Tasteless, odorless, cleaned in a jiffy—easily removed when replacement is needed. No more daily bother with "stickums." Get SNUG Denture Cushions today and do away with your plate troubles. Money-back if not satisfied. At all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1.50 check or money order to Midland Pharmacal Corp., Dept. 32, 45 West 45th Street, New York 36, New York.

All over the land, more babies are fed with Evenflo than with all other nursers combined!

PYRAMID RUBBER CO. "Specialists in Baby Feeding Equipment" Ravenna, Ohio

Talk about Freshness!

Nothing else says "freshness" so deliciously as hot, butter-melting biscuits or rolls. And you can buy them all prepared...eight or ten in a small container...ready to pop into the oven and bake!

It's aluminum that makes this ready-made freshness possible. Just as Reynolds Wrap keeps baked biscuits hot and moist on your table, the same aluminum foil keeps the prepared dough fresh from maker to you... moisture content precisely maintained, harmful light rays excluded. Only Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging can do it!

You'll find these wonderful prepared rolls and biscuits in your grocer's refrigerated cabinets. Try them soon...cinnamon rolls, too! And notice the packaging. You can tell it's aluminum by the gleam. And on more and more products you can tell by the Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging Seal!

Reynolds Metals Company, General Sales Office, Louisville 1. Ky.

Follow the rainbow to your grocers' big display of foil-packaged fresh foods!

BUY foods in FOIL... they're RAINBOW FRESH ...RAINBOW BRIGHT

QUALITY PROTECTED WITH REYNOLDS WRAP ALUMINUM PACKAGING

See "MISTER PEEPERS," starring Wally Cox, Sundays, NBC-TV Network.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 209

ce to them otherwise. Marriage, job parenthood require accountability. hers should not make idle threats which do not carry out, and neither should nts. It is important to let children take in- ing responsibility as they demonstrate right to it, but we do have to let them their fingers at times. I feel in many cases scipline we have been vacillating. We have held children accountable as consistently e should, and I think this is important.

RS. MEYER: Very often parents object when teachers discipline a child, even with e justification. They come to school and "What are you doing to my Johnny? I see that you are not reappointed unless treat Johnny differently!"

R. CLENDENEN: But there is an assumption sometimes that the truly delinquent gster might have been straightened out ewhere along the line had a firm hand exerted. The average delinquent youngas not lacked punishment in his life. The al delinquent boy or girl who comes beour courts has been subjected to severe shment, usually repeatedly.

RS. GOULD: When we speak of discipline on't necessarily mean punishment. What mean is holding the child to certain lards and holding him responsible.

RS. MEYER: You get that kind of discipline in schools through interest, through concentration on the work being done the child wants to co-operate with the her and with the other children. That is cratic discipline. But you can't do it if have sixty children in a single class. Then eacher has to resort to the old militaristic ority, which is destructive.

R. TABER: It is primarily a matter of bal- There are the two extremes, overindulge on one hand and too much rigidity on ther. It is important that we balance these rs in a way that helps the child to mature be himself and live in harmony with oth- -and this is one of the greatest challenges educators have confronting them.

ISS HICKEY: Then there is the matter of influence in the school, and on the child rally. Mr. Clendenen, are gangs inev- e?

R. CLENDENEN: The influence of a gang be a tremendous factor in inducing delinbehavior, since a youngster who resides neighborhood controlled by a particular must become a member if for no other on than for his own self-protection. I think problem, however, is much broader. All of ve a drive for prestige and for acceptance ur fellows. This is a particularly strong in the years of adolescence when the is leaving the security he formerly found s family.

w, no youngster wants to chicken out. youngster wants to be thought of, in s of his contemporaries, as a youngster who doesn't have enough nerve. Actually, many youngsters get into serious trouble because of this need—this perfectly normal, human need—to go along and be accepted by one's associates.

MRS. MEYER: The gang is inevitable when so many children feel as isolated as they do today in our shattered society. They haven't a basic relationship with their parents, very often, or with the community. They are neglected in school, not because the school is indifferent but because it can't cope with a mass influx of students. They just instinctively gang up against the adult world because they feel the adult world is not giving them sufficient emotional support. They don't reason it out that way, but that is why it happens. They have to belong somewhere, and if they can't belong anywhere else, they are going to belong to a gang.

How Can We "Take Hold"?

MISS HICKEY: Well, there are certainly many other factors we could discuss in relation to the seeds of delinquency, the seeds of crime. What can we, as citizens and parents, do to correct some of these conditions? How can we "take hold" in a practical way, Mr. Clendenen?

MR. CLENDENEN: To me, the things that we can do, both in relation to our own children and in relation to other children, are really almost without number. Once upon a time when we lived in somewhat better-knit neighborhoods, we took a greater degree of responsibility for our neighbors' children. We need to take more now. I don't mean poking your nose into your neighbors' business. But I do mean that when you see a youngster who doesn't belong to you doing something you think is dangerous for that individual's welfare, you would do something about it rather than merely say, "This child doesn't belong to me. I'll just turn my head and walk along my way."

It is much easier to get people to give money to good causes than it is to get them to give of themselves. Yet there is no substitute for the help we can give by volunteering our services in Big Brother organizations, Big Sister organizations, PAL clubs, teen-age canteens. I think that our efforts to do something about juvenile delinquency so often are blocked because we think that we have to find something big and dramatic to do. Actually, the opportunities are innumerable in our daily living.

MRS. CHAPMAN: Well, of course we can't teach our children integrity when we're getting tickets fixed and evading income tax ourselves. I don't think you can isolate children's problems. They are tied up with every phase of the community—good health, slum clearance, sanitation. You can't say, "This is a children's problem. This is an adult problem." It's a total community effort that is going to get to the basic causes of juvenile delinquency. Our

SUNNYVALE $15.75

NEWI FLAIR $19.75

CORSAGE $19.75

NEWI CONSTELLATION $18.75

beautiful beginning . . . your magnificent Castleton China . . . the most beautiful table companion that silver ever had. Choose from the selection of great Castleton patterns, both contemporary and traditional, at leading department stores and jewelers. Ask about the special purchase plans that make it so easy to own incomparable Castleton.

Send for the new Castleton China Booklet with pattern pamphlets in full color . . . or Castleton's booklet, "Wedding Etiquette"—each 25c. Specify booklet desired. Castleton China, Inc., New Castle 12, Pa.

Prices are for five-piece place settings.
Also available piece-by-piece.

CASTLETON China

OPPORTUNITY

IF YOU want extra money and have spare time to put to use, this is for you! You can spend your spare time taking orders for magazine subscriptions—and earning generous commissions.

Just send us your name and address on a postal. In return, we will send you our offer with starting supplies. From then on, YOU are the boss. Subscription work of this type can be carried on right from your own home. As an independent representative, you may work whenever it is most convenient for you.

Write that postal today. Information and supplies are sent at no obligation to you.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
877 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

Gebhardt's
CHILI POWDER

RESEAL

the ORIGINAL chili flavor!

- The original blend of Ancho-Chili pods, sun-cured in Old Mexico.
- No salt or filler added! It's all active flavor!
- Grinder-fresh. Sealed in glass!

GOES TWICE AS FAR!

MADE IN Sunny San Antonio

Gebhardt CHILI POWDER CO. San Antonio, Texas

Save up to ½ on RUGS

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Your Choice of:
44 lovely, up-to-date, solid and two-tone colors, casual new texture blends and embossed effects, leaf and floral designs, colorful Early American and Oriental patterns,—regardless of colors in your old materials.
ANY SIZE up to 18 ft. seamless, any length—sizes you can't get elsewhere.
No-Risk, Trial Offer.
Monthly Payments

FREE TO EVERY READER

MAIL this coupon or a postcard for fascinating, new, money-saving Olson book . . 40 pages of Rugs and model rooms in actual colors. Tells how to get lovely, deep-textured, Reversible Broadloom Rugs at a big saving by sending your Old Rugs, Clothing to Olson Factory.

In Full Color

Your Name.....
Address.....
Town..... State.....

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. T-29 Chicago 41, Ill.

THE ONE-ROOM APARTMENT

By WILLIAM BRAMLEY

If we put the desk where the bureau is
And the bureau next to the bed,
There'd be plenty of room where the desk had been
To put the dresser instead.

And that would make room for the sewing machine
Where there'd still be plenty of light,
And then the vanity over there—
Oh, no, that wouldn't look right.

Instead of the bed right next to the wall,
If we footed it over to there,
With plenty of passage on either side
For the standing lamp or the chair,

Then put the desk where the dresser was
And the dresser right next to the door,
And the bookcase under the mantelpiece,
And the vanity as before.

But then when you wanted to open a drawer
You'd have to sit on the bed.
So maybe we'd better not bother at all,
And buy a new sofa instead.

Now... discover how good really fresh tea can be!

You'll be amazed—as tea experts were—at the difference Tender Leaf's New Seal-Tight Foil Wrap makes in freshness, fragrance and flavor!

It's a fact—only really fresh tea is full-flavored tea! We proved this in tests all over the country—compared tea in ordinary packages with Tender Leaf protected by this new seal-tight aluminum foil wrap. Frankly, even we were amazed at the difference! You can actually see Tender Leaf's brighter color, smell its finer fragrance, taste its richer, deeper flavor. Discover for yourself how good fresh tea can be . . . try Tender Leaf Brand today!

TENDER LEAF—FIRST AND ONLY TEA PACKED THIS FLAVOR-SAVING WAY!

communities differ, from the little crossroads to the great metropolitan areas. The opportunities are different; the needs are different. But I think that some group in every community should survey the needs of its particular community and proceed to meet them.

For instance, in Iuka, Mississippi, they have formed a community council and made a study of their town. They found that they needed many things. They went after them, and there were fifty-two different projects undertaken, all of which improved the community and made it a better place in which to bring up children.

JUDGE SMYTH: Delinquency is concentrated in the underprivileged areas or the areas of the disadvantaged family and child. One third of our children in trouble come from homes broken by death, desertion or divorce. The other two thirds come from insecure homes. They don't come from good, solid homes.

We in the courts are engaged in the correction of delinquency, and in that sense, in the prevention of crime. But no matter how much the courts do with those who have been guilty of overt action, you will have that army going through the courts to the end of time un you get at this on a preventive basis.

The comparison has been often made— it is just as true today as it ever was—that never controlled smallpox and cholera yellow fever until we got down to the sou of the infection.

And we will never control delinquency crime until we abolish these terrible conditi that we expose children to. It requires m action on a tremendous scale. In a city New York, I should think it would mea city-wide council, broken down into are and trying unitedly to see what could be do

MRS. CHAPMAN: When we began with community projects many years ago, we w all out for teen-age centers, for recreation, put great emphasis on recreation. We fou that though it is part of the problem it is all, and there is much guidance needed setting up recreation programs. Let me re you a letter I received recently on the subj of recreation. It says:

"We are a social studies class at Eve Junior High School in San Francisco. cently we have been discussing juvenile de quency. Here we offer our opinions to you:

COOKING IN RUSSIA

By Lady Kelly

COOKING as an art is not encouraged by the Soviet authorities, for it requires time and energy which are needed for the building up of the new industrial Russia. So every effort is made to have a uniform standard system varied only by differences in quality and variety according to the purse, which is now the only form of rationing. Many eat in canteens, leaving the young children in crèches; many eat in the restaurants, which are divided into four categories according to price. Those who eat at home are encouraged to live on the tinned foods of the Ministry of Food Production, which are among the few commodities advertised on hoardings.

But though the quality and variety of the food are rationed by the purse, all cooks are trained on a standard method; there are no private individual cooks as we understand them; most working families, when they do cook at home, boil their food on sticks or paraffin stoves, so the standard dish is soup which can be made with fish, eggs, turnips, potatoes or meat, again according to the purse. The best of all for those who can afford it is the famous borsch, which is either a mixture of beans, meat, bacon and all available vegetables, especially beet root, or a consommé laced with beet-root liquor and sour cream. The staple diet of the poor is, however, cabbage, dried fish, potatoes and bread, of which there is a great variety including one made with barley colored yellow by mustard. Except for apples, fruit is practically unavailable in the winter.

The well-to-do are encouraged to buy the Ministry's tinned food and tinned asparagus, champagne from the Crimea and sweet wines from Georgia, tinned sturgeon from the great rivers in the east, and of course caviar, which is the sturgeon's roe. There is the cheap caviar which is red, but the connoisseurs eat only the gray-black variety. At the first-class restaurants the knowing ones ask for cheese (copied from the Swiss) from Yaroslav or Uglich served with hock, and the Kievski cutlet which is the wing of a chicken rolled out flat, dipped in egg crumbs and filled before baking with fresh butter which spouts out in a fountain when cut, to the great discomfort of unwarned visitors. The caviar is made as I saw in Astrakhan by a woman stirring the sturgeon's roe with her arm in a barrel round a pillar of salt; the chemical reaction produces the delicious, filmy, gray-black caviar which is well known as Molossol outside Russia. All this is for the rich, but the picture would not be complete without it.

Although cookery as an art is considered frivolous and time-wasting, the Soviet citizen, whether in the smartest national restaurants like the Aragvi and the Moskva Hotel roof garden or in a many-storied block of workmen's dwellings, is desired to behave culturally at table. A food manual published in 1952 condemns picking your teeth with a fork, recommends chewing your food, and urges parents to teach their children by example not to play with the tablecloth nor to put their knives in their mouths.

The national wines are too expensive for the majority, who drink beer or vodka, especially the latter, which is often drunk even before breakfast instead of tea, the national beverage drunk milkless. Nevertheless, wine is drunk for parties and a just reward for hard work, as well as a boost to the state-owned wine enterprises. As Stalin once put on record, champagne is a sign of material prosperity, that prosperity and high standard of living some workers enjoy in the Soviet Union. The best comes from the Crimea, and was laid down in the nineteenth century and goes by the name of Abrow-Durso. Cognac from the Caucasus, curious hocks called "type" Riesling, sweet and cool Georgian wines that don't bear transporting; these are but a few, available at very high prices.

All who knew Czarist Russia agree that there is less drunkenness, at least in public: the abuse of vodka is discouraged by both official pressure and a high price; though the occasional popping up of the old Adam is shown by the existence of an admirable institution called "Sobering-up House," where those who fall by the wayside are brought round by vigorous nurses and sent on their way next morning by the militiamen, as the police are called. Russians love cold soups in the summer, the best of which is the okroshka, of which here is the recipe:

Chop some green onions and pickles. Hard-boil some eggs. Peel and halve. Chop up cold veal or cold fish, black olives and capers and a good quantity of fresh cucumber. Mix all together and pile into soup plates, adding a spoonful of sour cream on top. Boil some very red beet root and cool red liquid, removing beet. Mix this with bottle of chilled kvas or beer and pour into plates. Ice can be floated in the okroshka too.

Winter and summer, ice-cream venders plod the streets and sell their wafer-contained ices to children, who adore them. Milk is hardly ever bottled or pasteurized; butter is excellent and beef home-grown. Fish in a landlocked country is difficult to keep. In the summer grapes and watermelons are sold in the streets off great government baskets; mushrooms are very popular: dried and strung on long cords, they are sold on the Kolkhoz markets winter and summer alike. Eggs are relatively cheap and the favorite manner of cooking them is in oil baked in a round tin, three at a time. They are eaten off the dish with black bread.

Somehow very little home baking seems to be done, as flour is distributed only twice a year, but at Easter two traditional foods are prepared: one the "kulich," a large bun covered with pink icing which is blessed in Greek Orthodox churches, and the other the "paska," a very sweet mixture of groundnuts, raisins and cottage cheese.

…ted time is one of the juve-…blems of today. Jobs should …e available to all who desire …Community centers could … as agencies for jobs for stu-… We also would like to sug-…e free use of newspaper …ds for students to advertise …k that they can do.

"R…reation centers pose another ob…n. The older teen-agers receive …cognition at centers, and they tu…run out the younger teen-agers. …terest groups should be estab-…or the various age groups with …s that are interesting and de-…

"S…dents should have more to say …hat the programs should be. …irectors should be hired to pro-…unger groups from delinquent …ers that roam the parks. These …irectors would help enliven the …on program. This would also …ovide evening recreation.

"L…uor control is definitely inade-…and more enforcement of the … laws is necessary.

"W… feel that these are a few points …ould help the teen-agers. To …t small investment now would …llars in the future."

A… then it is signed by all the …rs of the class.

…le for Dating, Drinking

M… TABER: Could I give three spe-…amples of community action?

…a pamphlet entitled "We Can …" A hundred and fifty thousand …e have been distributed in Phil-…ia and suburbs. It is a code of …or for young people developed … children themselves in collabo-… with parents and teachers. It … with dating, hours of coming … drinking, driving and other …ge problems. Adhering to this …rees the child of that strain be-…loyalty to parents and loyalty to …up. You know, they play one … the other, saying, "Susie's … lets her stay out until two …k. Why can't I?" This set of … rules avoids needless mis-…standings.

…ondly, in Lincoln High School, …theast Philadelphia, the student …l and the Home and School As-…ion got together and organized a …n at that high school. Six to …undred youngsters are dancing …every Saturday night. The kids …e jukeboxes. They pay twenty-…nts admission. It is under super-… of parents and teachers who …teer. We are missing a great bet …we don't consider the hundreds …llions of dollars of educational …ngs that could be opened at … if the community would foot the …

…hird practical example is the re-… formed Association for Re-… Children. It has shown the im-…hat parents who have had no … heretofore can have. For in-…, as a result of their program, we …ave state legislation in Pennsyl-… which enables local school dis-… to set up classes for children with … between twenty-five and fifty, …special reimbursement. We have … six classes in Philadelphia for … trainable children.

MR. CLENDENEN: To return to the … agencies, I feel that in some in-…es, after setting up these agencies, …ve not given them the kind of …ort it takes to make them work … For example, our aid-to-depend-…ildren program is designed to …e a mother to stay at home and …or her children when the family …rived of its breadwinner. Yet in …tate I know of the grant for a …er and child is the magnifi- cent sum of $25 per month. We defeat the entire aim of the program when we offer that kind of niggardly support.

There can be no question of the value of marital-counseling services, of mental-health clinics, and child-guidance clinics. But to make them function we have to staff them and pay the costs.

MRS. MEYER: The way to create order in any community is through a community council. It can be divided into subcouncils, one on education, one on health, one on welfare, but all should be a part of the central council which is trying to weigh effectiveness and lack of effectiveness of local agencies—in other words, a clearinghouse.

MRS. GOULD: Do you think the greatest pressure to bring that about is the awareness of the local community?

MRS. MEYER: Yes. Almost every American community has an array of welfare agencies that are wasting a lot of money while human misery remains unalleviated. Our whole welfare setup—and by that I mean health, children and family agencies—has grown up higgledy-piggledy and it has to be corrected on a community basis first. It is a matter not so much of additional money, to start with, as it is a matter of better co-ordination and better administration.

MRS. WOODWARD: Could you clarify the difference between the kind of councils you are talking about and the existing council of social agencies?

MRS. MEYER: The councils of social agencies are not free to act as they should. I have been Cookies That Taste Like Cake!

Do try Betty Crocker's new version of the old-fashioned soft drop cooky. So easy, with dependable Gold Medal Flour and so good to eat! They're . . .

JUBILEE JUMBLES!

"They're moist and tender-soft . . . wonderful for desserts and snacks, perfect for lunch boxes. We made them with Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour, of course, and that's almost a guarantee of success! For Gold Medal is thoroughly dependable . . . trusted by more women than any other flour in the world! Bake your Jubilee Jumbles with Gold Medal, too . . . then be prepared to make 'em again and again. They're that good!"

Betty Crocker OF GENERAL MILLS

JUBILEE JUMBLES

1/2 cup soft shortening
1 cup brown sugar (packed)
1/2 cup white sugar — 2 eggs
1 cup undiluted Carnation Evaporated Milk
1 tsp. vanilla
2 3/4 cups sifted Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour
*1/2 tsp. soda — *1 tsp. salt
1 cup cut-up Diamond Walnuts

Mix thoroughly shortening, sugars, eggs. Stir in Carnation Evaporated Milk, vanilla. Sift together flour, soda, salt and stir in. Blend in nuts. Chill 1 hour. Heat oven to 375° (quick moderate). Drop rounded tablespoonfuls 2" apart on greased baking sheet. Bake about 10 minutes, until delicately browned. While warm, frost with Burnt Butter Glaze (recipe below). Garnish with Diamond Walnut halves. Makes about 4 dozen.

BURNT BUTTER GLAZE . . . Heat 2 tbsp. butter until golden brown. Beat in until smooth 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar and 1/4 cup undiluted Carnation Evaporated Milk.

Variations: 1 cup moist shredded coconut or finely cut dates or seedless raisins or 6-oz. pkg. semi-sweet chocolate pieces may be added to this recipe.

If you use GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour, omit soda and salt.*

on many councils of social agencies, and they scratch one another's backs. You have to have a lay council and lay leadership, that can step out and tell the community where its weak spots are. The professional worker can't do that. She is apt to lose her job.

MR. TABER: In my experience, councils of social agencies play a vital role in co-ordinating services. I have served on the council in Philadelphia, and have seen studies made and new services developed to meet changing needs. Duplication has often been eliminated by a merging of agencies. Most councils, to my knowledge, are made up of courageous lay citizens as well as professionals.

MISS HICKEY: Mrs. Gould suggested at the Herald Tribune forum the idea of a National Commission for Children like the National Citizens' Commission on Education, composed of lay leaders who would go about this idea of getting local action.

MRS. GOULD: Or beginning with the state action. It seems to me that sometimes there is value in a national group—a widely representative national group—which can help to crystallize needs and objectives, which would, in turn, be of assistance to a local or state committee.

MRS. MEYER: I think that would come of its own accord if there were a real awareness in the community of the urgency of this problem.

MR. TABER: Why can't we organize at state and Federal as well as local levels, and work in concert? Many problems defy local solution and require state action, such as legislation safeguarding adoptions. The Governor's Committee on Children and Youth in Pennsylvania found a dramatic way of arousing citizen interest by holding twelve regional hearings. Over two hundred civic leaders, parents and professional workers testified as to the needs. The hearings generated a real head of steam.

MRS. MEYER: Of course you have state councils in several of the states, and they can be of tremendous help in leadership, but this problem can be solved only by local community groups and dedicated individual leadership.

MRS. WOODWARD: I think one of the big general problems is that of recruitment of people into the understanding and helping professions—that would include teachers, psychologists, psychiatrists, social workers and others. I should think the kind of people who read the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL would be challenged by the notion of being foster parents if they knew the service they could render to the child, to society and to themselves. Many of our children's institutions are supported by church groups or fraternal organizations. Members of these groups ought to keep their institutions moving in a progressive direction: away from long-time institutional care for children and away from any institutional care for infants, adding to their programs other services, such as foster-home care and adoption of older children and families of children. The Lutherans, for example, are leading the way in children's programs.

Square Dancing in Church

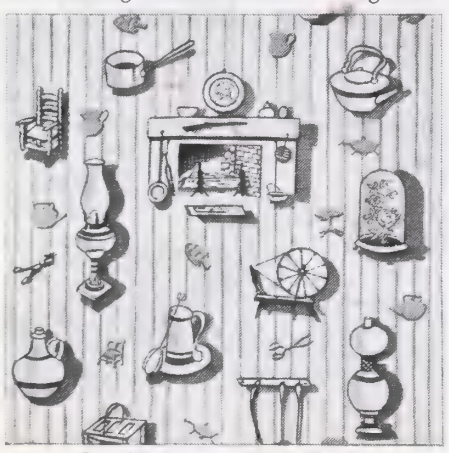
MRS. GOULD: I wonder if Judge Smyth will speak about the importance of religion in the home?

JUDGE SMYTH: The absence of true religious conviction and practice in the home is very marked in the cases we see in court. Where there is a true religious belief and a faithful adherence to it, where the parents rely upon the church as a cornerstone on which their home rests and teach their children the elementary truths of the commandments and the Golden Rule—that kind of home doesn't usually produce delinquency.

MR. TABER: The churches have been criticized—and I think unfortunately—for promoting social activities and athletics for youth. Some say it is a part of recruitment. To be sure, it is, but justifiably so. I know my children get a great deal out of their square dances and other social activities under church auspices. The church needs to reach out to children through special programs.

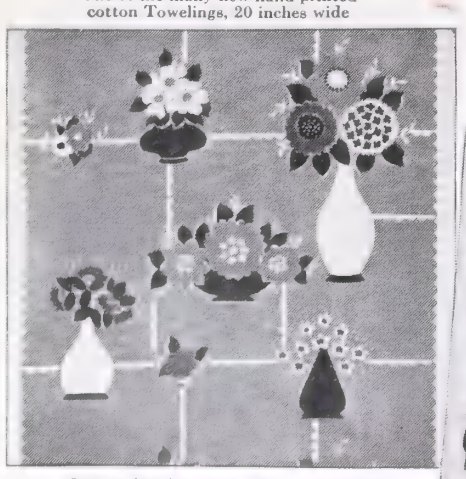
JUDGE SMYTH: I have not checked the figures lately, but I know a few years ago it was authoritatively stated that there were over twenty million children in the United States who had no church or Sunday-school affiliation. I believe that is true today, perhaps in even greater numbers.

When children are brought into the court, we always try to bring them in touch with their pastors, if any, with more or less success. We try to encourage children to go to the church and Sunday school of their faith, but we never make it a condition of probation.



MR. TABER: On the question of how to help children, I would recommend the school-work program. In 1912, when children were dropping out of school wholesale, we set up a school-work program in Philadelphia permitting children over fourteen to work a half day and go to school a half day. We have three thousand at the present time on that basis. We have seen remarkable changes as the result of this program. Boys and girls who were previously absent from school for long stretches attended regularly and took a new interest in their academic work. When they saw the demands of the workaday world, they realized the importance of completing their education. As the economic situation changes, and there are fewer jobs for youngsters, it seems to me we ought to

Brighten up Your Kitchen



WITH FAMOUS STARTEX Household Linens!

What delightful color effects you can create in your own home with the new Startex Kitchen Towels and Towelings, hand printed in smartest fast-to-washing colors. Harmonizing with these are the exquisite hand printed Startex Table Cloths and Startex woven-border and striped Kitchen Towels—many of them Part Linen, as labeled. Make yours a Startex-decorated home. And remember, pictured here are only a few of the many, many new Startex styles now carried by leading department and chain stores everywhere. See Startex at your favorite store today!

One of the many new hand printed cotton Towelings, 20 inches wide

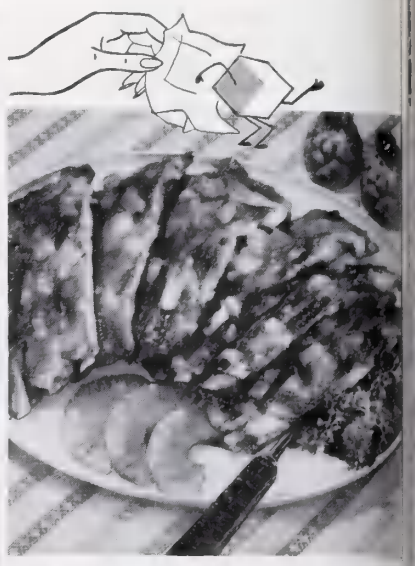
Startex hand printed Towelings (above) are designed for home decoration

Startex Kitchen Corner Fashions For Do-It-Yourself Home Décor

It's fun to make your own café curtains, drapes, aprons, place mats, luncheon sets, towels, table and bureau runners and many other colorful household articles with the new Startex hand printed Towelings—styled especially for home décor, sturdily loomed in quality cotton, 20 inches wide! See, too, the new Startex hand printed hemmed Kitchen Towels and the many beautiful new hand printed Startex Table Cloths.

Startex Mills, 55 Worth Street, New York

(below) Startex Kitchen Towels, hand printed in many different patterns



(above) Famous Startex woven multicolor Stripes, Cotton 75%—Linen 25%

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

STARTEX®

ASK FOR STARTEX WHEREVER HOUSEHOLD LINENS ARE SOLD

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING — CERTIFIED WASHABLE

Win HIGH PRAISE w this LOW COST dish

BAKED SPARERIBS ORIENTALE Season and bake in a moderat oven (350°) for 1 hour, 2½ lbs. spareribs cut in section Blend in a saucepan 1 tbs. brow sugar, 1 tbs. cornstarch, 1 cup double-strengt Herb-Ox Chicken Bouillon, 1 cup crushe pineapple, undrained. Bring to a boil. Pou over spareribs, bake 30 minutes more, bas ing occasionally. Serves 4.

FREE! Money-Saving Magic—26 delicious recip that show how Herb-Ox makes food taste bett cost less. Write to: The Pure Food Co., In Dept. LHJ, Mamaroneck, N. Y.

LOW-CALORIE, HIGH PROTEIN

Herb-Ox

America's Largest Selling BOUILLON CUBES

BEST YOU EVER ATE! JOLLY TIME

Sexton Quality Foods

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

There's Good Health in These Liquid Luxuries

SEXTON'S gentle-squeeze method almost co the juices from sun ripened, plump oran tomatoes and grapefruit. Only the true necta these vitamin-rich fruits finds its way to your ta

There are fifteen famous Sexton juices, equally piquant and wholesome.

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

e work camps for teen-agers. All of us e to leave the protective home and the tering arm of our parents and to find our- es and fend for ourselves. What children d is a period of separation from their par- s, and this would achieve it.

MRS. GOULD: Especially if the work could long the lines of some form of conserva- nal public service, where the utility of the k was immediately apparent, even though it s on a simple scale. I mean work in public ks, recreational centers, community cleanup beautification. Girls could assist as hospital es, in child care and so forth. I am very much rested in that idea, Mr. Taber.

MR. TABER: Another thing schools can do—could do, given the personnel and facili—is to reach out and make the community boratory. The school-work program is one m of that. We also have youngsters going the city planning commission and under- ing projects to clean up vacant lots and k yards. We have youngsters who give usands of hours as volunteer aides, nurses' es in hospitals and recreation centers. All of s helps them to develop a sense of com- nity responsibility.

UDGE SMYTH: Of course, we have been dis- sing a two-pronged attack on delinquency.

High school students polled by Fairleigh Dickinson College gave these reasons for delinquency:

"Don't want to be chicken."

"Desire for new experiences—aren't getting any new experiences unless they go out and get them."

"Confident they will not get caught" and if they do "the law is lenient."

"When children see and hear of police taking grafts, parents fixing tickets, friends smuggling perfume across the border, they feel they too can do something and get away with it."

"Desire to get nice things other people have."

"Parents do not pay enough attention to their children's activities."

e is community organization for the pre- ntion of delinquency, and the other is the engthening of our juvenile courts and pro- tion services and social services and institu- nal services.

I would like to speak a little further on the ed of strong children's courts in each and ery community and the appalling extent to hich they are absent. Where the courts do ist, they very often exist in name only. ey do not have the necessary probation rvices. Let me again stress the fact that e courts have just two recourses. One is obation and the other is commitment. e couldn't commit all the children that me before us if we wanted to. We uldn't build institutions fast enough to ld them, and we don't want to because is an economic and human waste. Right w I have a child who is in an immediate isis and needs care, and I can't find a place r him. There isn't a place.

MR. GOULD: This is true throughout the untry, Judge Smyth?

JUDGE SMYTH: It is true throughout the untry in a greater degree than it is right re in New York State because New York advanced in this effort—and even here con- tions are deplorable. I have children that an't possibly place. I have children that have to leave in the community and in e public-school system where they don't long and give them the best supervision e can through our probational workers nd social workers and school service. We now that we are not meeting their needs. I ave boys and girls I have actually to send to rrectional schools where they are very kely to retrogress rather than make progress. am dealing with ten-year-old boys now ho just will not fit into the school com- unity. I have been trying for at least six onths to find out what I can do for them, and I work in a privileged community. I often ask myself, if conditions are that difficult in wealthy Westchester County, what must they be in other parts of the country?

What Women Can Do

MRS. CHAPMAN: I think most of the long-range answers to the judge's problems are preventive measures. My whole emphasis would be on prevention. I envision many things that people can do. The most important and the most intangible, and perhaps the most difficult of all, is that we change the basic philosophy that adults pass on to children.

Somehow, in building up our great country, our great economy, we have lost a sense of values. How do we evaluate success? How do we evaluate achievement? Mostly by economic gain. We lack nurses, we lack doctors, and teachers, we lack psychiatric workers, and ministers. We lack in all those professions where there is a personal reward or an intrinsic reward rather than a monetary reward. And so many children have come to believe the thing to strive for is money—instead of spiritual or personal satisfaction.

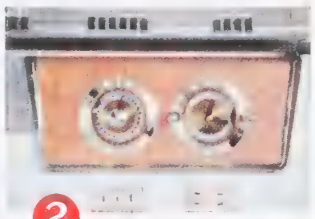
I think this spiritual guidance must come not only from the church. The church, of course, is the instrument for it. But it must be in the home that a child is taught the difference between right and wrong and given a stubborn conscience.

Women have a great deal to do with local government—that is, where they live—and we must inspire them to become more active. They can elect the kind of judges they want. They have got to support able and honest people in public office. They can support the passage of bond issues for good schools, for example, and for public parks and for many other things related to the better upbringing of their children. And there are many things within the church that women can do—direct-

NOW—Cook All Ways Automatically!

Hotpoint

ELECTRIC RANGE



—With The World's Fastest Cooking!

Look . . . Listen and Laugh with OZZIE & HARRIET Every Week on TV!

1 Fastest Cooking Ever! Exclusive new Super-SPEED Calrod® unit heats instantly . . . for fastest cooking in history!

2 New Mealtimer lets you cook every way automatically! Controls ovens, broilers, barbecue, surface unit, Thrift Cooker.

3 Automatic Rotary Barbecue! Just plug in to barbecue chickens, ribs, roasts automatically! Extra-large capacity.

4 New Handi-Raise Broiler raises and lowers at the mere turn of a crank for charcoal-like professional broiling.

5 Automatic Griddle! Plugs in. Thermostatic control gives even all-over heat. Large size. Stores away when not in use.

New Hotpoint First And Only Range Of Its Kind! . . . Even Barbecues, Fries, Stews, Boils, Grills And French Fries Automatically!

NEVER BEFORE could you cook all ways automatically! Never before could you cook at super speed!

Now you can—with this brilliant new Hotpoint, the first range ever built with these two great cooking conveniences of tomorrow!

No other range brings you all these other advanced features, too—automatic French Fryer, automatic deep-well cooker, giant Super Oven, Thrift Oven, pushbutton controls and Handi-Over Grill!

Built by the world leader, this new Hotpoint is definitely the finest of all ranges. See it soon!*

Dealers are listed in most classified phone directories.*

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Hotpoint 50 Anniversary 1905-1956

Hotpoint

FIRST WITH THE FINEST FOR 50 YEARS!

Ranges • Refrigerators • Dishwashers • Disposalls® Water Heaters • Food Freezers • Automatic Washers Clothes Dryers • Air Conditioners

Hotpoint Co. (A Division of General Electric Company), Chicago 44 make the five second test and prove nothing kills unpleasant odors faster than...

Test air-wick mist against other household deodorizers...bottle or spray...and see how much faster air-wick mist kills disagreeable odors...without leaving a heavy lingering smell of cheap perfume. It's genuine air-wick in a handy aerosol spray; and, the only deodorizer with chlorophyll. Instantly kills odors from cooking, smoking, bathroom...makes your home pleasant and inviting again in seconds.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

For very best care of a fine wood floor Buy Johnson's Paste Wax at your favorite store

Takes one low-cost coat to give lasting protection, And shine buffs so bright you can see your reflection!

Wax once...relax months!
Johnson's Paste Wax makes floors shine longest!

ing youth choirs and youth-activity programs in addition to the athletic program.

The first thing that a woman who is newly inspired to do something by this piece can do is go to her group, whatever it is—the P.T.A., a club, League of Women Voters or a church group—and make the members realize their responsibility. If it is just a group of, let us say, seventeen women who think they can't be effective in their community, she still can go to the mayor and enlist his help, or to the judge or some other prominent official or citizen to gain prestige for her project and assistance with its accomplishment.

Then there is the matter of getting all the groups together. The first step is to organize a community council and set up advisory committees—an advisory committee to the school, for example. It isn't so much that the lay people are going to advise the school as that the lay people are going to learn what is going on in the schools. The same way with the courts.

MRS. GOULD: I hope especially to leave with our readers some of the practical things we as citizens can do to aid children in trouble and all children in our own communities now. First, through our churches, women's clubs, League of Women Voters and neighborhood councils we can acquaint ourselves with the problem, and the needs. We can take inventory of the resources in our community and urge effective action. Secondly, we can act—we can do something about it. The following check list, which grew out of our discussion today, will give you a clue as to where you may help:

Does my community have a need for and provide:

1. Well-baby clinics where attention is given to emotional and physical symptoms of poor health?

2. A municipal agency that offers counsel, medical and psychiatric, as well as financial assistance to families in distress?

3. Pleasant temporary quarters for children who have been removed from unsuitable homes and are awaiting placement by the court?

4. Enough good foster homes and cottage-type institutions so that a dependent child may be placed according to his special needs?

5. A detention home—not a jail—used exclusively for children awaiting a hearing before the court?

6. A juvenile court free of politics presided over by a judge who observes legal rules of evidence and understands children? Enough probation officers to permit adequate supervision of children on probation?

7. Correctional schools which train and rehabilitate young offenders rather than merely "keep them off the streets"?

8. Child-guidance clinics with psychiatrists and professionally trained social workers to treat emotionally disturbed children? School counseling?

9. Parks and playgrounds with a varied recreational program for children of all ages? (Are school buildings being used for recreation after school hours?)

10. A Health and Welfare Council, or similar co-ordinating organization, truly alert to children's needs?

WHO ARE THE KILLERS?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 71

In May, 1953, he was charged with "common assault" for beating his mother. She said that she had slapped him because he refused to turn down the volume on their television. Then "Billy grabbed me by the upper arms and shook me so hard my teeth rattled. I had to bite him to make him let go of me." He beat her with a curtain rod and fled. He was apprehended and his parole revoked, but he escaped custody.

Next, Billy stole an automobile in Wichita and robbed a service station in Nevada, Missouri, using a small .22 pistol concealed in a shoulder holster under his shirt. He was joined at this time by a boy he met in reform school, Lloyd Edward Shepherd, sixteen, of Springfield, Missouri. Shepherd had been with him

YOURS FREE!
"Secrets of a Make-Up Artist" BY JENETTE EVANS
in this $2 book
... when you buy
Soná... amazing, new way to HIDE DARK CIRCLES INSTANTLY!

Now you can share the professional secrets of a famous make-up artist . . . the most important of which is . . . Soná. Like magic, Soná conceals dark circles under the eyes and instantly you look years younger!

No Mask-Like, "Made-Up" Look Yet Hides All Skin Blemishes

Soná hides birthmarks, brown or white spots, freckles, light scars, broken veins, wrinkles, pimples, discolorations, too! Only Soná contains the new wonder ingredient Vitacose. At leading department and drug stores. Get Soná today!

Soná the basic aid to perfect make-up $1.98 plus fed. tax
5 Shades to Match Your Skin Perfectly

Lovely NAILS in A FLASH... with NU-NAILS
ARTIFICIAL FINGERNAILS
Cover short, broken, thin nails with NU-NAILS. Applied in a jiffy with our amazing new quick-drying glue. Can be worn any length ...polished any shade. Help overcome nail-biting habit. Set of ten 29c. At dime, drug & dept. stores
ONLY 29¢ SET OF TEN
NU-NAILS CO., Dept. 12-
5251 W. Harrison, Chicago 4
Also Hollywood Fingernails.. Permanent Dubonett Rose Color
No polish required...39c set

HAIR ON FACE?
Quick as a wink, superfluous hair eliminated. Completely removes all hair from FACE, arms and legs. Checks future growth. Leaves the skin petal-smooth
Zip EPILATOR
Was $5.00 — Now only $1.10
Like magic, Milady's skin becomes adorable. For the finest down or the heaviest growth. Seems miraculous but our 39 years experience proves it is the scientifically correct way. Odorless. Safe. Harmless. Simple to apply. Superior to ordinary hair removers. For 15 years Zip Epilator was $5.00. NOW ONLY $1.10. Same superior formula, same size. Good stores or by mail $1.10
C.O.D. No Fed. tax. Above guaranteed, money-back.
JORDEAU INC. Box C-11 SOUTH ORANGE, N. J.

Relief in ALL these COLD miseries
New Tabcin® BRAND
SNEEZES • WATERY EYES • FEVERISH FEELING • HEADACHE • RUNNING NOSE • GENERAL ACHES • THROAT IRRITATIONS • COUGHING • BETTER THAN EVER

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., Elkhart, Indiana

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter
KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plate so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 30 and 60c at druggists. . . . . If your druggist hasn't don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10 and we will mail you a generous trial box.
KLUTCH CO., Box 5521C, ELMIRA, N.

he stole the car, and he himself had a le record starting at the age of ten, in- g theft, shoplifting, burglary, car theft scape from the Missouri training school. S rtly before the shooting the boys were g along in their stolen car when the car down and they hitched a ride with a amed B. C. Pippin. Pippin became sus- s of their actions; he let them out of his a service station and called the state ay patrol.

ooper Johnny Whittle, father of two chil- answered the call in a patrol car and d the boys up for questioning. He al- them to ride unmanacled in the front eside him. When they pulled up in front state-police headquarters, Billy drew his aled pistol and fired twice at Whittle. f the bullets hit Whittle in the chest, kill- m almost instantly.

lly was captured two hours later and ed with murder. At his trial, defense at- ys stressed his poverty-stricken child- . His mother testified she had to work hours after her separation from her hus- and said she had been able to devote time to her son. The state asked the death ty. A jury of six men and six women d Billy guilty, but reduced the charge to egree manslaughter. District Judge A. P. leter, making no mention of Billy's back- d, sentenced him to sixty-five years in homa State Prison at McAlester. Such is odern saga of Billy the Kid.

o other youths were tried recently on degree-murder indictments in Belleville, is, and were found guilty and sentenced fe imprisonment. They were Edward erson, eighteen, and Robert Soldier, teen, who first met in the Illinois reform- at Fort Sheridan, where both were ng sentences for auto theft. They teamed st July, a few months after their release prison, to commit a series of holdups in St. Louis, Illinois. One night they held up iet neighborhood tavern. One of the bar ons was slow getting out his wallet and ier shoved him, knocking him to the . Another patron, fifty-seven-year-old ge Cain, a resident of the neighborhood, ed to help the man off the floor. Anderson a shot through Cain's heart.

e boys were arrested the following night police were tipped off by one of their girl ds. They confessed their parts in the kill- o the police. Interviewed by reporters at t. Clair County jail, they talked freely and little remorse. "If my folks had never divorced, I wouldn't be here today," erson excused his actions.

is mother got custody of the children— ard and a younger sister and brother—but couldn't support them and they became ds of the court and were sent to the St. r County detention home. There they re- ed with other orphans and juvenile delin- nts for four years until their mother mar- again.

dward's father also remarried, but he r saw much of him. When he went home is mother and new stepfather, he already a chip on his shoulder. People referred to "record" in the juvenile home: "There s Anderson. You know he's been in the rm school." He had not actually been in form school, but in his county at the time underprivileged and the juvenile delin- nts were housed under the same roof.

y the time he was fourteen, Edward says, as "the usual story." He played hooky a His mother warned him and school au- rities warned him. One night he helped an- r boy steal a car. They got caught the e night and Edward was sentenced to ee years. "I learned a lot in reform school," said. "See these scars on my face? I learned re was a lot of other kids in there tougher'n When I got out this last time, I couldn't get b—because of my record, I guess. I hon- y tried and things would have been differ- if I could have earned—oh, maybe sixty- dollars a week. I just started bumming und and drinking a lot. I don't know what pened to me. Things got going pretty fast re at the end."

Soldier's parents were divorced in 1950. th remarried, and his mother since has been divorced a second time. He says he thinks his biggest mistake was quitting school over his mother's violent objections. He stole a car, was caught and sent to the reformatory at St. Charles. Paroled after fifteen months, he stole another car and was sent to Fort Sheridan as a parole violator. "I just wanted to bum around—pool halls and places like that. I didn't like it at home and they were always arguing. Sometimes I wanted to beat the old man up, but he was bigger than me, so I'd just go out and bum around."

Murder is rarely the first offense of a young criminal. Repeated minor offenses usually foreshadow more serious crimes—although it often is difficult to see them as warnings at the time.

On a Saturday night in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, sixteen-year-old John Schulz took a .410-gauge shotgun from an attic closet and blasted the life from his mother and his younger brother and sister. He did it in a fit of pique because his mother would not let him take the family car to a high-school basketball game. When the deed was done, he took the car, attended the basketball game, had a snack with friends, then returned to his home, bathed, shaved and left town. Troopers picked him up near Kirkwood, Missouri, only because they were curious as to why one so young should be so far from home in a car. The triple murder was not discovered until his father returned from a business trip the next day.

On the train ride from Kirkwood to Milwaukee he asked detectives if he could see the newspaper account of his capture. "I just wanted to see how my picture came out on the front page," he told them.

John was arraigned on three counts of first-degree murder and tried in the Municipal Court of Judge Herbert J. Steffes. He had intended to plead innocent by reason of insanity, but a three-man panel of psychiatrists examined him and declared him sane. He was why...

CONTINUED ON PAGE 219

Good Housekeeping Institute tells you...

"When coffee oils, stale odors and stains are allowed to accumulate (as they do rapidly in many coffee pots...), true coffee flavor is masked or changed," reports Good Housekeeping. "The freshest, most carefully prepared coffee may taste strange, unpleasant or bitter."

and what to do...

"You can prevent this, but," Good Housekeeping stresses, "not just by rinsing a coffee pot with hot water or even washing it well with hot suds. Special treatment is needed to do the job." Good Housekeeping's recommendation: "For all-aluminum coffee pots or aluminum parts...nothing cleans as well as soap-filled steel-wool pads."

© The S. O. S. Co., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A. • S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Scour your coffee pot-regularly-with S.O.S®

GOOD MORNINGS

Want to make your mornings really good – richer, fuller, more rewarding?

Listen each weekday to Mary Margaret McBride and Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, latest additions to NBC Radio's roster of morning personalities and programs. A lot of the "work" will go out of your housework, as you hear Mary Margaret, with her affectionate comments on the world around us, her warmth, her humor – and Dr. Peale, with all the wisdom, the optimistic outlook, which kept his book "The Power of Positive Thinking" at the top of the best-seller lists for more than two years.

Your brighter, better mornings continue with "Joyce Jordan, M.D." and "Doctor's Wife," two NBC Radio Daydramas – now back on the morning air by popular demand. Each tells an absorbing story of a woman's courage in the face of obstacles and set-backs.

Then . . . the audience gets its turn at the microphone, on four famous programs which have held the interest of millions of radio-listeners over the years. "Break the Bank," with Bud Collyer, is a quiz program that pays off handsomely in entertainment and in cash awards to the studio audience and to the listener at home. "Strike It Rich," with Warren Hull, is the program with a heart. You'll hear human-interest stories that touch your deepest emotions, and you'll share all the hopes joys of the participants who win cash prizes. On "Phrase T Pays," Ted Brown gives at-home listeners, too, a chance to valuable prizes for knowing famous phrases and quotations. on "Second Chance," with Johnny Olsen, you'll hear real- stories of how everyday people have triumphed over pers problems . . . and as a listener-at-home you may have a chanc win a prize for identifying a Mystery Voice.

All this at your finger-tips, each weekday morning – on your kit radio, your living room set, your clock-radio in the bedroom, your car-r – wherever you are, whatever you happen to be doing. Good morni bright mornings, brought to you by

NBC RADI

A SERVICE OF

Consult your newspaper for local program-times and station

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 217

nced to life for the murder of his mother ourteen to twenty-five years each, con- nt terms, for the murder of his brother ister.

John's case there was some forewarning e seething within him, but very little. He not seemed a great deal different from verage sixteen-year-old high-school boy e day of his crimes. He had been caught ew more scrapes than most, but the prin- difference seemed to be that he got nt. His grades were better than average he was a member of the student council. ather was away from home a good bit of ime in his job as a business agent for a union, and thus he may have lacked this vision. However, when the father was he always paid a lot of attention to the took him on hunting trips, and even on casional business trip. John often served by sitter for the other children.

ter the triple murder, Dr. Sarah C. r, director of the county guidance clinic, he boy's history showed the thread of a nt pattern: "He was feeling a deep hos- toward his parents, toward society, to- everything that tried to curb him. It was dangerous because it came late in his ood, and because he tried to keep a of friendly behavior while continuing ve with his frustrations. He couldn't ose, so he came to his breaking point."

l cases such as John's the cause clearly s to be psychiatric in its basic origin. This of difficulty can be rooted out only by a ty taking the time and trouble to detect elp these troubled children in time, be- their troubles loom so large they are n to explode outside the individual in destructive act.

owever, while in some cases neither the gsters' records nor their behavior at or at school, nor the conditions of their life and general environment, give any ation of their capability of committing us crimes, in the majority of cases the nts are there, and at an extremely early The home conditions of many are so bad he surprise lies not in any crime that re- but that any good can possibly survive. re is the case of a seventeen-year-old hern Ohio boy committed to the Boys' strial School in Lancaster for beating and g a middle-aged woman, the culmination long record of incorrigibility that first to the Juvenile Court's attention when he was ten years old. He was the illegitimate son of an immigrant father and a woman whose present address is unknown, who lived together out of wedlock for about five years until the boy's mother married another man and moved from Ohio.

His father subsequently married a Kentucky woman who had lived with him for a year and borne him a child.

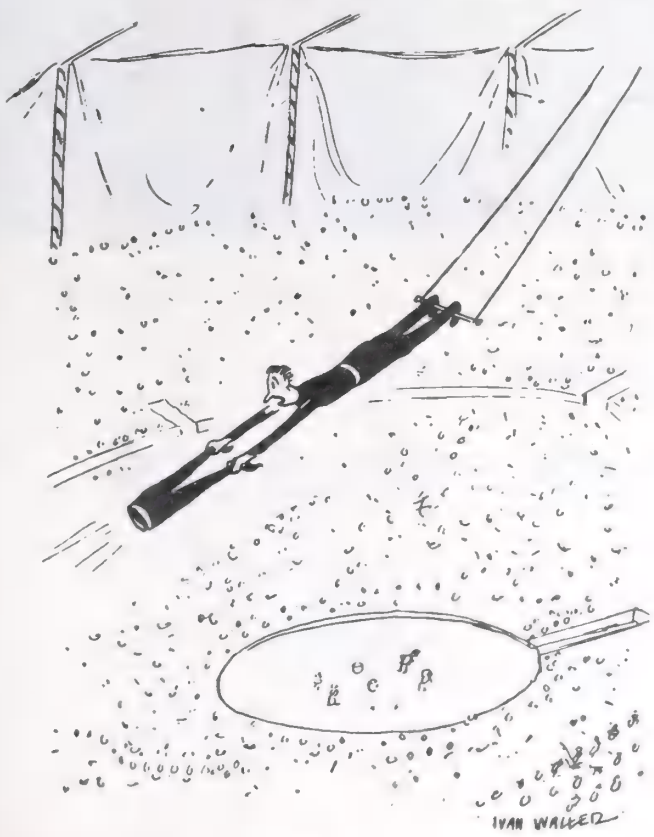
The boy's mother had a long history of sexual promiscuity and there was some doubt of her mental stability. She never cared for her children and finally deserted them. The boy's stepmother was diagnosed as a schizophrenic and once was committed to a Southern Ohio mental institution from which she managed to escape, and is still free. The boy's father never did have much interest in or control over his son, and he has none now. The boy has been a complete failure as a probationary case, although he is not considered psychotic. At present it is felt that the resources of the court and the community have been exhausted. He is confined now; eventually, however, he must be released.

There are many like this boy, irresponsible outcasts of society, who are allowed to drift until possibly they bring death to themselves or to others.

From every section of the nation, almost daily, come these accounts of crimes of violence by youth. In Springfield, Massachusetts, a mild-mannered eighteen-year-old is awaiting trial for stabbing a baby sitter and her small charge to death in the house next door to his. In Chicago, fifteen-year-old Jimmie, a youth of superior intelligence (I.Q. 126), waylaid a young man and beat him to death with a club.

Last fall in New York City four youths, all under eighteen, confessed to an orgy of beating, torture and murder that police said was unmatched in their records for wanton brutality. Their crimes included beating and torturing and eventually drowning of Willard Menter, whom they found sitting in a public park. They admitted to a whole series of brutal assaults—beating and kicking a man to death, wrapping the leg of another victim in gasoline-soaked rags and setting it afire, horsewhipping young women they waylaid in the park. Another seventeen-year-old New Yorker, Thomas Wysokowski, was convicted of first-degree manslaughter in the "stomp" killing of Thomas A. Condon, a businessman and the father of four children, last July. Wysokowski and another youth were accused of "beating, kicking and stomping Condon to death" because he stared at them and his humming was annoying.

Philadelphia also has its shocking quota of young slayers, most of them without an immediate, direct motive. Especially notorious among recent youth killings is the rampage of the Green Street Counts, a street gang that has been involved in two murders in the past two years.



Among the many instances of vicious assault by youth on police records in Detroit, Michigan, a typical one is that of a fifteen-year-old Negro. The boy's father is dead and his mother's second husband has left home and is believed to be living in Chicago. The mother works and the family receives aid from Social Security. The family owns a car, which the boy is permitted to use.

This fifteen-year-old took a nail-studded club and attacked another boy he had heard was out to "get him." The victim was treated at Detroit's Receiving Hospital and later released. So was his attacker. He was already on probation on a charge of breaking and entering a home at night.

"There's hundreds of these cases," one police officer said. "We can't throw them all in jail or it would be bustin' at the seams."

END

© B. A. AND CO., LTD. — "THE BEST CARTOONS FROM PUNCH"

"Marjorie!"

THE MOST COMFORT-CONSCIOUS WOMEN IN AMERICA WALK IN

DR. Locke SHOES

CHARMAIN

Not just comfort, but personalized comfort . . . wonderful strolling-on-a-cloud comfort that only Dr. Locke's scientifically designed lasts can give. Based on the famous doctor's vast experience in treating over a million feet, these shoes are expertly crafted, superbly styled, preferred by the most comfort-conscious and fashion-conscious women in America.

HULA

So comfortable at home

So comfortable at the office

ACAPULCO

So comfortable for shopping, parties, everywhere

For the name of your nearest retailer, write:
LOCKWEDGE SHOE CORPORATION OF AMERICA, 284 S. Front St., Columbus 15, Ohio

WHEN YOU PROTECT LOVELINESS WITH A LOTION, REMEMBER...

Trushay is richer in protective beauty ingredients than all other leading lotions combined!

Next time you want to be particularly nice to your hands, take them out and buy them a bottle of Trushay! Because, drop for drop, Trushay is richer in protective ingredients than all other leading lotions put together! Never sticky or greasy, this fragrant, richer lotion is wondrously comforting and cooling as it smooths right into upper skin layers, supplements natural oils.

And Trushay's extra richness gives all your beauty added protection. Use it as a flattering powder base, a luxurious body rub, to smooth roughened knees, elbows, heels. Peach-tinted Trushay is so rich, you can even apply it before washing chores, to guard hands in hot, sudsy water. Try Trushay soon, won't you? Surprisingly, it costs no more than ordinary lotions!

JUST TWO DROPS WILL PROVE IT! Pour t drops of Trushay on the back of one hand; rub in w the back of the other. Then rub with palms to smooth evenly. Right away, you'll see and feel Trushay's ex richness. For just these two drops alone give both y hands a luxurious softness all over!

TRUSHAY® IS ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYE

By FRANK D'AMELIO

My Son Joe

JOSEPH DI PIETRO

"Joe is just by three months old and a real little doll with a mixture of bruiser. And what a talker! Naturally I talk back to him."

A little baby—boy or girl—is such a fine thing, you can see it in the way they smile or laugh, the clearness of their eyes. And when you see it, feel it, hear it—well—it's enough to make a guy shiver.

IT so happened I was changing my boy's pants for him when Tom, Mike and Smitty, three of my friends from the defense plant where I work nights, happened in on the scene. Because as usual our door was open, they just walked in. I didn't hear them. My son Joe was making a lot of chatter. He is just by three months old and a real little doll with a mixture of bruiser. He is getting that doll look from his mother, who is beautiful, and the latter from me who has been everything from a prize fighter, barroom bouncer, landscape gardener, and now defense worker. But what a talker Joe is! Naturally, whenever I am changing his pants, I am also talking back to him. Sometimes from talk, like all babies, he goes into the big weeps and then I or whoever is around must comfort him. (Sometimes the one who comforts is his big three-year-old sister. She sings a song to him that goes like this: Brother is a sweetie, brother is a sweetie, so stop that crying now.)

This particular day that I was changing the kid's pants, he went from the coo, eee, ah, suddenly, to the weeps. "There, my little sweetheart," I said to him, "you're all dry now and now pop's going to give you a bottle." I kissed him and picked him up and kissed him some more and he forgot to cry. He started laughing and making those cooing noises again. He is a real happy baby. I turn around then and there are my three friends. They are all standing there grinning at me and my son.

"Did you ever see anything like this big hunk of ham?" says Mike to the others.

"Nope," says Tom, "never did."

Smitty says, "You're going to spoil that kid, Frank."

"Don't bother me," I said to them and I broke through their line and marched me and my baby boy into the kitchen. My friends follow and I can see that they are not going to let us alone.

Tom says, "Where's your old lady? You shouldn't change the kid's diapers, Frank. That's work for a woman."

"My wife is at work," I said. "And what do you want me to do—leave the poor little guy wet and dirty until she gets home? I got to give him his bath yet."

"Boy"—Mike slaps me on the back—"what a man!" And they all make some smart remarks and I said nothing, except I talked to Joe when I was feeding him when he wanted me to talk to him. The guys helped themselves to some beer out of our icebox and went right on saying foolish things. I just laughed with them when it was supposed to be funny. I only said once, "The trouble with the way you guys operate with your kids is pretty obvious. You think one day you are going to look down and see a ten-year-old boy there holding on to your hand real, real trustful-like. And then you think you are going to say, 'Son, let's go play baseball.' And out of all his friends, you think he is going to be bowled over with joy to have pop on his team, or even to play catch ball with him."

"Sure my kid'll play ball with me!" And Mike swatted his hands together hard. And I said, "Maybe." That was all I said because I had to give Joe his bath and dress him and I hardly paid any attention to my friends. They were saying that mothers should bring up the boys until they were about bike-riding age, five or six, and then the daddies could take over now and then and give the kids a real fast whirl, like to the beaches, or to playlands or the movies, or just for a ride.

"That way," Smitty said, "it gives the mothers a break too. They can get their housework done and go yack-yack with their girl friends."

Later that night at the plant I was still thinking about it, especially when once again I had to take a lot of ribbing CONTINUED ON PAGE 223

New! Amazing!

Mazola NO-ROLL Pie Crust

Tenderest crust ever . . . no rolling pin . . . no bowls . . . no floury muss with Mazola Oil method

NEW! You make it IN THE PAN

Actually easier than pie crust mixes! With this new NO-ROLL method the dry ingredients and Mazola Oil are measured quickly, mixed easily with a fork . . . right in the pie pan.

NEW! You shape it IN THE PAN

With Mazola NO-ROLL pie crust you just gently push and press the dough evenly with your fingers to line bottom, sides and rim of pan. So easy to handle . . . and always tender.

NEVER BEFORE A CRUST LIKE T

As you take this crust from the oven n the perfect shape; it doesn't shrink from pie pan . . . a crust so tender you handl with loving care, a real masterpiece.

MAZOLA NO-ROLL PASTRY SHELL

(Single 8 or 9-inch crust)

- 1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 1½ teaspoons sugar
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ cup MAZOLA Oil
- 2 tablespoons cold milk

Sift dry ingredients into pie pan. Combine Mazola and milk in measuring cup. Whip with fork and pour all at once over flour mixture. Mix with fork until flour is completely dampened.

Press evenly and firmly with fingers to line bottom of pan; then press dough up to line sides and partly cover rim. Be sure dough is pressed to uniform thickness.

To flute, pinch dough lightly with fingers. Do not use a high fluted edge.

For baked shell: Prick entire surface; bake in hot oven (425°F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Cool; fill as desired.

For unbaked shell: Fill as desired and bake in hot oven (400°F.) 15 minutes; then reduce to moderate (350°F.) and bake until filling tests done.

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

Crumble Crust 8 or 9-inch Pie: Combine as for Ma No-Roll Pastry Shell, using 2 cups flour, 2 teasp sugar, 1¼ teaspoons salt, ⅔ cup Mazola and 3 ta spoons milk. Set aside about ⅓ dough for topp Press remaining dough into pan as for single c Fill with desired filling. Crumble dough for top into small bits and sprinkle over filling. Bake in oven (400°F.) 15 minutes; reduce to moderate (350 and bake 30 to 40 minutes longer; until crust browned and filling is done. Always prepare fi before making pastry.

MAZOLA...FOR BAKING...FRYING...SALA

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 221

my kissing my baby boy—slobbering im, they called it. I am not much of a so I let them talk.

ems that, for their money, it is all right ther to kiss and cuddle his infant daughthink it is definitely all wrong to kiss and an infant son. For my money, this is sex into the act far too early. Babies bies, and all babies share something in on with women, I think. They need to ed a lot—kissed, I mean, cuddled, fondll that stuff. And babies need it from ld man too. I think especially boy babies o know their pops this way. Then they eal early, when they should learn it so e knowing will stick with them all their hat it is very right, very manly and natice for daddies to hold them, to hug kiss them. Otherwise, how are they to grow up to be husbands? They are to think, "I shouldn't kiss anyone. It nanly. Only women kiss." They maybe think it out loud to themselves, but the t will be there inside, the attitude. And s that, they never do learn then about n needing love when it has nothing to h sex, as well as when it does have to do ex. It keeps right on too. These same s have baby boys and their baby boys e same send-off. To 's about the saddest I know of going on world, when there enough love anyway. ebody might ask how know so well that my on is going to take me his best pal. Well, I know that he will. e his godfather, Eddie ay, who is very smart with kids and also , will get first base. But I'll bet dollars to ns I'll be on the team. I know because of t was with my own father. I am never ed to say that I loved my father a lot, as as I loved my mother. I am not afraid e words, any more than I am afraid of tself. Even though I didn't know them ng, they taught me that much. They died I was about seven. My father went first. him go. It was in Alaska and he was by wolves. He wasn't teaching me how y baseball. He was teaching me how to apping and we were good pals. I can reber it as if it all happened yesterday and ay I felt especially I can remember.

mother was a nurse on an Indian reserin up there and my father had learned how a trapper. They went to Alaska from the after they came to the United States Naples. They couldn't get work because didn't know much English and my mother ed that they needed nurses up there in a for the Indians. It wouldn't matter so that they didn't know English, so my er volunteered and they went up there. 's how it was. I can remember so much my father, as well as my mother, loved don't know how early in my life it was, know that he used to bathe me. I must been little. He used fish oil on my skin. It e you warmer for the climate up there t kept the skin good. I can remember he to rock me in his arms, making like a e of his arms, yes, the way a woman does, he way a real man can too. And he would to me, I can almost hear the song.

was sure a different life, I guess, than my pop or mother expected, but they r wanted to shove me off away from them n I was little. Just like it is with my wife me and our two babies. When we have a day, we want them in on it too. Where we hey go. We're a family. Naturally, little being only three months old, I haven't had ance to take him out, except in his car-e. But believe me, he knows me. He knows around. That's how I want it. That's how as with my own pop and me.

he day he died, we went hunting and it was biggest thrill of my life. Pop and me. We e going off together. I was only seven then, I can remember thinking, "If I get scared, won't mind. He'll take care of me." Poor . He did. He got me up a tree when the ves came, but he couldn't make it himself. And he couldn't get to his gun in time. He'd put it down while he looked at the trap and then I guess it was a case of first getting me in a safe place, and then getting the gun . . . but he wasn't fast enough. I stayed up there in that tree until a rescue party came out. They found a pretty sick kid, a kid so scared he never got over some of it, maybe. Then pop was dead. There was nothing left of him, except the way I knew him before.

A FEW months later, my mother died. It was shock, they said. When I grew up and married my wife, I understood for the first time what killed my mother. Her heart was broken. But she was brave. The night he died, right away she got me talking to her about pop and what I remembered that was good. It must have hurt her awfully, but she knew what she was doing. I remembered the way he rocked me, the way he sang, the way he kissed me and fondled me and called me bambino.

Of course you have to be careful with babies. Pop knew that. They grow up so fast. Suddenly a baby is a real little boy or girl. And that's the time you don't kiss them unless they let you know they want it. For instance, it's slow death for a boy, anyway, to be kissed in front of his pals—by either of his parents. Mothers often don't understand this.

It is the dull man who is always sure, and the sure man who is always dull.

—H. L. MENCKEN

As babies grow into being boys or girls I think that a boy needs his dad and a girl needs her mother for those special secret things of boyhood (or girlhood) that we all remember inside. I'll have to tell my wife, "Hands off," when our little slugger wants to collect snakes or mess it up with the other guys. Why, she'd break up a good fight. She hates them like she hates snakes. And me—I'd never have the patience to let our little daughter "help" with the dishes, if my wife didn't remind me that with all the mess she makes, our three-year-old is learning how to be a woman.

It's a funny thing, I feel sorry for my friends Mike, Tom and Smitty, just as they felt sorry for me. They seemed to think I was being "put upon" because I was taking care of my baby boy. Actually, I think they've missed something in life because they're afraid that showing love is just a woman's trick. They've missed the fun of having a baby, of being a father. I don't understand how a man can keep away from his kids any free time that he has, and shoving them off and away all the time to someone else's care is my idea of a subzero pop. After all, God Himself wants His children to come to Him. Since, at best, we mortal pops are just following in His footsteps, it seems to me the only rightful position for a father to maintain is one where his arms and heart and soul are wide open all the time. And to be that best friend to your boy, you have to start early. All the experts in the magazines and books tell us that the baby years are important to the later man. The church says so too.

I've talked about my little son, but don't think for a minute I would leave my little daughter out of my life. She is three and has me wrapped around her little finger where I belong. She is Consuelo de Rosina D'Amelio, and she is just as beautiful as her name and most of the time as good. Sometimes I don't understand her, but I try to see her point of view. I have talked about my son because it seems right to me for fathers to be best friends to their boys, and so easy, too, when there's all the loving first, and caring for, and changing diapers. And besides all that, it's just fun, it's just nice, it's just good all the way through when you do it. It's sharing the best in life together.

God is so close to a little baby—boy or girl—it's such a fine thing, you can see it in the way they smile and laugh, the clearness of their eyes. You can even hear it in their cry—il la, il la, it goes. So few of us are really good enough to ever make heaven, we might as well cotton up to the little taste of it that's sent us with a baby. And when you see it, feel it, hear it—well, it's enough to make a guy shiver, as if he were in the presence of our Lord.

END

"You should see my children eat their vegetables!"

"They lick their dishes clean. And all I do is cook the vegetables on low heat in my Club Aluminum, with very little water. Club utensils really spread heat evenly and prevent the loss of natural food flavors. Reduce meat shrinkage and cut fuel bills, too. I use all my favorite recipes and everything is more tender, tastes so much better, cooked in Club Aluminum."

Mrs. Susanne M. Wells
9415 Keeler Ave., Skokie, Illinois

For yourself or as gifts, see the complete Club Aluminum line at your favorite store
Also send for Free Recipe Folder No. LJ-3

Cast to last a lifetime!

Club Aluminum

HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 14

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Tired menus come alive when you serve . . .

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—It's the Quality Pack"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

BRUSH ON MEATS
(Before Cooking)

GRAVY MASTER

BROWNS - TENDERIZES - FLAVORS

Velva-Tex

gives you a helping hand!

Let these quality gloves protect your hands from housecleaning chores. They save you priceless beauty . . . cost less than you think.

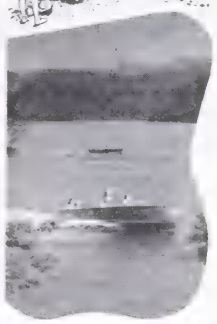
At your drugstore.

. . . no clammy feel . . . long wearing . . . Swirl-grip, non-slip finish . . . easy on and off

COMMENDED BY PARENTS

Velva-Tex

The Faultless Rubber Co. • Ashland, Ohio



Vacation in...

Tennessee

Mountains . . . take your choice of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park or the romantic Cumberlands, last home of folk arts.

Lakes . . . play and fish in 19 huge blue-water lakes. Plenty of boats, wonderful water sports and no closed fishing season.

History . . . See the homes of Presidents Jackson, Johnson and Polk. Walk over historic battlefields. Visit lovely ante-bellum homes and romantic Mississippi River plantations. Have a vacation you'll never forget in Tennessee.

Free Color Book

MAIL COUPON TODAY

Tennessee Division of Information
1234 Cordell Hull Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.
Please send Free Color Book

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY & STATE_____

"MY BOYS LIVE ON MISERY STREET"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 174

quit school in the seventh grade and I went to work for a private family. I didn't like it but I had to do it after my sister died.

"I met Mr. Schaefer when he was superintendent of the building where I had a room. I had a waitress job then. We went together about a year, I guess. We were married at City Hall in 1939. The job he had then was delivering rugs. We first lived in a two-room apartment on West 102nd. I think that was the best place we had.

"Well, then in November of 1940, Billy was born—am I giving you all this too fast? He was a real good baby—never cried or fussed. He still don't talk much, Bill doesn't. He's very nervous, though—keeps it inside him. Then we had to get out of that place—I forget just why now. My husband got a super's job at a place on 109th and Columbus—three rooms below the street.

"Fred was born in 1941. He was a real sickly baby, something wrong the valve in his heart. They didn't expect him to live—he was in the hospital most of five years after he was born. You see how he's littler than Bill, just a year's difference? He's supposed to take it easy but he's the most rambunctious of the three. His lips get purple if he runs a few blocks or plays too hard. But he won't be still. Freddy's the one plays hooky. It's funny how he likes to wander off. Someday you'll meet him in Philadelphia! I used to worry about him but no more, he always comes back.

"The city health department made us move out of that basement apartment. They took a measuring tape and said it was too far below the street, so we had to move out. But I don't know why, people are still living in them right over here even on 77th and all around. Then we went to two and a half rooms on 108th, I think, and Paul was born. Then we came east to 99th Street.

"Paulie was a seven-months baby and weighed only slightly over five pounds. The board-of-health nurse came for nine months and she never expected to keep him alive. After about a year he snapped out of it, though. Now they say he's the strongest one of the bunch. Paulie's my baby. I feel close to all of them, but he hangs around me mostly. It doesn't make any difference to me—I feel sorry for all of them. I know they don't have exactly what they should have in the line of clothing, enjoyment and all. Paul's not like Fred. He's serious like Bill.

"You know what my Freddy done, a year ago? Him and another boy started out on a hike and after a while, Freddy told me, 'My stomach was talking to me, mommy.' So they went in a restaurant and ordered some food and when no one was looking they just walked out. They walked ten or twelve blocks and came to another restaurant and went in there and ordered hamburgers and milk and they were just finishing them when they heard the cashier's bell and their guilty consciences got them! They thought it was the cashier calling the manager about them and they took off. I just found out about it a little while ago. You see why I worry?

"Why was I born?

Perhaps to write the music of wind blowing through grass.

Perhaps to describe the mysteries of high peaks or faraway places which few people have a chance to know.

Perhaps to understand the pleas of every man—whatever his race, creed, color or political faith—for equal justice under the law.

Perhaps to be the engineer who by inventive genius takes loads off men's backs.

Certainly not to live apart from the world and its problems; certainly not to spend the years attending to physical needs. —W. O. DOUGLAS "Well, that's when we were living down on First Avenue between 100th and 101st, before we came here. Mr. Schaefer was out of work again. The man that had the rug company just sold out and went to Florida. Then on December fifth—1953, this was, right before Christmas—they cut us off welfare. We didn't have a penny and we had to move out. We were paying eighteen dollars a month rent there and we didn't have it. The reason they cut us off was they said my husband didn't go to see about the jobs they sent him to. But he did go after some of them, I know, but he didn't get hired. He's very nervous and got all riled up about it, so they cut us off welfare. I thought it was awful, right before Christmas. They could have cut off the allowance for me and him, but why take it out on the children?

"Well, for three or four weeks there we about didn't eat. The Police Athletic League gave us a ham and some fruit for Christmas dinner, and that's what we had. That was a year ago. We haven't been on welfare for a year. Now this summons he gets for what he said to the man last week. Two police cars brought it and the tenants here don't like that sort of thing. He says he won't go. He's very nervous—the boys make him nervous.

"But what was I saying? Oh, last year, this was, when our allowance was stopped, we didn't have no money and nothing to eat and nowhere to go. I got so desperate I finally went to the main welfare office and asked for emergency food money for the children. They sent me back to the East 68th Street office with a slip for emergency relief and the me this super's job we got here but didn' us no allowance. We get this apartment- can see what it is—and ten dollars a mon doing all the cleaning and firing and suc collecting the rents."

The building in which the Schaefer f now lives is in far better condition than a the buildings in their old neighborhood. entranceway is clean and unmarked. In th hallway, a penciled sign reads: PLEAS d WASTE HOT WATER, PLEAS do FILL TUB TO HEAT ROOMS. Apartn in this building rent for $30 to $42 a m The new owner plans to improve the plun and heating and increase rents—and Mr Mrs. Schaefer fear he might bring in new takers.

The superintendent's apartment on the se floor consists of three narrow rooms in a The front room has two windows overloo the street. There are no other windows or other means of ventilation. Two single be battered easy chair, a table and televisio nearly fill the front room. In the tiny kitch a small bathtub mounted on a platform ne the sink. It is used both for laundry and pers bathing. The back bedroom, dark and air also holds two single beds, a shallow clos this room encloses toilet.

This is home for people, the best p they have had for ye Mrs. Schaefer k the apartment c and tidy. She and share a single be the back room. Fre sleeps in the other Mr. Schaefer and I use the two beds in front room. During summer months, w it is too hot in the b bedroom to breathe five sleep on mattre in the front room. T have no sheets.

Mr. Schaefer i big man, slightly c six feet tall and wei ing about two h dred pounds. He is ways immaculat clean-shaven and neat, his brown hair v trimmed and slicked back, his dark-brown lo ers shined to a high gloss, his clothes spotless. was deafened when a snowball hit his left twenty-nine years ago; he speaks loudly—a louder still when he talks about the city w fare department, which has contributed to support of his family, off and on, for seven eight years. Mr. Schaefer was born in Fran furt, Germany, and came to the United Sta when he was fourteen. As a youngster duri World War I, he experienced the bombi and hardships of a defeated nation. His fami of which he and his mother are the only su viving members, settled at Avenue A and 8 in the German Yorkville section of Manhatta He had "two, three years of school" in th country and in Germany. He can do little mo than read signs and write his name—a seve handicap in holding a job. When employ it is usually as a laborer or truck driver, but has done only odd jobs of short duration f several years. Among the reasons he gives f his continued unemployment: inability to rea or write well, deafness, a broken hand ar painful feet—"just sittin' here, they're burnin me up"—but he insists he wants a job bad and has just not been able to connect wi any of those the welfare department has se him to. "They expect me to walk all the wa to Yonkers for a job," he complains.

The boys get very quiet when he shouts them—except Paulie, the youngest, who ha much of his mother's spunk. When M Schaefer said he was forty-six years old, Pau spoke audibly from his deaf side, "Huh- you're seventy-two!"

He feels very bitter toward one agent of th city welfare department who was responsib for lodging the summons against him for di turbing the peace. "This character, he drov

CARNIVAL
TRADE MARK

NOW! KENTILE brings you the brightest, gayest, cheeriest, prettiest floor you can find today!

A dozen color schemes in every tile... Pick any Carnival tile color from 1 to 11... you'll find a gay new style for every room from pine-panelled New England kitchens to the color-flecked magic of smart modern living rooms. Yes. Carnival's fresh, new decorator look can be installed from basement playroom to bath, to attic! Its cheery, multi-color loveliness is slow to show soil... stays fresh, cleans in a whisk, shines with no-rub waxings.

Look! Carnival Colors won't wear off!... it's the only floor of its type to give you a guarantee for wear as long as you live in your home! It's the famous Kentile Guarantee everybody wants! See Carnival at your Kentile Dealer's now. Look for his name under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Book. In Canada. T. Eaton Co., Ltd.

© 1955 KENTILE INC. BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

KENTILE® The Asphalt Tile of Enduring Beauty

®REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

KENTILE ® KENCORK ® KENRUBBER ® KENFLEX ® KENFLOR ®

curb. I'm standing outside. 'Hey, come on over here!' he yells at me. What am I? A dog? I am a man. human, I think. Oughta bashed his ght there. If I could write, boy, I'd tory. I could write you things you believe—nobody would believe. Why, plenty today. That man—can he lie! a this world. Wasn't for the poor wouldn't have a job. Why don't he arlem and do what he done to me? they'd slice him, that's why. He'd k carrying his head under his arm, e—never see mambo no more."

I he would go to jail rather than ap- ore a magistrate in answer to the . "But when I get out, brother, I p. I'll keep right on goin'. I'll get hat locked me up if it's the last thing don my impression."

e of the boys spend as little time in ment as possible. "The neighbors n know I have three boys," Mrs. says. "They're always out some- hen my husband starts talking too o out too. When he stops I come 's just plain nervous, that's all."

mily never sits down to a meal to- here isn't room at the table. The boys ne late after school, eat in relays, and the streets until bedtime. Like Paul. red appear pale and undernourished, eartily of anything that is set before Don't eat too much," Mr. Schaefer Paul. "You'll get fat like me." Paul, h full, did not reply. The boys talk when their father is present.

ever laid a hand on any of the boys— d a hand on 'em. That's one thing I " Mr. Schaefer said, holding up a d. "But when I yell, they scoot."

r Schaefer says she sometimes whips with Paul's old belt she keeps in a the kitchen cabinet. "Paul and Bill h," according to their father. "But owls. He cries before you even touch s an actor, that guy!"

Billy was eating his dinner, his father lecture on the importance of doing hool. "When you ain't got no educa- other, and you want a job you're of luck. Learning to read and write ost important thing in the world, un- want to be a truck loader like me. w, I don't think we got the teaching o have in these schools ——"

n't blame it all on the teachers," Mrs. said. "I think the parents have some bility too."

, you see, at this school"—Bill spoke bites—"every hour we have a differ- her ——" smokes!" said his father. "No wonder 't get nowhere."

teachers teach different things."

's what I mean—get your mind all p and twisted. Holy smackerel, when school one teacher we had, that was onkey business. One teacher. What's otta different teachers?"

is junior high school."

win! I give up. I give up like hell— my impression."

CHAEFER switched his lecture to the art defense. "Stay away from strangers proach you on the street," he advised on't look at no address card. Fellow the delicatessen got his teeth knocked lookin' at an address a fellow showed ep your distance. Keep away. That's guy across the street got murdered: put up a fight—for what? For forty- ars. Bingo! he's dead. No cops. Used lot of cops around here. Now you d a cop between here and Forty-second Oh, now, yes—after the murder. After ly is gone, they come around."

family was robbed three times in one hen they lived on the ground floor at ld location near 101st Street. "They ur sheets and pillowcases for a swag Mrs. Schaefer said. "That's the way . Walk out with it over their shoulder. like laundry."

noticed that Paul was gone and re- l about it. "Where is he?" Mr. Schaefer "Isn't he on the street? . . . The damned kids around here—pardon my impression," he went on, "always standin' around dirtyin' up the vestibule, throwin' junk in there all the time. When I step out this door, they run like hell in all directions. They must smell me or something. Cop on the corner booted one in the pants and bashed one in the head. That's what these kids need."

Paul had been morose because his mother had given a puppy he had brought home to the man in a nearby pet store. "He wasn't housebroken," she explained, "and he made my husband nervous."

"The puppy was O.K.," Paul insisted. "Every place he went he was happy."

"He thinks fast, he's got all the answers."

Paul also collects stray cats and gives them to a woman who he says keeps twenty-five cats in her apartment. (His father snorted, "Bad enough humans—but cats!")

Mother Schaefer said that Paul wanted to be a veterinarian. "Ever since he was a baby. He loves animals, he loves to feed the pigeons. Bill would like to work in a department store as a salesman. He'd like to have his own business. He'd be good too. He can have a dollar and stretch the daylights out of it. Freddy hasn't made up his mind yet. One time he wants to be a carpenter, one time a cab driver—he doesn't know."

"He's a hobo, that one," his father said proudly. "A hobo."

Bill remarked that he had been doing some electrical work in shop class and he had been thinking lately he would like to be an electrician.

"An electrician," guffawed his father. "One of these days you'll get a fuse right up your alley! Then you'll lay down. You're too dumb to be an electrician."

Bill had finished his dinner and was sitting alone at the table, staring at the empty plate. Abruptly he got up and put on his old khaki jacket, which he had conveniently draped over the back of his chair. He tried

Take a good look and see why...

This Republic Steel Kitchen can be duplicated or modified to fit your home.

New Double-Bowl Stainless Steel Sink—Gives a custom look: flanked with Formica counters. It is made of genuine Enduro Stainless Steel, yet costs no more than porcelain.

Little Drawers, Big Space Savers—Ideal for silverware, linens, small tools. Handy cutting board can be switched to lower location if desired.

Republic Steel Kitchens

give you the most for your money!

Right off, you're impressed with the fresh, modern beauty of a Republic Steel Kitchen. A closer look reveals the extra benefits you get when you choose this all-steel kitchen line, quality guarded from ore to store by Republic, world's largest producer of alloy and stainless steels.

Try a drawer. It opens smoothly and quietly on nylon glides. Look inside and see rounded bottoms that eliminate hard-to-clean crevices. A clearance rail separates top drawers from counters, preventing binding or sticking. See, too, how Republic caters to your own special storage needs with adjustable shelves, and inner sliding drawers designed for under-counter cupboard space. Priced with the lowest, Republic's long list of extra advantages—all contained in a wide selection of stock units—assures you the most for your kitchen dollar.

Visit Your Republic Kitchen Dealer—There you can prove to yourself you get the most for your money! See on Republic's Showdown Comparison chart the list of last-a-housetime features that five other leading brands together don't give you, even as extras.

REPUBLIC STEEL Kitchens

The World's Most Modern Kitchens

BRAND-NEW, COLORFUL BOOK O.. KITCHENS

☐ Praise-Winning Kitchens takes the mystery out of kitchen planning.

☐ If you're remodeling, you'll also want 101 Ways to Make Awkward Kitchens Behave.

Check and enclose coin. One booklet, 25 cents, both for 40 cents. Address: Republic Steel Kitchens, Department A, 1038 Belden Avenue, Canton 5, Ohio. L H J -553

Name_____

Address _____

City_____ Zone____ State ____

Now...

A DE LUXE MODEL OF THE WORLD'S MOST POPULAR EGG BEATER...

FLINT

New de luxe Precision model with solid 1 piece frame. Contemporary styling by Raymond Loewy. Balanced for easier beating.
Gift-boxed $6.95

Everyone wants a Flint Egg Beater, because a Flint Beater never tires your arm, yet gives electric mixer results! Lifetime Nylon gears turn the super-powerful stainless steel blades at the flick of a finger! And just one turn whips cream or beats a batter 40 times! No wonder Flint Egg Beaters make egg whites stand up stiff in 28 seconds. Available wherever fine housewares are sold in the U. S. and Canada!

EKCO ....the greatest names in housewares

FLINT

America's most popular quality egg beater. 8 powerful stainless steel blades.
Gift-boxed $4.95

Ekco Products Company, Chicago 39, Illinois

EARN MORE!

Increase your earnings this year by forwarding new and renewal subscriptions for The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Holiday, the Ladies' Home Journal, Jack and Jill, and other popular publications. Generous commissions. For details write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
878 Independence Square Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania meet Mr. Blue Lake

the aristocrat of the Green Bean Family

Blue Lakes from the Pacific Coast are the variety of green beans that are greener, rounder and firmer. Their delightful succulence and flavor will give you a new pleasure in serving green beans.

Four types of packs: Whole, Vertical, French Style, Cut

CANNED Blue Lake variety GREEN BEANS

Blue Lakes, a distinct variety of green beans, are packed under many brand names. Be sure the can label, regardless of brand, says "Blue Lake Variety".

Copyright 1954 by Associated Blue Lake Green Bean Canners, Inc. Portland 4, Oregon unsuccessfully to zip it; the zipper was broken beyond repair. "I'm going out for a while," he said.

His father teased him about the jacket. "Go down to a nice department store," he told him, "and look around till you see a jacket you like. Then just take it and put yours on the hanger."

"You do," his mother said, "and I'll conk you over the head. He's too smart for that."

"You can't be honest these days," Mr. Schaefer stated. Mrs. Schaefer frowned and he added, "He knows I'm just kidding."

"Yes, but I'm afraid it might happen. I wish he could have a new one. But then, I wish a lot of things, I guess. I wish these rooms looked nice, but no matter how I fix them they don't look nice."

Freddy had slipped away a few minutes before, and now Bill edged quickly out the door. In the hallway and down the stairs he could hear his father's voice mounting louder as once again he railed at the city welfare department and its personnel—"all liars! Outta this world!"

His hearing before the magistrate for having threatened violence to one of the welfare agents was scheduled for ten o'clock the next day.

What do boys do at night on city streets? Freddy says they just stand around. They do. They do an unbelievable amount of standing around, watching. There is much to see—and many to talk to. Misery Street is, after all, not lonely. There are noise and scuffling and laughter. There are bonfires in the rubble on vacant lots; there are not-so-bright lights and not-too-sweet music. Misery Street has a lot of comfort for those who belong here after dark—and even beauty. From the corner of Second Avenue and 100th Street, the great illuminated spans of the Triborough Bridge across the East River appear to be suspended in space, fragile and soaring.

The boys think it is a good place, with many interesting things going on. So appealing is it to them they walk blocks to spend their time here, where they grew up, rather than with the gang on the better-lighted corner where they now live. One of the boys' favorite loafing spots is in front of a store-front window on Misery Street labeled: "Phy-Culs S. and A. C." An odd place. The two front rooms have sky-blue wallpaper with large tan splotches. There are tables, rented by the hour for card playing, and a television set. Soft drinks are sold. In the back room is an old, soft punching bag, from which a spider has stretched its web. Men gather there—the place has no other visible purpose. The boys are sometimes permitted to sit in the club and play cards or Monopoly. The young son of the proprietor is one of their good friends.

In the summertime, after dark, Bill and Fred often fish for eels in the East River. Both boys swim, as often as they can afford it, at Jefferson Pool at 113th and First Avenue. Some time—very little—they spend under the supervision of the Rev. Norman Eddy, of the Harlem Protestant Mission Church. He and the ministers of four other churches sponsor various youth activities in the neighborhood. Bill and Fred have also recently joined the Kips Bay Boys Club at 301 East 52nd Street, but have used its facilities very little. Why? "Oh—the other kids are always buying things to eat." Little Paul sometimes goes to the Rhinelander Children's Center, operated by the Children's Aid Society on 88th Street since 1891.

Of course there are street gangs, but the Schaefer boys say they do not belong to any.

NEXT MONTH

"Fathers always seemed like lumps behind newspapers—and definitely not wonderful the way Bob is."

■ Valerie Valaas started life as a city girl and changed to farmer's wife. On an apple ranch in Wenatchee, Washington, with husband Bob in the orchard in a cluster of five children, with deer and pheasant for company, and games for the crew at evening, family life is a day-long reward. And Bob gains big returns, too, on a $23,000 ranch with a partner who started shakily but ended triumphantly with

TIME FOR LIVING
By JAN WEYL

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the April JOURNAL

"Every block has got a gang," Bill says. "... ain't no block without a gang. The kids around, they get together, they give them a name—you've got a gang." He and F... around together most of the time for ... protection, to avoid having to belong to a ... Bill says he does not like the gangs be... "These guys that belong to gangs think t... tough, always looking for trouble. One ... me and some other boys was jumped fr... hind by a gang. One of them reached arou... cut my hand with a razor."

Fred also has a special reason for s... away from gangs. Last year he and anoth... his age were picked up by police and ta... Youth House, a juvenile correction cent... allegedly stealing eighty cents from a st... the way to school. His mother said it was ... friend who stole the money and he was ... cated only because he accepted forty cen... the boy owed him. Both boys were relea... probation to their parents with a warning.

ON the day of his hearing, Mr. Schaef... in bed at three o'clock in the afternoo... had been there since noon. "He was up ... this morning, getting ready to go," ... Schaefer whis... "I don't know ... happened. ... wouldn't talk ... he came home. ... he gets too ner... he goes to bed ... better that way.

"Yes, I ... about the bo... worry about ... getting into tr... all the time be... you don't ... what's going to ... pen. I worry ... them having no ... to go, nothing ... Freddy is the ... nervous of the ... He's the one ... causes me the ... trouble.

"Like this m... he lost his s... lunch pass ... couldn't get hi... lunch for a ... When I had ... money I gave ... him; otherwis... went without eating, or came home ... didn't go back in the afternoon. He ... go back so many afternoons the truant o... got after me. I know one time he p... hooky for three weeks. I'm always caref... call up when they stay home sick. I don't ... that truant officer calling again. Freddy ... care. They could close up the schools f... Paulie cares too. But Bill really likes sc... He'd like to get a job after school.

"Freddy's Japanese friend, a carpe... made him a little shoeshine stand and he... shining shoes on the street. But the p... won't let them do that. They pull ther... Freddy said, 'Mommy, you can't even ma... honest living any more!' Both boys work ... run errands for people when they can. Th... nothing much they can do yet to earn m...

"One time Freddy—he and another b... took a cab all the way to Pelham Manor. ... bought steaks to eat, even treated a coup... bums, went horseback riding and bough... expensive camera. This boy, he had st... they say, two hundred and fifty dollars ... his father. They did it several times befor... boy's father missed the money. Did he ... terrible strapping!

"About three years ago, Freddy and ... other boy decided they were tired of ... around here and they were leaving h... Freddy talked me into letting him stay ... this other boy who lived next door—... about three in the morning this boy can ... our door. Said he wanted to say good-b... Bill! Well, I suspected something right ... and I got the story out of him. I had my n... gown on and threw just my coat over ... ran next door—oh, it was raining cats ... dogs—and Freddy, if you can imagine it ins FIRST PRIZE in Pillsbury's Sixth Grand National

CONTINUED ON PAGE 228

"OPEN SESAME" PIE

1 envelope Knox Gelatin
¼ c. cold water
1 c. milk — 2 egg yolks
¼ c. sugar — ¼ tsp. salt
1 c. pitted dates, cut very fine
¾ c. heavy cream, whipped
1 tsp. French's Vanilla
2 egg whites — 2 tbs. sugar
French's Nutmeg
1 baked "Sesame" pie shell

Soften gelatin in cold water. Beat together milk, egg yolks, sugar, salt in top of double boiler. Cook over hot water, stirring until mixture coats metal spoon. Add softened gelatin; stir until dissolved. Chill until almost set, stirring occasionally. Fold in whipped cream, vanilla, dates. Beat egg whites until slight mounds form. Add sugar gradually, beating after each addition. Fold stiff meringue into date mixture. Heap into cooled pie shell. Chill until firm; sprinkle with nutmeg before serving.

"Sesame" Pie Shell—Toast 2 to 4 tbs. French's Sesame Seeds in piepan at 325° F. 8-10 mins. until light golden brown. Remove seeds. Sift together 1 c. sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour and ½ tsp. salt. Add sesame seeds. Cut in ⅓ c. Crisco until particles are size of small peas. Gradually sprinkle 3 to 4 tbs. cold water over mixture, tossing and stirring lightly with fork. Form into ball; roll out. Fit loosely into 9" piepan; flute edges. Prick with fork. Bake at 450°F. 10-12 mins. until golden brown.

(More prize-winning recipes in every sack of Pillsbury's Best)

Sesame seeds in the crust—dates in the filling—no wonder it's the pie of the year! Recipe adapted by Ann Pillsbury

Something Wonderful $25,000 "Open Sesame" Pie

baked with French's pure Spices and Vanilla!

- ✓ French's Spices and Extracts were used exclusively in the Pillsbury Baking Contest.
- ✓ French's Spices are pure—contain no fillers. You get true natural flavor.
- ✓ French's Extracts are rich, full-bodied and full-flavored. With French's Spices and Extracts, you too can be a wonderful cook!

'RENCH'S SPICES AND EXTRACTS

FREE! Prize-Winning Recipes

Send for leaflet of top prize-winning recipes from Pillsbury's Grand National Contest. Write to:
The R. T. French Co.
9069 Mustard St., Rochester 9, New York

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

CROCHETED MATCH-UPS

add sparkle to sunshine fashions

Quick and easy to make with

COATS & CLARK'S

"Speed-Cro-Sheen" and Metallic "Knit-Cro-Sheen"

Again an important fashion—and with good reason! Crocheted hats and handbags look light and cool, can be dressy or casual, and pack easily. Made of Coats & Clark's lustrous threads, they wear well and wash beautifully. Coats & Clark's O.N.T. SPEED-CRO-SHEEN, the extra-thick 8-cord cable-twist, lends texture interest to the match-ups above—and crochets in half the time! J. & P. Coats' new Metallic KNIT-CRO-SHEEN glitters with a non-tarnishing gold or silver colored strand in the cloche and bag below.

Get this new fashion book, "Hats & Bags" #310, at art needlework counters. Only 10¢

COATS & CLARK'S O.N.T. the two famous names in thread

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 226

out their back door and up on the roof. I went after him, but he ran over the roof and cut back through. For three hours I looked for him on rooftops, in cellars. Finally a neighbor came to me after I'd come back to our place and said Freddy was downstairs, he was afraid to come back. He wasn't afraid of his father—he was afraid of me, that's what he told her. I had to promise not to give him a beating, but I was so angry I could have batted him. But he was so cold and wet. He came in soaked to the skin—so was I. That Freddy! He has such a way of talking to you. Everything in life to him is just a joke. He said he was disgusted with school and city life and he and this other boy were going to live in the country.

"He did go to the Herald Tribune Fresh Air Camp one summer, but last summer I couldn't send him. He didn't have no clothes to wear. The Herald Tribune Fresh Air Camp is wonderful, but I won't send him unless I have decent clothes for him to wear. Paulie went to stay with a family in Hornell, New York, last summer. He'd like to go back—he likes the country. But I wouldn't like it so much—not like here. I like the bustle, all the people around. New York's much better than San Francisco. There's more opportunity.

"But I do worry sometimes about the boys on the streets, and the gangs and all—and I'm glad Bill and Freddy don't hang around with them much. You should see them! Take those Yorkville Dukes—about a hundred boys and girls. They like to wear jackets and the big thing is to mess up each other's jackets and the girls are just as bad as the boys. A few weeks ago they came down the street here—about fifteen boys and four or five girls, spoiling for trouble, carrying clubs and iron bars. The police broke them up.

"A few months ago there was a couple of hundred kids in a gang fight between the Enchanters and the Harlem Blades, they call themselves. They fight with anything they can find—sticks, bricks, zip guns, switch-blade knives. They do more damage than the grown people, you know, those kids.

"Everything happens on these streets. One time Paulie came in and said, 'Hey, mommy, I just saw a man get stabbed in the stomach out front!' Then one day a bull came in the place where I work to get a cardboard box to put the charred body of a baby some boys had found in an ash can. That same day we had a terrible thing and everybody was excited. A fellow choked his girl and she fainted right in an entranceway. He thought she was dead, I guess, and went up to the roof and jumped off. His body was layin' there on the street for hours, with everybody comin' and goin' around it. Then not long ago there was that murder at the delicatessen across t that my husband mentioned. He wa young man with twin boys and a nic wife, a lovely person. Now she runs t by herself, I think.

"I try to teach the boys, impress the stealing, taking what don't belong t They see older people robbing peo they don't see anything wrong with them that if they catch you and yo record, you can't get a decent job th your life. They have never taken an know of. I explained what dope loo One day Bill came home and said so had found some dope—at least they fou white powders in a paper and they was dope. And down there on 100t they see it. They see people in the l giving themselves the needle.

"I told them if they ever took it, it w come a habit and they'd never get o habit—they have an idea what happen them when people get the habit the kinds of things, steal to get it, commit suffer pains when they can't get the

"I think the most important thing a child is to do the right thing, and if yo have what you want, maybe you will tomorrow. Each person is alike, there's or color, we're all human beings. I tea that if a person treats you nice, you tre nice; if they don't treat you nice, y stay away from them.

"I believe if you're poor, make the it and don't cry about it. I tell the you're poor maybe later you can go t and have the things you don't have no

"My husband don't think I'm strict with them. He thinks you tell them son a couple of times, that's enough, they know. They annoy him, but he loves t much as I do, probably. I can take a and be happy, but he gets very excit nervous. The thing I think holds a marr gether is don't pull apart over things yo do anything about."

The apartment was growing dar Mother Schaefer snapped on the kitche Mr. Schaefer had awakened and was in his easy chair staring into space. So asked him what had happened at the h "What happened?" he shouted. "I happened! The judge asked me what I say and I said, 'Judge, this man is a lia outta this world!' The judge just sort of and some detectives took me in a roo asked a lot of questions. I told them stuff about me not takin' a job was just a of lies. That's all it is—just a bunch They didn't say nothin'—just wrote son down and I came home."

FREEDOM YET DISCIPLINE

By GEORGE W. SMYTH

Judge of the Children's Court, Westchester County, New York

I would wish for a child from the moment of its birth:

1. Regular hours of rest and sleep, plenty of fresh air and sunshine, good ventilation and wholesome food.

2. A mother with a good knowledge of sound habit training; one who is consistent in her handling of the child; who is loving yet firm; who will take the time to explain; who is willing and anxious to make the child her first and most important responsibility.

3. A home in which religion is the cornerstone, not merely lip service.

4. Parents who truly love each other and live together in mutual respect.

5. A father who feels his responsibility to participate in the training of the child—not just the one who supplies the cash, and leaves all the responsibility to the mother.

6. Parents who are themselves well disciplined. No greater mistake can be made than to try to discipline children in temper, yelling and screaming at them or pushing them around.

7. Parents who actually set the example through their own personal conduct of the standards they profess to want for their children—not parents who preach one thing and do another.

8. Parents who are interested in their children's activities; who try to find out what their natural interests and activities are; who try to help them to find opportunities for developing those aptitudes; who encourage the children to discuss their problems with them.

9. Parents who will encourage children to accept responsibility and allow them to share in family planning with the family group.

You look wonderful

because you feel wonderful

when you use

Yardley Lavender ..... for the freshest, youngest feeling in the world

It's so much more than a delightful essence. Yardley Lavender is a feeling. There's no lift like its crisp coolness, no other fragrance that makes you feel so fresh so long. Enjoy Yardley Lavender in its many other forms. The essence, from $1.10 plus tax; Soap, box of 3, $1.50. Created in England, made in U.S.A. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

New Revlon Liquid Makeup

Beauty-treats Your Skin as you wear it!

SOFTENS AND PROTECTS YOUR SKIN WITH REVLON'S OWN SKIN-SOFTENER, LANOLITE!

Revlon 'Touch-and-Glow'

8 incredibly flattering colors, 1.25* and 1.75*

Looks natural, feels natural and actually beauty-treats your skin because it's made with Lanolite

You're right in refusing to wear ordinary "cover-up" makeups that may hide lines and blemishes, but may also mistreat your skin. We agree with you . . . a makeup that dries your skin, clogs your pores . . . feels heavy and looks masky . . . is worse than wearing no makeup at all!

That's why you'll love 'Touch-and-Glow'. It's wonderfully different . . . blended with LANOLITE, our own ingredient that's better for your than lanolin itself! And it's good for all skin types . . . dry, oily or norm So easy to apply! Smooth on a few drops with your fingertips. Insta your skin looks softer, younger, glowing with color! Beauty-treat y skin with 'Touch-and-Glow' today!

*PLUS TAX ©1955 REVLON PRODUCTS C HATS: JOHN FRED

MR 18'55

JOURNAL

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

APRIL
1955 · 35c

THE MAGAZINE
WOMEN BELIEVE IN

WOMEN NEED NO LONGER DIE FROM NO. 1 CANCER

HOME BY ARDYTH KENNELLY NOVEL OF A TWO-WIFE MORMON . . . HOLD

Continuing the story of PRINCESS BEATRIX—Holland's next Queen

DR. SPOCK—FATHER'S PART IN DISCIPLINE

a NEW KIND of deodorant!

ban lotion deodorant rolls on

More effective than creams! Easier to apply than sprays!*

BAN is a lotion deodorant that goes on a completely new, wonderful way. It actually rolls on perfect protection—with a revolving marble built right into the bottle top.

No drip! No messy fingers! No waste! BAN automatically applies just enough pleasing lotion to check perspiration . . . stop odor for a full 24 hours. Never too much . . . never too little!

BAN rolls on evenly. . . leaves no unprotected areas to endanger freshness! BAN is delicately scented, safe for normal skin. Get new BAN today—wherever fine toiletries are sold—98¢.

- protects around the clock
- keeps underarms dry for hours
- can be applied even after shaving
- won't stain clothes
- won't cake, clog, spill or leak

Deodorant
Anti-perspirant
Pleasing lotion
—all rolled into one
—that's ban

In a recent survey against both the leading cream and spray deodorants, 7 out of 10 prefer BAN.*

Another Fine Product of Bristol-Myers

PINK A BOO

A playful pink . . . but it's strictly for grown-ups! There's nothing little-girl about the kiss-me-quick look it gives your lips. This bright new shade of Cashmere Bouquet Lipstick does its good work discreetly, too—Pink-A-Boo stays on you, stays off everyone else!

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢ plus tax

Conover girls pick Cashmere Bouquet

"Have a lipstick wardrobe: a blue-red, an orange-red and a definite pink. All three cost less than $2 when, like our Conover girls, you choose Cashmere Bouquet."

Candy Jones

cashmere bouquet

INDELIBLE-TYPE LIPSTICK

Super-Creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet

Journal

Contents

April, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 4

Journalities

ARDYTH KENNELLY's Mormon grandfather was Norwegian and had two wives, just as Olaf in Up Home, the sparkling new serial beginning on page 50. "Mother tells delicious stories, like Linnea. So to save me I can't say whether the novel's more true or more made up." Miss Kennelly is married to Dr. Egon V. Ullman. She is the author of The Peaceable Kingdom and Good Morning, Young Lady, but began writing much earlier than that. At twelve, she answered lonely-hearts notes in a magazine, representing herself as a handsome cowboy with a large ranch. "Every one of the ladies answered, and I've struck up some warm friendships," says Miss Kennelly. She got scared when one of them wanted to come to see her, and bade them all farewell, saying she had married a girl who looked like Clara Bow and was leaving immediately for Alaska.

Ardyth Kennelly

Youngest in a family of fourteen children, JEAN RITCHIE (Yonder Comes My Beau, page 54) was born in Viper, Kentucky, a small village walled in by the Cumberlands. To all the Ritchies, singing was as important as speaking, and the songs they sang were mostly ballads dating all the way back to the Elizabethan era. After working her way through the University of Kentucky with honors, Jean went to New York to do social work. Instead, her songs and her dulcimer brought a different career. She has sung in Town Hall in New York and the Royal Albert in London, appeared on radio and TV, and is the author of two books: The Swapping Song Book and The Singing Family of the Cumberlands.

Jean Ritchie

GEORGE SUMNER ALBEE (The Ugliest Woman in Town, page 62) insists that, except for travel in Europe, Africa, China and Mexico, he has led a dull life. "The most unusual thing in it was my service record in World War II. On Monday I was a rejected private. On Thursday of the same week I had the rank of a two-star general as Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury. I regard this as an outstanding accomplishment for a man who can't keep his checkbook straight." The Albees live in a 200-year-old stone cottage in the Catskills in summer, and spend the winters in Cuba.

George Sumner Albee

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

UNJUDGING LOVE, Frank Baker . 52

Stories

UP HOME (First part of five), Ardyth Kennelly . 50
YONDER COMES MY BEAU, Jean Ritchie . 54
THE UGLIEST WOMAN IN TOWN, George Sumner Albee . 62

Special Features

ARE WE SCARING OURSELVES TO DEATH?, Dorothy Thompson . 11
RECREATION CENTER FOR A CALIFORNIA TOWN . 23
CLUB PROJECTS ABROAD, Margaret Hickey . 23
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 47
WOMEN NEED NO LONGER DIE OF THEIR NO. 1 CANCER FOE! . 60
Gladys Denny Shultz
BORN TO BE QUEEN (Second part of six), Betty Hoffman and A. N. P. . 64
MEMORIES (Third part of four), Ethel Barrymore . 78
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 83
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: MORE TIME FOR LIVING, Jan Weyl . 169
THEY SWIM BEFORE THEY WALK, Felice Paramore . 185

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 28
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 36
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 39
THAT SOPHISTICATED LADY (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 42
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 49
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 82
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 92
THIS IS A MUMBLE-MEETER, Munro Leaf . 138

Fashion and Beauty

THE BRIDE WEARS COTTON, Wilhela Cushman . 68
UNEXPECTED COLOR FOR YOUR TYPE, Wilhela Cushman . 70
SPRING COTTONS TO WEAR THROUGH SUMMER, Nora O'Leary . 72
FASHION DOLLARS, Ruth Mary Packard . 74
SEWING-MACHINE MAGIC, Nora O'Leary . 176
PRETTY, QUICK HAIRDOS, Dawn Crowell Norman . 178

Food and Homemaking

HAPPY EASTER, Ann Batchelder . 80
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 84
"WHEN I ENTERTAIN," Nancy Crawford Wood . 108
BAKING BONANZA COMES TWICE A WEEK, Valerie Valaas . 174
AFTER SCHOOL SMORGASBORD, Betty Gillard . 197

Architecture, Gardening and Interior Decoration

THE ELEGANCE OF EARLY MAINE, Richard Pratt . 56
COUNTRY MODERN, H. T. Williams . 76
THE HOUSE THAT COULD HARDLY BREATHE, Richard Pratt . 120
PLANNED FOR PRIVACY INSIDE AND OUT, Carol L. Mercado . 146

Poems

PROSERPINE, Jean Todd Freeman . 91
THE HOUR AND THE ARROW, D. C. Wilson . 104
WHAT CHILD IS HERE?, Polly Toland . 112
SPRING TIDE, Mildred Cousens . 122
WHEN BEAUTY WALKS THE APRIL HILLS, Lucy Embury . 128
THE WINDFLOWER, Marion Lineaweaver . 143
TO A GENTLE LOVER, Barbara Shook Conklin . 156
THE BLUE-EYED DAISY, Elizabeth McFarland . 182

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Traysser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

"I COULDN'T BEAR IT... if I had to go back to all that rigmarole!"

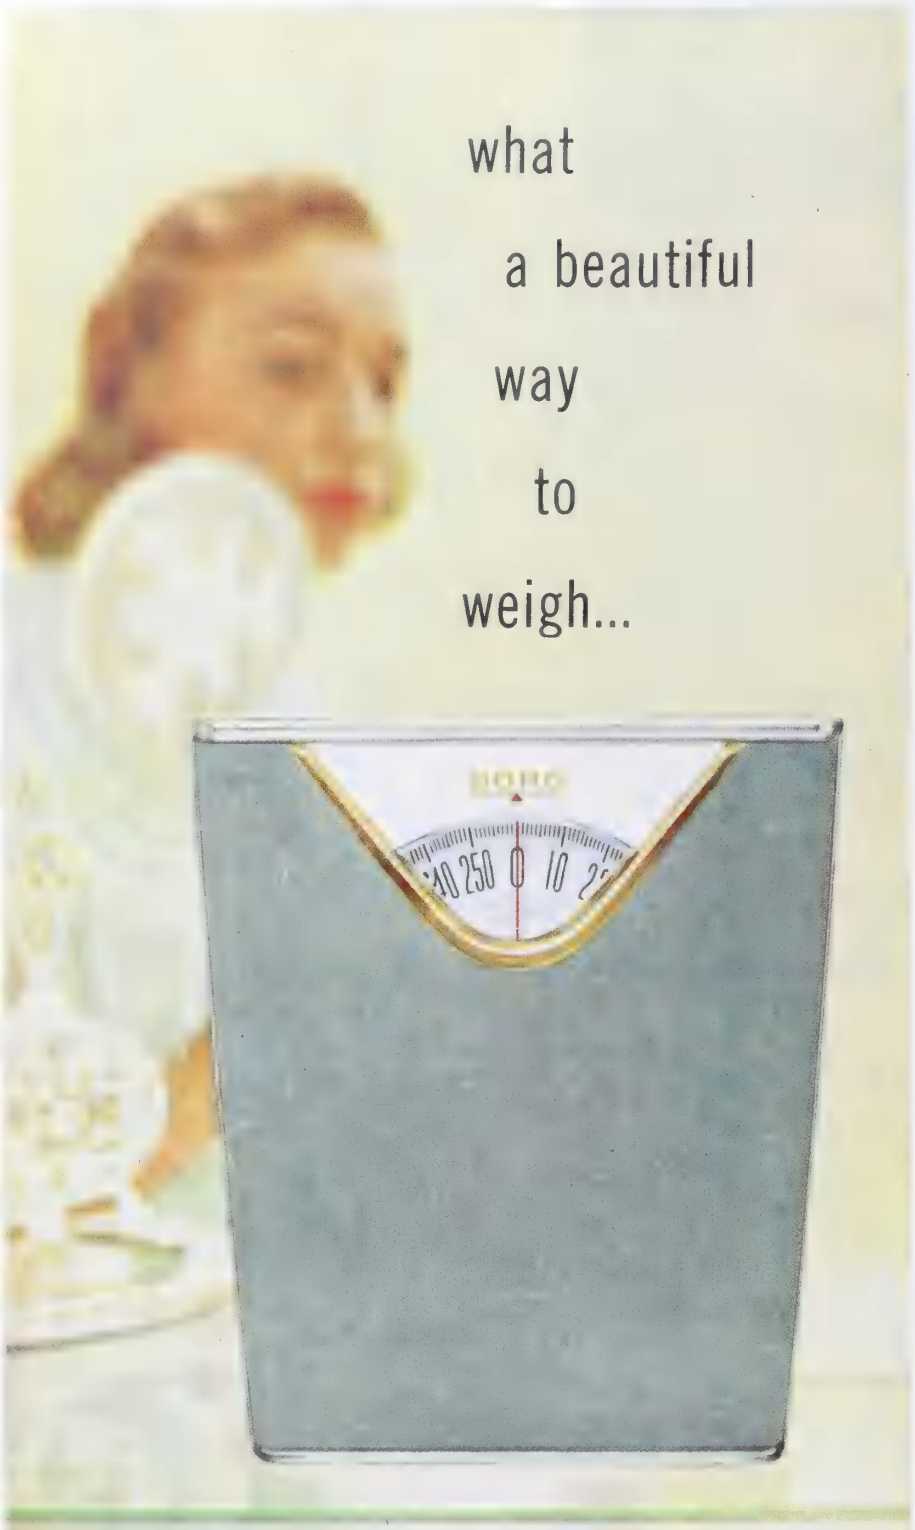
"You can talk all you want about the advantages of Tampax—no odor, easy disposability and so on. But for my money, its big contribution to the world of women is the way it's gotten rid of so much unnecessary bulk! It's bad enough to have to struggle into a girdle on 'those days' without worrying about a belt-pin-pad harness. I couldn't bear it, if I didn't have Tampax!"

Are Tampax users that vehement, that intense, that fervent about Tampax? They certainly are! If you haven't spoken to a user yet about your "time-of-the-month" problems, by all means do so. She might tell you how comfortable Tampax internal sanitary protection is—or she might talk about the fact it's invisible when in place. She might even dwell on its smallness (a whole month's supply can go into the purse). But whatever she says, she's bound to be enthusiastic. All Tampax users are!

Choice of 3 absorbencies are at drug or notion counters—Regular, Super, Junior. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.



Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

BORG'S Flight

for your bath

. . . But don't let its beauty fool you—this heavenly scale is also superbly efficient. It counts not pounds but half-pounds and considers ounces important. Its wide-eyed dial tells you the news in headline fashion—but the scale hardly whispers in use, so watch-like is its mechanism. Comes with Lifetime Service Warranty. The "Flight", by Borg. 6 colors—Blue, Pink, White, Green, Yellow and Black—$15. Other accurate Borgs, $7.95 up.

You can always believe your BORG SCALE

® Borg-Erickson Corp., Chicago

(West slightly higher)

Our readers write us

Her Own Right

Merion, Pennsylvania

Dear Editor: I was thrilled with the colorful article written by Mrs. Hutheesing about her brother Nehru and her sister, Mme. Pandit.

Mrs. Hutheesing is a wonderful person in her own right. Do readers know she founded the so-called "cottage industries" in India, comprising all sorts of leather, metal and wood work, embroidery, and so on? She combines the production of these crafts with her work in rehabilitation of juvenile delinquents. She gives six days a week to teaching illiterates, prevention of begging, supervising sewing and cooking instructions. Her only reward—letters from youths afterward who gratefully acknowledge what she has done to improve their lives.

Sincerely,
HILDA GAENSLER

Tempered Discipline

Beaufort, South Carolina

Dear Editors: I'd like to say Dorothy Thompson's article, Respect for Law Begins at Home, is the most sensible opinion on our great juvenile-delinquency problem I've ever heard or read.

We parents of small children have come to dread the arrival of the teen-age years as an almost inevitable time of delinquency problems. So much has been written to make parents feel guilty about punishing children. I hope this is the beginning of a trend back toward real discipline in the home, tempered always, of course, by love and understanding. Sincerely,
MRS. C. M. AKEY

Your Friend Betty

Burton, Washington

Dear Journal Editors: As any reader of any of Betty MacDonald's books has gathered, she has a genuine kinship with all young folks. A while ago, several island youngsters published their own newspaper, earning a sizable sum. With their earnings they purchased books for the Burton branch library. Betty MacDonald took time out from her busy schedule to appear at the library. She posed with the boys and girls for a picture. A Seattle reporter pointed out there were too many in the picture for a two-column spread and had three children step out of the range of the camera.

Mrs. MacDonald called the three youngsters back and firmly instructed the photographer to take a second picture. She personally saw to it that the Vashon Island News Record printed a picture of all six of the young people who had worked so hard. She even went to the extra trouble of writing a personal note of apology to the three young reporters whose pictures did not appear in the Seattle paper. Not many people would have bothered. Betty MacDonald did.

We thought you might be interested in Betty as we know her.

Yours truly,
GARLAND NORIN

Do Our Laws Create Black-Market Babies?

Boston, Massachusetts

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: We came to this country about fifteen years ago, met and married here, became American citizens.

My husband served in the armed forces. For nine years we tried unsuccessfully to adopt a child. Finally, three years ago we were told of an opportunity for American couples to adopt orphans from Austria. After a year of a great amount of red tape and a last-minute air trip we became parents, not only of one child but two.

While I do not wish to go into the details of our dealings with adoption agencies, I can only say my last encounter almost caused me to have a nervous breakdown. Possibly we have been more unfortunate than others, but the social workers whom we encountered treated us with such coldness, arrogance and overbearing that only our great desire for children kept us going from one agency to another. We were told variously that I was either too emotional or too unfeeling, that I only wanted children to keep me busy (!) and that my parents' divorce would make it difficult for me to be a well-balanced, happy mother.

We resisted a black-market baby. However, I can understand the many parents who fall. Sincerely,
(Name Withheld)

Profitable Career!

Los Gatos, California

Dear Sirs: I was surprised to notice in a recent issue a family very similar to my own laboring under financial difficulties.

I am twenty-three, the mother of one two-year-old boy, and am expecting another in February. My husband earns just over $5000 a year. In the three years we have been married we have purchased a $3000 auto, $2000 worth of furniture, at the present time have $1500

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

NORMAN EDSON STUDIOS

As they know her.

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things...for yours, too

For everything you wash with special care

. . . by HAND OR MACHINE!

FOR DIAPERS . . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES like blankets, bedspreads, curtains, pretty cotton housecoats thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow's gentle care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap for fine hand washables.

99 44/100% PURE®

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

C-O-O-L

carefree fashion

100% nylon jersey

Shelton Stroller

Just as a glass of tea calls for a cube of ice; summer calls for a Shelton Stroller. The lines are slim and trim...the look is pretty...and the living is delightfully easy. It washes. Dries fast. Sheds wrinkles. Saves ironing! Thanks to the on-in-a-jiffy zipper front, stepping into a Shelton Stroller is pleasantly simple. The skirt is cut a full 100 inches wide. Offers freedom of action when you're dashing about; packs tiny when you're traveling; falls gracefully at all times. Has two side pockets, too! With summer just a breeze away, now is the time to choose your new-season Shelton Stroller. Sizes 12 to 20, 12½ to 22½. Aqua, red, honey, blue on white. About $13.

At leading stores everywhere. For the name of the store nearest you, write today and receive FREE FASHION FOLIO invested in our home, plus having a small bank account. The first eighteen months we were married my husband Len was a reserve recall in the USN so our salary was cut in half.

Shelton CASUALS, DEPT. L4, 1350 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

We have found the answer to getting ahead financially is not the amount you earn so much as the manner in which you manage your earnings.

By doing my own housework, making all the clothes I possibly can, canning in summer, plus (and this is very important) very carefully managing my food allowance, I am able to save Len far more than if I went out to work. I look at my job as housewife as one of the most promising, interesting and profitable careers that any woman could ask for, and my part as mother a wonderful added attraction.

For the many hours of enjoyable reading and the many useful hints for household economy, I wish to send you my thanks.

Yours truly,
BARBARA GRADY

▶ Young Gradys, after three years of marriage, showed more than half their total earnings in tangible assets. Can anyone top this? ED.

Problem Easter Pets

Galion, Ohio

Dear Editors: Just once, I would like to meet the promoter who dreams up these schemes of selling or giving away living things to children at Eastertime. This past week a feed store advertised ten baby chickens to every family—free. My children went crazy! My older son came bursting in at noon with ten, then the other one went immediately to the feed store and without bothering to say our family had ten, came home with another ten. Both had to go back and buy chicken feed.

Last year we had a white bunny. White bunnies are lovely and, I had always thought, gentle. Ours was a fighter! Our black cocker bounced up to sniff and say hello. The white rabbit hissed and jumped at her. She hid in the house for two days and wouldn't go out unless one of us went with her. The rabbit decided to make himself at home, and not only took over our yard but the neighbor's garden. He sat complacently all day long, just eating. Because of the complaints we had to take him to the country to a farmer who raised rabbits.

New pet meets old.

Personally, I can still remember when a few colored eggs at Eastertime made us supremely happy, and were only incidental to the great day of the Resurrection when we all went to church.

I have so enjoyed writing to you.

Sincerely yours,
SARAH HUBBARD

Political Coming of Age?

Bend, Oregon

Dear Journal Editors: I think the JOURNAL'S particular most important contribution—and one that sets it aside from other magazines—is the development of initiative and a sense of responsibility in a whole generation of American women. Your fine articles in the Political Pilgrim's Progress series, on education, public reform and many other subjects have made indifference as passé as "twenty-three skiddoo."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

NEW!
DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

Safely stops odor 24 hours a day!

PROVED IN UNDERARM COMPARISON TESTS MADE BY A DOCTOR

- Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours.
- New MUM with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).
2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.
3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.
4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.
5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—New MUM won't dry out in the jar.

NEW MUM®

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3
(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

New Revlon Liquid Makeup

Beauty-treats Your Skin as you wear it!

Softens And Protects Your Skin With Revlon's Own Skin-softener, Lanolite!

NEW! 'Touch-and-Glow' Face Powder in the new glamorous golden box 1.25 In 8 complexion colors to harmonize with 'Touch-and-Glow' liquid makeup.*

Revlon 'Touch-and-Glow'

Looks natural, feels natural and actually

Beauty-treats your skin because it's made with Lanolite

ou're right in refusing to wear ordinary "cover-up" makeups that may de lines and blemishes, but may also mistreat your skin. We agree ith you . . . a makeup that dries your skin, clogs your pores . . . feels heavy nd looks masky . . . is worse than wearing no makeup at all!

hat's why you'll love 'Touch-and-Glow'. It's wonderfully different . . . blended with LANOLITE, our own ingredient that's better for your skin than lanolin itself! And it's good for all skin types . . . dry, oily or normal. Just smooth on a few drops. Instantly your skin looks softer, younger, glowing with color! Beauty-treat your skin with 'Touch-and-Glow' liquid makeup today! 1.25* and 1.75*

©1955 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP
HAT: JOHN FREDERICS *PLUS TAX

THE STARTLING LADIES' HOME JOURNAL STORY IS NOW ON THE SCREEN!

M-G-M presents its thrilling film of teen-age terror in the big-city schools!

Blackboard Jungle

This is the story—written by a teacher—about the fang-and-claw kids who bring their jungle code into the classroom! The provocative best-seller and magazine story becomes a powerful motion picture!

STARRING
GLENN FORD
ANNE FRANCIS · LOUIS CALHERN · WITH MARGARET HAYES
SCREEN PLAY BY RICHARD BROOKS · BASED ON THE NOVEL BY EVAN HUNTER · DIRECTED BY RICHARD BROOKS · PRODUCED BY PANDRO S. BERMAN
AN M-G-M PICTURE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6

The women got the vote a long time ago, but the JOURNAL, as much as any group or institution, has made mature, alert, well-informed and interested individuals who refute the "little woman" attitude without seeming officious, bossy, or annoying. Sincerely,

M. B.

In Good Hands

Upper Darby, Pennsylvania

Dear Editors: It's about time we rescued the expectant father from the cartoon role that he has so long occupied in American folklore. This is old stuff to me. Thanks to a sympathetic doctor, my husband and I were among the lucky few who were not separated by the "hospital curtain" in our first experience with parenthood. My husband, who had kept a close watch on me throughout my pregnancy, arrived home from work just in time for the beginning of my labor. He went to the hospital with me. All night long he was by my side, holding my hand, helping me to relax, adding immeasurably to my feeling of security.

. . . and baby makes three.

He was there to see our daughter born—his privilege as her father—and to share with me the exciting moment of her first cry. He was able to hold her in his arms the first day of her life—and every day ever since. In the months that have followed her birth, his calm, practical mind has provided original solutions to many little problems. It's nice to know your child is in good hands. And whose better than daddy's?

Sincerely,
JEANINE BLAIR

▶ For "fatherly" advice this month from Dr. Spock, see page 83.—ED.

Risks Sounding "Pollyannish"

Norfolk, Virginia

Dear Editors: When my first 5½-pound boy came the shock was so great my mother took him home with her when he was four weeks old and kept him a month. That was when I started reading every word in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and I learned that other women were having their troubles too. I pulled myself together and learned to cook, to wash and iron and to take care of my own baby! Sixteen months later the JOURNAL and I went to the hospital to wait for my second 5½-pound boy. Nine months ago I greeted my third 5½-pound boy and since then I've lost my maid (part-time), lost my savings account, lost my sanity, resigned from doing "good works" and have acquired a female German-shepherd puppy and a male English shepherd.

At the risk of sounding "Pollyannish" I am happier now doing all my own work than I was as a child in Pittsburgh attending Miss ——'s School for Girls and being cared for by governesses. My daddy was one of an old family there and I look back on that part of my life as a dream. (To some women this part would seem a nightmare, but not to me!) Who wants more than a devoted, wonderful husband and three healthy children?

Sincerely,
GERTRUDE CARTER

A message of special interest to wives of scientists and engineers . . .

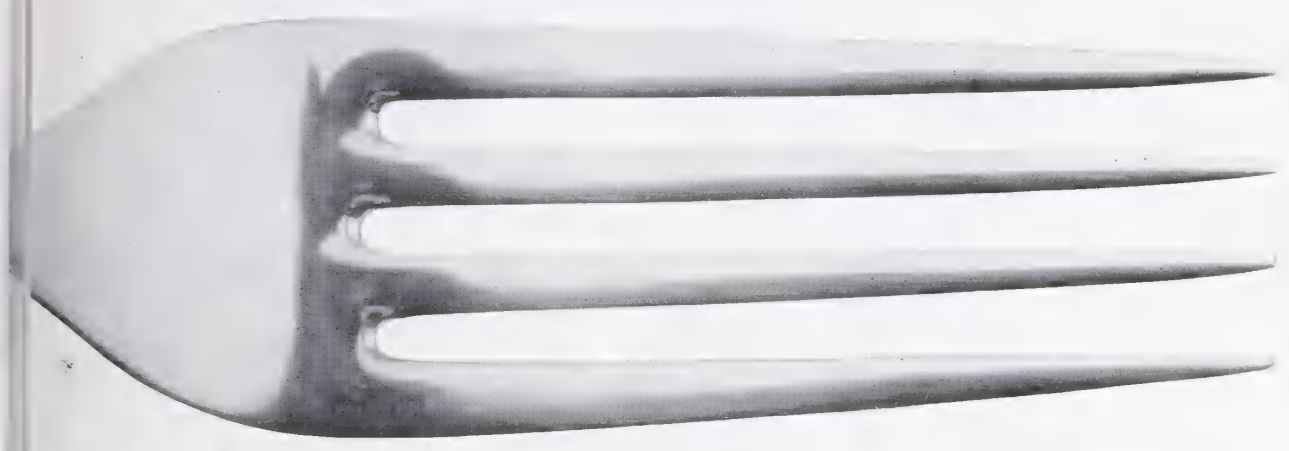
Scientific attainment in the proper environment is a matter of primary importance to your husband's career. Similarly, the right home environment for your family is a matter of primary importance to you.

At Lockheed Missile Systems Division in Southern California, scientists and engineers who are unusually qualified can make significant contributions to important work—in association with men in the very forefront of their profession.

And since this Research and Engineering Staff is located in the San Fernando Valley, you can live in a pleasant environment and climate which favor family life.

May we suggest that you write for detailed literature? Simply address:

Lockheed



MISSILE SYSTEMS DIVISION

research and engineering staff

LOCKHEED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION
VAN NUYS . CALIFORNIA

The Tōwle Touch

In every piece of Towle Sterling... evidence of the extra care and skill... the conscious pride of true sterling craftsmanship.

A JEWELER CAN TELL A TOWLE FORK AT A GLANCE... and so can you! Just look for such details as these: center tine space set back for added design symmetry ... a tiny notch between tines for easier washing... extra hand-polishing on all inside surfaces and tine points for utmost cleanliness.

'HE TOWLE TOUCH IN)ESIGN. Towle designs each iece in every pattern from 'tip-to-toe"— iot just from iere to here.

'n these Towle serving ieces you can see the dis- inction Towle "tip-to-toe" lesign achieves. Notice the inusual geometric perfora- ion on Towle's Craftsman ierced tablespoon. See how he slender symmetry of Towle's Silver Flutes pat- ern is preserved in the handsome pie server illus- rated... how the gently flared tines of the Towle Rose Solitaire cold meat fork carry out the rosebud motif of the pattern.

THERE ARE NO "SHORT CUTS" in the making of a Towle knife. This knife is Towle's King Richard—like all Towle knives, not only is it designed to give a balanced, satisfying "feel" in your hand, it must also lie flat and even on your table. Towle uses only solid metal—never cement or rosin—to seal blade and handle permanently together.

You'll hear no strange rattles in a Towle handle—be annoyed by no loose blade—nor can water leak in!

THE TOWLE TOUCH IS THE STERLING TOUCH... sterling silver at its unmistakable finest... created by men whose hands work with no lesser metals... who believe there are those who will appreciate patterns that are a little more elegant... craftsmanship a little more painstaking... yet at prices no higher than regular sterling brands. See for yourself the lovely array of Towle patterns soon, at conveniently located stores across the country.

When in New England... you are invited to see the Towle Craftsmen at work... just 35 miles north of Boston. Towle of Newburyport, Massachusetts.

Wonderful what a figure can do for a dress

THOSE are mighty handsome creations they're showing in today's finest dress shop windows and in the stunning pages of our current fashion magazines.

But what fashion editor or window trimmer would even dream of showing them on anything but the typically slender figures of today?

Wonderful what a figure can do for a dress! But just as wonderful what the modern trend to lighter food and drink is doing for the modern figure.

That is the trend with which Pepsi-Cola has kept pace. Reduced in calories, today's Pepsi is never heavy, never too sweet.

It is the modern, the light refreshment. Refresh without filling. Have a Pepsi.

Pepsi-Cola

refreshes without filling

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Bruce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

Are we scaring ourselves to death?

"Six's Bridge." Signed and dated "Rembrandt, 1645." According to a tradition, this landscape was etched at Jan Six's country estate against a wager that Rembrandt would not complete it before the return of a servant sent to fetch some mustard from a neighboring village.

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

One hardly picks up a magazine these days without finding an article warning of the increase of fell diseases. We are told that one out of seven deaths will be from cancer, and one out of six from coronary disease; and that one in twenty of us is doomed to spend months or years, or the rest of his life, in a mental hospital. The incidence of all these diseases is, we are informed, rising, and the writers are usually free with advice about how to spot symptoms and what to give up. If you smoke cigarettes, we are told, you are greatly increasing your likelihood of dying of lung cancer; if you don't count your calories you are scheduled for the mortuary from one or another form of heart failure. As for mental disease, we are all, it would seem, suffering from "neuroses," and an appalling proportion of our population from insanity. And something should be done about it.

Precisely because of these many articles by journalists who specialize in popular medical reporting, a great deal has been, and is being, "done about it." Thirty to fifty years ago a large group of deadly diseases baffled the medical profession. For years alleviations, controls or cures for these diseases were sought (and often found) by individual scientists or physicians working on their own. The public, however, was not particularly health-conscious. Though people were dying at a faster rate than now, they tended to accept disease and death as "the will of God." But as life insurance, and, later, various forms of sickness insurance, increased, along with the wealth of communities, the companies that issued these types of insurance became interested, for very practical reasons, in diminishing the operations of divine providence, and investigating and instructing their millions of clients in how to prolong their lives in good health.

When popular writers took up the crusade, the public became impatient of waiting for individual geniuses to find the answers to health problems and demanded that scientific research be speeded up in a more organized way, by groups of chemists and physicians working together in extended laboratories. The great foundations increased medical research, to the tune of many millions of dollars. Voluntary societies were formed to fight tuberculosis, cancer, heart diseases, diabetes, polio, and so on.

These societies required a great deal of money from the public for their entirely laudable purposes. To get the money they had to keep popular consciousness and interest, and the obvious way to do so was to publicize the dire statistics, and, in short, to create what might be called a philosophy of fear. The effectiveness of the fund-raising campaigns depended on scaring contributions out of checkbooks.

Now I do not wish to discourage anyone from contributing to medical research. We need ever more of it. But I wonder whether a different sort of appeal might be quite as effective from a fund-raising viewpoint, and have a better influence on the public health and sanity. That is to advertise what research has already done to increase your health and mine and prolong our lives. For since it has already performed wonders in once-baffling fields, there is every reason to anticipate that, given continued support, it will perform new ones.

Let's stop scaring ourselves to death, and consider a few encouraging facts.

In 1920 the average American could count on living to be 54 and a fraction years old. In 1950 he could anticipate living to be 67½. Average life had been prolonged by 13½ years—an unparalleled accomplishment for one generation!

Let us happily consider what might have killed us thirty or fifty years ago, and what we run a much smaller risk of dying from today.

In 1915, upon drawing our first breath, we had a 10 per cent chance of expiring as infants. Today we have more than three times as good a prospect of living to start with.

As late as 1930, 7 out of every 1000 women who gave birth to living children died in childbed. In 1950, only 1 in 1000 died.

As we began to grow up, we might have been stricken with diphtheria. In 1920, 1 out of every 139 deaths was from this cause, a painful disease accompanied by raging fever and ending in strangulation. In 1947, forty large American cities reported not a single case of diphtheria, and fifteen of these none for five years. Today no properly immunized person has diphtheria, and in 1953 there were only 160 deaths from this cause in the whole United States.

We might, as children or adults, have died of one or another form of meningitis, which, in my childhood, was called "brain fever," and very inaccurately diagnosed. Under "meningitis" was undoubtedly included tuberculosis of the brain, as well as the true meningococcus meningitis.

The true meningitis is caused by a specific germ, and, once that germ is isolated, can be cured. Previously there was no cure. Sufferers were considered nursing-care cases, with recovery depending wholly on the patient's resistance. Meningitis is infectious over a period of two weeks from contact. If, in a community of 1000, three persons had it, they were each a center of infection. Today the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

litor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague
Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe
Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer
Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Antoinette Bacchetta, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey, Laura Date

NOW . . . FROM ELECTROLUX . . . ANOTH

World's heavy

Imagine! An Electrolux® Cleaner for only

$69.75

YOU PAY AS LITTLE AS $5.00 PER MONTH!

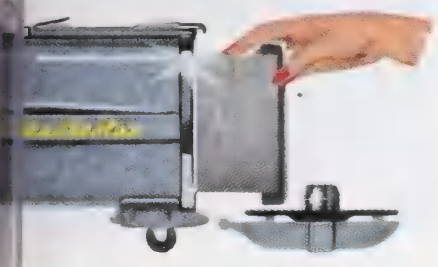
TWO TO

Like magic, two tools turn into five to clean your home! Wonderbrush (1) makes it easy to dust blinds, ings, cornices. Reversed (2), it's an upholstery tool hinged to clean tops and sides at same time.

EAT NEW WORK-SAVING DEVELOPMENT!

lightest-weight duty cleaner!..

So light, it follows finger-tip pressure! So efficient, it even seals the dirt in a throw-away bag—automatically! So economical, it can be yours for a low, low $69.75!



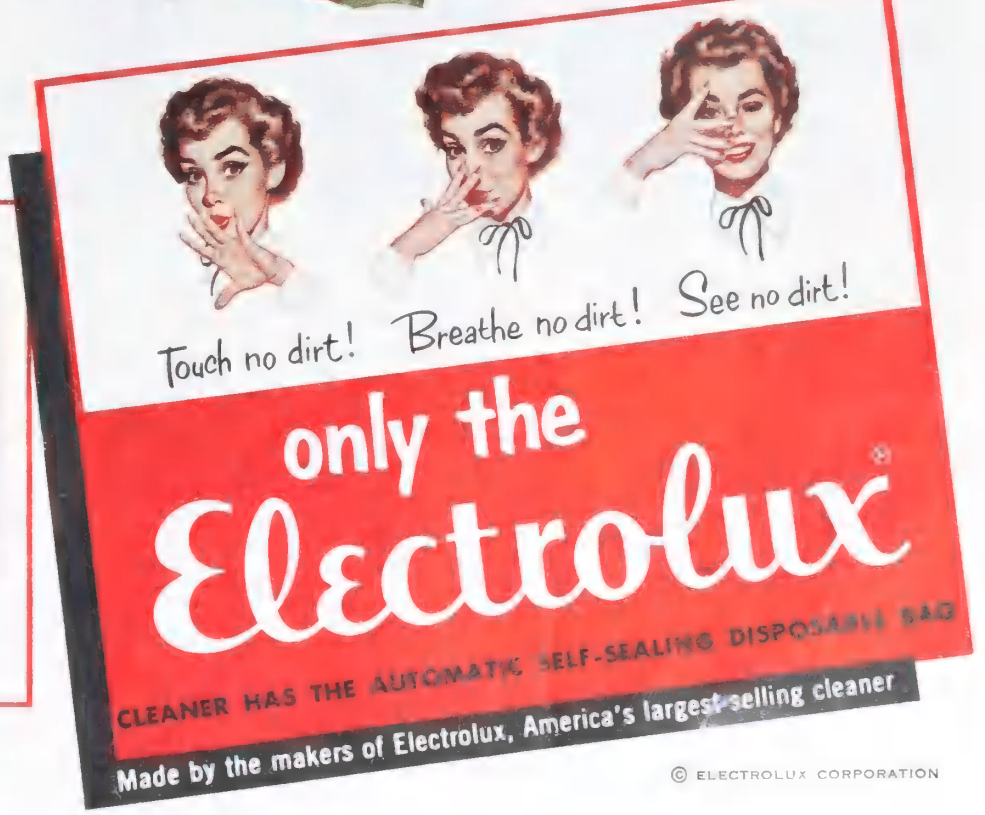
ensational new lightweight Electrolux® Cleaner, with amaz- ivel action, almost seems to anticipate your slightest move- Yet for all its marvelous lightness, this wonderful new olux has so much power it actually outcleans far bigger and r machines! And that's not all!

h this amazing new cleaner, you never touch, breathe, or e dirt! For the dirt is automatically sealed in a disposable Only the Electrolux gives you this marvelous advantage! l the price is just as sensational as the wonderful work- g advantages: Only $69.75 for a world-famous Electrolux— hest cleaner you can own! Once you see it in your home, agree it is the best cleaner investment you can make today!

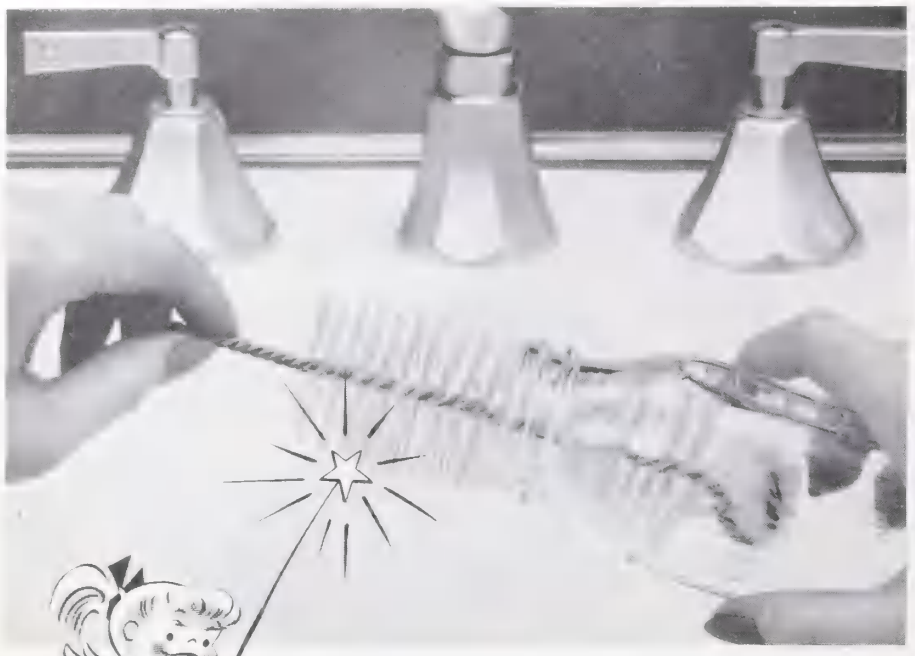
SOLD ONLY ON HOME DEMONSTRATION BY YOUR FRIENDLY ELECTROLUX MAN

Your Electrolux man lives right in your area; he may even be a neighbor. He is our Bonded Representative, and sells only guaranteed Electrolux products. When he comes to your door, invite him in. He will spend as much time as you wish, to show you how this cleaner's scores of uses make life easier for you. For a free home demonstration, call your authorized Electrolux factory branch or write the address below nearest you. Fully guaranteed.

Press the release button—the cleaner pops open. Whisk out the automatically sealed bag; throw it away. You never touch, breathe, or see the dirt!



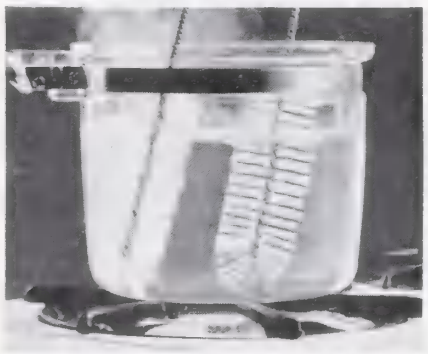
THE WORK OF FIVE!



l attachment, as a rug tool (3), glides under low furniture, picks up even air with ease. Reversed (4), it's a rful floor brush that cleans up dust fast, even from difficult cracks and corners. With same connection (5), it makes light work of cleaning dirt, dust, cobwebs from wall and ceiling areas.

ELECTROLUX CORPORATION, 500 Fifth Avenue, New York 36, N.Y.
417 Montgomery Street, San Francisco 4, California

© ELECTROLUX CORPORATION

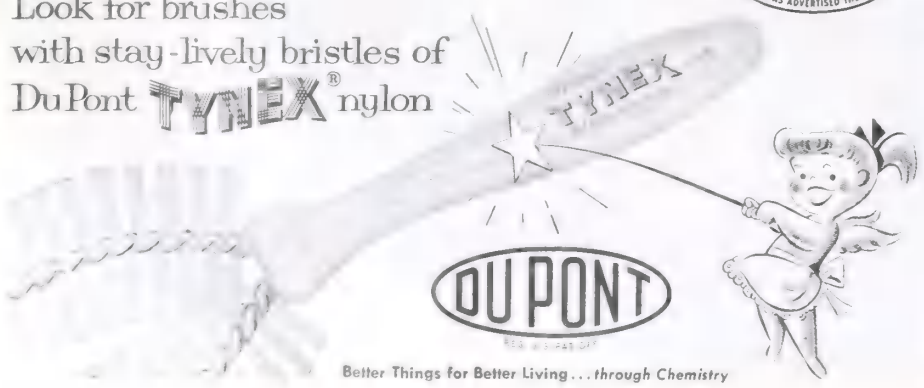


Stay-lively bristles of DuPont TYNEX® nylon speed cleaning...last longer

1. Lint whisks off like a breeze when you use this fine clothes brush. Its "Tynex" nylon bristles stay springy and sparkling for years.

2. Less effort when you scrub vegetables with this brush. Firm "Tynex" bristles dig out stubborn dirt, won't absorb odors, outwear other bristles.

3. Withstand hours of boiling! "Tynex" bristles can be sterilized. Even after repeated boilings, "Tynex" remains unharmed while ordinary bristles are ruined.



4. A lovelier you . . . beauty care's so easy with personal brushes bristled with "Tynex." They clean with just a rinse and a shake. It pays to ask for "Tynex."

"Tynex" is the registered trade-mark for genuine Du Pont nylon bristles

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if not as advertised therein

Look for brushes with stay-lively bristles of DuPont TYNEX® nylon

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

diagnosis is made in forty-eight hours and infection destroyed by antibiotics, as is the disease itself. The chances of one's dying from it have greatly decreased.

In 1920, 10 per cent of deaths were from pneumonia. It was a dangerous killer, striking down normally healthy men, women and children. Again there was no known cure except nursing care. As late as 1930, if you developed pneumonia you had three chances in ten of dying from it. Then science began screening the various types of pneumonia, and the finding of specific serums for various types reduced mortality by around 50 per cent. With the advent of antibiotics, pneumonia is no longer in the forefront of dangerous diseases. It caused less than 3 per cent of deaths in 1953. Most people survive it unless debilitated by something else.

Fifty years ago tuberculosis was a dreadful scourge. In 1900, 1 death in 9 was from t.b.; in 1953, 1 out of 76. We have nearly nine times as good a chance not to die of t.b. as did our fairly immediate ancestors.

Antibiotics are not specifics for tuberculosis, as they are for pneumonia, meningitis, gonorrhea and syphilis, the last of which was also once a hideous killer, transferred congenitally to another generation, and often ending in insanity or paralysis. But a new drug, Isoniazid, though it does not specifically eliminate the disease process of tuberculosis, does halt its development. The radical decline in the disease and death rate from the "white plague," or "consumption,"

Things endure in human affairs when they are made not of pride and power, but of humility and the love of truth. —WALTER LIPPMANN is attributable partly to this drug but primarily to improved diet, better living conditions, care programs, means to prevent spreading infection, and surgery—collapsing of the lungs, and removal of infected parts.
Shining Lines.

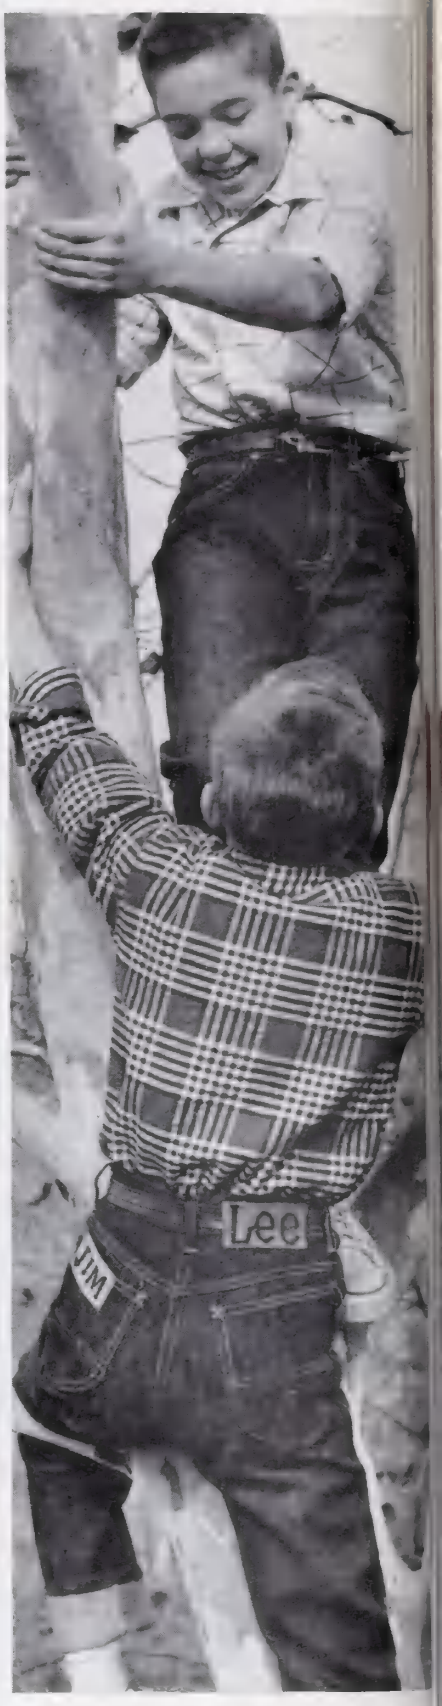
Typhoid fever was common until thirty years ago. Today one can be inoculated and completely immunized against it, as travelers in parts of the world where Western sanitary conditions do not exist invariably are. In North America today, relatively few people even take the trouble to immunize themselves against typhoid, yellow fever or typhus because sanitation has practically banished them—sanitized sewage disposal, control of water and milk supplies and of handlers of food as measures against typhoid; the banishment of the specific mosquito carrier of yellow fever, and the lice that spread typhus. In 1953 there were only 20 deaths from typhoid in America. The last yellow-fever epidemic was in New Orleans in 1905, and there have been no cases in many years. Typhus is extremely infrequent. If you're not satisfied with these facts, get yourself immunized.

Mastoiditis is another disease all but banished by antibiotics. One New York hospital that used to operate a case every day has not had one in the past five years. Today antibiotics cure the initial sore throats before they spread to the mastoid sinus.

Fifty years ago you might have died or been disfigured for life by smallpox. As late as 1920 there were 109,000 cases in the United States. In 1948 there were 56 cases, with 5 deaths, and they needn't have happened either.



Is it not cheerful to think about these unhappy possibilities you have escaped, and the diseases that your children are unlikely ever to contract?

Of course we are all going to die eventually of something or other. As schoolboys used to declaim:

Ashes to ashes,
Dust to dust;

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

Clothes Wreckers

Dress 'em in rugged

Lee Riders

and let 'em romp!

Blue jeans are a busy Mother's salvation. And Lee Riders are the toughest "best buy" jeans of all. You buy them to fit exactly because they're Sanforized—for permanent fit. Inexpensive, easy to wash, need no ironing. Bartacked at stress points for longer wear. Kids love their authentic cowboy style. None genuine without the branded leather Lee label. At Lee Dealers' everywhere. COPYRIGHT 1955

Lee

The H. D. LEE CO., Kansas City 8, Mo.

The piano that belongs in your home

Can you picture this scene in your own living room? Can you visualize how much true family pleasure you and your children will receive from owning a magnificent Lester Piano?

The ability to play is an invaluable social asset for girls and boys. It builds poise, popularity and inner resourcefulness . . . all benefits that last a lifetime. Start your family on the road to musical happiness by selecting a genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet now. You will never regret it.

Available in a wide choice of light or dark woods; in modern or traditional styles.

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

Built by the same family since 1888 . . . every Betsy Ross Spinet has Lester's exclusive Amplified Tone, responsive touch and full volume. Full 88 note keyboard; 10 year guarantee; most styles are Dampp-Chaser® equipped for regulated moisture control. Priced from $535.00; French Provincial model pictured . . . $777.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

MAIL THIS COUPON

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.
Please send me FREE literature and style brochure.

Name_____

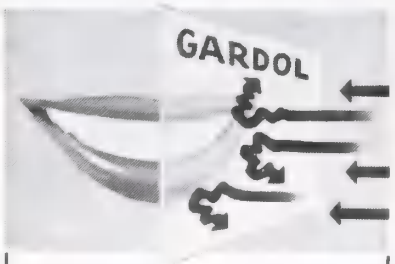
Address_____

City_____

Zone No._____ State_____ 4J55

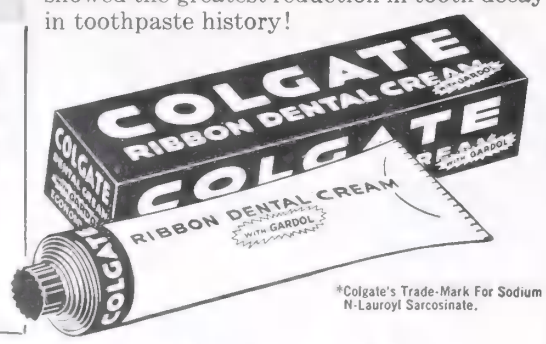
Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 28 Broadway, New York 6, N.Y.

THE LESTER PIANO IS THE OFFICIAL PIANO OF THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA



EVEN IF YOU BRUSH YOUR TEETH ONLY ONCE A DAY

Colgate Dental Cream Gives The Surest Protection All Day Long!



Brushing For Brushing, It's The Surest Protection Ever Offered By Any Toothpaste! Because Only Colgate Dental Cream —Of All Leading Toothpastes—Contains GARDOL* To Stop Bad Breath Instantly—Guard Against Tooth Decay Longer!

Gardol, Colgate's wonderful new decay-fighter, forms an invisible shield around your teeth. You can't feel it, taste it, or see it—but Gardol's protection won't rinse off or wear off all day. That's why Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol fights tooth decay 12 hours or more!

BRUSH AS OFTEN AS YOUR DENTIST TELLS YOU! But remember! Even if that's only once a day, Colgate Dental Cream gives the surest protection all day long! Stops bad breath instantly in 7 out of 10 cases that originate in the mouth! Fights tooth decay 12 hours or more! In fact, clinical tests showed the greatest reduction in tooth decay in toothpaste history!

*Colgate's Trade-Mark For Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate.

Every Time You Use It . . . New Colgate Dental Cream CLEANS YOUR BREATH WHILE IT GUARDS YOUR TEETH!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

If Latin don't kill you, Geometry must.

The longer we live, the nearer we are to the end. But this was not always so. Many of the diseases now under all-but-complete control carried off children, young people, and men and women in the prime of life. The diseases that are on the increase are precisely the so-called "degenerative" diseases that afflict people past middle age—or past what, fifty years ago, was, actuarially speaking, old age. The child who died of diphtheria, the young mother who did not survive childbirth, the victim of smallpox or typhoid, the otherwise hale and hearty man who succumbed to pneumonia never showed up as a cancer or coronary-thrombosis statistic. The increased incidence of cancer and various circulatory and heart diseases is a natural accompaniment of longevity. This is the chief reason that cancer is "on the increase." More people live to get it.

But there is also another reason for the statistical increase: improved knowledge and diagnosis. Leukemia (cancer of the blood) was killing people from the beginning of time, but differential diagnosis of its many types goes back only some forty years. Undoubtedly many people who died of lung cancer (before the days of X rays and tests made on small bits of infected tissue surgically removed) were put down as dying from "congestion of the lungs"—as many deaths from appendicitis and other abdominal diseases were blanketed under "inflammation of the bowels."

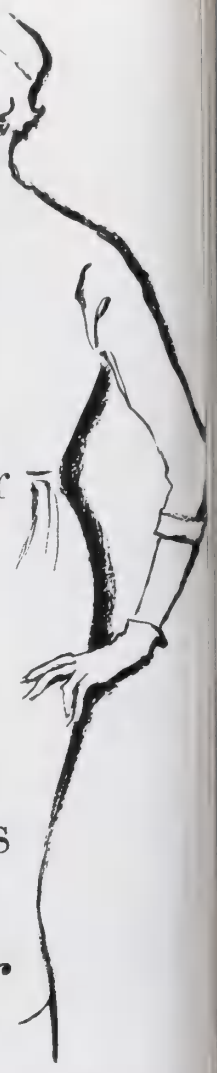
Common sense bows to the inevitable and makes use of it. It does not ask an impossible chessboard, but takes the one before it, and plays the best game. —WENDELL PHILLIPS

Nevertheless, it is unhappily true that the longer you live, the more likely you are to develop cancer, and there are four times as many Americans sixty-five years and over as there were in 1900.

Few people over the age of fifty are ever "perfectly well" in the sense that they were ebullient with health in their youth. Physical functions do not improve with age, yet all of us, despite stronger and stronger glasses, fewer and fewer teeth (but better and better bridges) and the recognition that we can no longer digest nails or engage in vigorous competitive exercise, want to live in reasonable health as long as possible, taking comfort in the thought that the organ that we think with, and that makes us most distinctively human, the brain, often reaches full maturity only when the rest of the body has been running down for quite a long time—which is one very good reason for our wanting to prolong our lives. For as long as we can appreciate, discern, discriminate, analyze—in short, think—we know that we are in the most important sense fully alive. We recognize mental health to be the most valuable of all health.

But, you may say, mental diseases are also on the increase. "About one in every twenty persons spends part of his life in an institution for mental patients."

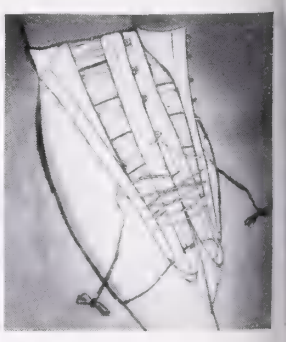
Whether mental disease is proportionately more current now than it was fifty years ago is hard to assess statistically. There are vastly more cases because the population is growing at the rate of 20,000,000 every decade. And an immeasurably larger proportion of deranged people are spotted as such and institutionalized. In my childhood, in the small towns where I lived, I remember a number of "queer" people, harmlessly "goofy," who lived and were cared for by relatives and never showed up in statistics.



During World War II the nation was astonished and alarmed to learn that the largest number of rejected recruits were neuropsychological cases.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

Leading stylists say:



Look inches slimmer and wear today's slender fashions with a

P.N. Practical Front

Here's the easy way to look inches smaller! P.N. Practical Front controls those unwanted inches—tucks you in with firmness and comfort! And thanks to its front lacing, you have a perfect fitting every time you wear it.

See how fitting the new fashions are for your figure. And P.N.'s practical price lets you buy more fashions! Starting at $5.95

P.N. perfectly natural to look your slender best

Practical Front

A product of Sarong, Inc.
200 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

Mom! Your Easter hunt ends here!

Three bright ideas for Easter time in Arrow Sport Shirts. Left, a cotton chambray tailored for fine fit and long wear. Center, fine cotton-oxford cloth in smart, colorfast tones. Right, smart styling in a nubby-weave fabric. Completely washable. All shirts "Sanforized"-labeled in long and short sleeves. Juniors, sizes 4-12, $2.95 up. Grads, sizes 12-20, $3.50 up.

Sport knits that really fit are a springtime "must." Left, Continental influence in a comfortable knit for Juniors. Sizes 4-12, $2.95. Right, a new polo model in light plaids for Grads. Sizes 12-20, $3.50. Both smartly styled. Both washable.

Perfect-fitting Arrow Shirts. Left, Arrow Par for Juniors and Grads. A neat, soft, spread collar $3.50 and $3.65. Right, a Radnor-E—soft, rounded collar with eyelets. French and regular cuffs for Juniors and Grads, $3.50 and $3.95. Both "Sanforized"-labeled . . . both Mitoga® cut for good fit . . . in exact collar sizes and sleeve lengths, of course.

Bow 'n Arrow gift set. For Juniors. A fine-fitting Arrow Shirt, harmonizing tie and cuff-link ensemble. Shown—a Sussex: soft, spread collar with French cuffs. It's the perfect Easter gift for every Junior. $3.95

Give your boy a complete Arrow boy's wardrobe for perfect fit and wonderful looks. And when wash-day rolls around, you'll be specially glad you bought Arrow. They wash so easily, iron up to perfection. Best of all, they'll stand the rugged wear boys give their shirts.

For the Easter-parade look every day—put your lads in Arrow Shirts.

ARROW

SHIRTS FOR BOYS

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc

The difference between this... → and this... ↘ is often this... →

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

But at the end of the last century there was also a war—the Spanish-American. We don't know how many recruits might have been rejected had the Army had a department of neuropsychology. But it didn't. Nor were there, fifty years ago, any child psychologists to spot psychic derangements in children.

Increased longevity contributes to the mental statistics also. The young and middle-aged don't suffer from senile arteriosclerosis, which creates a mental condition.

Yet there is general belief among experts that various forms of psychosis are on the increase, absolutely and relatively, due to the strains and stresses of our increasingly complicated lives—strains and stresses that also contribute to the increase of heart diseases.

I am convinced that this is true; though, again, the longer you live, the more likely it is that your heart will give out in one way or another. But I was recently in the Detroit area and noticed reports of a number of deaths of industrial executives in the early or middle fifties. A physician (himself a heart specialist) commented when I remarked upon it, "I think a large number of these deaths are really war casualties. During the war they worked under terrific strains, assuming abnormal responsibilities. Now, ten years later, these strains are taking their toll."

Now we know that mental and emotional stresses do immensely influence bodily conditions; and, indeed, the most fascinating and promising research now being done is in the field of "psychosomatics," and on the influence of mental and emotional stress on physical health. Emotional stress we now know may be a prime contributory to all diseases, including the degenerative ones.

A man should pass part of his time with the laughers.
—SAMUEL JOHNSON

Popular parlance has always recognized this. We say "blind with rage," "sick with grief," "pale with fear," "blush for shame," "faint at the sight of blood," and so on, each phrase describing physical reactions to emotions or to mental images. But only very recently has science demonstrated the extent to which the interrelation exists and traced the anatomical processes which it involves.

At the base of the brain, and a portion of it, is the hypothalamus gland. It is by way of this gland that sense impressions are communicated and we apperceive emotions. The pituitary gland, an anatomical outgrowth of the hypothalamus, receives these apperceptions and impressions from its neighbor, and there is a physiological connection, or axis, between the pituitary and the adrenal cortex, a little cap on the top of each kidney.

Now, the adrenal cortex produces some twenty-odd important chemicals called "steroid hormones." The functions of all of these are not yet known. But ACTH, produced by the pituitary, stimulates the adrenal cortex to produce these steroids which have a tremendous physical effect on the body. One of these steroids is the powerful cortisone, now being used as a treatment for rheumatoid arthritis. The production of these steroid hormones is necessary to the control of the delicate chemical structure of the body; but produced in excess, as the result of exceptional mental or emotional stress, or prolonged acute anxiety, they are poisons that can interrupt the intestinal processes, affect the circulation and probably the cells. In fact, it is not merely a manner of speaking when we say "scared" or "worried to death." Fear and worry do produce, temporarily, poisons that can start a process of physiological deterioration. Men facing a firing squad have been known to lose all control of their bladders and bowels even when their outward mien was of calm fortitude. Fear and shock do raise the blood pressure. Bad — and first choice for the youngsters, too. Many a parent, brought up on Ace Hard Rubber Combs, knows they just can't scratch scalp or tear hair because every edge and end is polished satiny-smooth. Moderately priced . . . individually packaged. Sizes for all the family — at home or away.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 21

American Hard Rubber Co., N.Y.13.

ACE® HARD RUBBER
COMBS

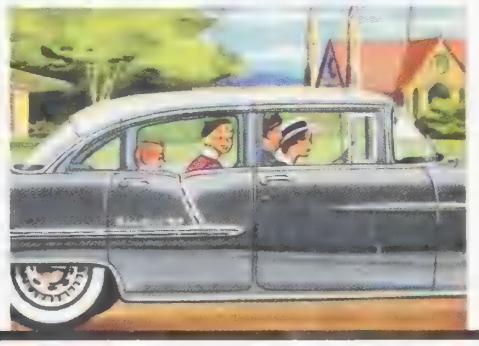
SMOOTHER • STRONGER • LAST MUCH LONGER

ABOUT CLOTHES AND CARS

You're going to Church

It's a day of devotion . . . quiet and relaxing.

You'll wear your Sunday best–a beautifully simple dress.



Ride in fashionable serenity in a glamorous Motoramic Chevrolet

Bel Air four-door. Here's why . . .

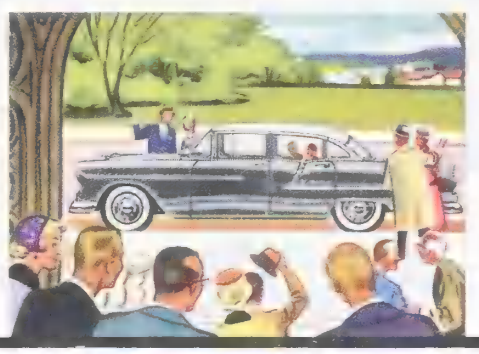
It's so inviting! Kitten-soft foam-rubber cushions . . . lavish fabrics and trim . . . exciting colors . . . rich thick-pile carpeting. And lots more room for hats, hips and shoulders.



At ease. You ride in velvety comfort with new Glide-Ride Suspension—serene in your knowledge that it will cushion all road shocks, take you safely, smoothly, on your way.

Sweep in and out in ladylike fashion. The spacious and beautiful Body by Fisher is designed for graceful entrance and exit—seats are low . . . doors swing wide.

You'll be proud of the long, low, luxurious look of it. This sleek beauty makes fashion sense. It's the low-priced car with the high-priced look—the car most women love most!

The Motoramic Chevrolet

CHEVROLET

STEALING THE THUNDER FROM THE HIGH-PRICED CARS

Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan

New easy way to clean a whole house

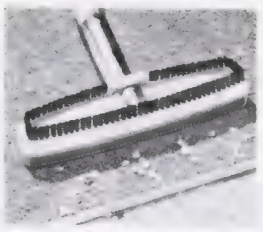
NEW GE Roll-around Cleaner

only $69.95* COMPLETE

*Manufacturer's Fair Trade or suggested retail price. Complete with caddy and full set of attachments.

The new G-E Roll-around Cleaner is mounted on smooth-running wheels. You can roll it effortlessly all through the house. And it's light in weight—easy to take up and down stairs.

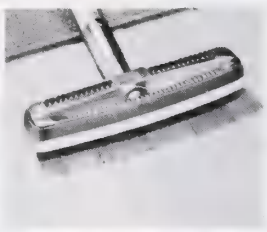
It's always ready for action! With its new 2-in-1 floor and rug cleaning unit attached, you're ready to clean rugs, carpets and floors (and that's 85% of the cleaning you do)! And it's so versatile! There's an attachment for every cleaning purpose.



See the new Roll-around Cleaner at your G-E dealer's soon. General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

1. Stores easily—this new cleaner fits compactly into any corner or closet. Completely assembled—it's ready for action. Just roll it out . . .

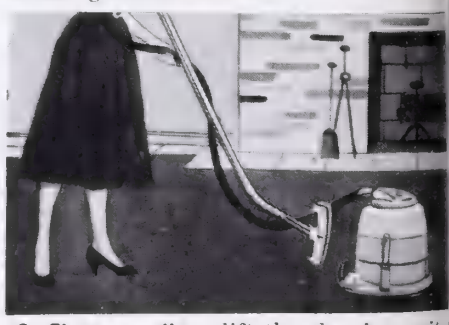
Famous G-E Swivel-top for "Reach-easy" cleaning!



You can do two cleaning jobs easily with one attachment!

IT CLEANS RUGS!

LIFT, IT TURNS ITSELF OVER!



IT CLEANS FLOORS!

You clean your rugs with a powerful tool that gets up even "deep-below-the-nap" dirt. Then, lift the lightweight wand . . . the attachment turns itself over and . . . you clean your floors with a powerful tool that gets up even "deep-in-the-cracks" dirt! Only General Electric has it!

It's the most beautiful cleaner in the world . . . color styled by Freda Diamond.

2. Rolls easily—glides from room to room, over scatter rugs and door sills. Cleaning wand acts as a convenient steering handle. And it . . .

3. Cleans easily—lift the cleaning unit from the built-in carrying cradle—clean rugs, carpets and floors without even changing attachments.

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL GE ELECTRIC

Another Almond Masterpiece"

ALMOND MOCHA TORTE

UTATIONS ARE WON WITH CAKE LIKE . Ground almonds give this Mocha te extra flavor. Whole (or chopped) al- ds top it with perfection, like the finest es in your baker's window. Make it way:

ggs	½ tsp. vanilla
p sugar	1 level tsp. baking powder
sp. melted butter	½ tsp. salt
p ground almonds	½ cup flour

arate eggs and add sugar to yolks, beat- until creamy. Beat in butter and add r sifted with baking powder and va- a, and salt. Beat the whites of eggs, n add the ground almonds stirring into first mixture. Bake in 2 layers (9 in. s) for 15 minutes in 350° oven.

FILLING

pt. cream	1 tbsp. powdered sugar
tbsp. powdered coffee	Toasted almonds at cream until stiff and add coffee and ar. Put filling between and on top of ers and top with whole (or chopped) nonds, using blanched or natural meats, ntly toasted. Let cake stand overnight ore serving.

Almonds glorify 'most any dish

r topping ice cream, cookies, cakes, or enriching salads and entrees, toast tural (unblanched) kernels 20 minutes in 0° oven, using teaspoon butter per cup. e some for cooking, salt the rest. M-m-m.

Buy Blue Diamond almonds shelled or in shell, or try Blue Diamond Buttered Almonds, ready-roasted-and diced.

California Almond Growers Exchange, Sacramento, Cal.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

news can cause a contraction of the circulatory system of the brain, depriving it of blood, so that the recipient of the news "faints dead away."

One of the difficulties of using cortisone as a medicine is that prolonged administration of it, though it sensationally clears up arthritis, can have other less happy effects, one of them being psychosis—or insanity. Yet our bodies produce it, and it helps to keep us well unless too much is let loose.

These researches throw light on the anatomy of certain crimes committed during "temporary insanity." Now we know that intense emotional stress, loosing these powerful chemicals, can drive a person "out of his mind," into a condition where he really does not know what he is doing.

The ancient Greeks, whose ideal was a sane mind in a sound body, perceived the connection between them. Physicians without precise scientific warrant have observed that extroverted types—people who are more interested in others than in themselves—usually are physically healthier than those who are continually contemplating their own symptoms.

Alcoholism, which also contributes to mental and nervous breakdowns, is undoubtedly psychologically conditioned. People do "drown their sorrows in drink," especially their sorrows about themselves—their feelings of inadequacy or inferiority, their inability to meet the various challenges of life.

Only the pure in heart can make a good soup. —BEETHOVEN

Walt Whitman, who wrote that everything a child saw, heard or received through his senses became part of him forever, was evidently writing truer than he knew. The established connection between emotions produced by sense impressions and physical health leads us to inquire whether exciting films and comics depicting tension and acts of violence may not be affecting our children's digestions, blood pressures and sanity, as well as their morals.

Not all are equally sensitive to sense impressions and emotional stimulation, but in general the higher the intelligence, the more susceptible they are. And this might lead us to inquire why artists and intellectuals, as a group, and in general, smoke more than manual workers do, and why, if they give up smoking, they are inclined to overeat. Does smoking really take away the appetite, or is it a substitute sedative? For both smoking and eating are sedatives to overactive minds and emotions. The old "funeral meats" of which mourners plentifully partook were a recognition that eating does somewhat assuage grief. And if you compensate for smoking by voracious eating, you will certainly increase the load on your heart. So before it is definitely proved that tobacco contributes to lung cancer—and the statistical studies are, as I write, inconclusive and controversial—those who find comfort and relaxation in smoking may ponder whether the habit does not actually provide a necessary sedation, and whether tortured fear of cancer or anything else may not actually contribute to inducing disease.

Research into the pathology of strain will, it is anticipated, lead to the discovery of ways to check these overactive steroids and redress the chemical balance of the body.

But meanwhile, to cultivate confidence rather than fear, belief rather than doubt, to look for good rather than evil, to love rather than hate, to forgive rather than cherish resentments, to concentrate on peace rather than war, will certainly make us all happier; and, according to these latest findings, keep us healthier, too, and prolong our lives.

Jesus of Nazareth taught His followers this a long time ago. And He was a great healer of the bodies and minds of men. END

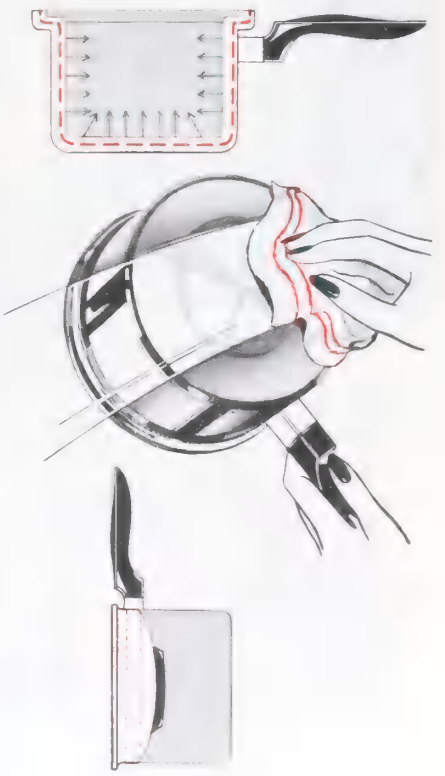
See for Yourself Why

FLINT-WARE

Makes All Other Cookware Old Fashioned!

The Only Cookware with the invisible

Radiant Heat Core



Flint-Ware is triple-layer steel – and its middle layer is an amazing Radiant Heat Core that spreads heat not just across the bottom, but up and around the sides, too. Cooks everything faster and more evenly!

Vanadium Stainless Steel . . . Washes Clean Easy as Dishes

Flint-Ware's wonderful Radiant Heat Core is sandwiched between two layers of vanadium stainless steel that cleans with no scouring . . . gleams with no polishing! Flint-Ware skillets and saucepans are as easy to wash as a dish!

"Store-Away" Covers!

One of many new convenient Flint-Ware features! Just flip covers over and store right in your Flint-Ware! See the complete Flint-Ware line wherever fine housewares are sold in the United States and Canada. See for yourself why Flint-Ware is the only cookware so good it's guaranteed for 15 years!

EKCO ...the greatest names in housewares!

FLINT

Ekco Products Company, Chicago 39, Illinois

here's the

BEAUTIFUL BUY

in automatic home laundries

Copyright 1955 Hamilton Manufacturing Comp

the wonderful new

Hamilton

Wouldn't you just know the home laundry of the year would be a Hamilton? Who else but Hamilton was making automatic laundering equipment long before most of you were brides? It's this priceless "head start" that brings you all 12 exclusive features found only in today's beautiful new Hamilton. Best of all, Hamilton washers or dryers cost as little as $199.95 . . . see them now at your Hamilton Dealer's.

For perfect controlled sud washing

Hamilton recommends Al

For modern design...for features...for value—the BEAUTIFUL BUY is Hamilto

Club Projects Abroad

By MARGARET HICKEY

How families of members of our armed forces stationed abroad help each other and build good will for our country was the theme of the fourteenth biannual American Women's Activities Conference in Europe. From nine European countries 564 women came as delegates of their various overseas clubs to Berchtesgaden to exchange do's and don'ts for meeting their family needs—whether in an isolated foreign community or in a crowded compound near an Army base. Their discussions included suggestions, also, for meeting the need for understanding and friendly living with their German neighbors.

Just as it is at home, the women's club overseas has become the haven to which wives come for friendship, interesting activity and mutual help. It is especially important to women who turn to it during their lonely first days in a foreign country when, in the struggle with language, customs and currencies, they most miss their home town. Through language, sewing, home nursing and other classes held by the club, newcomers learn to adjust to their surroundings. And they soon discover ways to help German neighbors in a nearby community meet needs of their own—without creating impressions that might produce anti-American feeling.

The Friendly Hand Project, launched by the conference two years ago, brings together both German and American women's clubs. Through this project, 900 West Berlin children vacationed from four to six weeks in American homes in Germany last summer. Encouraged from the beginning by the enthusiasm of German families, who wished to send their children, and of American families, who offered to welcome them, German women's clubs selected the youngsters, and their American counterparts screened the applications. For children whose parents could not afford it, the city of Berlin paid transportation. Clutching lunches packed by American women, the children boarded buses headed in all directions—Frankfurt, Wiesbaden, Bremerhaven, Heidelberg, to join families who would introduce them to American customs and ways of life.

There were a few minor problems at first. Klaus, of Neukoelln, aged five, didn't like corn on the cob with butter sauce; nor did Kara, of Berlin, like rice flakes in milk. But both soon developed a real taste for milk shakes. Nine-year-old Maria lacked English, but her little hostess from the United States was enchanted. "It's just grand. Each of us rattles away in our own language," she said, "and we understand first class." German children noted how American parents and children played games together and they, too, joined in. Three-to-nine-year-olds seemed to enjoy the visits more than older children, who found it harder to understand their American playmates. But at vacation's end, nearly everyone returned home beaming, rested, weighing more, and bearing bicycles, electric toys, cowboy suits and invitations for Christmas—some even to the United States.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 124

Recreation center for a California town

. . . What community co-operation can do

On a Saturday morning in March, 1952, a line of cars, trucks and bulldozers rumbled along Franklin Avenue in suburban Santa Rosa, California, past Franklin Park and its playground. Children left their swings, slides and ball games to watch. At the north end of the park the procession came to a halt in front of a sprawling, abandoned sawmill. Men in work clothes piled out, then one of the heavy trucks was brought up and hooked onto a supporting beam at one corner of the dilapidated building. Moments later the truck roared into action. Wheels spun. The ancient building swayed, creaked, sagged. Then most of it came tumbling to the ground in a cloud of dust and a crash of splintering timbers.

The workers cheered. Children rushed forward clamoring eager offers of help. All offers met a firm chorus of adult no's. It was too dangerous, and danger was a thing this project was planned to eliminate. For years the old sawmill had been a source of fear to parents of the district. "You just couldn't keep the children from playing there," explains pretty Charlotte Daniels, who looks too young to be the mother of four. "Luckily, all injuries had been minor, but every mother in the neighborhood had nightmares thinking of what could happen."

"We used to hold our breath when we saw the children sliding on those tumble-down beams," another mother agrees. "So we just kept at our men until they did something about it. Once started, there was no stopping them."

That was how, in place of the sawmill, Santa Rosa got a $20,000 recreation center—at no cost to the city.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 24

HANSEL MIETH-OTTO HAGEL

Doing things together has become a habit in Santa Rosa, California. On a do-it-yourselves basis, citizens built a much-needed recreation center. Parents and children together enjoy evening singing and relaxing by the fireside.

New!

Weight watchers dessert

...only 12 calories a serving!

Delightful D-Zerta Gelatin. Specially made for you who love sweets, but don't feel you should indulge in them! Wonderful, light-as-a-daisy desserts! So good you'll want to try all six flavors... strawberry, raspberry, cherry, orange, lemon and lime!

And...wonder of wonders...you get all of the flavor...none of the sugar! D-Zerta's delightfully sweetened with saccharin. CONTAINS ONLY 12 CALORIES PER SERVING! Costs about 4 pennies a serving, too! Pick up some D-Zerta Gelatin in your grocery store tomorrow!

All of the flavor... none of the sugar!

D-ZERTA

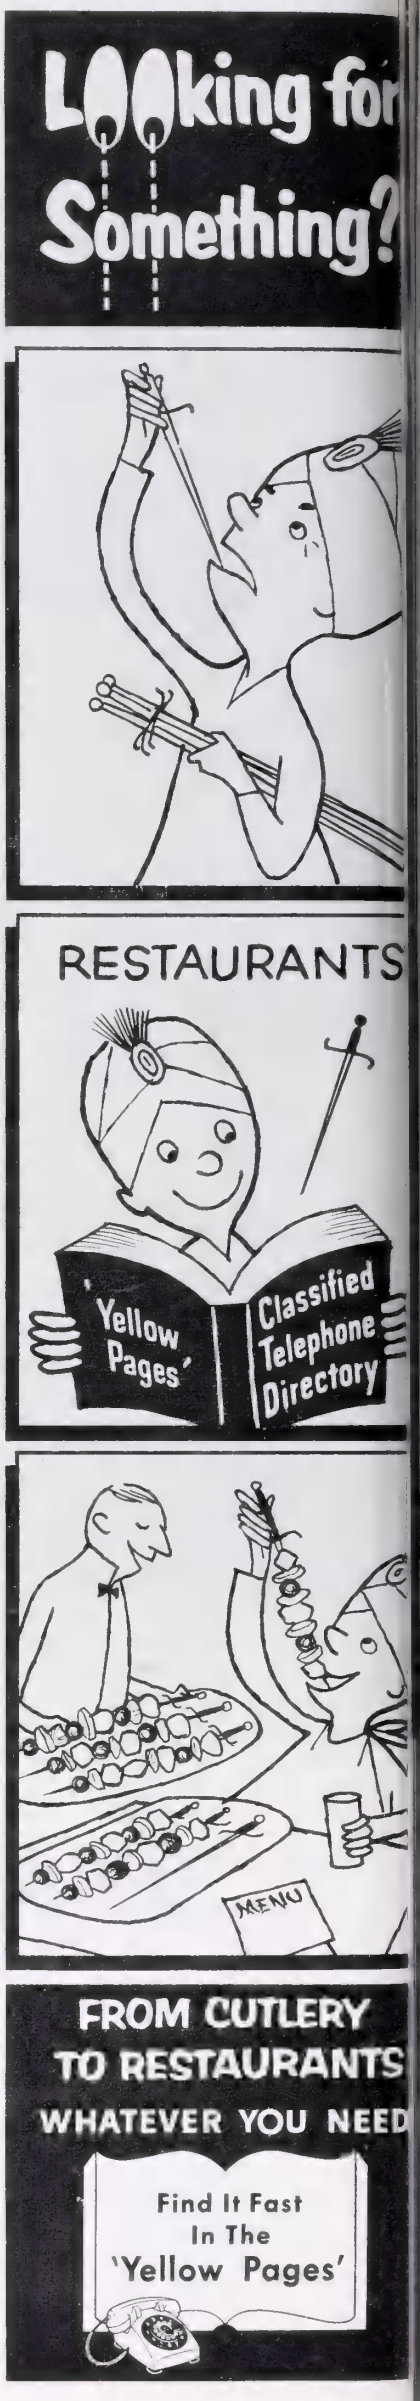
Made by the makers of JELL-O desserts... for those who must watch their sugar intake.

Jell-O and D-Zerta are registered trade-marks of General Foods Corporation. A Product of General Foods

The center was built by the Franklin Park Association—150 members, most of them parents of young children. All labor, equipment, materials and money that went into the building were donated. It was the modern do-it-yourself trend on a community level. Or perhaps it was a revival of the old frontier-days group spirit that could raise a new house, school or church in a day—and then hold a box supper and dance afterward. Of it, Santa Rosa's mayor, Lawrence Zuur, says, "We point to Franklin Park as an outstanding example of what community cooperation can do. These people showed us that they could—and would—help themselves."

All day Saturday the work of razing the mill went on. More volunteers showed up on Sunday. People who came to watch stayed to work. The children were allowed to watch, too, from a safe distance. "You never saw a more fascinated bunch of side-line superintendents," one FPA member says. The neighborhood postman—himself an FPA-er—grins and adds, "Even the dogs turned out on the job. I recognized every familiar bark along my mail route."

At nightfall on Sunday, weary workers gathered for mutual congratulations over cups of steaming coffee. The old mill was a heap of rubble. All usable scrap was salvaged. Bulldozers and a six-ton crane were dealing with the building's huge concrete foundation blocks. What couldn't be salvaged was being burned. (To the delight of the children, the city sent an old fire engine—top speed in transit, fourteen miles an hour—to stand by as a safety measure. FPA member J. D. Howard took a short course in fire prevention and was made fire chief for a day.)



The reason so few reach the top is because no successful method has yet been devised by which a person may sit down and slide uphill.

—TONY WONS SCRAPBOOK
(The Reilly & Lee Co.)

A number of people, including members of the city government, had thought the job too big for a group of neighborhood volunteers. Santa Rosa's Park and Recreation Commission had reminded the FPA that the city had recently invested $10,000 in land to expand Franklin Park itself, could not immediately stretch its budget to cover the estimated $1500-to-$2000 cost of razing the sawmill. FPA-ers countered with their "We'll do it ourselves" proposal. This, they pointed out, would save the city and the taxpayers money all around. There were legal and technical obstacles to this proposal. What would happen if a volunteer worker got hurt on the job? With no payroll, how could they manage the insurance? Could amateur workmen handle problems that were bound to arise in such an ambitious undertaking? FPA-ers replied that at least two of their members—Charles Haun and Kenneth Caven—were licensed contractors. Lawyers volunteered their services and a community license covering the contractual part of the work was properly drawn up under Mr. Haun's regular contractor's license. Plans for the building were contributed by architect J. Clarence Felciano.

Comparing notes that Sunday night, FPA-ers found that a lot of hands—doctors', lawyers', teachers', office workers'—wore unaccustomed blisters. "There was quite a local boom in liniment sales too," one member recalls ruefully. A worker had scratched his forearm on a nail. The project's only casualty, this was treated immediately by a doctor who downed pick and shovel to apply first aid. "You see," FPA president Fred Daniels says (with suspicious solemnity), "we were ready for anything on this job. We even had a psychiatrist handy. While we never had to avail ourselves of his professional services, he was a mighty good man with a hammer and saw.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 26

Illustrated, 8 of Gorham's 23 timeless patterns: (A) "Theme"* (B) "Willow"* (C) "Strasbourg"* (D) "Rondo"* (E) "Lily of the Valley"* (F) "Greenbrier"* (G) "Melrose"* (H) "King Edward"*

Choose it today. Use it tonight! Take home all the Gorham Sterling you need to set a pretty table for as little as 5.00 a week course, you've always wanted Gorham*, and now 't it wonderful to know that you don't have to ttle for less: that you can take home a chest full of orham Sterling today and pay just a little each ek for it? And as you enjoy it, you'll come to appeciate even more what the Gorham signature on rling really means.

For instance, that deeper glow you see in Gorham erling grows more beautiful through the years. Because Gorham's deeper glow begins with the fineness the sterling itself. (All the sterling Gorham uses finer than the government standard for sterling.)

And the deeper cut! This Gorham mark of great craftsmanship insures all the pretty detail of your pattern against erasure even with the hardest daily use.

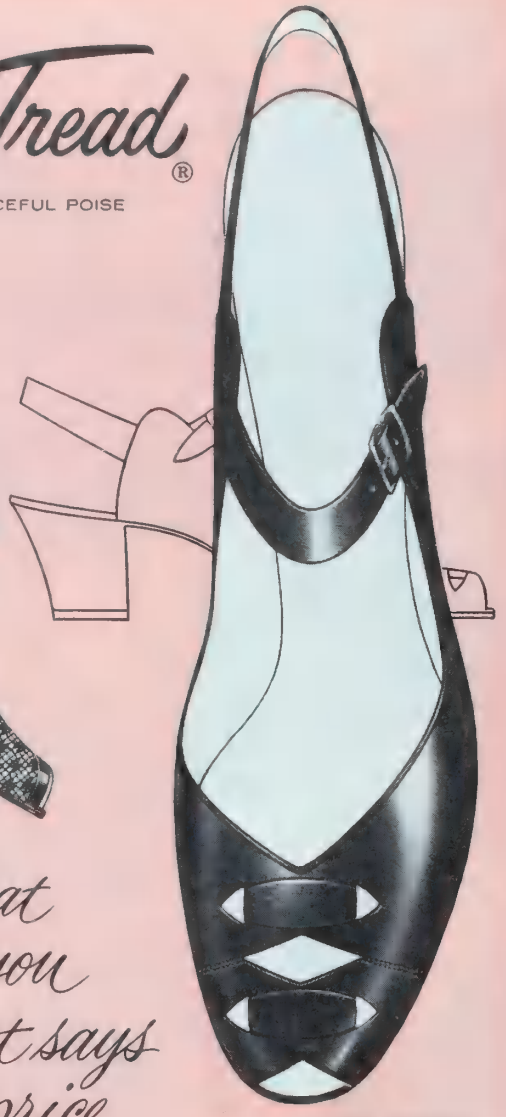
And the great strength that Gorham builds into all its sterling: you see it in the seamless, one-piece knife handle that never rattles, resists dents. Only Gorham makes knives this way.

And no matter how your tastes may change as you grow older, you'll still find pleasure in your Gorham Sterling because the patterns themselves are timeless in their beauty of design. Gorham wouldn't make any other kind, and there are twenty-three of these timeless Gorham patterns to choose from!

So why don't you make a dream come true and pick your Gorham pattern today? Prices for a single Gorham place-setting of six pieces start at $27.50, Fed. Tax included. Ask your dealer about budget payment plans.

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS SINCE 1831.

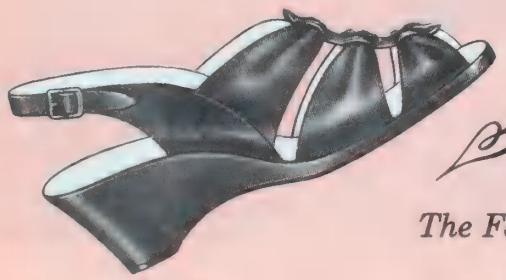


*TRADE MARKS © 1955 BY THE GORHAM CO. PROVIDENCE R.I.

Miracle-Tread®

SMART SHOES FOR GRACEFUL POISE

THE THRILLER
Flight Blue or White smooth leather—or Black Patent—with matching Cleopatra Nylonaire Mesh.



THE CADENCE
Basque Red, Black, Flight Blue or White smooth leather; also in Black Patent.

that made-for-you look that says twice the price

When you step into a pair, don't let their wonderful fit and beautiful quality deceive you. They DO cost only

$8.95 and $9.95

Casuals $7.95 and $8.95
Distant Points Slightly Higher

THE PINUP
In Avocado Green, White or Panama Kid.

The Fashion points Miracle-Tread's Vane to Festival Values of Fashion

MARCH 28 - APRIL 9

THE ELGIN
Cherry Red, Flight Blue, Benedictine Tan, White Bark, Black or White smooth leather.

Write for Name of Nearest Dealer

MIRACLE-TREAD DIVISION Craddock-Terry Shoe Corporation, Lynchburg, Virginia

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24

"Another obstacle we had to overcome," Mr. Daniels points out, "wasn't so much legal or technical as it was just human. A lot of people thought that our enthusiasm might wear out before the job was done—that the city might be left with a half-finished building on its hands. But enthusiasm went right on growing. People were afraid to stay away because they might miss the fun."

On March 27, dedication services were held in Franklin Park when Mr. and Mrs. Albert Clapp gave five Norway-spruce trees in memory of their son.

During April, the FPA held a membership drive. Those who paid their fee—$1 plus whatever additional amount they wanted to give—were told frankly, "Your membership entitles you to no privileges whatever—except the feeling of contributing to a worthwhile project."

In June, with $973.38 in the treasury (proceeds from the membership drive, donations from a P.T.A. group and a Camp Fire group) the FPA announced ground-breaking ceremonies and a money-raising carnival. Folk dancing, horseshoe pitching, peewee golf, a pie-eating contest, gaudy entertaining clowns, game booths and food sales netted $240 for the building fund. Then-mayor Alex McCluskey turned the first shovelful of ground for the new clubhouse, praised the association's efforts and assured them, "The city of Santa Rosa is behind you one hundred per cent."

A man who does not fool himself seldom cares much about fooling others. But the man who claims to have seen a ghost wants everybody else to believe in ghosts.

—E. W. HOWE.

In 35 working Sundays the FPA built its redwood clubhouse. As called for in the plans, it has a main meeting room 24′ x 48′, a convenient kitchen with pass-through and serving counter, an office with room for storage, two rest rooms accessible from clubhouse or playground. The beams are of Douglas fir, the high ceiling of redwood. One whole end of the meeting room is taken up by a big field-stone fireplace. Clerestory windows light the long south wall. The north wall (opening on a terrace) has both clerestory and long windows.

Three of the project's most active sponsors are brisk, red-haired Ruth Eades; slim, attractive Jean Caven, FPA secretary; and quiet Jean Taylor, whose soft voice can speak with real force about something she believes in—such as a safe place for children to play. "Around City Hall they began calling the three of us 'the Wolf Girls,'" she smiles. (Once owned by Mr. Paul Wolf, Franklin Park was originally known as "the Wolf tract.") "I guess you can't blame them. We haunted council meetings with petitions, and when we weren't actually asking for something we were underfoot just to remind them."

Members speak admiringly of Jean Caven's tact, her "refusal to be discouraged by anything!" and all the coffee and hot lunches she provided for the Sunday workers. The mimeographed FPA Newsletter often carried her appeal as head of the food committee: "Do you have a casserole you think men will like? Please call Jean Caven."

Ruth Eades, "a real organizer," tells how work plans were drawn up. "Friday nights we'd meet at one of the members' homes and decide what work to do on the following Sunday. Then we'd make out a list of the construction materials we needed. The men divided up the list and took it around to Santa Rosa supply firms. 'We need these things,' they'd say. 'What can you give us?'"

"And we were never turned down," Fred Daniels puts in. "When people understood the project was to benefit the kids, they just said, 'Sure, we'll help. Put us down for so many sacks of cement, so many feet of Sportswear Buyer reports:

CONTINUED ON PAGE 113

"Tweed goes with everything!"

Tweed is the one fragrance above all others to wear anytime, anywhere.

TWEED Perfume from 2.25
Mist 2.25 Bouquet 1.50
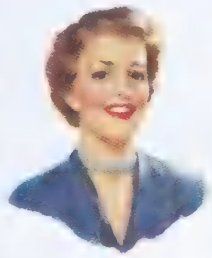
prices plus tax



Lentheric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON

TWA'S SUPER-G CONSTELLATION is the newest, most luxurious airliner in the skies! It is the only airliner that combines speed with the luxury that makes you think it was designed for women, and women alone.

"What every woman wants ... sheer luxury!" says Mary Gordon of TWA

There never, no never, was travel luxury like this . . . not even on a magic flying carpet!

Step aboard TWA's new Super-G Constellation and you are in a dream come true . . . a dream of beauty, speed, comfort, spaciousness.

Sink into a comfortable chair in one of the four compartments. Each is as roomy, as relaxing, as beautiful as the proudest living room! Or sleep away the miles in a full-length, dream-inviting berth.

Sleeping, relaxing or visiting is so pleasant in these new cabins where special soundproofing quiets the four mighty engines to a soothing hum.

Scores of other luxurious features make this the finest non-stop service between major cities coast to coast. You will be served delicious full-course, gourmet meals. You can enjoy your favorite drink with tasty canapés, rare cheese or fresh fruit in the friendly lounge . . . glare-free picture windows give you a better view of the world below . . . adjustable lights make reading a joy.

It sounds almost like a fairy tale . . . this tale of a new, luxurious way to travel. But it's true! Be one of the first to fly the finest, most luxurious airliners in the world. For reservations see your favorite travel agent, local TWA office or write Mary Gordon of Trans World Airlines, Dept. J, 380 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Coast to coast with nothing but luxury in between! That's the way you'll feel when you fly the only air sleeper service between New York and California. In the morning you can even have a piping-hot breakfast served in bed.

Fly the finest... FLY TWA

TRANS WORLD AIRLINES

U.S.A. · EUROPE · AFRICA · ASIA

The golfer's club whips through the air, and a sharp smack sends the ball streaking down the fairway—135 m.p.h! That's speed you can see—just as you can see the disintegrating speed of a Bayer Aspirin tablet when you drop it in a glass of water. It starts to disintegrate so fast you need a stopwatch to time its speed! Since the same thing happens in your stomach, this is one reason Bayer Aspirin gives you

Amazingly fast relief from

NEURALGIA
NEURITIC PAIN
HEADACHE

Bayer Aspirin's ability to relieve almost any kind of pain is well known to the medical profession. It is used by millions for fast relief —not only from headaches and pains of neuritis and neuralgia—but from muscular pains, discomforts of colds, and as a gargle for throat irritations. Bayer Aspirin is also used by many people who want to sleep at night, but are unable to because of some minor physical discomfort.

Get the BEST! Bayer Aspirin—the original aspirin—is not a "bargain" medicine. It's the best that science can make. It's the best that money can buy!

Feel Better Fast_ Use

BAYER ASPIRIN

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

E. J. EISENMEIER, F.P.G.

"I love coffee, I love tea" . . . one of the oldest games in the world.

WITH the pale new leaves coming out on the park trees; with flower carts, pulled by horses, rolling brightly across the city streets; the photographer taking pictures of pink babies in immaculate carriages; and the donkey out again for rides on Second Avenue, spring has come again to New York. Little girls are down on the sidewalks jumping rope.

"I love coffee,
I love tea,
I love the boys
And the boys love me.
A . . . B . . . C . . ."

There's a tidy little pamphlet called JUMP ROPE RHYTHMS, by Patricia Evans, that has all the rhymes you ever knew and brings back with frightful clarity the days when you were ten. It also makes the point that jumping rope is not just a hit-or-miss diversion of the young, but one of the oldest games in the world, and always connected with spring. Long ago when farmers had finished planting their crops, they gathered together and jumped rope. They believed that their crops would grow high as they themselves could ju (Porpoise Bookshop, 628 Montgon St., San Francisco, California. 25c.)

●

It's also good, in spring, to walk. good at any time to walk. And if you do the benefits of walking, I recommen book called THIS PACE IS NOT KILL US, by J. I. Rodale. (Rodale Pr Emmaus, Pa.) Being a walker, and one who squirms under some of feather-bed comforts of our modern istence, I subscribe heartily to nearly ery one of its somewhat radical notic The book is 63 pages long, costs a dol and I believe might easily add years our lives!

Rodale's chief contention is t our sedentary life with its steam h gadgets, cars is unhealthy. Man, believes, is being dangerously c dled, and he bolsters up his argum with passages from innumera doctors.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 31

"I never write to anybody. No sense in making extra work for some poor joker."

You feel so very sure of yourself... after a WHITE RAIN Shampoo!

You're confident you look your loveliest . . . your hair soft as a cloud . . . sunshine bright . . . every shimmering strand in place. That's the glorious feeling you have after using White Rain, the lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rainwater. Try it and see how wonderful you feel.

Use New WHITE RAIN Shampoo tonight and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

A great new pattern sets an exciting precedent in silverware design!

South Seas in Community

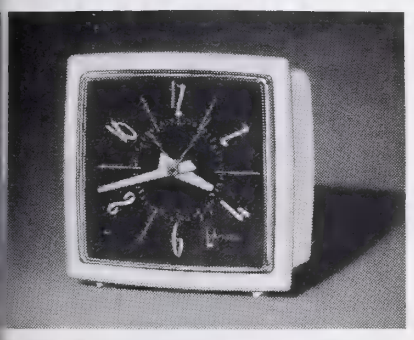
FOR ONLY 69¢, you can own this $2.50 value pierced tidbit server in South Seas pattern. A lovely piece for serving relishes, nuts, cheese. But hurry! Your silverware store has only a limited quantity!

Never, no, never before, has any silverware pattern won such instant acclaim. If you're a new bride, or wishing for a new, complete silverware service, it's for you! For *South Seas brings the spirit of today to your table—with beauty and quality unmatched by any other silverplate.

And if you've thought modern must be severe, you'll be enchanted by South Seas' graceful, free-form handles, impressive weight and gleaming pure-silver finish. But beauty is only the beginning of South Seas' appeal. For here is a totally new idea design. Newly proportioned pieces give your tabl fresh, delightful, contemporary look. New-size fun tional place knives and forks are equally at hor at a casual buffet or at your proudest dinner par

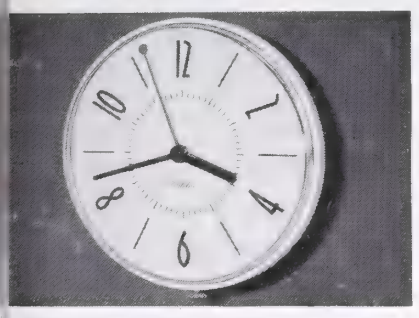
And this brilliant new Community* pattern is easy to own. Convenient budget terms. 52-pc. d ner service for eight, $79.75, including handson anti-tarnish chest. Proudly made and guarante by Oneida Ltd. Silversmiths.

TODAY'S LOOK IN FINE SILVERWARE



*REGISTERED BRAND OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N.Y., COPYRIGHT 1955, ONEIDA LTD.

ITTSFIELD ELECTRIC ALARM. Attrac- ve modern styling in rich wood case. lond or mahogany finish. Only 4½ ches high. Bell alarm. $7.95. With minous dial, a dollar more.



EW WESTCLOX ELECTRICS

o brighten up your home

LEEPMETER ELECTRIC ALARM. Smart odern case and dial. Only 4¼ inches igh. Bell alarm. Non-breakable crys- al. Sweep second hand. Ivory color. 5.45. Luminous, $6.45.

OUNTRY CLUB ELECTRIC ALARM. vory or green case in simple, clean nes. Unique modern face. Pleasant larm. Guaranteed for a year. $9.45. uminous dial, a dollar more.

RIM ELECTRIC WALL CLOCK. Only 5¾ ches in diameter. Non-breakable rystal. Sturdy metal case with dials red, yellow, white or green. Only 3.98. In sparkling chrome case, $4.98.

Prices do not include tax and are subject to change.

WESTCLOX

Electric Clocks

made by the makers of BIG BEN

La Salle-Peru, Illinois

Products of GT GENERAL TIME Corporation

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28

A few special books have come up recently for persons with special interests, but which on the whole make such good general reading that they deserve mention.

For those interested in music: MEN, WOMEN AND PIANOS, by Arthur Loesser (preface by Jacques Barzun). This is a social history from the days of the earliest keyboard instruments down to radio—a picture of courts and studios; biographies and manners; the music that was played, the persons who wrote it and those who played it.

Incidentally, everyone connected with the music world should know about the American Music Conference, 332 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, an organization equipped with information, advice, speakers, slide films, manuals, reports. . . . Did you realize that 19,300,000 people in this country play the piano? And that next in popularity are the guitar and the ukulele? That twenty years ago the musical-instrument business was declining, and today is booming? That school bands have tripled in number in the past six years? That classical-record sales are now above $60,000,000 a year? And that more Americans attend concerts than baseball games?

For the enjoyment and understanding of art: Four small books, half pictures, half text, by Bernard Berenson, who to my way of thinking knows more about art than all other art critics combined: SEEING AND KNOWING; PIERO DELLA FRANCESCA, The Ineloquent in Art; CARAVAGGIO, His Incongruity and His Fame; THE ARCH OF CONSTANTINE, The Decline in Form.

For educators, particularly in the field of girls' schools and colleges: EDUCATING WOMEN FOR A CHANGING WORLD, by Kate Hevner Mueller, a careful study of women's education based on scientific findings, and quite a revelation. Also, for women in general: THE CHALLENGE OF BEING A WOMAN, by Helen Sherman and Marjorie Coe, a sound book of advice on many problems—discipline of children, teaching sex, housework, plans for later years. If reading a book can help, this one should be effective.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"When you get right down to it, how will algebra help us find a husband?"

For the student of modern literature: THE PSYCHOLOGICAL NOVEL, 1900–1950, by Leon Edel. "The twentieth-century novel," says Professor Edel, "need not hang its head in shame. The vitality of a Proust and a Joyce will suffice for the second half of this century's fiction even if it should prove utterly barren of new ideas." Besides Proust and Joyce, he discusses Henry James, Virginia Woolf and Faulkner.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 33

NOW! A NEW FROST WHITE LETTER PAPER IN OPEN STOCK

NEW Autocrat WHITE

Yes, it's famous Autocrat-quality letter paper in a beautiful new version – and it is available in Open Stock for your more convenient buying.

If you are already familiar with the lovely simplicity of White & Wyckoff's Autocrat – 'nough said! If you aren't, do get a box of the new Autocrat White and discover its fine quality and frost white freshness.

Matching envelopes available separately . . . or boxed together, if desired. At better stores everywhere.

YOUR CHOICE OF SIZES

Now at Your Favorite Department Store or Stationer

WHITE & WYCKOFF

DISTINCTIVE WRITING PAPERS

HOLYOKE, MASSACHUSETTS

Nothing does it like Seven-Up!

New 7-Up TV Show! exciting adventure, se
"Soldiers of Fortune"
every week.

Copyright 1955 by The Seven-Up Company

If you want a real thirst-quencher...

If you hanker for a cool, clean taste...

If you want a quick, refreshing lift...

Nothing does it like Seven-Up!

Next time you're thirsty, really "dry," do this: open a chilled 7-Up and take a sip. Just a sip! Hold it in your mouth a moment before you swallow. Something happens!

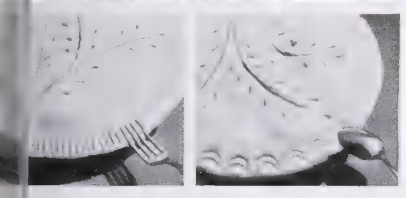
You'll be pleasantly surprised at how much one sip does to relieve your thirst . . . how 7-Up instantly makes your mouth and throat fresh and wide-awake again. You can feel 7-Up do it!

When you have finished the bottle, your thirst is gone . . . leaving a cool, clean taste. The 7-ounce bottle of 7-Up is exactly the right amount. But words can't tell you. Get a chilled 7-Up and find out for yourself . . . if you want a real thirst-quencher, NOTHING DOES IT LIKE SEVEN-UP!

Thirst was made for a drink like this... why waste it on anything else?

"Fresh Up" with Seven-Up

THE ALL-FAMILY DRINK



Easy Ways to Edge Pie Crust Differently

by Marie Gifford
Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

1. To make a high fluted edge on pie crust, cut top crust off ½ inch beyond rim of pan. Tuck under lower crust. Then crimp dough between knuckle of left forefinger and thumb and forefinger of right hand.

2. To make a different edge that's pretty, yet decorative, simply use the tines of a fork to press the edges together.

3. For a pretty scalloped effect, press edges together with the tip of a teaspoon, pressing twice for each scallop as shown.

And, if you want flaky tender pie crust every time, use my easy 5-minute can't-fail Pastry Method and wonderful new-type Armour Star Lard. You'll find the recipe on both the handy self-measuring carton and the economical 3-lb. tin.

The new-type lard gives amazing results because it blends so quickly and easily. Actually gives you richer flavored, flakier crusts than expensive shortenings. And, unlike ordinary lards, Armour Star new-type Lard needs no refrigeration to keep it sweet and fresh.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET

New pie recipes. How-to-do-it illustrations. Write to: Marie Lord, Dept. 154, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago. Armour top will be appreciated.

Armour Star Lard

The Modern New-Type Lard That Makes Flakier Crusts

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31

For the housebuilder: QUALITY BUDGET HOUSES, by Katherine Morrow Ford and Thomas H. Creighton. My home-building scout, a literary man who is building his own house with his own hands, says this is the most helpful he has come across yet—practical and not arty.

COLLIER'S

"We finally decided to build."

●

Bing Crosby comes up with four books which he believes would be good stimulation for the youngsters of today whose reading experience in good books seems to him to be almost nil:

THE REASON WHY, by Cecil Woodham Smith, an outstanding history but somehow unexpected as a crooner's choice. . . . NAPOLEON, by Emil Ludwig. Bing thinks Napoleon's relations with his family would make history living drama for the comic-fed generation. . . . A SCHOOL FOR HOPE, by Michael McLaverty, story of simple Irish people in a small town. . . . THE BEAR, by William Faulkner. "I have read nothing better in this field," says he, "with the possible exception of Hemingway's The Old Man and the Sea."

●

Elizabeth Bowen (A WORLD OF LOVE) describes what she considers the ideal conditions under which to work, if you're a writer: a room as nearly silent as can be, a large writing table, an outlook—if possible—on trees, and no social engagement before 6:30! For this writer (at least a typewriter user!) the outlook necessarily has to be over city roofs.

Block-printed cut-out against blue,
Sharp buildings silhouette a sky
Where slits of bird wings, knifing through,
Close up and open as they fly,
And streets are angled, cleanly straight,
East River to West River Gate.

These are lines from Sara King Carleton's book of poetry, NO NEW COUNTRY. Several of the poems in this very appealing collection appeared in JOURNAL pages. (This particular verse is from Cardboard City.)

●

Doctor Menninger, of the famous clinic, believes that an occasional dose of self-analysis is good for the mental health, and names certain yardsticks by which we can measure our own maturity: the capacity of finding more satisfaction in giving than receiving (reversal of the infantile role): the ability to accept frustrations and to learn to profit from experience: above all, the capacity to love, which he calls the underlying base of good mental health. "When we hate ourselves or

ONLY Royal INSTANT PUDDING is Super Homogenized for Melt-in-your-mouth FLAVOR AND SMOOTHNESS!

Pre-Cooked!
Extra Smooth! Extra Delicious!

You'll find ROYAL Instant a new sensation in puddings. So rich tasting, yet light and fluffy! It piles into your serving dish in luscious swirls—smooth as whipped cream—that never toughen into "skin" on top. Each flavor—Vanilla, Chocolate, Butterscotch, Coconut Cream—melts in your mouth . . . smoothly good. For only ROYAL Instant Pudding is both pre-cooked and super homogenized! It's so easy to digest you can give it to babies.

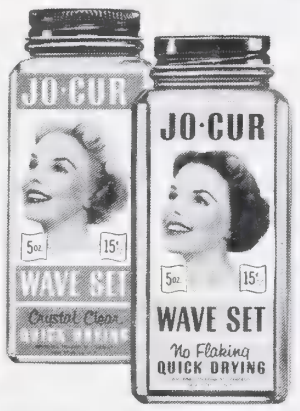
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

HOWDY DOODY'S FAVORITE

A child can make ROYAL Instant Pudding without going near the stove. And it requires no chilling, for it's made with cold milk. Just add to the milk . . . beat . . . let set . . . eat!

Copr. KAGRAN

For scrumptious desserts every time . . .
ALWAYS REACH FOR Royal



Want lovelier hair with easier care?

JUST SET AT HOME . . . with new JO•CUR

JO•CUR's wonderful new formula gives hair that exciting professionally set look . . . in a few minutes at home! So easy to use —just dip the comb. So effective on the most stubborn curls. Keeps every wave in place, smoothly. Dries fast, won't flake, non-sticky. New JO•CUR, in green or "clear". At most cosmetic counters . . . only 15c plus tax.

"Profile Bob", interpreted by Jean De Chant Salon, New York. Jo•Cur will preserve the beauty of your hair style.

MAKES YOUR WAVE BEHAVE
Your coif forgets its wayward ways, becomes smooth, responsive, with new JO • CUR Wave Set.

LONGER LASTING LOVELINESS
It's dollars and sense to safeguard your precious hair-do for pennies . . . with thrifty JO • CUR Wave Set.

Sensational Discovery!

NOW...

AN EXCITING NEW KIND OF

"Perfume that Clings"

If perfume doesn't "stay" with you, or if you're looking for a luxurious fragrance to use everyday . . . this revolutionary creamy-pink perfume is the answer!

HOW TO APPLY...

Every morning, smooth a few drops over the pulse-points of your skin.

With each pulse-beat, the deep warmth of your body brings the fragrance to life . . .

Chantilly
LIQUID SKIN SACHET*

YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF to try "The Perfume That Clings"
$1.85 plus tax

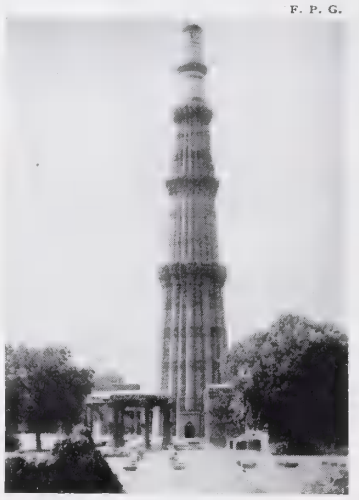
And far into the evening, your skin will still yield the lovely fragrance of Chantilly . . .

Originated by



HOUBIGANT

Comp'd in U. S.

others, we're sick, and it's a good thing to know it."

Nowhere is the capacity to love more tenderly realized than in NECTAR IN THE SIEVE, a novel by Kamala Markandays. This is the simple story of village people living on the hot plain of Southern India, and is comparable in many ways to CRY! THE BELOVED COUNTRY, that fine book about South Africa that captivated us all a few years ago. If anything, NECTAR is better. It is more artistic because it is not so obviously a social document. It has its message, to be sure. We realize that something must be done when, in our own comfort, we read of others who live always on the edge of starvation. But there is no preaching. Moreover, it is written, not by a sympathetic outsider but by an Indian who herself seems to share the sweet nature of these people, and who is able to make us understand their quality. We dwell with them and we share the climaxes of their joys and sorrows. Publication has been postponed to late May. This is not a grim story. It is beautiful. And I, for one, shall never forget it.

F. P. G.

The Koutub Minar at Delhi, India.

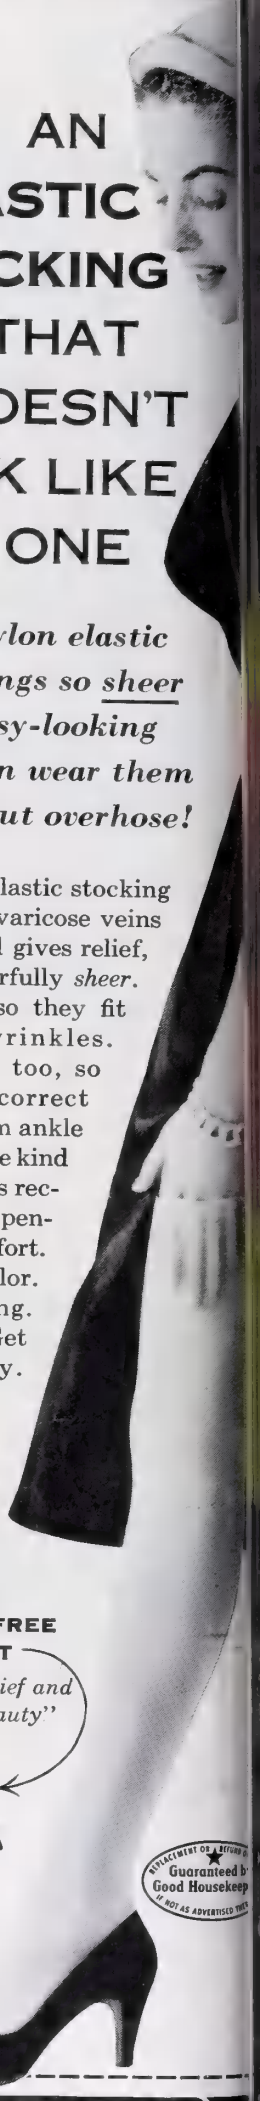
•

THE FOUR FATES, by Margaret Mackay, is good woman's reading—a long novel about the daughter of a famous musical-comedy actress whose life is casual at best, tinselly, played against a background of cities, and peopled by various husbands and sweethearts. We meet the girl at fourteen, already craving a life in the country with hens and horses; and see her grow up longing for a love that will endure, a home that is constant, and children. That she eventually attains this normal life is due to the four men who help her build it—presumably the architects of her fate. The years of the '20's and the '30's are brought vividly to life and the war years are particularly good, while the cities and the countryside of three countries are described with the shifting ease of an undoubtedly well-traveled author.

•

Ludwig Bemelmans' latest opus is a bright, amusingly astringent biography of Lady Mendl, TO THE ONE I LOVE THE BEST. This was Elsie de Wolfe, who died at ninety-odd, the interior decorator de luxe, wife of Sir Charles Mendl, on whom she kept a tight leash, and sparring partner of the author to the end.



According to her husband, Elsie was the generous type. Her generosity, however, was streaked with a shopkeeper's penny pinching. She had an electric meter installed in his part of the house so that she could find out how much current he used, and billed him for it. On the same day she might give him a pair of cuff links costing hundreds of dollars.

FOR VARICOSE VEI
FROM BAUER & BLACK

AN ELASTIC STOCKING THAT DOESN'T LOOK LIKE ONE

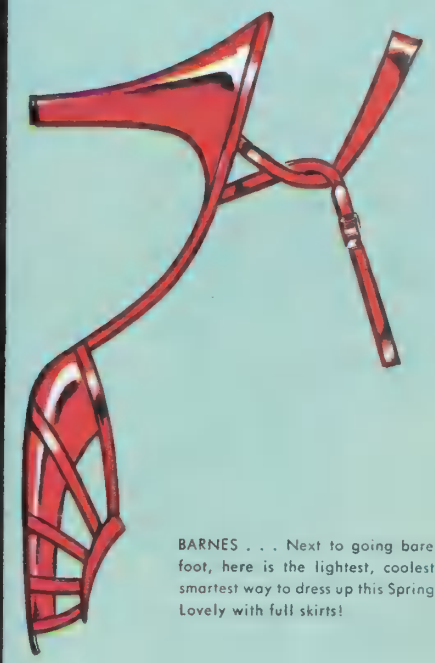
Now—nylon elastic stockings so sheer and dressy-looking you can wear them without overhose!

At last an elastic stocking that keeps varicose veins a secret and gives relief, too! Wonderfully sheer. Fashioned so they fit without wrinkles. Fashioned, too, so they give correct support from ankle to thigh—the kind most doctors recommend. Open-toed for comfort. Won't discolor. Quick drying. Light, cool. Get a pair today.

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET
"Comfort, Relief and New Leg Beauty"

Guaranteed by Good Housekeep
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THIS REPLACEMENT OR REFUND



BAUER & BLACK
Nylon or Cotton Elastic Stockings

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. LH-4
309 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State ____

BARNES . . . Next to going barefoot, here is the lightest, coolest, smartest way to dress up this Spring! Lovely with full skirts!

LAWN . . . Exciting new mesh pattern in patent with calfskin trim. The ultimate for Spring and Summer smartness. Nice with afternoon silks, early prints.

Vitality® SHOES

PUT A LIFT IN YOUR LIFE

. . . and a lilt in your walk! Because Vitality styling reflects fashion's newest trends . . . because famous Vitality comfort features—the narrow heel shaped to your heel and the elasticized vamp in many styles offer such a refreshing way to get about! Choose your complete shoe wardrobe from these and many more in Vitality's fabulous new Spring collection!

famous for fashion and fit $10.95 to $12.95

BARSTOW . . . Distinctive vamp puffing details this smart tailored shoe. Flattering cut, shapely heel, elasticized for perfect fit. What more could you ask?

STARETTE . . . Simple, elegant, shaped to complement suits, knits, tailored wear. Smartly appliqued and stitched detail. Elasticized for perfect fitting.

Vitality®

Wanderlust shoes styled for the young and young in heart from $8.95

TYKE . . . So you'll be smart—and smiling while you keep up with junior, do your marketing, driving and occasionally, your loafing! Marvelously comfortable!

y Shoe Company on of International Shoe Company uis 3, Missouri

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psyc

Making marriage work

Should a wife discuss her hurt feelings—or ignore them?

Why Did Stella Hate Her Husband?

FEW human reactions are more futile than regret, whether for wrongs committed or for wrongs suffered. To brood over past mistakes is morbid; and nursing a grievance, instead of easing pain, intensifies and prolongs it.

When Stella and Fred married, their circumstances were unusually favorable, their prospects of successful marriage bright. Fifteen years later, they had prospered beyond their hopes.

Fred was a successful executive, his income ample and future secure. They had three attractive children whom Fred adored, a spacious home capably run by servants, and Stella, as a member of fifteen organizations and officer of eleven, was proud of her position in the community. She felt they had achieved everything a sensible couple could want.

Yet when they consulted me Fred wanted a divorce. No quarrel or family emergency had preceded his demand; and outraged and baffled though she was, Stella soon realized that no other woman was involved. Unaccountably, Fred had simply tired of their life. Fred said that, far from being satisfactory, their marriage had been a disappointment almost from the first. He said Stella preferred running the community to running their house or raising their children. She was away attending meetings every day, and three or four evenings a week. She valued Fred's success, but was indifferent to him personally, and their relationship was little closer than that of business associates.

After several conferences, it became clear that Stella was mistaken in believing their trouble had developed suddenly. Instead, it stemmed from their stormy courtship.

Though they had dated off and on during high-school days, they had never "gone steady," or mentioned engagement. Nevertheless, when Fred began dating a new girl, Stella felt she had been affronted and publicly humiliated. Then soon after Fred entered college, the new girl married another man. When Fred returned, Stella created opportunities to see him. Concealing her resentment, she greeted him as a valued old friend. Soon they began dating again, and after a year were married.

But the marriage ceremony did not end her resentment of being second choice. To bolster her ego and prove that Fred was lucky to get her, she built herself up and belittled him. Outwardly the dutiful wife, she betrayed her indifference by largely ignoring him in private. She took his achievements for granted, but criticized him for trifles, advised him what to do differently, and constantly pointed out the value of her contacts and social position.

Because of her ancient grievance, Stella held herself aloof from Fred, and he was soon convinced she didn't need him. After fifteen years with little appreciation, understanding or companionship, Fred decided he didn't need her either. He determined to make a fresh start before it was too late.

For the children's sake, Fred has agreed to give their marriage another trial. But Stella must learn that to preserve her status as a married woman (which she so greatly prizes), she must also value, understand and fulfill her role as a wife. By forgetting the past and making the most of the present, she may be able to achieve a better future, for herself and her husband.

Fortunately, few women let their desire to get even carry them so far. But many wives (more often than husbands) nurse grudges. It is wasteful and destructive to let yesterday's disappointment dim the pleasures and satisfaction of today.

If your husband has said or done something which rankles, recently or long ago, ask yourself whether the incident is serious enough to remember. If so, discuss it with him honestly and calmly. If not, keep quiet. But in either case, forgive, forget, and look ahead.

"Just Like a Man"

WHEN a woman says something is "just like a man," what she usually means is that one particular man—her husband—exasperates her. Actually, she may have too little knowledge of men generally to know whether her husband's behavior is really typical.

Many wives are handicapped by inadequate understanding of the opposite sex. If a girl grows up with few male relatives except her father and has little opportunity to observe men in the casual association of an office or college classroom, her impressions of the male of the species are largely formed on dates and other social occasions. Then she is likely to evaluate a man's conduct, traits and attitudes by comparing him, not with other men but with women. The more masculine he is, the more peculiar his characteristics will seem by this standard.

It is enlightening to consider some of the more obvious differences between men and women. Generally speaking, men are taller, heavier, physically stronger. They have broader shoulders, proportionately narrower hips and larger hands and feet. Their voices are deeper, they eat more, can throw a ball straighter and lift a heavier weight.

Because these differences are so familiar, it is easy to overlook their significance. Important in themselves, they are also potent factors governing a man's interests, and directing his energies toward activities different from those appealing to women. For example, a woman's smaller hands are better adapted to sewing than a man's. This is reason enough (there are others!) why few men take up embroidery, say, as a hobby. Again, it's easier for a man than for a woman to change a tire, because of his greater strength, regardless of mechanical knowledge or skill.

Physique alone creates differences which are considerable and can seriously impede understanding. But the inherent differences are accentuated by training and circumstances. The man is primarily responsible for earning a living, the woman for running a home. By necessity, regardless of inclination, he is interested in business, politics and other affairs outside the home. Of equal necessity, she is concerned with recipes and menus, techniques of child care and perhaps styles in decorating or landscaping. Understandably, he tends to be interested in the abstract and general, she in the immediate and particular.

From this viewpoint, tastes you may have thought odd or even vulgar become more acceptable. If he would rather watch the fights on television than a domestic drama, prefers political discussion to neighborhood gossip, sometimes wants to go bowling instead of playing bridge, many men share his preferences, but few women do.

Of course you want him to be a man, but are you always willing for him to behave like one? Before you criticize his personal tastes and habits, ask yourself whether this defect is peculiar to him, or a common characteristic of the male animal. You can't honestly blame your husband for being a man!

Ask Yourself: "Do I Resent My Husband?"

Many little things a wife does prove her devotion or indifference to her husband. Answer these questions as you think he might. The replies may help you understand the impression he has of your feelings toward him.

Do you sometimes fail to:

1. Start his dinner promptly?
2. Buy cigarettes or other articles he needs?
3. Attend to errands for him?

Do you occasionally or frequently:

4. Try to "get even" with him?
5. Give him the "silent treatment"?
6. Say "You got what you deserved"?
7. Make slighting remarks to or about him?

Do you sincerely try to:

8. Set meal hours for his convenience?
9. Arrange the furniture for his greatest comfort?
10. Keep his wardrobe in condition?

Do you often:

11. Show a genuine interest in his work?
12. Buy little extras to please him?
13. Tell him how wonderful he is?
14. Praise him before others?

Credit 1 point for each "No" answer to the first seven questions and 2 for each "Yes" to the last seven. Note that one positive act offsets two negative. If your score totals 18 or more, your husband is undoubtedly sure of your love, and has few doubts if your score is 13 to 18. But with a score of 12 or less, he has little reason to believe you love him, and a score of 8 or below suggests that you don't conceal your resentment. If you really do love him more than your score suggests, use the answers to suggest ways of expressing your real feelings.

Do You Agree?

My former fiancé gave me an expensive diamond the day we became engaged. I broke the engagement. Can I keep the ring?

Since the ring is the symbol of an engagement which no longer exists, you should return it.

Only New WOODBURY SOAP contains 7 FACE CREAM OILS. It is made by skin scientists, who know that these oils and emollients help replace natural oils you ordinarily wash away. (And you need these oils for soft skin.) This is why New Woodbury's fragrant lather is so rich and creamy. This is why it smooths your complexion, too, and makes you prettier head-to-toe. It gives you "the skin you love to touch."

WOODBURY

for the skin you love to touch

she's got VIV

(you can have it, too!)

It's not so much beauty as it is personal vibrancy and sparkle, and all those indefinable qualities that make everyone instantly aware of her.

For now there's a new lipstick that brings out all the vividness and sparkle of the real you with exciting colors that make you look and feel vividly alive. It's the new VIV lipstick by Toni. VIV's new High-Chroma Formula gives you the most vivid colors any woman has ever worn. Choose from six bright shades, each as sparkling as the Vivid Rose you see here. Try VIV, that vivid new lipstick by Toni.

Comfortable, long-lasting and very, very vivid.

new viv lipstick
by Toni $1.10 plus tax

© The Gillette Co.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

JILL

April is the time of golden hours, a time to rest the spirit with the messages of spring.

SUDDENLY the air blows soft and the ght falls warmly on the greening fields. he great winds of March have swept e world clean, and the crash of falling anches ceases. The sounds of April e gentler sounds: the peepers in the amp singing away in the cool night, e robin saying cheery-up, cheery-, a cow mooing quietly in George's rn.

Our Field Book of Eastern Birds is ght on the table, so we can rush to entify any passing migratory bird. his book, by Leon Hausman, is a ust for birders. And when I looked the robin, I loved the description: Field Marks—Upper parts a slaty own and—but no, we will not insult ur readers! Field Description—but ve you noticed, dear reader, that the ale robin's head is very dark ——" It gave me a cozy feeling to be called dear reader"! It is seldom nowadays at an author breaks into his text to ldress the reader personally. Anyhow, gather Mr. Hausman thinks anybody, t anybody, knows a robin. I could tell m differently, for now and then we ve a guest who asks what that pretty rd is that has latched onto a worm d is bracing both legs and hauling way. The robin is a buxom bird, I ways think, and would be awfully od on committees.

Now and then when George does the ring plowing, he still turns up an dian arrow or two, a tiny white quartz rd arrow this time. As I turn it over my hand, I wonder what birds the dians killed with it, and whether they e songbirds or only ruffed grouse and oodcock and such. No doubt the dian camp was down by the pond, r the brook must have been quite a ream in those days, flashing with out, fringed with water cress and easant for little copper-colored boys d girls to play in.

The Indians always had dogs, and I ften wonder what breed they basically ere. Did they come over in some dim rly period from the Continent or were ey always here?

Cockers, we know, are a most ancient reed. Even Shakespeare, who does not em to be a particularly doggy person, eaks of "fawning like a spaniel." One athers they were loving and ardent ven in the Elizabethan era! A good any early paintings show small spaniel-like dogs, although they are a far cry from today's Rise and Shine with his noble proportions, flowing gait and lively disposition.

The first setters did not look too much like Hollyberry Red either. Perfection of line, beauty of coat, sturdiness of bone come from careful breeding, and Holly has every idea in her beautiful head that she is really it so far as Irishers go! She thinks like a champion whether we show her or not. She sometimes reminds me of the princess and the pea—the princess who could not sleep because a single pea was under her mattress. (I always wondered who put it there.) For Holly expects everything to be just so—not enough to curl up on the foot of the bed, no, prefers a pillow also. All day she runs wildly hunting, but when she comes in at night, she says she is just a small delicate little lady and needs waiting on!

The cats emerge from the radiator heat now, and prowl the old gray-stone fences after field mice. Now and then they settle for a mole. Our cats have always hunted only to keep their paw in, never for a meal.

Sister and Linda, the two smallest cockers, also fancy themselves as mousers. They spend a long time at dusk in the barn, but they never bring anything out. All they do, says Jill, is make the mice nervous.

Planting the garden is an annual excitement. Jill manages to get some seeds in early, just gambling on their growing. The main planting in New England must come in May—when the maples are in leaf. But lettuce and radishes go in, and it gives us a sense of satisfaction to think we are beginning the cycle all over. Peas can stand a lot of cold too. We always try to get George to plow early, but he plows when he feels like it and that settles that. It has to be the day.

What soil we have in Connecticut, between the rocks and boulders, is good soil, rich enough and light enough. It is not like the rich black fertile earth in the Midwest or the dark rosy-red Virginia soil or the feather-light, sandy Cape Cod soil, but it is good, sound, crop-producing land. I like to pick up a handful and feel the warm, good texture; it has a promise in it. I read in the books that New England is in a bad

"Swingo"... the motion look for active affairs

TWEEDIE FOOTWEAR CORPORATION • JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI

You're faced with a forest of 3500 dishes a month!

Packed in a can as it should be—with a dripless spout helps you out of a lot of work!

Maybe your dishes for a month wouldn't actually stand tall as trees, but there would be some frighteningly high stacks. Now Lux Liquid helps you get out of the woods—fast and easy! It's made especially for dishwashing. Lux Liquid floats grease off—gets plates and glasses sparkling clean!

One can outlasts several boxes of the leading laundry powder. And Lux Liquid is almost as mild as Lux Toilet Soap. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees Lux Liquid to be every bit as wonderful as we say it is. If you don't agree, we'll give you back whatever you paid for it. Lux Liquid is as good for dishes as Lux Flakes care is for nylons.

Why be overwhelmed by dishes? Get Lux Liquid next time you market!

P.S. Lux Liquid's great for washing kitchen tile, floors and windows. Handy too, for cleaning combs and brushes.

A teaspoonful does a dishpanful

IT'S THE NEXT BEST THING TO A DISHWASHING MACHINE

way economically and needs revitalizing. I am sure the books are right, but here in our quiet valley we go along raising enough and producing enough milk and getting along. Just how a village of a thousand or so all told can pay for a million-dollar school, I haven't figured out—I leave that to the board—but I am sure it will be paid for.

I fancy a good deal of our upland rocky land would produce pretty fair timber if anybody ever got around to planting and pruning and tending it, but I am fairly sure nobody ever will. The farmers just cut down an old tree when they need firewood.

Housework can seem pretty tiresome in spring. Almost any woman, I think, gets that overcome feeling all at once because there is so much to do. At this point, it is a good thing to make a list of absolutely everything from cleaning out behind the radiators to washing the window in the hall landing (which requires a ladder to get at). Having made the list, the best thing to do is put it under a paperweight, pack a picnic and go off to rest the spirit with the messages of spring.

You really can't get it all done at once—all the curtains and rugs and woodwork, not to mention the attic and the cellar. Jill says things just plant themselves in the cellar and grow up into junk with no human aid. An immaculate house is a lovely sight to see, but if you have children, dogs, cats, guests, it is a losing battle anyway, and spring is a short season and comes only once a year.

There is no pillow so soft as a clear conscience. —FRENCH PROVERB

So off to the woods with bread and cheese and hard-boiled eggs well peppered and a vacuum bottle of boiling-hot coffee or sweet fresh milk. The little white violets will be in bloom, the yellow violets pattern the dark sod with gold. The spring beauties are delicate and now and then an early wanderer comes upon the cool pink pearl of the arbutus, perhaps the most exquisite of all wild flowers. The mosses and lichens in the woods are lovely, too, and one could spend half a lifetime learning to know them in their infinite variety and muted colors.

If we sit quietly on a sun-warmed gray ledge eating the crusty French bread and soft cheese, we can almost hear things grow. And little voices sound along the edge of the rushing brook; but whose voices they are, I do not know. After a golden hour such as this, nerves no longer tighten, the house seems pleasant and comfortable, clean or dusty, and the long list is for another day. There is a good deal to be said for the Latin American mañana. At least in April.

A friend sent me a copy of Keats which belonged to John Mitford, Esq., in 1845 a precious 1841 edition, ivoried in tone and mellowed in binding. It came encased in a special box to preserve it, and I like to think Clergyman John Mitford, Esq., had it in his extensive library, mostly poetry. This Mitford was the son of John Mitford of the English navy, mentioned in Nelson's Dispatches and Letters ("insane rogue"). Now the little volume lies on my desk—the singer is gone but the song still sounds in this New England countryside. The nightingale that sounded in the plum tree in the garden at Hempstead still sounds, and Keats could not have imagined how truly he spoke when he said, "Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!"

The blue dusk dark in April has the magic of first love, and it always seems like the very first April ever experienced. As Sister flies across the yard after a rabbit that goes lippety-lippety ahead of her, I like to sit on the old wooden settee on the terrace and just breathe the good smell of growing things. Jill moves tall in the violet light and the rake she carries makes a long and beautiful line. The Irish leaps after her in an arc of shining splendor. All the light left is in her fur.

Tomorrow is plenty of time, I say dreamily to Jonquil, plenty of time for chores. Today we have been living in April! END

KENDALL Dish Towel

By the makers of Curity Diapers dries

MORE ABSORBENT

Made of a marvelous fabric* with magic new drying action — holds much more moisture, dries many more dishes. Lintless, too!

dishes

faster

SHORTENS KITCHEN TIME

One wipe and the water is gone. You can dry your dishes just about twice as fast with these wonderfully soft easy-to-use towels. At leading stores everywhere.

Rayon-Cotton*

Introductory Offer

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. KJ45
I'm enclosing 50c in coin for a Kendall Dish Towel. (Only one towel to a family.) Print clearly.

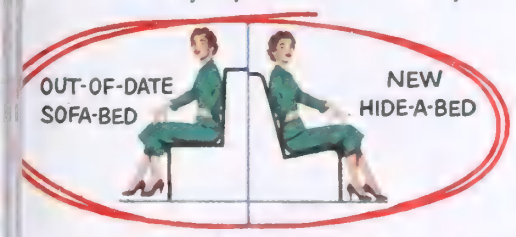
Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Favorite Store _____

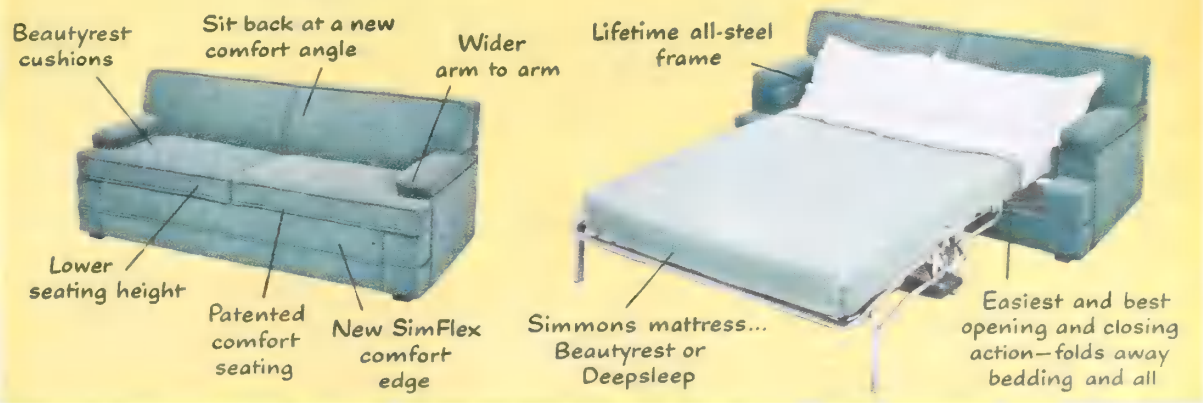
Good only in Continental United States and Hawaii



Lower, lovelier, more seating comfort than ever. More than 30 sizes and styles. From $199 to $399.

Modern T-Cushion model shown in turquoise. Also in coral, toast, emerald green, charcoal and lime. Full size, $299.50. Apt. size, $289.50.

Presenting the new luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed®!



Ever before a sofa-bed as smart looking and comfortable as the new Hide-A-Bed sofa! And hide all that sofa beauty is a genuine Simmons ttress for the best in healthful, restful sleep! eautyrest* mattress just $20 extra.)

Choose from more than 100 decorator fabrics. e the new luxury-sofa Hide-A-Bed today!

ater seating comfort—with lower seating height. autyrest cushions slope back to let you sit back. Soft hion-front "gives" under your knees!

Read about these important features...some new, some exclusive...that make Hide-A-Bed unequalled as a sofa... unequalled as a bed!

Only Simmons makes HIDE-A-BED sofas

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office. Copr. 1955 by Simmons Co., Merc. Mart, Chicago, Ill.

ANGELO PINTO

She doesn't need a penthouse or a black satin skirt to prove that she knows what to do when. She's discovered the secret of real smoothness—good manners plus.

That Sophisticated Lady

STANDS OUT IN A CROWD

Because she creates her own crowd—wherever she is! Since the Art of How to Introduce People to Each Other holds no terrors for her, she blithely mixes and matches friends and strangers.

Her acquaintance with the right way to make an introduction is more than a nodding one:

In a big crowd: "Hey, everybody. This is Jim Bolton." She goes right around the circle, naming each one, with no attempt to sort out all the girls first.

Boy meets girl: Ladies first—always. "Jane, this is Tom Slater; Tom, Jane Swift."

Friends meet parents: "Mother, I'd like you to meet Jane Swift and Tom Slater; Jane and Tom, this is my mother."

Parents meet school brass: "Mr. Jones, may I present my father, Mr. King? Dad, this is Mr. Jones."

Our girl with poise—which does more than rhyme with boys—is a running jump beyond just the right (correct) way to handle a social scrabble. She practices the smooth way. She realizes that there is probably no greater insult to anyone than failing to introduce him whenever there is any need for it. Although she may forget the rules, she never forgets the feelings of the person. She doesn't get flustered if she has to ask someone to repeat his name for her, or if she makes a mistake in saying the boy's name first. She also speaks each name slowly and clearly, and tries to clue one to the other with a biographical remark, "Jane's on the editorial board ——"

And for this potential lady ambassador, we include an It'll Probably Never Happen to You piece of info: When introducing a Greek Orthodox Archbishop of Cyprus, Athens, Georgia or Poland, to the foreign minister plenipotentiary of New Zealand, be sure to say, "Your Beatitude, may I present the Minister of New Zealand, Mr. Walker? Mr. Minister, the Archbishop of Cyprus."

DINES WITH DISTINCTION

She's long since passed Table Manners I. (Does she play with her silverware nervously? No. Does she begin eating before the others have been served or before the hostess? Certainly not. Does she pick at a new food suspiciously? Never! Does she place the knife and fork neatly across the rim of the plate when she's finished? Of course. Does she touch up her make-up in private? Always! Where does she keep her purse during dinner? In her lap—never on the table, of course.)

Now a student of Advanced Menu Reading, she is able to read from left to right without anyone detecting it. Her mental arithmetic is as fast as his—if not as accurate—and if she isn't certain of how much his wallet can take, she says, "What's good here?" Although he may say "The steak," or "The lobster," she doesn't usually take him seriously. Moral: a broke boy can't date very often.

Her menu-reading French is as good as her math: she knows that table d'hôte means you get a complete meal for the price of the entrée (main dish), which is usually considerably less than ordering à la carte (you pay for each dish separately).

And for the girl who may someday dine in Spain—and why not?—we add: When eating snails served in garlic sauce in Spain, it is permissible, and even expected, to take up the shells after the snail has been eaten and drink the sauce directly from the shells!

HAS A WAY WITH WORDS . . .

She knows what to do with stamps and stationery—use them often! To an RSVP she replies, and promptly. Why keep a hostess guessing until the last minute? Her bread-and-butter note after a weekend visit doesn't have a chance to get stale—she mails it no later than a week after her visit. And a long-distance gift is acknowledged by note—upon arrival. But that's just the right way to act.

The smooth way is to blend ink and paper with thoughtfulness to add a personal touch. Write your plans for using the gift, and a word picture of that weekend square dance you thought so terrific. Begin and end letters to friends with a reference to what they've written you, or what you're doing that they would enjoy too. Never start a letter with an excuse for not writing sooner, or end it with "No more news—must stop now." In a letter to a boy (the person who goes away can write first—it's one of the few compensations of separation) be no more than friendly. Boy letters, unlike most other letters, are the better for not being mailed immediately! Wait to be sure no tears or heart throbs crept in to embarrass you both at a future date.

It'll Probably Never Happen to You, but anyway, did you know that if you receive an invitation from the U. S. Diplomatic Corps in a non-English-speaking country, it'll be written in French and you must answer in French? And that a reply to all the official dinner invitations from the Diplomatic Corps must be made within twenty-four hours and by hand—either delivering it yourself or sending it by messenger?

KNOWS ALL THE INS AND OUTS . . .

Especially on a date. And on a date the right way is the same as the smooth, and it's the only way for both boy and girl to know what's expected of them.

On and off a bus: the girl is the first getting on, but last getting off—boy's first here.

Into a movie: a girl follows the usher, the boy follows the girl. If there's no usher, the boy leads the way and finds the seats. If two couples are together, they can either alternate—boy, girl, boy, girl—or the girls can sit together in the center.

In and out of a coat: a boy helps a girl with her coat.

In and out of the rain: a boy holds the umbrella if it's raining—and whether he likes the umbrella's color or not!

In and out of your home: always ask the boy to call for you at your home; announce your date deadline in front of your parents, "See you about eleven, mom." . . . Then get in then or phone explanations.

Of Boys and Girls and Etiquette

ALLEN LUDDEN, author of Plain Talk for Men Under 21.

"A person constantly thinking about himself and the impression he's making is automatically ill mannered. A sense of humor can pass for poise about 90 per cent of the time."

"Boys let—no, actually insist that—the girls do all kinds of things for themselves that, courteously, a boy should do." Editors' examples: floundering out of a car unaided; developing a strong right arm from wielding heavy doors.

AMY VANDERBILT, author of a Complete Book of Etiquette.

new,
new

Flair

so modern...it sets a new tradition

Here at last is a modern silverware that makes no compromise with yesterday . . . new, new Flair, in 1847 Rogers Bros.

Completely new in function . . . each piece designed to suit the new demands of modern living.

Excitingly new in design! Its great beauty of form seems to come from within . . . from the beauty of the gleaming silver itself!

Choose Flair today, secure in the knowledge that it will be wonderful for generations.

1847

1847 ROGERS BROS.

AMERICA'S FINEST SILVERPLATE

A PRODUCT OF THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY

ne

1847

1847 ROGERS BROS.

AMERICA'S FINEST SILVERPLATE

A PRODUCT OF THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY

New balanced place settin

Flair is the first modern silverplate to bring you a trul balanced place setting. The pieces at left curve towar the pieces at right in perfect symmetry.

New Flair holloware is designed to give you ne flexibility of use as it beautifies your table. The Buff Tray is also used as Serving Tray and Cold Meat Platte $17.50.* Fruit, Flower and Serving Bowl, $20.00.* Car delabra, $17.50.* See the complete line at your store t day. *Plus Fed. tax.

new Flair

modern...it sets a tradition

This page will give you just a hint of all the wonderful new things you can expect from Flair. For example . . .

This Sculptured Modern chest contains the new, 4-pc. service for 12 people—twelve 4-pc. place settings plus 6 beautiful serving pieces. All yours in anti-tarnish chest, only $99.75.

Or you may prefer eight 6-pc. place settings with important serving pieces. This complete 52-pc. service in chest, just $89.75. Small down payment. Easy terms. No Fed. tax.

New Flair Spreaders. These charming little spreaders will look elegant on your cheese, fruit or canapé tray. They serve as butter spreaders, too. Set of 4 in attractive gift box at special introductory price of $3.95. (Value $7.20.)

New Flair Entertainment Set is just as dutiful as it is beautiful. You'll use it with and without its dainty spoon for jam, relishes, cheese, candy, nuts etc. The 2 pieces are yours, gift boxed, at the special price of $3.95. (Value $7.25.)

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

Tube 75¢ plus tax
Jar $1.00 plus tax

BRECK CREAM TREATMENT WITH LIPICIL* · A NEW AND EASY WAY TO MAKE HAIR SOFT AND BEAUTIFUL

1 Breck Cream Treatment offers a new and easy way to make dry or damaged hair soft and manageable. Breck Cream Treatment also aids in removing dandruff.

2 In addition to lanolin, Breck Cream Treatment contains Lipicil*, an ingredient which aids in the treatment and prevention of hair dryness, dandruff and hard to manage hair.

3 Breck Cream Treatment is easy to use. After your shampoo, massage onto the hair and scalp. Rinse and set. When dry, your hair will be soft, lustrous and as beautiful as a bride's.

Lipicil is the Breck Registered Trade Mark for a stabilized lipide complex.*

Breck Cream Treatment is available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

Copyright 1955 by John H. Breck Inc.

JOHN H. BRECK INC. · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

"I am to be married in a few months. Is there any premarital test which will assure that I can have a family?"

"My fiancé has just had a physical examination which he passed in every respect, and I think it is only fair for me to have an examination too."

The speaker was a young woman, probably in the early twenties, who looked as though she would be quite at home on a tennis court or a diving board.

The doctor nodded. "A very sound idea. I only wish the statutory requirements for a marriage license were more comprehensive than merely to establish that the couple are of legal age and can show negative tests for syphilis. It might save many a heartbreak."

"That's the way we both feel. Our marriage is going to be about the most important event in our lives and we want to do everything we possibly can to make it a success."

"Excellent. Now, let me begin by asking some routine questions. First of all, how old are you?"

"Twenty-two."

"Have you had any serious illnesses or operations?"

"No operations and only the ordinary childhood diseases."

"How old were you when you commenced to menstruate?"

"Fourteen. I have always been regular as clock. My periods have never given me any trouble."

"That is certainly a good beginning."

The doctor touched a button on his desk and a young woman wearing a cap and white uniform appeared.

"Nurse, will you get this young lady ready for a comprehensive physical examination? It will include the heart and lungs, as well as pelvis. Blood pressure and urinalysis, of course. I'll want to take specimens for a blood count and hemoglobin estimate, as well as typing, Wassermann and Rh-factor determination. I shall also want X-ray flat plates of the chest and pelvis. I will be ready when you are."

An hour later the patient had been thoroughly stethoscoped, thumped with a percussion hammer, X-rayed and meticulously measured to record the external dimensions of her pelvis. They were still in the examination room when the doctor said, "Well, I can tell you that you appear to be an eminently sound physical specimen. You have an adequate pelvis of normal female type, and each of the tests we have made has registered within normal bounds. Lungs, heart and kidneys all sound. Normal blood count, Group A and Rh-positive. We must wait a while to learn the result of the Wassermann test, but otherwise it certainly looks as though you should be able to raise a family of whatever size you desire."

"Does this mean that you are sure I can become pregnant?"

"No doctor could answer such a question with positive certainty. There are too many variable elements. What I have done so far is to make certain of several facts about your internal anatomy. There is much more that I do not know—for instance, whether or not your Fallopian tubes are open. If they are not, of course, you could not become pregnant."

"But isn't there some way you can find out about that—with X-ray pictures or something?"

"The usual method is to run carbon-dioxide gas through the cervix under a carefully calibrated degree of pressure. If it passes up through the uterine cavity and out through the tubes into the abdomen, one of them, at least, must be open. The newest method substitutes an opaque oil for the gas in the middle of the procedure, thereby permitting X-ray pictures to be taken showing any tubal abnormalities or strictures."

"Can't you do that for me, Doctor?"

"No. The presence of a hymen with only a very small opening precludes my even visualizing the cervix, much less carrying out any manipulation."

"There must be something that can be done, Doctor!"

"Well, yes—but I think we should talk about this at some length before undertaking a procedure which some might characterize as 'meddlesome.' Nurse, will you help the young lady dress—and when she's ready, direct her to the consulting room."

When the patient once more was seated in the outer office, facing the doctor across his desk, she said earnestly, "If it is really necessary, I wouldn't object to the removal of the hymen. And I don't think my fiancé would, either, provided the reason was explained to him."

"In that case, I think you should bring him here so that we can discuss this together. As a matter of fact, the possession of an intact hymen does not absolutely guaran-

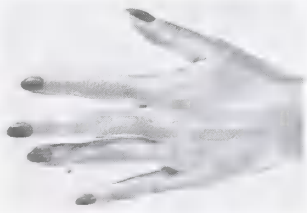
CONTINUED ON PAGE 162

Doctor Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of Women, containing several chapters which have not appeared in the Journal, has been published by Hawthorn Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

New Lotion

Quickly heals Detergent chapping

Scratchy "detergent hands"—Angel Skin is the only leading lotion with this formula that neutralizes the harsh alkali effect of today's strong detergents



"Scratchy" irritation disappears
Blotchy redness fades
Roughness clears right away

Instant "corrective" softening!

Much more than just a superficial smoother—new Angel Skin by Pond's is "medically-matched" to the skin's own softening lubricants! Smooth on Angel Skin—and instantly this new lotion restores certain important substances, known in medical terms as "active hydrogen ions*."

This is why Angel Skin's revolutionary formula counteracts the harsh alkali effect of today's detergents . . . smooths and whitens rough, red "abused" hands . . . softens deep, deep down. See its amazing healing effects on your hands—today!

*ANGEL SKIN'S exclusive skin-softening lubricants contain billions of active hydrogen ions in each drop. Hydrogen ion concentration is measured scientifically in terms of pH. Angel Skin is the only leading hand lotion with a pH rating allied to the pH rating of human skin. This is why Angel Skin heals chapping as no old-style hand lotion can.

Revolutionary new Angel Skin instantly softens dried-out hands. Blotchy redness fades. Ragged cuticle smooths Angel Skin's rich goodness sinks in at once. There's no gummy "thickener" to leave hands sticky! Put on gloves right away!

Angel Skin by POND'S

25¢, 49¢. Also giant size with free dispenser, only 89¢

New light-consistency hand cream form! In dainty pink jar. 25¢, 49¢

Prices plus tax. Slightly higher in Canada

Think of the softest . . . Now, a new gentleness . . . undreamed-of comfort . . . the luxury of a fabric covering that's soft as a whisper. Yours with New Design Modess.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

ERMINE capes, diamonds and French perfume filled the spick-and-span New York subways, newly opened in April, 1905, as society decreed them the fashionable way to travel. A plan to reserve a subway car for ladies only, with a guard to protect them, was soon abandoned—by the ladies. Joseph Jefferson, known to millions as Rip van Winkle, died, and a "full-blooded Cherokee" named Will Rogers appeared with his rope at Madison Square Garden.

In a rousing editorial in the April, 1905, JOURNAL, Why Patent Medicines are Dangerous, Editor Bok pointed out their high content of drugs like chloroform and morphine. "Many a patent-medicine taker has died of acute alcoholism," he warned.

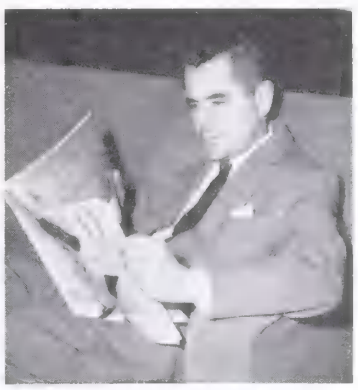
DI PIETRO

(left) is initiated in the art of Cynthia Wheatland, Valerie Hunt.

In what looks to be a big year for JOURNAL babies, Nora O'Leary's Nancy, her third, led off in January, weighing in at 7 pounds, 14 ounces. It reminded another editor, awaiting her first offspring, to call Macy's for things she'd be needing. She finally staggered away from the phone, gasping. "Do you know what they do for you? . . . They give a course for expectant mothers, and one for expectant fathers. Nurses teach you to bathe and change the baby and fix the formula. They show you how to make baby clothes. If you turn out to have twins, they send you a duplicate set of everything free. And if you start having the baby while you're shopping, they've got a penthouse hospital for you—doctor and all. And what's more, no charge for delivery."

DI PIETRO

Nora O'Leary and Nancy.



"Mama" and Bill Walling.

girl Breton—descended, Mr. Fred announces, from the gondolier hat he brought back with such success several years ago from Sicily. The girl is Georgia Hamilton, who is in private life Mrs. Stephen Elliott, the mother of three children. She has formed a nice habit of being on JOURNAL covers.

A survey of boys and girls 8 to 16 revealed that an overwhelming majority were satisfied with their mothers: 79 per cent of the boys and 91 per cent of the girls considered their mother a good cook; 58 per cent of the boys and 69 per cent of the girls thought her attractive; 73 per cent of the boys but only 29 per cent of the girls thought she dressed nicely!

One reader with a particular interest in Evan Hunter's startling story, The Blackboard Jungle, when it first appeared in the JOURNAL last October, was actor Glenn Ford. You can see him now in the dramatic film made by M-G-M from Hunter's novel, starring as the young teacher who faces a frightening juvenile-delinquency problem.

Glenn Ford.

When Peggy Wood, the television star of Mama, and her husband Bill Walling appeared on Ed Murrow's Person to Person show New Year's Eve, the coast-to-coast response to Bill's new decorated-needlepoint vest was fantastic, Peggy told Mary Bass. "It was my first major job in needlepoint," Peggy said. "And the sprays of roses, leaves and forget-me-nots show how I wish men would use more color in their evening clothes." "Everybody wants one like it," Bill told Mary, "but I don't know—Peggy was two years making this one."

ring Combination Offer!

A SPECIAL PRICE

(52 issues) THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

HOLIDAY

all three for $10

ference of $8.00 on the single copy prices

. . . or $4.50 on the regular subscription prices

If you now subscribe to any of these magazines, your subscription will be extended. No need to pay now—we'll gladly bill you later!

IS CIRCULATION COMPANY

IDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

I AM ENCLOSING $

BILL ME

for one-year subscriptions to each of the following magazines: THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and HOLIDAY. Please enter these subscriptions (all 3 must go to the same family at the same address) to go to:

For your own subscriptions

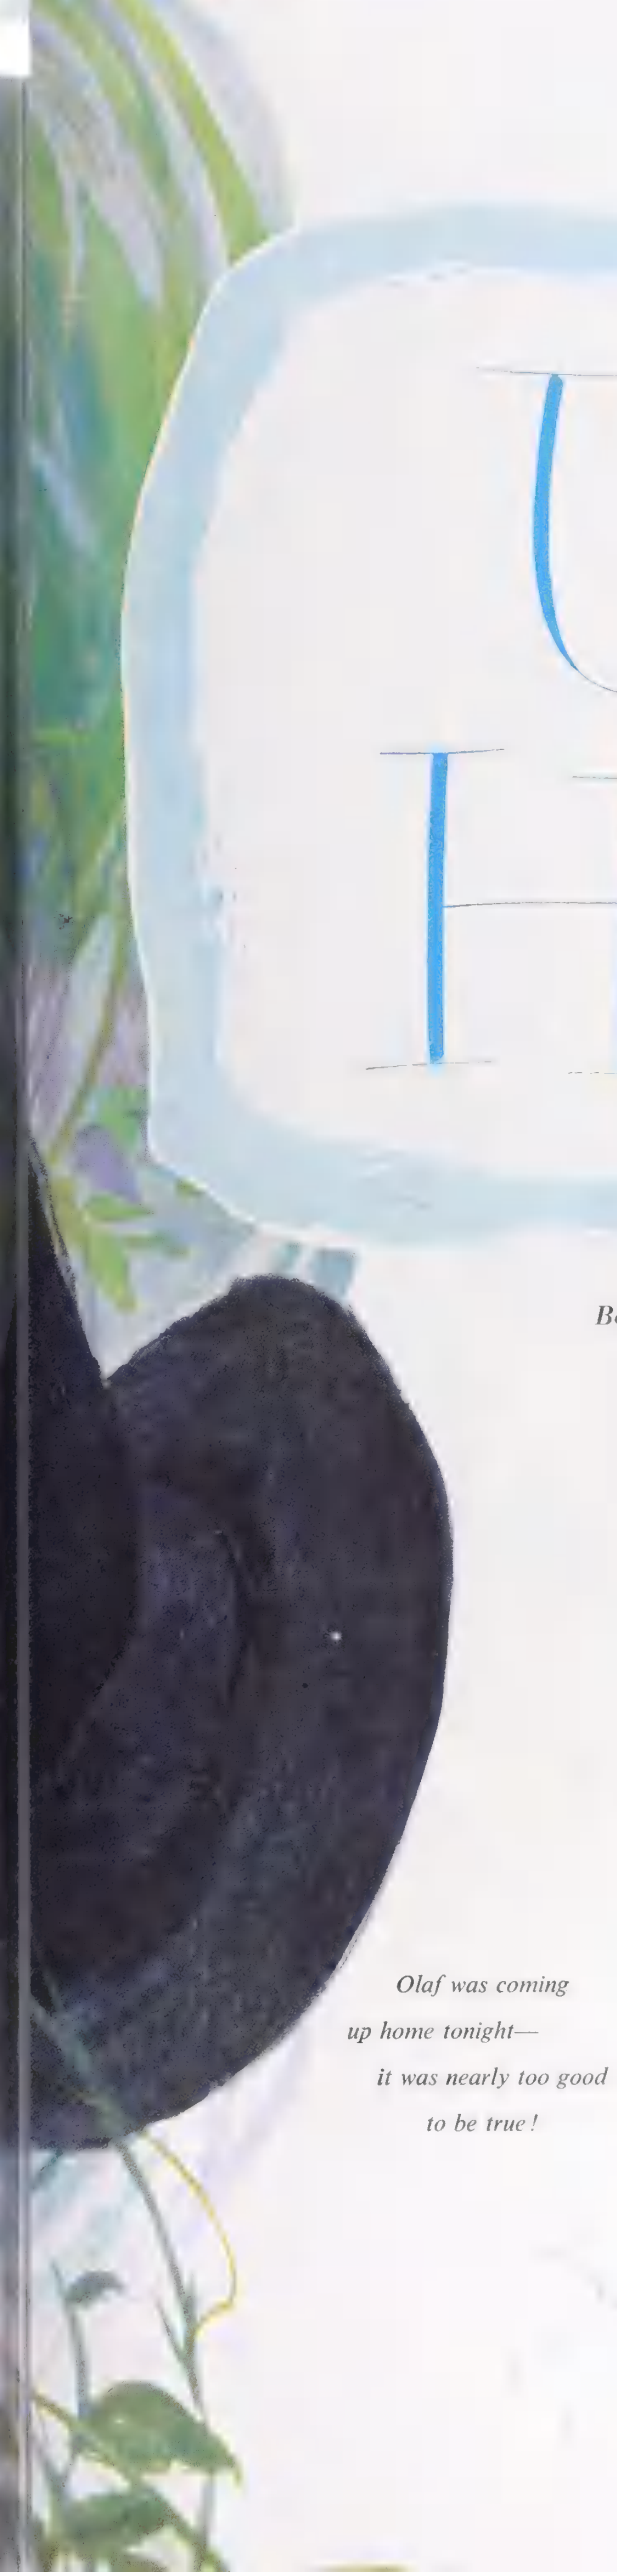
r R.D. _____

ZONE STATE

Send this combination as a gift to:

r R.D. _____

ZONE STATE



U.S.A.

0610

(Sign my gift card)

se be sure to include your own name and address when ordering gift combinations. Additional orders may be ten on a plain sheet of paper. This offer good in U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada for a limited time only.

Up Home

Linnea didn't mind—much—that Olaf's other wife was prettier, or even that she could make better dumplings—
but this was enough to try the patience of a Latter-day Saint!

Beginning a New Serial by ARDYTH KENNELLY

Olaf was coming up home tonight—
it was nearly too good to be true!

"YOU'RE long past time as it is," Linnea pointed out, "and dedication or no dedication, temple or no temple, I sure wouldn't go. Why, you'll be miserable. Of course, since it's not till day after tomorrow, I don't believe you'll be able to make it in the first place." She filled another cup, placed it in front of her newly arrived guest and carried the blue granite-iron coffeepot back to the stove. "Help yourself to something," she said cordially.

"If I could of just got in on the first day," Mrs. Lilygren said, "there wouldn't of been no problem, except with Otto. He gets mad if I so much as mention it. He don't think it's decent for me to be seen like this, not even in the neighborhood, let alone down around the temple." She reached out and selected a cinnamon bun from the high-piled china plate, shyly and formally, as was her way, though she had been Linnea's next-door neighbor for a year and a half.

Linnea laughed. "The first day!" she said. "You don't want much! Why, last week, when the temple was opened and the real dedicating ceremonies went through, there was nobody there but church officials and their families. We're lucky to be on the list for the seventeenth, day after tomorrow!"

Copyright, 1955, by Ardyth Kennelly Ullman.

With fine manners, Mrs. Lilygren took a tiny bite of coffeecake. "I just got to hold out," she said, "and be in on it."

"Because the temple was started the year you was born?"

Mrs. Lilygren nodded. "Besides, it's something that only happens once in a lifetime!"

"But if I was in your shoes, I wouldn't go no farther from home than to the corner ——" Linnea began, but footsteps coming around the house gave her pause and she waited until whoever it was should knock. Nobody did, for it was only her friend Ingeborg, who never thought of such a thing. She merely turned the knob, pushed open the back door and walked in.

"I could smell coffee a mile off," Ingeborg said.

"Sit down and make yourself to home," Linnea said, getting up and going to the cupboard for another cup and saucer.

"Hello, Mrs. Lilygren," Ingeborg said genially. "I thought you'd be flat on your back by now, the size you was the last time I seen you."

"She's fixing to hold out over our day," Linnea said, "our" day being the date set for members of the Nineteenth Ward, to which the three CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

He had to act as though
Vera were not guilty;
and deception must always breed deception—that was the evil he was caught in.

Unjudging Love

By FRANK BAKER

THE last light of a dying sun fell slowly through the great west window of Gilchester Cathedral. The organist was playing the introduction to Purcell's anthem, Rejoice in the Lord. Seeing the falling light, hearing the music, a middle-aged man who was the solitary occupant of the darkening nave was curiously moved. The light must go, the music must end; this was inevitable. He was not saddened by the thought; it was more like a new experience, like falling in love again. Lawrence Hearne smiled. He was fifty-two, far enough away from youth to begin to revalue it. So, he thought, I am in love. And what am I in love with? There was only one word which could answer the question. He was in love with life.

He turned to look at the window behind him; the light had drifted lower, an amber pool lingered for a moment, then laid a hem of light on the pavement. What had the window looked like, Lawrence wondered, before Cromwell's troops had smashed it to pieces during the Civil War? A marvelous design it must have been; and yet, in a strange sense, the replacement of the shattered pieces of colored glass, with no attempt made to restore the original pattern, offered a more valid interpretation of life. There was a moral in all this, thought Lawrence. But he did not want to think. He was very tired, and the appointment before him might not be an easy one. Closing his eyes again, he listened. "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall fill your hearts and minds ——"

An old verger was shuffling down the nave. He took the notice board and dragged it behind the heavy dark red curtains to the great doors.

Lawrence turned round. Getting up, he went toward the side door. The moment of peace had been broken. Opening the door, he slipped quickly outside.

Horace Wetherby, doctor of divinity and dean of Gilchester, liked to say that he had five different studies for five different kinds of work: a small, oak-paneled room, reserved for his analysis of Bishop Berkeley's philosophy; another room with a long bare table where he wrote occasional articles for literary reviews; the summer room, opening on a loggia, where he composed mild nature verses; a somber

CONTINUED ON PAGE 124

Copyright, 1955, by Frank Baker

He was enmeshed in the dark, inescapable web of circumstance. But to what did he owe his deepest loyalty— to his church, to his wife, or himself?

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

By JEAN RITCHIE

YONDER COMES MY BEAU

"I was mad. Why had folks led me to believe that love was so wonderful—that a kiss was such a pleasure"

IT was in the fall just before my fourteenth birthday that I first fell in love. I was a big, healthy, gangly girl. I was good in my books but the boys never winked at me or pulled my straight red hair. I was so bashful that whenever a boy looked at me sideways, my tongue would cleave to the roof of my mouth and my face would turn every which color.

In my heart I wanted more than anything to be noticing the boys, but they just didn't like me. I thought I knew why it was. I wasn't little and slim like the other girls were, and I never had any new clothes. Everything I wore had belonged to several other people before it got down to me.

I let on like I pure hated the boys, would fight anyone that named one to me, and said nobody'd ever catch me walking and talking with any of them. That was another thing—I couldn't talk. In my mind I could have charming talks with rich handsome men, have them fighting duels over me, right and left, but whenever I undertook to say any of those smart things to the boys I knew, the pretty words came out all wrong. The boys would look at me and say yes or no, if they bothered to say that much, and then they'd go away.

One day in October I was sitting at my desk in school, studying my lessons, when someone eased into the seat beside me. I looked up, thinking to see Helen or one of the other girls, but there was Cleve Hamilton, with a grin all over his face and a twinkle in his blue eyes, acting like he wasn't a bit afraid of me. Cleve was the only boy in school that didn't have to do a blessed thing to get the girls to notice him. He was the best basketball player. He was tall and slim but with plenty of muscles, he had the curliest light-colored hair and every move he made put you in mind of a streak of lightning. I thought he was the prettiest thing in the world, but I hated him because he was stuck up, and I never even thought of wanting him to talk to me because I knew he never would.

My first thought was to jump up and run away. He put his arm around the back of the desk seat.

"Howdy, Cleve," I said. My insides were on fire. I tried to hide my red face with the geography book.

Cleve peeped over the edge. He had to whisper because it was in time of books. "Tell me what in tarnation you studying about so hard?"

"Geography."

"Never saw anyone study so hard as you do. Here, shut up that fool book and talk to me."

I determined that I wouldn't let him scare me so I looked him right in the face and asked him what it was he had to say.

Cleve let out a big laugh and the teacher frowned and said "Sh-h-h!"

"Well, don't look so all-fired mad. I ain't going to ask you to shoot yer granny. I just CONTINUED ON PAGE 114

Copyright, 1954, by Jean Ritchie Pickow. This is an excerpt from the book, The Singing Family of the Cumberlands, recently published by Oxford University Press.

It seemed like I had a hundred hearts all inside of me trying to get out.

THE ELEGANCE OF Early Maine

When Thomas Ruggles in 1816 had made a fortune from timbering in the District of Maine, he decided to build for himself a house there that would be somewhat out of the ordinary; a not unusual decision for a man to make when he finds himself with the right amount of money, and one that has accounted first and last for a lot of entertaining architecture. Ruggles had come from Cape Cod some twenty years before, and though at Columbia Falls, where he was now going to settle down, you are getting quite close to Canada, he sent way back to Duxbury, near Boston, for a carpenter-architect named Aaron Sherman who, as it happened, had just done a house there for Daniel Webster. On his way to Columbia Falls, Sherman would almost certainly have had to come through Kittery, and there have stopped to look at the Lady Pepperrell mansion, which you will see on the next page. And fifty miles farther along, just before passing through Portland, you can be sure he paused to peer professionally at the Tate house, here across the page from the Pepperrell. He still had a long way to go; and as he got farther and farther from Boston, I wonder what he thought when the houses kept on being so fine, and the fine ones so plentiful. I wonder what he thought, for instance, when he went through Wiscasset, or if he rode out of his way to take in Castine. Not that he could have seen anything finer than the Tate and the Pepperrell all the wonderful way from Kittery to Columbia Falls. Or for that matter, anything finer than the house he was about to build there for Mr. Ruggles. Or could anyone today, as far as that's concerned.

By RICHARD PRATT, Architectural Editor of the Journal

The inspired chimney piece of the drawing room, with its cabinetry of cherrywood on white, is said to have taken two years to carve.

The flying divided staircase in the Ruggles entrance hallway corresponds to the cadenza in a Mozart concerto. Likewise, in this wholly harmonious house grandeur gives way to grace.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

The carving of the porch is more like masterly whittling, as if it had not been someone's work, but play.

THE Ruggles HOUSE

On his way from Massachusetts through what was then the District of Maine, Sherman must have noted well the foursquare form and low-hipped roof which marked the more substantial everyday dwellings he passed. For the Ruggles house has of course those familiar regional features, but here distinguished by many unusual delicacies of decoration and design. It is the good fortune of the house to have as its custodian Mary Ruggles Chandler, a direct descendant of its original owner.

Lady Pepperrell's beautifully paneled and corniced parlor achieves an aristocracy all its own. The portrait over the fireplace is of Sir William's youngest sister, Jane.

LADY Pepperrell MANSION

There is good reason for calling it the Lady Pepperrell house, for to have it built was the first thing the widow Pepperrell decided to do after the death of Sir William. Even after the Revolution had rendered her title null and void, she demanded unavailingly that she be addressed with the deference she fancied to be her due. The nobility of the house itself has never been questioned.

The dining-room table is Duncan Phyfe; the china, Lowestoft; and the floor is painted to imitate marble.

It was apparently Lady Pepperrell's well-carried-out wish that the façade should be so delightfully grande dame.

THE Tate HOUSE

he rare roof arrangement gave generous light nd headroom to the attic where the house slaves slept.

Note in the paneled dining room the chic black-banded cornice; in the hall another floor painted like marble.

George Tate came to this country in 1755 as Mast Agent to King George II and this was the house he built in Stroudwater, now part of Portland. From his front door he could watch the king's vessels loading up with mast timbers floated down from northern forests. He purposely allowed the clapboard walls to weather unpainted, which they are still doing.

The horn-of-plenty hooked rug is extremely rare and early; the antique copper-plate bedspread undoubtedly unique; the rocker older than the house itself.

WOMEN NEED NO

New knowledge of cervical cancer, woman's worst cancer killer, can cut its death rate vastly; and possibly wipe it out altogether.

By GLADYS DENNY SHUL

RUTH BUSHMAN

Young mothers can now look forward to a safer future than ever before.

Deaths from cervical cancer can be largely done away with if women —begin at age 35 to go to their doctors twice a y for a complete physical examination includin vaginal smear.

—ask their doctors to treat lacerations, infection inflammations of the vaginal canal or cervix if th are found.

—see their doctors between semiannual examinati if they experience: lengthening of the menstr period; watery discharge; resumption of bleed after menopause.

—report to their doctors at once, at any age, if ble ing occurs between menstrual periods.

IN Quebec, a French-Canadian doctor studied health records of thousands of nuns. In Bomb India, an American from New York City's Men rial Hospital amassed data on the intimate lives Hindu, Moslem and Parsi women. In South Ca lina, laboratory workers conducted a bizarre expe ment with mice. On Long Island, electronics expe devised a new kind of "thinking machine." In s other clinics and laboratories the world over, m and women worked at still other, seemingly un lated, projects. Isolated bits and pieces of resear were pursued which, it was hoped, might someti fit into an over-all pattern and save women from needless, painful death.

Finally, at a recent meeting of the Americ Cancer Society, the bits and pieces were brought t gether and the pattern emerged. The doctors pr ent, doctors whose special concern is cancer, becam gradually aware that medical history was bei made. They were being offered means for contro ling the present No. 1 cancer killer of women, canc of the cervix. And beyond that, a promising pos bility that future generations of women need n contract it at all!

Here was not the dramatic impact, to be sure, the announcement of a miracle drug to cure canc f their No. 1 Cancer foe!

LONGER DIE

ght. Dream of cancer research since its begin- g, drug to wipe out cancer is still a dream. Yet ld in the annals of medicine has a more hopeful o been rendered about a major and heretofore st ious killer. Briefly stated, it is now agreed by di doctors that cancer of the cervix is the one m f cancer that can be brought under control e ly diagnosis. Second, techniques now exist t ly for diagnosing cervical cancer in its very di stages, but in some instances before it has c e a cancer at all! Thus even without the mir- e ug that may yet be found, the present most ha form of cancer in women can cease to be a m e, and a vastly important sector of the fight ai t cancer can be won. Provided, it must be ip sized, women give their doctors a chance to e e new weapons at their disposal.

In omen, cancer of the reproductive system, in- d g the breasts, leads all other forms by a wide ar n. It makes up 43 per cent of the entire cancer .u e in American women, and in a number of ne countries the proportion is considerably gh . More American women get breast cancer ar ny other form, but today a higher percentage b ast cancers are being cured. Hence uterine nc s, those of the cervix and the body of the er , have moved into first place in the cancer- or lity figures. Since it is computed that there e ywhere from five to seven cervical cancers for e the body of the uterus, it can be readily seen ha the new knowledge can mean in terms of m ne lives.

T cervix is, of course, the narrow, cylinder- aq l passage connecting the womb proper with e o of the vaginal canal. Anatomically speaking, is rt of the uterus. Yet there are very important ffe nces in the way cancer strikes in these two ri of the same organ. Cancer of the cervix most te attacks women in the childbearing ages, while erwhelming proportion of uterus-cancer vic- n evelop it well after the menopause. Cancer of e rvix is seldom found in women who have not r children and led normally active sex lives. ar r of the uterus is about as frequent in women o ave never borne children and never had sex a nships as in those who have, while breast n , the other major form concerned with the m e organs, is found most frequently in women o ave never been pregnant. These apparent contradictions have presented one of the knottiest problems that scientists working to unravel the cancer mystery have had to solve.

Today the heaviest cancer burden is falling on the women who have chosen wifehood and motherhood. The breast-cancer mortality rate has been dropping, when one considers that nowadays more women live to the ages when breast cancer ordinarily occurs. Detecting a lump in the breast is usually not hard, and both women and their doctors have learned to view with alarm the appearance of the tiniest lump in a woman's breast. Mortality rates from cervical cancer have remained much higher than they need be because this last killer is as sly as it is deadly.

Not only is it hidden away inside a woman's body. The epidermoid form, which comprises 94 per cent of all cervical cancers, develops first in the skin covering of the cervix, a mucous membrane similar to that of the palate, vagina and other body openings. Quite often, in the early stages of epidermoid cancer, the surface of the cervix will show no change at all in an ordinary vaginal examination.

More deceptive still, there are seldom any alarming symptoms in the beginning, and to date women have not been well-enough alerted to the ones that may appear. Most of us think of uterine cancer as something to be watched out for at middle age or later. Spotting or serious bleeding after menopause has been widely publicized as a danger signal. But the great bulk of the cervical-cancer victims are in the childbearing and menstruating ages. The early symptoms of this form of cancer are a slight prolongation of the menstrual period, a watery discharge, slight bleeding between periods. The bleeding may occur after marital relations, or travel or unusual exertion, or perhaps with no provocation at all. Pain is rarely felt as an early symptom. When it is, it comes as a dull ache in the lower abdomen, similar to the pains many women experience before a menstrual period. Hence there is a natural tendency for the victims to ascribe these things to some change or disarrangement in the menstrual pattern, too trivial to report to their doctors.

The foregoing are the reasons why Dr. J. M. Baldy, writing of uterine cancer in 1901, had to say, "My experience with cancer of the cervix is most discouraging. With few exceptions, I do not see these patients until they are all dead or dying." They are the reasons why today, after decades of cancer education, cancer clinics report that only about 10 per cent of the cervical-cancer patients are seen in the early stages, when the cure is easiest and most certain.

In time the symptoms become disturbing enough, or cause enough inconvenience, to send a woman to her doctor. The dull abdominal ache spreads gradually from hip to knee, finally to ankles and toes. The watery discharge becomes first bloodstained, then yellowish. A hemorrhage takes place. Hemorrhage, in fact, is usually the first symptom alarming enough to make a woman seek medical aid. But by this time the disease may have invaded much of the pelvic region and it may be too late.

For a tragic feature of cervical cancer is that a particularly wide and disastrous area of operations is offered to the outlaw growth once it has broken through the surface of the cervix and begun its sinister proliferation. The cervix is in close proximity to the rectum and bladder and ureters, as well as to the vaginal canal into which it opens. It has many lymphatic outlets through which the cancer cells may travel to still other parts of the pelvis. Rather oddly, it seldom invades the body of the uterus. But when it does, it may go through the uterus wall and on into the intestines. Many victims die as a result of infections or interference with the functioning of the kidneys or other pelvic organs, rather than from the cancer itself.

That such dreadful occurrences as these can be stopped is great news CONTINUED ON PAGE 164

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

is offering its readers a great service by publishing this excellent article. It should be a means of saving thousands of lives. Since so optimistic an article could hardly have been published up to now, it is extraordinarily well timed.

Further advances may confidently be expected to come from continued public support of the program of the American Cancer Society. Your help in the current Cancer Crusade will do much toward achieving this end.

CHARLES S. CAMERON, M.D.
Vice-President, American Cancer Society

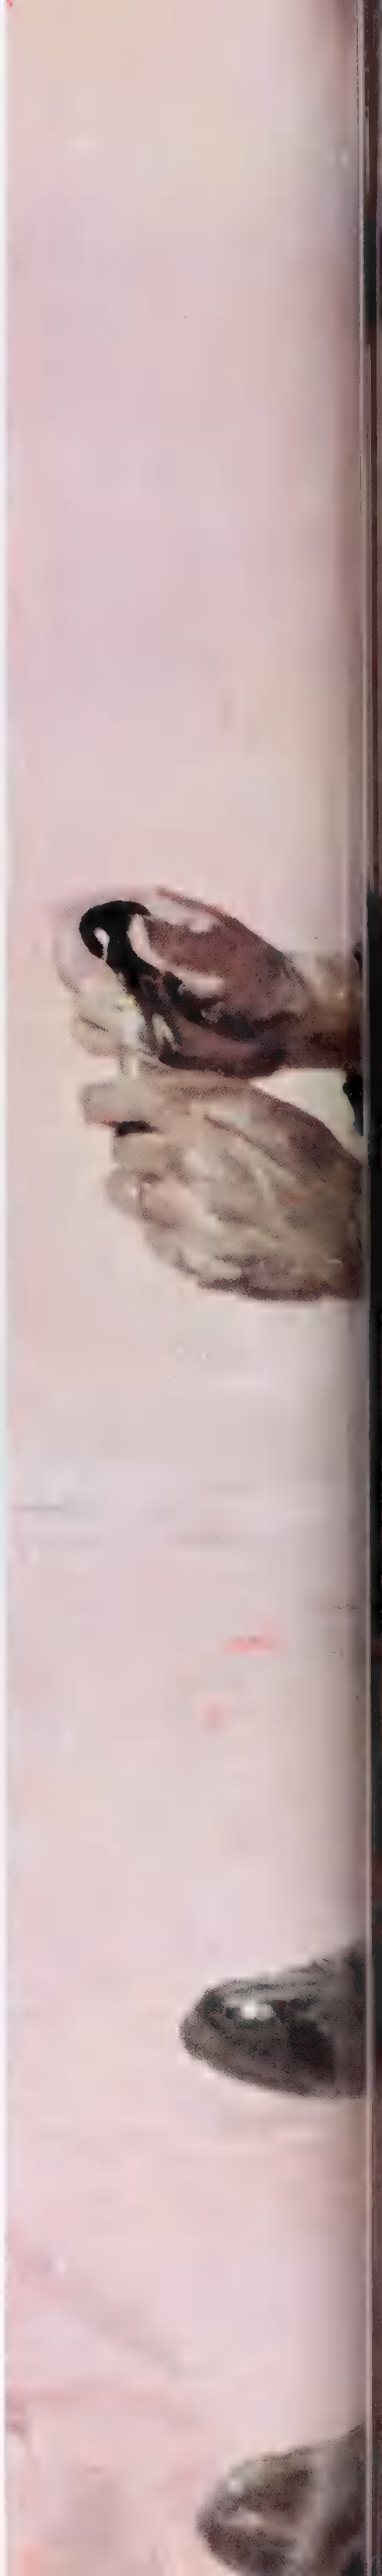
By GEORGE SUMNER ALBEE

The Ugliest Woman in Town

THE really rich, the people whose income runs to thousands of dollars a day, so that the sternest tax leaves them with more money than they can possibly spend, are consummate artists at keeping themselves out of sight. Of their great ugly houses at Palm Beach nothing can be seen from the street but the obscure entrances to their driveways, while at Bar Harbor the driveways do not even have name or number plates. They live, these truly rich, in old houses on green meadows around New York, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Baltimore and Washington. Hotels and restaurants beseech their patronage and rarely get it, for when they travel in the United States they stay with friends, as the English do, and when they go abroad a house is always ready for them on arrival. They buy little. What do they need? Not gadgets, certainly. And when their paths cross those of the luminaries of New York's saloon society—as, for instance, the Dickeys' crossed that of Netta Tholen—it happens by chance and the touch does not linger. In a way, Netta is a gadget; a pretty fancy one, like a free-form swimming pool with mercury-vapor lamps, but still a gadget.

What happened was that Netta telephoned to Frances Dickey from the 30th Street Station in Philadelphia and exclaimed, "Darling"—pronouncing it, as always, as two words—"dar ling, can I interest you in putting me up for a week? I'm utterly, utterly homeless. A waif."

"Of course," replied Frances, who had not heard from Netta in two years and who, in any case, had never known her very well. "Come ahead. Why are you homeless?"



"I'm just back," revealed Netta, "just twenty-four hours ago, from Paris and a divorce. I'm home for a while to settle my wits."

"I hadn't heard. I'm so sorry, Netta," Frances told her.

"I'm not; not the least bit!" cried Netta.

And nothing could have revealed the difference between the two women more clearly than Frances' regret on the one hand and Netta's lack of it on the other. CONTINUED ON PAGE 102

Netta was baffled. How could Hort love Frances? Or did he? Netta intended to find out.

"Sit with me, Hort," Netta said.
"This is my bad time, when I feel lonely and scared."

Born to be Queen

"Big birds, big birds," cried Trix delightedly as the German bombers dived from the sky over Amsterdam.

By BETTY HOFFMAN and A. N. P.* (Netherlands News Agency)

"It is very difficult to bring up children in a palace," Princess Juliana told Sophia Feith, the girl she had just engaged as nurse for the new Crown Princess of the Netherlands, "but our daughter will not be raised in tissue paper. While she is still small she is to be called Trix, even by the servants. We do not want her even to hear the word princess." Bernhard was a devoted visitor to the nursery, and Juliana spent there every moment she could snatch from her official duties. She liked to give Beatrix her bath, and on Miss Feith's days off Juliana took over entire care of her daughter, keeping the child's crib by her desk as she worked on official papers. Both young parents were so friendly and informal that Miss Feith had difficulty remembering that they were royalty. Yet always, in the back of her mind, loomed an awareness of the huge cold (Queen Wilhelmina did not approve of central heating) palace of Soestdijk, the obsequious footmen, the ever-present security guards, the unseen vaults of silver and gold and diamonds, and the importance of the charge with which she had been entrusted. Trix is the Netherlands, she thought, both slave and monarch to her people, her life will never really be her own. The young nurse felt as though the destiny of the four-hundred-year-old House of Orange lay in her hands.

ONE day several weeks after she had moved into the palace in the forests of Soest, Miss Feith was pushing the infant princess in her pram when a high black Daimler bearing an official crest swept past her up the wide gravel drive. The car stopped by the wide stone steps leading to the central section of Soestdijk. Presently a full-skirted figure emerged and began to climb the steps energetically, a footman racing ahead to open the door. No sooner had the woman disappeared inside when the orange-and-blue standard of Princess Juliana came fluttering down from the flagpole and Queen Wilhelmina's was hoisted in its place.

Later, from the rear of the main section, which was unheated and laden with French Empire and Russian treasures, the nurse thought she could detect the faint smell of beef and onions cooking. The queen was in residence.

Miss Feith had observed her monarch at close quarters many times since that snowy day in the woods when the royal family flashed by her in a golden sleigh. Each time she had been more impressed by the unshakable dignity of the Dutch queen. Once during a bad flood Her Majesty directed two Dutch tars to carry her through the rising waters of a broken dike to supervise the rescue of her imperiled people. Even so, carried like a wet bag in her hip boots and mackintosh, her immense dignity appeared unimpaired.

Queen Wilhelmina was ten when her father's death elevated her to the throne. On that day her childhood ended, it was said, although her mother Emma served as regent for many years.

Before the time of Wilhelmina, the best-beloved Dutch queens had always been docile, serene, intensely domestic women (Since these are, after all, the virtues most prized by Dutchmen, thought the nurse). But these gentle queens had never occupied the throne. This tiresome and formidable job was their husbands' province.

Wilhelmina was the first woman monarch in Dutch history—even her name continues in female form the traditional name of William in the royal house. Hence, the nurse decided, the difference between the warm and outgoing Queen Anna or Queen Emma and the austere Queen Wilhelmina. Was not the die of her steel character cast on her Inauguration Day when she promised to reign over her constitutional monarchy "as a good king should," ancient promise of the Kings of Orange?

Once, while shopping in Amsterdam, Miss Feith had observed the queen sitting before her easel on

Copyright, 1955, A.N.P. (Netherlands News Agency)

*This series was written by Mrs. Hoffman, working in collaboration with A. N. P. (Netherlands News Agency) and with full co-operation from Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard. Mrs. Hoffman, a former JOURNAL editor, spent months in Holland (where she had free access to the palace), and in Belgium and Canada.

Queen Emma, regent until Wilhelmina's eighteenth year, "made the best lemonade I ever tasted," says Juliana.

Wilhelmina, first woman monarch in Dutch history, ascended the throne in eleventh year.

COMBINE PHOTOS

Juliana became queen when Wilhelmina abdicated in 1948, after fifty years on the throne.

Coat of Arms of H.R.H. Princess Beatrix was laid down by royal decree when Trix was two weeks old.

eighteen months old when Irene was born, treated her baby sister the same bearlike affection she bestowed on her rag doll.

Born to be Queen

Juliana made the Waterloo Room, rich in relics of the Napoleonic era, into a playroom for Trix.

ANPFOTO

Desks, blackboard converted bedroom at Noordeinde into schoolroom for Juliana (right rear), three friends.

EUROPEAN

The young Queen Wilhelmina, with her husband Prince Henry, first Dutch prince consort, and baby Juliana.

the rooftop of the royal palace on Dam Square. This was shortly after the death of her husband, Prince Henry. As the nurse stared up at that doughty figure whipped by an icy gale from the old Zuider Zee, she remembered what Tennyson had told the widowed and brokenhearted Queen Victoria. "You are alone," he had said, "on that terrible height."

The day after Her Majesty's Daimler arrived at Soestdijk, Queen Wilhelmina appeared at the door of Trix's nursery in the west wing, accompanied by her daughter Juliana.

The nurse felt overcome with shyness and a sense of awe as she met for the first time her sovereign. Then ——

Good heavens, she thought, Her Majesty's bobbed her hair too!

The portly queen clasped Sophia's hand and then hurried over to the crib. "Hello, darling!" she said, lifting the princess out and hugging her. "She has put on weight!"

"Bernhard has taken a hundred pictures already," said Juliana eagerly. "I will give you some to take back with you."

The two women discussed the baby as the princess undressed her for her bath: whose hair she had inherited and whether her eyes were blue or gray, how often she cried, her digestion, and where her clothes should be purchased. The queen recommended the Arbeid Adelt, which the nurse knew was a kind of women's exchange in The Hague where impoverished ladies sold their needlework anonymously. Juliana promised her mother to visit the shop the very next time she was in the city.

During the bath the queen sat on the edge of the tub, unmindful of the baby's splashings on her gown. Just like any other doting grandmother, thought the nurse. She is really not frightening at all.

She noticed, however, that the queen addressed all her remarks about the princess to Juliana. When Trix's mother left the room for a few minutes to see an official visitor, Her Majesty asked Sophia some kindly questions and then talked to the baby. Presently a footman arrived with the baby's ten-o'clock orange juice which she took before she was nursed.

The queen looked at the silver tray critically.

"Are these the same plates which are used by the rest of the family?" she suddenly addressed Miss Feith.

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"Trix does not have her own serviceware and pots and pans kept separately from the others?"

"No, Your Majesty."

"I see," said the queen.

That ended the conversation.

Shortly afterward, when Trix was about three months old, the royal family motored down to The Hague for the baby's christening. They had been invited by the queen to stay at her official residence, Noordeinde Palace.

"When you see the inside of Noordeinde, you will be glad we don't live there," Princess Juliana told the nurse, who was in the back seat of the car.

Bernhard swung the car down a narrow red-bricked street in The Hague lined with shops and offices. "I'd never seen a palace in the middle of a street before. It even has a house number, Jula says."

Trix's first ride in the great golden coach was the day of her christening, at fourteen weeks.

Each September Juliana formally opens Parliament, then she and Bernhard parade through The Hague.

"Mother was once offered the finest site in the city for a new palace," Juliana explained. "It was going to have a tremendous lawn and boulevard and so forth. Mother wouldn't hear of it. She said what was good enough for her ancestors was certainly good enough for her."

The Spartan queen economized in other ways, as Miss Feith knew. When she moved into Noordeinde as a young bride, her widowed mother Emma moved up the street. Every other day or so until her death the young couple went to her house to pay their respects. Sometimes Queen Wilhelmina spurned the services of royal coaches or coachmen, and walked along the Hague street with her husband and a single attendant behind. Often she and Prince Henry rode their bicycles.

The prince swung past a statue of a Dutch cavalier on a rearing horse, the original Prince of Orange, William the Silent, and came to a screeching halt in front of a plain four-storied white-stone building with unshuttered crossbar windows.

A grenadier presented arms with a flourish while several palace footmen rushed to open the car doors and assist the royal party. The princess handed them the baby in a cane traveling basket. Bernhard unfolded his long legs and let himself out from the driver's seat.

Over to one side of the front entrance, past the wooden sentry box, Miss Feith noticed several footmen scrubbing around the bicycle racks under the open arcades. They were removing black tire marks from the white palace walls. Surely, she thought, this is a rather ugly and unpretentious royal residence! Who would guess that Holland is the richest country for its size in the world?

The queen appeared in the doorway and after embracing the young couple and kissing the baby, shook hands with the nurse and led the way indoors. The palace in which Queen Wilhelmina had lived for most of her fifty-eight years was much larger than Soestdijk. It was filled with French antiques and gold hangings and looked much like the central section of Soestdijk, but more formal and colder. Already the prince had turned up his coat collar.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 186

The Dutch army mobilized, 200,000 strong, as Hitler's millions marched into

ACME

Austria

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

Poland

ACME

Norway. Holland was next.

The bride

White organdy for her wedding day, pastel satin in all shades of pink and blue, an

She goes away in a cotton-and-silk jacket-dress by Benee Taylor, patent-leather pumps.

She takes along a pink woven-back Orlon coat that goes over everything, by Dan W. Barkin.

She is married in white organdy with Val-lace ruffles, by Miss Marie, with organdy bowknot headdress and veil, John Frederics.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELM CUSHMAN wears cotton

her honeymoon . . . cotton tweed to cotton ink coat for everything .

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

She is seen dancing in all the gayest places in a princess-line cotton sateen with an evening neckline, by Gigi Young.

Chalk-line pink cotton by Betse Cann, pink wedding pumps, polka-dot bag by Morris Moskowitz.

Almost any afternoon, in cotton polka dots (pleats are permanent) by Jonathan Logan, white sandals and jewelry.

Ideas for the bride:

Why not a bouquet of white, pink and candy-striped carnations with a bit of ivy . . . or white lilac with pink or blue hyacinths?

For a headdress, why not a chignon cap of closely frilled lace?

Why not borrow your grandmother's starched muslin petticoat with loops of pink or blue ribbon . . . slippers of matching kidskin?

Bridesmaids in a pastel wedding might wear white organdie, with pink or blue sashes over pink, blue or primrose yellow.

A full pink cotton-faille skirt is fun to wear with the top of her play suit, by Charles Howard.

Shirt and shorts are dimity, sweater cotton knit, kid sandals by Jean Bandler.

UNEXPECTED

do something new, try something differe titian-haired, you can have

Blues for the hazel-eyed blonde

Usually worn with blue eyes, this French-blue-and-gray costume is a delectable change for hazel eyes. Silk-linen dress and jacket by Harvey Berin, back-of-the-head flower hat by Hattie Carnegie. Pearls are combined with sapphire beads.

WILHELA CU

Bright coral for titian hair

Surprising and wonderful. These shades are lovely for the titian-haired. The exciting wool-fleece coat is by Charles James. Worn with bamboo beads by Mr. John, and wide gold bracelet. Coral can be combined in a costume with pale lemon yellow or soft sand beige or gray. The fashion could be in a suit as well as a coat, in silk as well as wool.

Pale pink for auburn hair

Combination with a new kind of prettiness. Try a pink Irish-linen suit with chamois gloves, plenty of gold jewelry, a silk rose chignon hat by Hattie Carnegie.

(OLOR FOR YOUR TYPE

whatever your type, blond, brunet or e citing change.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Dramatic brunette in pale pastels

Beige silk crepe, a lovely change for dark-haired beauties. The distinguished two-piece overblouse silhouette with a pleated skirt, Christian Dior–New York.

Pale blonde in bright red

Intense color with pale hair and fair skin is an effective combination. The red silk-linen suit by Anthony Blotta is matched by a red Breton hat by Hattie Carnegie. More color—chamois-yellow gloves.

Shades of green for dark hair

Olive greens and pastel greens combine beautifully and with a different look. This is Clare Potter's lovely silk shirtwaist dress for afternoon, John Frederics' pale green straw cartwheel hat. Worn with quantities of crystal beads, all shades of pink, cluster earrings.

Wallpaper stripes on cotton satin. Bodice has becoming surplice line, skirt is gathered. Vogue Design No. 8586.

Spring Cottons to wear through Summer

A slim sheath with lowered waistline in bird's-eye piqué has own straight jacket. Button detail. Vogue Design No. S-460

This spring the prettiest cottons are blossoming in the loveliest flower colors. Even in prints and embroideries flower motifs are tops in news and importance. Soft, satiny finishes, enchanting transparent sheers (embroidered, or in eyelets or prints), rough textures crinkled or plain, and piqués in the most exciting colors are just a few of the highlights you will find in your favorite fabric department. Chances are you won't be able to decide on just one, but will happily buy two or three. These designs are as pretty and easy to wear as the fabrics.

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

White piqué stripes alternating with pink crinkle stripes, the drawstring bodice tied with velvet ribbon. "Very Easy to Make" Vogue Design No. 8476.

r t young in heart and figure—a cotton-satin jumper with ur dered organdy blouse. Junior Vogue Design No. 3596.

DERUJINSKY

Most feminine summer blouse is eyelet. Design No. 8590. Piqué skirt is gored. Design No. 8584.

An old and new favorite—dotted swiss. Ours in blue, collared in organdy. Vogue Design No. 8578.

Gayest skirt of the season . . . black-and-white circular harlequin skirt . . . only one piece needing just a waistline and hem, costs only $5.95 (we'll tell you where to buy). Sleeveless top, Vogue Design No. 8493.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 134

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosingcheckormoneyorder,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

© VOGUE

Tangerine tweed ensemble by Jeanne Campbell: coat, $39.95; skirt, $10.95; polka-dot linen blouse, $12.95. Suzy's new piqué hat, $5.95; red plastic-leather bag, $2.98; cotton gloves, $2.00. $74.78

Linenlike rayon jacket-dress in cocoa beige, $17.95, the right silhouette for deep cloche of coconut straw, $3.95, by Mr. Alf; straw bag by Roger Van S, $7.95; hand-sewn cotton gloves, $2.95; llama-grained brown calfskin shoes, $15.00. $47.80

FASHION DOLLARS

That wonderful lift . . . that lovely feeling of confidence that comes with a new spring outfit depends on the total effect, not just the dress or the irresistible hat. Wise spending will see you turned out in a tweed ensemble, a suit or jacket-dress in silk-and-cotton mixtures, a costume composed of a silk or rayon dress and a wool coat, complete with fashion accessories. By Ruth Mary Packard

RICHARD LITWIN

Silk dress and jersey coat, Andrew Arkin. $69.95; hat, $3.95; plastic patent bag, $5.00; pumps, $5.99; pearls, $2.00; gloves, $2.95.

$89.84

Tweedy beige silk-and-cotton suit is by Stefan, $49.95 including blouse. Linen beret by Mr. Alf, $6.95; plastic patent bag, $4.95; pumps, $16.95; bracelets, $3.00 and $1.00; earrings, $2.00; gloves, $2.00.

$89.80

Gray silk-and-cotton dress and jacket, $45.00, by Andrew Arkin, accented with black—hat by Mr. Alf, $8.95; plastic patent bag, $7.95; shoes, $5.99. For $1.00 each—pearls, earrings and gloves.

$70.89

A country plan for living, dining and entertaining uses color with a free hand in paint and fabric, and modern furniture that offers hospitality with grace and takes no trouble to maintain.

By H. T. WILLIAMS

"POPPIES," A PAINTING BY PADINA, COURTESY OF SCHONEMAN GALLER

COUNTRY MODERN

Inside the house, games are lit by a hanging lamp with gold silk shade removable for washing and replaceable with other colors and fabrics. For outdoor lounging, a terrace stand-by is the woven basketry chair of light weight and large size. Guest chairs are rust-resisting iron and come with swinging trays that fit into side holders, handy when snacks and beverages are passed.

Modern is at ease in the country, more relaxed and less formal in manner than its city counterpart. Take this room, for instance, with living area 16′x18′ and dining area 10′x12′. Begin with a clear color scheme—gleaming white wood ceiling and sea-green walls, then the oak parquetry floor pickled and given a rug of turquoise rayon—a refreshing background for the fabrics and woods to follow. Two big chintz chairs in a pattern as fresh as foliage, a deep purple ottoman, coffee table of brass and white glass, an extra-long striped couch and two walnut side chests topped in slate are practical choices for a family room and one that holds a party of dinner guests almost every weekend. At one windowed wall facing a stone terrace, white embroidered batiste is used for draperies. Only an aqua game table and two chairs painted white and pillowed in vivid pink stand at the glass, giving an outdoor view all day long. To set off a dining wing, a storage wall was extended slightly to suggest a room divider, and holds radio, record player and television in space-saving vertical arrangement. Beyond lies the dining quarter where a small walnut table expands to oval, and circled by eight walnut chairs is still uncrowded and inviting.

HAROLD FOWLER

ilored fabric for the sofa is a hardy rton of white, chartreuse and ua in quiet stripes. Another restful note the purple-seated black ottoman at glides silently on casters hooded in ass. Two walnut side chests have vered folding doors, brass tterfly hinges. One lamp is water- ue Mexican glass, two others tall iped wood; and over the slate fireplace, ottery wreath holds candles.

Dining area overlooks a garden. Two 12″ leaves expand the table. Side chairs are upholstered in vivid pink and purple, cotton-and-rayon mix. Aqua cabinets with brass knobs run the length of the room here for a jumbo buffet and storage area. Splitwood shades, originally plain, were painted in a running clef design and edged with red wood fringe.

CULVER SERVICE

"My Children Were Simply Heav

Miss Barrymore and her children, Sammy (named for his uncle, inventor of th Colt revolver), Jackie and Ethel Colt. "They were so completely different from each other that I always felt, as they grew up, that I might have picked them up from different orphan asylums— but believe me, I didn't!"

Ethel Barrymore

MEMORIES

"I still hoped—and sometimes I believed—that I could save my marriage."

CULVER SERVICE

"Russell Colt had tremendous humor and at first his lighthearted irresponsibility—he never really grew up—seemed only to add to his charm."

CULVER SERVICE

"The night Sammy was born, the nurse sternly placed a lace cap on my head, my small son in my arms, and called in a photographer."

CULVER SERVICE

"'Oh, let's go and see her die!' my friends would say when I was playing in The Lady of the Camellias." With Conway Tearle.

Every adult member of her family was a stage celebrity, but she herself planned to be a concert pianist, and practiced faithfully at the convent school she attended in Philadelphia where she, Lionel and John were being brought up by "Mummum," Grandmother Drew. After her mother's death and her father's remarriage, she was suddenly taken from school and sent to Montreal to go on the stage. "Nobody told me anything about acting; I was expected to know!" Early in her life as an actress, she appeared in London where she was an immediate success and made such friends as Winston Churchill, Anthony Hope, Ellen Terry, the Duchess of Sutherland. Says Miss Barrymore now, "I was so young that I was unaware that doors were opening for me; I never even knew they were closed." In America she saw her name in lights on Broadway for the first time in "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines"—in which Brother Jack played his first stage role. For several years she practically commuted across the Atlantic, and rumor had her engaged to dukes, earls—even an Indian prince. Actually she was engaged three times, but she was not yet ready to be married and broke each engagement. Then, in New York, she met Russell Colt—"and I don't remember that I even tried to escape."

III AFTER the play on Saturday I went to stay with my friends, the Fairchilds, in Dedham. The Episcopal minister there, a friend of theirs, made all the arrangements with the priest at Hyde Park to marry us. The ceremony took place on Sunday morning between masses in the priest's house at the Church of the Most Precious Blood. Jack Barrymore and Russell's brother, Roswell Colt, were the only witnesses. It was a short ceremony, lasting just a few minutes. We went back to Dedham, and the next day I went back to the play.

Our honeymoon was the rest of the tour in "Lady Frederick" which took us all the way to California. When we played in San Francisco, Russell and I went down to spend a weekend with Sam Morse and his wife, Anne, at Merced. Anne was expecting her Sammy then, as I was expecting mine, and she and I sat on the porch and rocked while Sam and Russell went out shooting ducks.

I hadn't yet been to see a doctor, because I knew if I went to one he might tell me that I couldn't finish the season, and I knew I had to do that.

Uncle Jack was also closing his season in California, and I arranged things so that we could come back on the same train with him and Aunt Dodo. I was getting, not frightened exactly, but a little nervous, as there had been no one for me to talk to about having a baby, and Aunt Dodo was the nearest thing to a family that I had. She was the one who got me the wonderful nurse, Mrs. Frings, who took care of me.

When I came back to New York, I went to see the only doctor I knew, Doctor Bagg, who had been Mummum's doctor. His brownstone house in the 50's was boarded up, as most of those houses used to be every summer, with a sign saying "Back in September."

I didn't know what to do, but one night in Greenwich, where we took a house for the summer, I met two awfully nice women—Margery Close and Maribell Coffin. Russell had gone to New Haven with Maribell's husband. After dinner the two girls asked me what doctor I had and when I said the only one I knew would not be back until September, they told me about theirs and that was how I came to know my dear Doctor Danforth, a wonderful man. He had discreet little side whiskers that inspired Uncle Jack to call him "storm at sea."

He and Mrs. Danforth were spending the summer in Greenwich, and he was reassuring and kind and made me feel safe—a very wonderful feeling.

After Russell had been commuting every day to New York for some little time, Temple Gwathney,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 198

Copyright, 1955, by Ethel Barrymore; all rights reserved under the International and Pan American Conventions

Happy Easter

Menu

Clam Aspic Crackers
Roast Stuffed Leg of Lamb
Gravy
Potato Balls
Asparagus
with Mustard Hollandaise
Celery-and-Mushroom Medley
Toasted Herb Rolls
Lemon-Chiffon Ring with Fresh Fruit
Coffee
(Planned for 6)

By ANN BATCHELDER

NOW the "spring, spring, beautiful spring" is here. Easter, no matter when it falls (and unlike Christmas and Thanksgiving and Independence Day it is a movable feast), calls for the mothball eradicator and a new Easter bonnet at least. For the jonquil and the lilac are in flower and new life is apace in the world that we live in. And "the voice of the turtle is heard in our land." There's a new lease on all things. The search for happiness is like a restrung harp. Waiting for the chorus of fulfillment to vibrate to the spring breezes, waiting for the diapason of the great symphony of new awakenings all around us.

That's why. That is why we greet the day with the word "happy." And a Happy Easter let it be to all! And an ageless wish is this from me to you: "Happy Easter." See those daffodils, see that iris, those lilies to remind us that everything is new? And now let's look into an Easter Day luncheon or a very special dinner. Set at the hour we choose.

And being bidden so to do, I turn to the Easter-come-first gala meal, and what gives, do you think? I've called on a hidden cove, on a secret hideaway, and it has yielded its treasure, and added a certain salty, appetizing savor for our Easter, our beautiful spring luncheon or dinner to which our guests come gladly—and from lilies I turn to clams and a refreshing

Clam Aspic

Pour into a saucepan two 8-ounce bottles clam juice and the juice from a 7½-ounce can minced clams. Add 3 thin slices lemon, ⅛ teaspoon thyme, 1 very small onion, sliced, a handful of celery leaves and parsley. Bring to a boil and allow to simmer, covered, for 10 to 15 minutes. Meanwhile, soften 4 teaspoons unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Then strain the hot clam broth through a fine sieve and add the softened gelatin; stir until dissolved. Chill until the mixture thickens, then fold in the minced clams, 1 tablespoon chopped chives, ⅓ cup chopped water cress and 2 tablespoons chopped pimiento, if you like it. Chill until firm. Serve topped with a spoonful of sauce made with ½ cup thick commercial sour cream, 1½ teaspoons prepared horseradish and ⅛ teaspoon each of salt and sugar.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 122

Flower-decked china and sterling silver set a springtime table for our Easter dinner.

STUART-FOWLER

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

Even our best neighbors rarely offer to repair the damage their cherubs do to our cherished back-yard bric-a-brac. (They may be afraid some boorish neighbor might say "Swell!") But on second thought, how much of our brats' damage elsewhere have I ever repaired?

Our town isn't easily stampeded; the epidemic of pink-and-black duds for men didn't make much headway among our Beau Brummels on Main Street. And most of the men I saw frothed up in this recent "style" may have been subsidized haberdashery salesmen.

"In my opinion," says Peter Comfort, gently probing a mole tunnel in his lawn with a picnic fork, "women get stubborner as they grow older, while men get more pliable and conciliatory. (Maybe at eighty it's a tie?)"

On the faraway planet Adnaxas, reports Hank Felsen, the science fictionist, a man and woman in love can have a baby by holding hands and concentrating on the image of the infant they want. . . . But if they're not in true harmony, he warns, they must resort to System B. If it is a system.

Our luncheon club's oracle (a formidable man downtown) confesses he spends 60 per cent of his energy defending himself against his teen-age children's scorn. "I'll bet a dollar," he says, "they study a course in seventh grade called Deflation and Annoyance of Parents."

We've padlocked our kitchen and pantry, to reduce my temptation to sneak a snack late at night. Occasionally the phone in the pantry rang and gave me an alibi, until we extricated it via a long cord under the pantry door.

Our ladies at the bridge table were reconnoitering the vulnerability of our town's most untrammeled gossip. "I think she's vulnerable," said my partner. "If she knew what we know about her she'd never open her mouth."

This spring we're renewing our vow to eat one hundred meals outdoors, and adding a new one: to drive out beyond the city limits at least three times a week, into the country until there isn't a three-story building in sight and the sky is as complete as an inverted salad bowl.

My second most cherished gift lately is called a "blab-off": with it you can turn off the more unpalatable TV commercials clear across the room. If those smoothies only knew how silly they look with their lips moving soundlessly!

Elderly parents in our town seem to cherish one precious hallucination: that their middle-aged children are still docile tots of three or four. Alas, how gladly we'd submit to their wily blandishments if we were even only thirty or forty!

Out in Dawn Dell suburb the wife of a young corporation gypsy has built a reputation as hostess with $1-a-dish curry, pizza and blintzes. "I won't serve steak even to the boss," she says, "until we have a steak salary."

As I look around our downtown club, it strikes me there's a vacuum in the lives of men who don't practice some outdoor sport. Any dub trying to break 100 at golf lives a fuller life than our inveterate cynic who scorns all exercise except "carrying his athletic friends' coffins."

"Think you'll be able to take nourishment?"

I've discovered that almost any household machine which goes wrong can be restored to reasonably good health if you shake it gently yet firmly, but in a friendly way.

One of our neighbors recently stumbled into the thrill of sitting next to Marilyn Monroe. "It should have been a thrill," he says, "but there are a dozen gals in our town who speed up my pulse faster."

I've seldom known a woman who isn't a worshipful cheerleader for any doctor, until she becomes a grandmother. Then she suddenly discovers that she knows more medicine than Mayo and Johns Hopkins combined.

A man at the office has just returned from a trip to Scandinavia on an airline's installment plan. "After all," he argues, "nobody would foreclose the mortgage on the house or repossess the car of a man who's just been to Europe!"

Bravo for some of our great state's cultured college alumni! When the football fanatics bought the coach at the state university a Cadillac, they got self-conscious and before you could say "Monday quarterback" they bought one of the professors a Buick.

Our local pessimist showed me a clipping where Major Seversky (how that modest title has stuck to him!) says World War III is inevitable. . . . I immediately offered to bet him $100 to $25 that it won't come before 1960; this cheered him slightly.

We've snared an optimist at our luncheon round table: "McCarthy was a good thing for the country. He was like an inoculation or vaccination; the antibodies and white corpuscles rose to the occasion superbly."

Every time I visit New York my curiosity leads me to the Whitney, Guggenheim and Modern art galleries. Each time I'm convinced that often their more baffling modern pictures are painted by disappointed cartoonists or rebels too proud to design wallpaper.

What'll it prove when there is a four-lane toll road from the West straight into New York? For one thing, it'll enable exiles living in one-room apartments in Manhattan to prove that their parents visiting from back home really do drive a Lincoln convertible.

"My teen-ager wants to know," confides Betty Comfort, spilling some coffee grounds near the garbage can, "why she can't watch TV while studying if I watch it while going over our bills. She'll learn that bills make you goof at anything for solace."

On the bus one of our town's self-made men (who has a four-car garage chock-full of cars) tells me his greatest luxury since he graduated from poverty is a fresh new razor blade every day. (I still feel wasteful if I use a new blade less than two days.)

I do a double take and ask myself "Who, me?" when—

. . . Our youngest emerges fondly debonair from the explosion after I've lost my temper.

. . . Or our daughter smiles at me twenty or thirty times in an hour,

. . . And Junior patiently explains to me something he modestly savvies better'n I do.

. . . Or my tyrannical enchantress lies to me sweetly that my comfort is more important than the children's.

And I admit to myself secretly that they don't have it so good in Spitzbergen or Raratonga.

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "Even a one-year-old seems to sense that it isn't right for him to gain the upper hand easily."

What is the effect on children when a father takes little part in discipline?

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

I PROMISED to write about the father's part in discipline. By "discipline" I don't mean just punishment, but the much larger matter of managing and leading a child successfully. I'll quote from two letters to show two opposite kinds of problems. "My husband, a marvelous father, wants immediate compliance with all commands, saying it might save our son's life if he were in a dangerous position. I am more inclined to be lenient, feeling that a small child (ours is fourteen months) isn't yet able to respond immediately." The other says: "Our little boy is two years old. The problem is hitting—especially his father. My husband says it is no fun to play with him because he continually slaps or pokes his eyes or hits him in the head with any toy available. This isn't done in anger but with chortles of great glee."

You might say right away that these aren't exclusively the problems of fathers—some mothers have the same kind. That's true, but I still think that these particular types come up more often with fathers.

I suppose that before we concentrate further on fathers we ought to think about the different parts that mothers and fathers play in discipline. All you have to do is look around to see that it's somewhat different in every family, depending on the upbringing and personality of each parent and the nature of each child, which is as it should be.

I have the impression from discussions with dozens and dozens of mothers that a surprising number of them believe that their husbands have better control over the children than they do. They complain of this. It makes such mothers, who have had to manage the children through a hundred minor crises each day, a little bit mad to have their husbands breeze in at the end of the day and control the children more easily. Probably the main explanation in these families is not that fathers have some kind of magic, but that a mother's discipline is more likely to wear thin because she's having to use it hour after hour all day.

I think we should also remember that in most families the discipline works more easily—and at the same time more leniently—between opposite sexes. In probably a majority of families, fathers aren't quite so strict with their daughters as they are with their sons, and yet their daughters may obey them more readily. And mothers may give more of the benefit of the doubt to their sons. There's nothing mysterious or morbid about this—it's just that human beings, like many other creatures, are made to be charming to the opposite sex and to be somewhat rivalrous with their own sex. This tends to be true even though fathers and sons love each other dearly, and mothers and daughters do the same. I hardly recognize my own father when I hear my sisters describe him. They emphasize that he was delightful, humorous, easygoing. I remember him as devoted, absolutely just, but very serious and quite strict. It isn't simply that the good father is likely to be a little more exacting with his sons, but that the sons see the father as even more awe-inspiring than he is because of the subtle rivalrousness that they naturally feel with him.

I suppose another reason still why fathers are apt to be more exacting with their sons is that fathers from the time they were boys have been trying to live up to manly standards, being criticized by their fathers and criticizing themselves when they failed. And what we were criticized for ourselves when we were children we tend strongly to criticize in our children and others when we get older. Mothers, having spent many years being girls, are experts in what they expect of their daughters.

Now it's time to get back to the particular problems that some fathers have. Take first the father who expects instant obedience of his fourteen-month-old son. If you'll let me do some guessing, I'll guess that this father wouldn't have set quite such high standards with a daughter, and that this is probably his first child. Most of us parents bring all our own hopes and fears to our first child. With our second or third we're usually more relaxed. I'll guess, too, that this father was more strictly brought up than average, with a special emphasis on the importance of prompt obedience. This didn't merely set a pattern or habit in him. It went deeper into his feelings. When all of us were children and our parents scolded or punished us for certain acts which they said were dangerous or bad, we developed real anxiety about those consequences. Then when we become parents ourselves, being human beings, we show the old anxiety (and some of our parents' anger) toward our children in the same situations. In other words, the father in the letter is truly afraid that his son will get into danger or will become delinquent if he doesn't acquire instantaneous obedience at fourteen months—not because o. any facts but because of deep feelings carried over from his upbringing. Those of us who didn't have such a strict standard to live up to are able to look at the one-year-old with more serenity and see that he is ready for only the first easy lessons in discipline and that there are many ways to keep out of danger and delinquency in addition to obedience.

What's the answer? If the wife of a strict father tries to make up to the son for the father's sternness, it often makes the father even more fearful that the boy is being spoiled, and therefore inclined to be more strict with him—which doesn't help him. Also, in the long run the mother's efforts to protect the son make the father crosser with both of them. This gives the boy some of the feeling that he and his mother are enemies of the father.

If the mother can curb her impulse to spring to the boy's defense and can show her sympathetic understanding of her husband's anxiety about the boy's character, it should lead to some improvement in the situation.

Now for the father who got buffeted around by the chortling two-year-old. He sounds exactly opposite from the severe father, but he isn't quite opposite. If you question such fathers you often get the answer, "I was treated too severely in my own childhood. I don't want my son ever to resent me the way I often resented my father." So both attitudes may come from being brought up sternly. But in one case the new father lines up with the grandfather in fearing what lack of discipline will do. In the other case the new father is afraid of what too much discipline will do. This may make the latter father so afraid to assert himself, or even stand up for himself, that his child is almost invited to walk over him.

Every baby as he gets somewhere near the age of a year begins to toy with meanness when he's feeling cranky. He'll deliberately pull his mother's hair or sink his teeth into his father's cheek. The parent who's not afraid to be firm, knowing that a child needs constant guiding, promptly restrains the baby and shows in his facial expression a mild disapproval. If the baby tries again, the parent restrains him again. This mild lesson—that the parent doesn't like to be hurt, doesn't intend to let himself be hurt—sinks gently enough into the mind of even a one-year-old. He may not learn the lesson for good the first time, but a few repetitions will do the job reasonably well.

But if the parent is so afraid of showing firmness (it's really the fear of showing anger) that he lets the baby get away with the attack, then the child is tempted to try again. The amazing thing is that even a one-year-old seems to sense that it isn't right for the parent to be so submissive and that it isn't right for him himself to be able to gain the upper hand so easily. Getting away with meanness to a parent makes him uneasy. When the mother in the letter says that the two-year-old chortles with glee, I can't believe that he's really happy. I imagine the child's feelings are a mixture of excitement and guilt. I'll go further and guess that the child is begging for some restraint so that he can truly enjoy playing with his father.

There are quite a few families in which the mother says, "My husband leaves every bit of the disciplining of the children to me, even when he's home." There are several excuses that such a father will give: that he's tired at the end of the day, or wants to just relax on weekends; that the mother has to manage the children most of the day anyway, so he doesn't know the rules she wants followed. But these particular excuses don't hold much water. With more justification he may complain that when he tries to participate in the management of the children his wife brushes his directions aside impatiently, or that she often bosses the children unnecessarily and then expects him to back her up. Of course minor differences of opinion such as these between father and mother occur from time to time in most families, but in the families I am thinking about such complaints are more chronic. Typically, though not always by any means, the mother is the more managerial parent and the father is relatively easygoing or retiring. He may be plenty forceful in his job.

The important question is what the effect is on children when a father takes little part in discipline. I have said that often the father's real reason is that he is afraid his children, especially his sons, will not like him if he is too strict, so he leans over backward. But child-guidance work shows clearly that children don't love more and enjoy more the parent who stands apart and disciplines too little. In fact, the evidence that the psychiatrist gets from children's behavior, from their make-believe stories and even from their bad dreams, is that they are more apt to be afraid of the parent who's in his shell. Perhaps one way to explain it is to say that every child senses, with all the horse sense that's in him, that any parent is angry inside when children misbehave, and they dread more the anger that is rarely or never expressed openly, wondering how awful it might be. To put it the other way around, the child who has misbehaved knows he should be corrected, really wants it in order to feel right again. If his father has no hesitation in applying the appropriate firmness or scolding, the child's guilt is eased. He has learned once more that his father's indignation is reliable, unpleasant but not fatal. The boy even develops more self-confidence of a sort each time he comes through a scrape with his old man and finds himself still safe and sound. This gives him courage to stand up to other boys and men, too, as he will have to do the rest of his life, and not be too frightened of their anger.

We can sum it up by saying, of the father who is reluctant to enter into the reasonable disciplining of his children, that he need not fear their resentment, that on the contrary they will love him better, feel more comfortable with him, actually enjoy him more if he will assert himself in the usual parental way. His wife can help him, not by prodding him when she thinks discipline is necessary but by not objecting when he feels his firmness is called for, and showing the children that she respects his judgment and position.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

Posture, no less than costume, in this Norman Rockwell cover—published in the JOURNAL'S fiftieth year—illustrates the profound change in the American woman's concept of herself and her place in the world.

Line a Day

By Ann Batchelder

1 Now come along the soft spring days with troubadours abounding, the nomad birds that haunt the ways and trill a thousand roundelays with minstrel airs resounding. Now listen to the tuneful bells the meadow lark is ringing, and know the world's awake at last, from silence into singing.

2 I've found something to warm the cockles of the heart. Cinnamon biscuits, neatly tucked into a cardboard package, and all you need to do is arrange them on a baking sheet and pop them into the oven for a short spell. Sunday breakfast takes on a rosy hue.

3 A temptation not to be lightly winked at is the bonne bouchée. Skewer a mushroom broiled in butter, a slice of chicken liver, and two pieces of bacon with a pineapple chunk in between, and shoot under the broiler to come out hot as Tophet. Provide plenty of these.

4 Coming off the food assembly line—an orange-cake mix with bits of orange rind all through it, to carry the true orange flavor.

5 And if you are one of those to whom making a good frosting is as difficult as solving a problem in higher mathematics, there's a fluffy white frosting mix that is as easy as adding one and one. You may make meringues with it, too, or, with whipped cream and strawberries folded in, turn it into a mousse to dream about.

6 Noted at the swankiest brunch of the century: great platters of baked ham, cut into the thinnest of slices, a "hot basket" of English muffins and baking-powder biscuits, split and buttered. Did I say hot? Yes, piping. Bowls of olives, mustard and pickles, in close juxtaposition. Oh, yes. Coffee resembled a junior Niagara.

7 Peanut cookies tucked into Junior's lunch box make a hit. Yes, you guessed it. There's a peanut-cooky mix, chopped peanuts and all. What will they think of next?

8 "White-cross buns, white-cross buns, who'll buy my white-cross buns?" Make the rolls you've made so many times—the ones you and I have collaborated on. Make up a batch, add raisins and currants—and why not some steamed, cut-up dates for a change? Raise them, bake them, and cross them with white frosting. This is bread that partook of heaven, they'll say who share the treat.

9 Gaudy, not fancy, or the other way round, would be to add chopped salted pecans to lobster-salad mayonnaise, tamed down with a little salted whipped cream, with the tiniest lobster-crab or infant shrimp mixed in.

10 A Colonial dame, I discover, made a hit in her day with a cucumber sauce to be used with fish, in which the star performer was coconut milk. She added 1 tablespoon lemon juice to 4 of the milk, and mixed into it the mashed pulp of 4 cucumbers. Well seasoned with salt, cayenne and grated onion. Want to try?

11 Canned soups have joined the frozen-foods fraternity. And one of the best is the fish chowder. This is as good as any New England housewife can turn out. And the frozen oyster stew—well, take my word for it, it's better than any you ever had at a church supper.

12 Had this at a French restaurant. On the hors-d'oeuvres tray. Cooked white pea beans which had been marinated in French dressing, in which there was a hint of garlic and some minced chives. Served frosty cold.

13 Along about this time you'll see coconuts at your grocer's. Freshly cooked rice tossed with grated fresh coconut, cooked minced onion and a suspicion of curry powder is just right with chicken.

14 Surprising, but true. Fillets of sole—or flounder—baked in cream or broiled with butter or margarine are much improved by a light dusting of nutmeg.

15 Part I: There are many ways with omelets—but have you tried this? Dice 2 strips bacon and sauté. Add 1 small onion, minced, and 1 small cooked potato, chopped fine. (A good way to use the one left from dinner.) When the onion is cooked, add 2 or 3 tablespoons grated Swiss cheese, a little minced parsley and salt and pepper.

16 Part II: Season 3 beaten eggs, too, and add 3 tablespoons milk, ½ teaspoon salt and a good grating of pepper. Turn the eggs into the pan with the onions, bacon and potato. Allow to cook until just set. While the top is still moist and creamy, fold with a spatula, slide from the pan and serve pronto.

17 Coffee ice cream spells ambrosia to me. And you may not believe it, but coffee ice cream with strawberries is something to write home about.

18 And for a luscious sauce for either vanilla or coffee ice cream, follow any good recipe for butterscotch or caramel sauce—and add a whiff of rum extract and as much instant coffee as your fancy dictates.

19 Made a discovery which I pass on to you. Avocado, that tropical fruit we usually think of in salads, is wonderful in a fruit compote. Try this: mix 2 tablespoons lemon juice, ½ cup fresh grapefruit juice, ¼ cup honey, 1 apple, sliced, 1 banana, sliced, 1 grapefruit, sectioned, 1 orange, sectioned, and 1 avocado, diced. Everything cold as Greenland, of course.

20 At a neighborhood party I came across this, and begged the recipe. It's a sweet sauce. Combine 3 egg yolks, ¾ cup orange juice, 1 teaspoon grated orange rind, ⅓ cup sugar and a pinch of salt, in the top of a double boiler. Cook over hot water until thickened like a soft custard. Chill. Fold in ½ cup heavy cream, whipped stiff. Delicious over angel-food cake. And what it does to hot gingerbread I leave you to discover!

21 Now and then I go for pineapple pie. Did you know that there's a pineapple filling all ready for the pastry? Comes in a can. Saves a lot of fussing. And good too.

22 Now listen to this one, Edna, for it will soon be time for lunch. Split frankfurter rolls. Spread with triple-use cheese spread. Open a can of sardines, and lay them on the cheese, close together. Run under the broiler until cheese begins to melt and sardines are heated through.

23 A while back I mentioned the new frosting mixes. Here's a company dessert you might serve to the Thursday bridge club. Drain canned pears and place on a greased baking sheet. Fill generously with the frosting, arranging it in hills and valleys. Read on.

24 Sprinkle with slivered toasted almonds and bake as you would meringues. Serve with slightly thawed frozen raspberries. This is a sweet course the girls will talk about.

25 Your mothers and your grandmothers will tell you that the thing they depended on when the larder was low was potato soup. The new frozen potato soup has airs, especially if you put it in the electric blender at the thawing, and add milk. Serve it cold, with a sprinkling of minced parsley and chives.

26 There is another new frozen soup around that has ways too. The one I have in mind is lobster bisque. Thin with just enough milk to make it saucy, not soupy. There's more to come, so read on.

27 Arrange fillets of flounder in a greased casserole. Pour the sauce over them. Bake in a moderate oven just until the fish becomes white.

28 Just try making slits in a roast of beef sometime. Tuck as much thyme as you can in each slit. Salt and pepper as usual. And roast as usual. But there's nothing usual about this roast!

29 Next time you make apple crisp, add ½ cup finely chopped walnuts to the sugar-crumb topping. You'll see.

30 Up in New England winter is now breaking up. It has been much like an old shoe—easy on an aching corn. We used to have more snow. But we are taking down the storm windows. We have struck our tents. We are on the march toward the sun. Your ANNIE.

Why make your own sauce — when Campbell's Soups make such good ones!

By ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics, Campbell Soup Company

Why make a cream sauce when Campbell's Soups make four — Cream of Mushroom, Cream of Celery, Cream of Chicken, Cream of Asparagus? Why make a tomato sauce when Campbell's has one for you — already perfectly seasoned, perfectly blended?

Cream sauces can be this easy: Just open one of these cans of Campbell's Soup and follow directions on the label! Why not find out how much fun it is to cook with sauces when Campbell's makes them for you! You'll never go back to the slow way of making a cream or tomato sauce again.

CREAM OF MUSHROOM SAUCE. Perfect for Sunday brunch — an open sandwich crowned with cubes of ham and mushroom sauce. And such an easy sauce to make! Just open a can of Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup — and blend with ⅓ cup of milk — it's delicious!

TOMATO SAUCE. Delicious flavoring for meat loaf, hamburgers, meat balls — Campbell's Tomato Soup used as a sauce. So perfectly seasoned, you just pour it on as it comes from the can! And what a tempting sauce to make quick and easy spaghetti and macaroni casseroles!

CREAM OF CELERY SAUCE. Makes vegetables taste twice as good! Carrots, broccoli, string beans take on new sparkle when you add Campbell's Cream of Celery Soup. Just blend the soup with about ½ cup of milk — and there's your sauce! It's extra-good, too, as a sauce for fish!

CREAM OF CHICKEN SAUCE. Here's a popular favorite — Southern-fried chicken topped with the deep-down goodness of Campbell's Cream of Chicken Soup (⅓ cup of milk is all you add). And try this sauce as a gravy for chicken croquettes, biscuits or fluffy rice!

UP HOME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

women belonged, to attend the dedication ceremonies of the temple. "Providing she can."

Her little neighbor nodded. "I got my heart set on it," she said. "You see, the temple was started the year I was born, practically the very day, and mamma used to always say, 'If Nellie lives to see the temple dedicated, it will be more than I expect,' she used to say. I was sickly as a child, so mamma was reconciled to bury me at any time. I've heard her say it often. And there was people that said the building would take a hundred years instead of forty."

"I said so myself," Ingeborg said. "The way they fiddled around there year after year. You'd go by and here they'd be, talking and laughing and standing on one foot and then on the other, slower than the seven-year itch. Men," she added, as though she need say no more.

"You got to give the devil his due," Linnea pointed out. "That's a very big temple. All them pointed steeples and one thing and another, and made out of solid marble."

"Forty years," Mrs. Lilygren put in dreamily. "My exact age, and now it's done and going to be dedicated. I can't hardly believe it. No wonder a person gets kind of worked up."

Linnea smiled, though her eyes sympathized. "Well, I'll be awful surprised if you ain't down in bed with your baby instead of listening to no dedication ceremonies, day after tomorrow," she said. "Won't you, Ingeborg?"

Ingeborg, before she could answer, had to study Linnea's neighbor as the art expert views the unsigned masterpiece that may be by Sebastiano del Piombo or may not. She saw a little lady resting little work-scarred hands near the top of a global front that kept her quite a distance from the table. Dimmed and uncolored, Mrs. Lilygren had a look of girlishness about the mouth and eyes that even her formidable amount of coiled brown hair did not take away. Her one claim to fame was that she had never cut her hair and it was said to drag on the floor, though this may have been an exaggeration. It was washed only twice a year on a hot, dry day, and on the strength of its glory she received the few compliments her woman's heart craved. Having this, she had neglected her face entirely, even to teach it those expressions of coquetry, comedy, demureness, pain or bewilderment that women learn like an alphabet—all to the good, it seemed, for her face stayed innocent and young, and her hazel eyes could be looked straight into like those of a girl of six. She was wearing a very large brown-and-white challis dress, a three-month loan from Mr. Parmalee's younger and larger wife Aglia, which fitted only one part of her, her central corporation, but that was fit enough, and she was happy to pin up and tuck up the rest of the garment as best she might. A dark blue pinafore decently covered all and she looked trim and tidy.

"Won't you be surprised?" Linnea repeated.

Ingeborg groped for some coffeecake. "Very," she said. "I certainly will."

The agreeable little woman was gone when the girls and Rudie came home from town with the big news, but Gertrude, when she heard that Mrs. Lilygren had been there, said she would run over and tell her immediately.

"You got time for that," Linnea told her excited daughter. "She'll be in the midst of getting supper for that crosspatch of hers. You can tell her in the morning."

"Anyway, he might be home already," Ingeborg said.

"Myra will win it sure!" Stellie announced, and took a deep breath.

"Keep your voice down or you'll have her awake and bawling her eyes out," Linnea said, glancing at the clock. "I like her to have a good long nap the afternoons when Olaf comes home that night," she explained to her visitor, "so she'll be good-natured and we can keep her up longer."

"Spoiled," Ingeborg said, meaning no offense. "Between you and the four kids, and Olaf coming home every other night and thinking the sun rises and sets in her, you've got a very spoiled baby there. Of course Ber gone all day, but I guess she makes up for the evening. How does she like her jo now?"

"Fine," Linnea said. "She likes it just but my, it seems like she's grew up since started working. Two weeks, and she' grew up, I don't hardly know her, with hair done up, and nothing would do she to have a corset the first thing, with her week's pay, and here it cost two dollars. W only left her a dollar."

"Mamma," Gertrude said tragically.

"Now what?" Linnea said.

"Don't you even want to hear about contest?"

"You told us when you come in."

"But not all!" Gertrude said.

"It's gold," Rudie put in, "pure solid g It's worth hundreds of dollars."

"Gilt," Gertrude explained.

"What is?"

"Why, the baby buggy, of course, the prize, that Dinwoodie's Furniture Compa giving away free to the most beautiful bab Salt Lake City."

"With a umbrella on top ——" St began.

"Not a umbrella," Gertrude corrected with some severity. "A parasol. This little parasol you can put to one side or the othe shade the baby's face from the sun. Pink, lace ruffles hanging down on it. And li with pink velvet. The whole thing! You n saw anything like it, mamma!" Gertru blue eyes blazed like a cupboard of cut g after spring house cleaning.

"I ain't going to push it, though," the sr boy went on, "like a sissy. Nobody can m me!"

"I'd like to see you get a chance!" Ste scoffed. "I'm going to push!"

"You are?" Gertrude inquired with dea cold.

Stellie was swelling up like an angry ba hen, her face as red as a cardinal's zucche "It's going to belong to the whole family," sputtered, "and any time I want to, I can p Myra in that gold baby buggy clear down Liberty Park."

"One more word," mamma said calm "out of either of you, and Myra won't be no baby contest. You know how I feel ab dissension. I won't have it."

She said the word as though it had co straight out of the Bible, from the Ten Co mandments, and they were respectfully sile

Ingeborg got up and took down her sha from the hook on the pantry door. "Ain't y kids never heard the saying it's catching bef hanging?" she said. "Myra has got to win t prize first, before you'll get no baby buggy argue over, gold or any other kind. And y kids ain't going to be the judges. It'll be son body that don't think the sun rises and sets her. You want to remember that."

They all, even Linnea, were trying hard imagine the person or persons who would n think so, once exposed to her charms, wh

CONTINUED ON PAGE 88

Living beauty at Easter...

THIS EASTER

Say it with

Flowers-By-Wire

As gently as cathedral chimes, your Flowers-By-Wire carry your Easter message of devotion to those you cherish. Your F.T.D. Florist guarantees delivery worldwide, telegraph-fast. Be sure the shop you choose displays SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit

Your F.T.D. Florist

TRADEMARK

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY

Send Flowers Worldwide

INTERFLORA

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters, Detroit, Michigan

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN AND ADULTS

1955 HELP CRIPPLED CHILDREN EASTER SEALS

YOU

TAKE HIS FIRST STEP

Six-year-old Billy Jennings, 1955 Easter Seal Child of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, symbolizes crippled children throughout the nation who are being helped by your contribution to the 1955 Easter Seal appeal. Born with a crippling condition of his spine, Billy is taught how to walk like other children and at the same time is gaining use of his paralyzed legs and feet, under the expert guidance of a skilled physical therapist at the Easter Seal center in Bridgeport, Connecticut.

In these 3-hour danger periods YOUR SKIN "DIES" A LITTLE

There are periods from 1 to 3 hours every day when your skin is "not itself," say skin specialists. This is right after you wash your face. The washing not only removes dirt, but also natural protectors of your skin. It takes from 1 to 3 hours for your skin to re-establish its defenses. It is during these periods of skin "un-balance," that serious skin problems can take root—dryness . . . cracking . . . shriveling . . . enlarged pores, coarsened texture.

Read how women noted for their lovely complexions prevent these disturbing skin problems—

After each washing, "re-balance" your skin

You've noticed these more obvious signs of skin "un-balance" after washing your face.

The taut feel of your face as it dries.
Flaky patches on your cheeks; a blotchy look.

These are small warnings of skin "un-balance"—that show right away. But in the 1 to 3 hours Nature takes to re-protect your skin—much worse problems can develop. Dry lines deepen. Inside moisture that keeps skin "young" evaporates away. Skin secretions harden in pore-openings—cause stretched pores, blackheads.

What do leading skin specialists advise? Should you avoid washing your face? "Not at all," they say. "But after each washing, 're-balance' your skin instantly . . ."

60 times faster than Nature

Lovely society women, like the Duchess of Sutherland, follow up each face washing with a light application of Pond's Cold Cream. This takes far less time than washing your face—yet it "re-balances" your skin within 1 minute, at least 60 times faster than Nature does. It promptly restores skin elasticity and "tone." Combats dryness. Keeps pore-openings cleared. Keeps skin texture fine and smooth. Begin using Pond's Cold Cream after every face washing—immediately, before the bad effects of "un-balance" can start.

A vitalizing clearing at bedtime

Besides daytime "re-balancing" after washing, your skin needs a thorough clearing and firm-up each night. A deep Pond's Cold Creaming gets down between the roughened skin cells, dislodges water-resistant dirt. Leaves skin immaculate.

Begin this simple, complete beauty care with Pond's Cold Cream soon. You'll find that quick daytime "re-balancings" plus deep clearing with Pond's every night will accomplish wonders: a new aliveness, youth, and clarity in your complexion.

The world's most-famous beauty formula—never duplicated, never equalled. More women use Pond's Cold Cream than any other face cream.

The Duchess of Sutherland

—photographed against the turreted grandeur of Dunrobin Castle. Here the Duchess and her husband, the 5th Duke and 12th Baronet of Sutherland, entertain during grouse season. Overlooking the North Sea in the rugged Scottish Highlands, Dunrobin Castle itself is very formal, with magnificent fountains and gardens.

The Duchess has the exquisite complexion for which British women are famous. Like so many beautiful women who use Pond's Cold Cream to "re-balance" their skin after each washing and to deep-cleanse at bedtime—the Duchess relies on Pond's. She says, "I've never found a beauty care that leaves my skin as smooth and fresh as Pond's Cold Cream."

They're going to have a baby . . .

HERE is a couple who have recently learned that their baby is on the way. Already, with the help of their doctor, they are planning for the welfare of the mother-to-be . . . and the safe arrival of a healthy child.

Throughout our country today, there are almost two million couples . . . like the one shown here . . . whose hearts are filled with great expectations.

Thanks to the safeguards with which medical science has surrounded pregnancy and childbirth, the chances are better than ever that prospective parents can now realize their great expectations. In fact, infant mortality today has been cut to 28 per 1,000 live births. Only 30 years ago, it was 71.7 per 1,000.

The record for mothers is even better. As recently as 1941, there were 29 maternal deaths among every 10,000 live births. Today, the rate has plummeted to less than seven deaths. These great gains have been made even though the number of births in recent years has exceeded three and a half million annually . . . an increase of almost 50 percent in the number of births since 1941.

An important factor in achieving this proud record has been the growing awareness among expectant parents of the importance of medical care started early and continued throughout pregnancy. Whether it is a first baby or a fifth baby, the doctor's attention is needed during the months before birth.

So, if a baby is expected in your family, here are some of the things the expectant mother can do to help assure the well-being of both herself and the child.

1. Take a calm, realistic and happy attitude about pregnancy . . . and discount superstitions and "old wives' tales." Should anything concern or upset you, take your questions to your doctor. He wants to help you face pregnancy as a normal, joyous state.

2. Follow your doctor's advice about periodic medical examinations and special diagnostic tests. Be certain, too, to carry out the simple health measures he recommends . . . particularly about rest, exercise, diet and weight control.

3. Plan, if possible, to have your baby in a hospital. There, under one roof, the equipment and facilities are available to give you the most modern medical and nursing care. It is wise to make hospital reservations promptly . . . for today, 9 out of every 10 mothers go to hospitals to have their babies.

The husband, too, can help by being understanding and by sharing home responsibilities with his wife over the months before the baby comes. The arrival of a new son or daughter is a most important event in family life . . . as important to the husband as to the wife. When home duties are shared, many problems fade away.

Metropolitan has published, for all parents-to-be, a booklet which will help them learn more about the important and wonderfully rewarding job of parenthood. The title is Preparing for Parenthood. Just fill in and mail the coupon below for your free copy.

COPYRIGHT 1955—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

A MUTUAL COMPANY

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet 455-J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 86

Myra woke from her nap on mamma's big bed between two pillows and started a hullabaloo. Gertrude rushed to get her and bore her triumphantly out into the kitchen.

The ten-month-old short, fat baby in bulky diapers and linen petticoat pondered, while she thumped Gertrude's small jutting hipbone with her bare heels, whether she had stopped crying a little too soon, but their smiles and greetings distracted her and she smiled back, showing four teeth. They all wanted to take her, but Gertrude turned sideways, holding her jealously.

"I went and got her. I get to hold her," she said. "Don't I, mamma?"

"She ought to have more hair, maybe," Rudie said, coming close and studying her with narrowed eyes. "She ain't hardly got any now. To win first prize, maybe. And what she has got is so white and far apart, you can see her head through it."

"Why, it's a whole month off!" Stellie said. "She'll have lots of hair by then! Maybe curly."

"What are you doing for her eckzeema?" Ingeborg inquired. "I see she's pretty well broke out again today. Maybe that's what makes her kind of inclined to be cross."

"Cross!" Gertrude and Stellie said together, exchanging a glance of astonishment. "Why, she ain't cross!"

"She really ain't, Ingeborg," Linnea explained. "More on the spoiled order, is all, and no wonder, with all the kids as big as they was when she was born—Rudie, why, Rudie was seven. A family'll make over a baby something terrible when they ain't had one around for a long time."

"Imagine how it'll be at the Lilygrens'," Ingeborg said, "with her girl and boy pretty near grown. There'll be another spoiled one, for sure."

"If that crosspatch Lilygren allows it," Linnea said.

"He's so mean and onry he'll even throw rocks at cats and dogs," Gertrude added.

"You hush now," Linnea said. "We don't talk about our neighbors behind their backs."

"She's the only one of your kids with the eckzeema," Ingeborg, who had been looking Myra over, said. "Ain't that a shame, though?"

Gertrude ran her fingers lightly over the round little arms. "Oh, it'll be all cured up in time for the contest," she said. "And her hair's growing in all the time, I notice it every day."

"Won't everybody be surprised," Stellie put in, "when Myra rides home in something like that?"

"THEM is going to be a bunch of awful disappointed kids the day of the contest," Ingeborg said. "Anything like that, it's all cut and dried way ahead of time, to say nothing of that little touch of eckzeema. You can't put your faith in a contest."

"I'll put the damper on them," Linnea said, "but it won't hurt nothing to let them enter her." When her friend had got up to go, Linnea took her shawl, too, and was now strolling part of the way home with her, for a breath of the cool April air.

"I sure wouldn't get my hopes up," Ingeborg added. "You as well as the kids. And you better tighten the reins on Olaf, too, or he'll be worst of all. And Bertha. You was saying she likes her job all right. I had a hunch she would, and here you felt so bad the day she started to work, and I come over and found you bawling, like somebody broke their leg or something. I told you she'd like it, all them young people down there at the shoe factory. I said she'd be right in her glory amongst them, and here you was bawling."

"I couldn't help it," Linnea said. "Poor little kid, only fourteen years old, and starting at seven in the morning and working till six, with only half an hour off for dinner, winter and summer. It just made me sick."

"It's a long time till winter."

"Sick," Linnea repeated. "But the times is so close, and Olaf either don't get nothing to do or don't get paid, and I ain't had anywhere near the cases I ought to." Baby cases, she meant, for she was a midwife. "So I had to let her go, when she wanted and had a chance to work, but it just about broke my heart. A little kid fourteen years old, and the snow coming down, and her walking them big long bloc in the pitch dark." Her lower lip began tremble even now.

"If you ain't a fine one," Ingeborg told h "Snow coming down! I suppose them li bushes is covered with snow!" She point scornfully at the mass of blooms up agai the Parmalees' front windows. "And as far her being a little kid, you wasn't a bit old when you went to work for Mrs. Muller, se ing, and it didn't hurt you none, did it? Y thrived, didn't you? Look at me, with fo kids and no man! I thrived, didn't I?"

"Yes, you thrived," Linnea said tender patting the horny hand coming out of t

BABY-CARE BECOMES EASY with New Drop-Side Port-a-crib

THE PORTABLE CRIB THAT'S A PLAY PEN, TOO!

AS LOW AS $29.95 INCLUDING MATTRESS

ROLLS FROM ROOM TO ROOM WITHOUT FOLDING

New modern width permits you to keep baby near you. You can leave baby, mattress, toys, etc. in the crib when you move it.

IT'S A PLAY PEN

Port-a-crib converts to a play pen via patented slotted legs . . . saves you the cost of buying two pieces of furniture.

SETS UP IN AUTOS

With new Drop-Side Port-a-crib, traveling with baby is safe and easy. The drop-side feature makes it simple to care for baby en route; you have both a crib and a play pen when you arrive.

FOLDS TO 6" WIDTH

Easy to store. And portable, easy to take along . . . because it is truly compact!

NEW EASY-CARE HEIGHT

New Drop-Side Port-a-crib is adjustable to 6½" above normal crib height for easier care of baby. Saves your back from strain.

Tips for Grandmothers!

1. Port-a-crib is ideal to have at grandparents home when Baby comes calling.
2. And it's the perfect gift!

Available at better stores everywhere. Low price includes handsome mattress. Write for free folder or name of your nearest dealer.

PORT-A-CRIB, INC.
Dept. L-4, Manchester, Mo.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

sleeve and glancing sidelong at the kerous, wrinkled face. "I never seen like you. But I'll tell you what kind of with me lately. You know that new that moved in over on Center Street? eople that come over from England? ight kids, that the man deals in wheat ething?"

at about 'em?" Ingeborg said.

nebody was saying that the woman was to somebody that every one of them oys and girls alike, is going to be ed!" ucated?" Ingeborg said in amazement. do you mean educated?"

ht to university, when the time comes. dest girl is sixteen, and they're sending university right now."

ding her to university?" Ingeborg d dead still. "I never heard of such a All I can say is, English people must be eculiar."

as just thinking how nice it would be."

ce! They wouldn't be worth a nickel! ake educated people, and what do they o do? Sit around on their behinds while people work, that's what they want to ill they pitch in and do something? uch. They want to boss the job."

ell, wouldn't you rather be the boss for a e? Wouldn't it be nice to go through life it having to nearly urself with work for ge?"

I want to ask you thing, Linnea," Inid said. "Who fixed it re was work to be in the world in the lace?"

od, I suppose," Linid doubtfully.

od. Our heavenly r. And I suppose He don't know what doing, I suppose you'll say next!"

don't say nowhere in the Bible that got any objection to people getting edu-" Linnea said boldly. "Nor in the Book rmon, either!"

ou look me straight in the eye and tell me ad the Bible clear through, Linnea Eck-You look me straight in the eye and tell u went to work and read the Book of ion word by word!"

nea turned her head and looked her ht in the eye, but she couldn't keep the off her lips. "You ain't either," she said. don't have to argue with me, because aid was, some people educates their kids. ay, Bertha likes her job, and none of the are so awful much for school. I mean, don't carry on if they got a sore throat ave to stay home once in a while. Besides, es means, and there's where the rub s."

don't know what's got into the times , they're so bad, talking of means," Ingesaid. "But thank goodness, we'll all look t for the dedication."

re you going down to the temple with eborg shook her head. "But we'll see you wards. Oh, I was going to ask you. What 's. Lilygren has her baby at the last minnd you can't go?"

e won't, I don't think," Linnea said. 'll either have it beforehand or she'll wait s over, which is what I would bet on, her so determined to be in on the ceremonies. mystery to me how they went to work ordered that baby in the first place after amily was nearly grown. And especially you consider old Lilygren ——"

Mystery, nothing," Ingeborg sniffed.

ELL, when you consider how sanctimonie is, quoting chapter and verse for every—and tighter than the bark on the tree. ay nothing of his disposition and licking Nephi with a strap just because he asked ages for working ten and twelve hours in hop. And so onry around the house. No, t's a mystery to me!"

When it comes to certain territory," Ingesaid with disdain, "they're six of one and a dozen of the other, fanatic or no fanatic. or young. And Jensen was no exception, wouldn't have four children to scrub my fingers to the bone for to keep them going, while he's been laying dead these past eight years, leaving the whole burden to me."

"I'd see you let loose of one of them," Linnea teased her.

"I'd see myself," Ingeborg admitted, her homely face softening. "Only, as I say, it ain't no mystery, men being what they are. Fresh. Very much inclined to be fresh and take a notion, even a king."

Linnea stopped at the corner to turn back. "I got to take Rudie downtown tomorrow and get him a pair of shoes ——"

"You was saying."

"—— and just for fun, I think I'll go past Dinwoodie's window and take a peek at that gold baby buggy."

WHEN she left Ingeborg, Linnea hurried, for she had dumplings to make. Olaf was coming up home tonight, and though he had been doing so regularly every other night for the past several months, she still could not get used to it. It was nearly too good to be true! And she had accustomed herself to take special pains with the supper, her own and the children's appearance, as though he came once in a blue moon the way he used to do in the old days, before the Manifesto.

Half a loaf was better than none, somebody said, and it was the same proposition with husbands, but that could be contradicted. Linnea didn't contradict it much any more, though. She had made her bed fifteen years before, and from the looks of things she would have to lie in it a long old time.

She wondered if Sigrid had made dumplings the night before and Olaf had already had his fill of them. It would be just like her. I'll make a pie, she decided, because hers can't hold a candle to mine, if I do say so myself. She goes too easy on the shortening! On the other hand, she's got a knack with dumplings, much as I hate to admit it, that even I got to go some to beat.

New baby in a nutshell, by his brother: "Can't walk, can't talk, can't even go bathroom."
—OWENITA SANDERLIN

Time is money, the saying goes, and once upon a time in the Mormon country it was kept as careful track of as any coin ever spent. One polygamist died of old age in Salt Lake City still owing his third wife two overnight visits and a Pioneer Day, and she never forgave him for it. She wouldn't, she said, if he got down to her on his bended knees. She was as mad as if she had been done out of a couple of valuable lots. If she had not known for an actual fact that he had attained to the highest, or celestial, glory in the hereafter she would have been sorely tempted to get herself unsealed from him with the appropriate ceremonies, for pure spite.

Polygamy, having flourished for more than fifty years as a way of life among the Latter-day Saints, now was no more. Both church and state had declared against it. But a man with six wives, thirty-seven children and six separate abodes did not, because polygamy was outlawed as of September, 1890, wake up and find them all vanished, except one spouse, one house and a family of the usual proportions. No, after the Manifesto they were right there the same as before.

It was a very tough nut, and church and state got their heads together to crack it as best they might. Should those who had already contracted polygamous marriages be allowed to continue living in polygamy? Should not rather polygamous living itself be interdicted? They argued themselves blue in the face before the more clement of the two propositions was adopted and polygamous families were amnestied.

This meant that polygamists were no longer spied upon, arrested and imprisoned for "unlawful cohabitation," but allowed to go their own ways, stew in their own juice and live out their days in happiness and misery the same as anybody else.

Every man in such a fix tried to work out a schedule that pleased all concerned and did his best to "live" equally with his wives and "father" equally his children. Some had them all in one house, some next door to each other, some a wife on West Temple and another over Jordan, some even in different states.

There was half the city of Salt Lake between Olaf Ecklund's two wives. Sigrid, forty-one, mother of two, with whom he was about to celebrate their twentieth anniversary, lived on Thirteenth South. Linnea, thirty-three, mother of five, with whom he was about to celebrate their fifteenth anniversary, lived up on Quince Street. He spent one night with Sigrid, one night with Linnea.

Sigrid was the more beautiful—everybody thought so, even Linnea, often with anguish; but when Olaf shut up shop at six o'clock and started off south down Main Street, he went slowly. His handsome face looked sober. When he started north, he looked like he was tickled pink over something. You'd think the long day's close work had been no chore at all. No question but what Linnea had faults—she never knew the meaning of the word save, for instance, though she could go without and not a peep out of her; and in spite of having had the inestimable advantage of being born in the church, was not as "religious" as the average convert, besides being headstrong and full of pride as an Aztec queen—but when Olaf stepped in her direction he stepped like a man who wanted to get where he was going and get there quick.

It's wet-resistant! Actually helps keep diaper moisture away from skin.

Amazing as it seems. Mennen Baby Powder actually resists moisture; protects baby's skin against urine burn, chapping, chafing, diaper rash! Doesn't absorb moisture like the other leading brand tested. Clings longer, too: stays on baby's skin longer to give better anti-rash protection. Has a heavenly "baby" fragrance. It's satinized to a silken texture; can't "cake" on skin. Give your baby the extra protection of Mennen Baby Powder! 29¢, 53¢. NO TAX. Slightly higher in Canada.

Cleansing Baby Oil! Cleans better; can't irritate! It's Lanolized! 25¢, 49¢, 98¢. NO TAX

Mennen . . .
Baby Specialist since 1880

how did nature intend your baby to sleep?

. . . relaxed, with back straight, bones and muscles well supported. Kantwet helps baby sleep this way! For Kantwet's exclusive Dorsal Construction, a built-in, straight-line foundation at the heart of the mattress, gives lasting, all-over level support. And Kantwet's exclusive Firm-O-Flex innerspring unit gives additional support yet is comfortably resilient. Kantwet lets your baby sleep with the good crib posture nature intended!

the only crib mattress with DORSAL CONSTRUCTION
for good crib posture $17.95

THERE IS ONLY ONE
POSTURIZED KANTWET
CRIB MATTRESS
Other KANTWET made mattresses, $12.95 to $25.95

There are KANTWET pads for every nursery need — look for the label!

Made and sold throughout the United States and Canada

© 1955, Rose-Derry Co.

Before she dared take Rudie downtown to buy shoes, Linnea sent Gertrude over to Mrs. Lilygren's to inquire how the lady did. "Ask her if she has noticed anything," she told her.

Gertrude came back breathlessly and said that no, Mrs. Lilygren had not.

"You can sure see there's something going on," Linnea pointed out to her small son as they came down B Street and turned south on Brigham Street. "Look at all the wagons. Look at all the people too. And really, ain't the temple a sight to behold?" She stared at the six spires rising two blocks ahead. "Just think, tomorrow we'll all be in there!"

"Where I'd like to be," Rudie stated, "is right up there where that angel is, so I could see all over."

"That's Moroni," Linnea instructed him, "that give Joseph the golden plates, you know that! I bet you been told twenty times."

"Is he worth much?"

"I imagine he's pretty valuable," his mother said. "He's made out of copper, with gold leaf spread all over him and over his horn."

"Is he worth a million dollars?"

"I couldn't really say, lovey. The whole temple cost nearly four million dollars, though. That's been coming out in the papers, so I happen to know that for a actual fact."

"What did they build it for?"

"My goodness, ain't you learned nothing in Sunday school?" she said amiably, smiling down at him. "Temples is a holy place, besides being pretty to look at in a city, and we need them. There's lot of things that has to be done in them."

"What kind of things?"

"Oh, different concerns the priesthood's got to tend to, and marriages and sealing."

Rudie had a vision of men, women and children being dipped gently in liquid wax for a thin coating and stood up to dry. Mamma sealed her conserves with wax, didn't she? The thought made him somewhat uneasy and he shook it off. "Where I'd like to be," he repeated, "is right up there where the angel is, so I could look around."

"I guess you would."

The Z.C.M.I., largest mercantile establishment in the city, was crowded when they got there. Every living being allowed within the temple tomorrow had to wear his very best from the skin out, or so his conscience told him, as for a glimpse of the kingdom of glory, and the Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution was the place to come for such articles as his own outfit fell short of, that he could afford. The store was magnificently decorated, Linnea saw, with palms, bunting and ribbon streamers looped and twisted. She told Rudie to notice, but he wasn't where she thought, under her left elbow, having stopped to watch a basket come down from some unknown spot along an intricate system of wires. She had to push back to get him and then tug at his hand while he waited for the clerk, a middle-aged woman with scissors hanging to her belt and a watch and spectacles hanging from her chest, to reach into the basket for the bulky brown-paper package.

Rudie withdrew his hand as soon as he could, for manliness, and Linnea did not insist, knowing how it was with a boy of eight. But a time or two, when she stopped to marvel and yearn, on their way to the shoes, he had to take her hand to get her forward. That was quite another story and he was sure anybody could tell the difference.

He tried to steer her a different way going out with their string-tied shoe box, but there were pitfalls everywhere, delectables on every counter and table, and Linnea was glassy-eyed when they got out on Main Street again.

"I don't know what's wrong with me," she said, sighing. "I'd just buy the store out if I had money. I guess that's why the Lord's saw to it I ain't only had enough to squeeze by on, and not hardly that the biggest part of the time. He well knowed what I'd of been guilty of, if He'd of give me a little leeway."

It was comforting to recall from time to time the Lord's benignity to her, in this and in other respects. She often thought of her lack of means in this way, as a gift bestowed from on high to "hold her back" from a prodigality which would be a scandal to the town, and was therefore usually grateful. Sometimes the more

The term "SCOTCH" and the plaid design are registered trademarks of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., St. Paul 6, Minn.

Gentle
Ex-Lax Helps
YOUR CHILD TOWARD Her Normal
Regularity

AT BEDTIME give your child America's best-tasting laxative — chocolated EX-LAX. There will be no fuss because it's so pleasant to take.

IN THE MORNING she'll get gentle relief —the closest thing to natural action. No upset, no griping, no embarrassing urgency.

NEXT DAY—Ex-Lax will continue to hel your child toward her normal regularity She'll hardly ever have to take EX-LA again the next night!

Buy the New 65¢ Size—Save As Much As 37
Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX
THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

MORE PEOPLE USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATI convince herself she quoted her mother's l saying, carefully translating it from Swedinto English for the children, "The Lord ldn't give a mooley cow horns because He ew if He did, she would do nothing but nt and make herself a nuisance."

"Mamma," Rudie said pleadingly, "you e me something."
"I do?" she said. "What?"
"You took Bertha into a ice-cream parlor ce and bought her a dish of ice cream!" he id swiftly.
"Yes, but that's a long time ago," she said, nd I ain't took Gertrude or Stellie. And we t to get round steak for supper, and your e new shoes——" Apologetically she swung r purse from one finger, to show how light was.
"Well, when I get big and get to be a fireman a train engine," he said desperately, "I'm ing to take you to a ice-cream parlor. I omise. I give you my promise!"
"Rudie, listen, lovey," she said, "I bring the rls to town time after time, and all we do, maybe buy a sack of coffeecake at the aho bakery, to take home so all can enjoy
" She looked down upon his red little face id bright eyes, and fondness for him was like mebody's too-tight embrace, not letting her eathe for a minute.
"Look how big I am and I ain't never been a ice-cream parlor, mamma." He stretched s neck upward as far as he could. "Please.
h, please."
"Well, maybe this one time," she said. She owned a little, figuring. "But we'll have to t something else, instead of the round steak."
Her own pulse speeded up a little when she rned the heavy brass knob and pushed open e plate-glass door into Roylance's Royal Elite e Cream Parlor, letting Rudie duck in under r outstretched arm and go in ahead. They ok a tiny marble-topped table and sat very raight on the tiny wrought-iron chairs with acks like a lace fan.
"Go ahead and look all around," she said.
Notice this floor, for instance. It's pure solid arble. And look at all the lights hanging own from the ceiling and all the looking asses. Look, Rudie."
"There's us, mamma."

There they were indeed, not two yards away, as big as life. Rudie stared interestedly as did Linnea herself. She smiled at the reflection of the sturdy little boy in tight brown pants, white waist and too-small gray woolen coat, and he smiled back, like a secret exchanged, never to be told to anyone else. She saw herself at the same time, noting, with something like a twinge of conscience for noting it, the beauty of her rich Swedish hair as yellow as an egg yolk, her pretty pink face, her magnificent front, but pretending to examine instead her old black taffeta, shabby covert jacket and unprepossessing hat.

She had to clear her throat before she could tell the young man with the canvas apron around his middle that both she and Rudie would enjoy to have a five-cent dish of vanilla ice cream apiece. When the miniature mountain with a silver spoon stuck in the side was set before him, Rudie was almost overcome by the sight. It smelled so sweetly of vanilla—the whole place smelled so sweetly of vanilla and clear lemon—it sent one languid and dreamy.

"Now, eat slow," Linnea said softly. "And take tiny little bites, like a gentleman."

Not so much for the purpose of seeming one as to make it last longer, Rudie was glad to do so and bask here as in a garden of enchantment.

Linnea's eyes, while she ate, strayed back to the mirror. Usually she used a mirror only to do up her hair and pin her brooch on, not to stare into. It seemed immodest and she averted her gaze, saying, "Tastes nice, don't it, Rudie?"

"Well, look who's here," somebody said behind her.

With horror she stared deep into the mirror at the cool face of Sigrid, with her daughter Hattie standing beside her, before she jerked guiltily around and faced them. "Well, say," she said, "if it isn't you folks."

"Hello, Aunt Linnea," Hattie said. She smiled shyly and as always Linnea felt a liking for her, even in her flustered state.

"Hello, Hattie. Say hello to your sister Hattie and your Aunt Sigrid," Linnea said to Rudie, who did so politely. She drew a deep breath. "Don't you want to sit down here with us? Though we are almost ready to go. Rudie,

PROSERPINE

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

They say in that far land all flowers wither,
Blow sere, curl brown; that leaves like frenzied fire
Flee the destroying wind; that corn stands dead
Because my mother weeps.
Yet on that day
My arms were filled with flowers, nor did he bid Me cast them down. Some fell—my foolish hands
Were careless in their terror, and our flight
So swift the chariot swayed, and dizzied me.
Yet I have saved a few: this marigold,
These lilies—in our halls they make a glow.
A little song, a sweet fragility.
He smiles, and lets them live.
Ah, who had thought
His smile could make me glad?
My mother weeps.
She wanders ceaseless and disconsolate
Calling me Daughter, daughter!
and the fields
Decay behind her, and the grasses die,
And all life sickens.
Am I daughter now
Who wear his crown? Or am I child, to weep
Because my mother weeps?
When first I came Into these halls, I could not speak for fear,
Nor eat for dread, nor sing for loneliness.
He bade me sing. Ah, who had thought his voice
Could strike the night with passion? That I spoke,
Ate, sang, and loved at last—it was not due
To pomegranate seeds, as some would have it;
It was his love.
And still my mother weeps.
If earth is to be saved, and every flower,
I must return. And he will let me go,
Put by my scepter, bind my streaming hair,
Fasten the silver sandal. He will mock,
Darkly beloved, saying April,
April. . . .

Then I will quit these halls, and spring will quicken,
And roses drink the tears of Proserpine.

Your youngster's a hundred times safer on a Rubbermaid Safti-Cup bathtub mat

Relax! More than a hundred vacuum cups in a Rubbermaid Bathtub Mat grip your slippery tub surface—so that everyone takes a bath in complete safety and comfort!

And talk about colors! Everyone does when they're as fresh and pretty as the pastels of Rubbermaid Mats! Why not make it safety first in your beautiful bathroom?

Rubbermaid Bath Mats are priced from $1.89 to $2.98 wherever housewares are sold. For free folder showing all Rubbermaid products, write to the Wooster Rubber Company, Dept. L-25, Wooster, Ohio.

Prices slightly higher in Canada

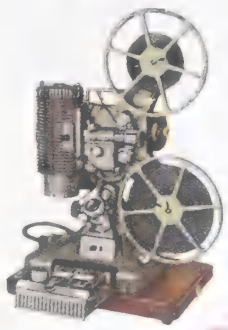
Rubbermaid® HOUSEWARE

Over 60 Fine Products . . . in Your Choice of Fresh Colors

Have a shower stall? Then you need a Rubbermaid Shower Stall Mat on the floor . . . to keep it slip-proof. $4.49.

Here's a handy extra shelf for you! A Rubbermaid Toilet Top Tray stays secure, keeps toiletries safe and handy. $1.19.

Enjoy skid-proof protection for years with a Rubbermaid Safti-Cup Bathtub Mat. Won't warp or fade. Sizes from $1.89 to $2.98.



Your Keystone dealer will show you how to MAKE COLOR MOVIES as EASILY and CHEAPLY as SNAPSHOTS with

ASK TO SEE THE NEW KEYSTONE CAPRI
Model K-25, 8mm Camera with fast f 2.5 lens

Keystone

AMERICA'S LOWEST-PRICED DELUXE MOVIE CAMERA $49.95

Your Keystone Dealer knows cameras inside and out. He'll be glad to show you — in just 5 minutes — how anyone in your family can make color movies as easily and cheaply as snapshots with the magnificent Keystone Capri. He will show you the extra features that make Keystone America's Lowest-Priced DeLuxe Movie Camera — Guaranteed for a Lifetime.

see what you've been missing . . . Keystone brings you 8mm home movies 78% bigger with the new Keystone BIG IMAGE MAGNA-SCOPE projector. K-109M Projector, $167.50 write for free booklet illustrating complete line of Keystone Cameras and Projectors, plus dealer's name: Dept. 1, Keystone Camera Co., Inc., Boston 24, Mass.

REGISTERED IN YOUR NAME WITH A LIFETIME GUARANTEE

prices slightly higher in Canada. © 1955

YOUR DEALER WILL SHOW YOU THESE EXTRA FEATURES THAT MAKE KEYSTONE . . . AMERICA'S LOWEST-PRICED DELUXE MOVIE CAMERA

Iris-Leaf Diaphragm | Fast f 2.5 Interchangeable Lens | Big Optical Viewfinder | Lightest, Most Compact take bigger bites, dearie, you'll be here all day at that rate."

"You said take little bites," he protested.

"But not so you'll be here all day." As always, she scattered into several pieces under Sigrid's beautiful and faintly mocking eyes. Sigrid looked like a fashion plate in her old gray coat and old green hat with a new black ostrich plume—something about her made her look like a fashion plate no matter what she put on. As always, Linnea felt foolish and culpable, wanted the floor to open under her. Fifteen years of encounters and every encounter with Sigrid was the first one.

They took the two empty fan-backed chairs and edged in close to the table grown small as a dinner plate. Sigrid turned to Linnea. "Well, it looks like we've caught each other red-handed, don't it?" she said lightly. "Blowing ourselves to a dish of ice cream. But nothing would do I had to come in here to see where Bishop Grant's boy took Hattie last Friday night after the Salt Lake Theayter."

"We set up farther to the front," Hattie said. "At that table right there." She was a grown woman now, nineteen, but over her face would come and go such a look of Linnea's own children when smallest and most winning that Linnea's heart softened every time she saw her.

Sigrid's gently elevated eyebrows asked a question of Linnea that stumped her, until she spoke. "Nothing would do," she said. "So that's how we happen to be here."

Then Linnea knew the eyebrows were asking, "How do you happen to be here?"

An excuse seemed to be called for. It would be like Sigrid to think she always brought the kids in here for ice cream, every time they made a trip downtown, blew money (Olaf's hard-earned money) like water. She took a spoonful of ice cream and swallowed it without tasting. Should she explain that this was only the second time she had been in here? That if the only boy you had, eight years old, looked up at you like that, you were caught like a mouse in a trap and had to give in to him? What law was there that said she had to make excuses to Sigrid? Linnea pretended she could not translate the query and smiled in the direction of Hattie.

"So Bishop Grant's boy is your new beau," she said. "Your pa was telling me. They're a nice family, the Grants. What's he look like?"

"He's tall," Hattie said. "He's already been on his mission. He's about a head taller than me."

"Dark-complected," Sigrid put in, as sh would name a quality of rare worth, like bein a distant relation of John Jacob Astor. "Brow eyes. Very fine position at Dinwoodie's Furn ture Store."

"That's where the baby buggy is, that Myra going to get!" Rudie announced proudly.

Sigrid turned the eyebrows again upo Linnea. They spoke perfect English: "So yo are going to buy an expensive baby buggy now are you? It doesn't surprise me a bit."

"It's pure solid gold," Rudie added.

"My soul," Sigrid said. "Gold baby buggies Is that the style now? What they won't thin of next."

"It's wicker, painted with gilt," Linnea ex plained carefully. "It's a baby contest. Din woodie's is giving the first prize. For the pret tiest baby in Salt Lake, under a year old That's what Rudie's talking about. Naturally Myra ain't going to win it, I don't imagine." She did not look at Rudie.

"Yes, she is," he said boldly. "And you sai so yourself, and so did Ingeborg, if her eck zeema gets cured up!" But the boldness di not get into his eyes where distress shone lik tears.

Not for the likes of Sigrid could she do thi to the most measly dog running the streets, le alone Rudie. She made it up to him. "That' the way mammas is supposed to act," sh said, as though just the two of them had bee there, "they have to pretend like they don' think their baby is going to win the contest for politeness' sake. It ain't manners to bra over what you got, Rudie, for me to brag ove Myra. But that don't mean I got any doubts That's just the way mammas think they'r supposed to act when they get out among com pany and ain't just among the family."

"Oh, we're the family," Sigrid said, strip ping off her gloves. "I should certainly imag ine so. Maybe not the most important part but ——"

"My goodness, I didn't mean ——" Linne began with a sensation of choking, but did no finish whatever she was going to say, becaus the relieved look on Rudie's face was all tha mattered to her then and Sigrid could jump i the lake.

"I seen that buggy in Dinwoodie's window come to think of it," Hattie said. "Doy hap pened to mention the baby contest. But who ever wins it don't have to take the baby buggy in case they need the money worse or got on already. They can take twenty-five dollars, i they'd rather."

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

It's the question from the floor that usually floors the speaker.

A gentleman traveling in this country decries the fact that when a man offers his seat to a woman in a bus she is likely to turn to a sturdy, well-fed youngster and say, "Here, dear, you take it."

The first step in discipline is taken before the child takes his.

Conversation peace: What the parents have when the children aren't talking.

Daughter: "Just think, mother! In nine days and six hours I will have gone steady with him for one month."

One advantage in being a husband is that you never have to remember the names of her relatives.

Parental discipline should be as equalized in control as the mechanism on a dual-driver car, so that the child cannot detect a switchover in the guiding.

In a study made of an island group to determine why the adults were serene, well balanced, it was found that the mothers keep their young strapped to them for the first two years of the baby's life.

A woman is as old as she looks, but a man is only as old as the woman he's looking at.

Our beloved Mrs. Malaprop says, "She expects me to do too much at a time; doesn't she know I have only two pairs of hands."

An understanding mother writes a note to the teacher, "I kept J —— at home because of a cold. What a peaceful day you must have had!"

Perhaps in the department of raising children it's a stick in time.

"I have lived a long time," says a woman up the street, "and the only short cut I have found in washing dishes is to do them at once."

...l, we're going to take the buggy," ud announced. "Ain't we, mamma?"

"...r baby's pretty near a year old, you ant remember," Sigrid pointed out to him, and will soon outgrow it, while twenty-five olla would buy an awful lot of dishes of ice ...ea...

...I'...st consider the source, Linnea said to ...rse as she and her small son trudged up ...ain street. I won't be mad. I won't say noth-...g t... Olaf. He can't help it. I'll just consider ...e s...rce.

...W... only a half block more to go and ...ud...s hand in hers (for now, so close to ...om...it did not matter), she began to think less of the encounter, put it in the right proportion in her mind. I wonder how long she'll hang on, though, the subversive thought came. She knew the answer by heart: Till the cows come home. There was no more chance of anything else than there was a chance the eagle on the Eagle Gate might suddenly flap its wings and fly away!

The first thing Stellie wanted to do when mamma got really gone and out of the way with Rudie was to have Gertrude bake a one-egg cake to "surprise her with" when she came home. Gertrude was tempted. Few things in life were so delightful as to "surprise" mamma, and her small daughters in her absence had scrubbed down many a back step, done up many a batch of dishes and baked many a one-egg cake to light her eyes up like a burning wick in a clean lamp chimney and start her praises like a sprinkler in the park. But the pantry off the kitchen was unusually well stocked for tomorrow's festivities and a cake, Gertrude decided, would be carrying things a little too far.

"I don't think we ought to," she said. "All we're supposed to do is tend the fire and take care of the baby." The former Stellie had done so well that the big kitchen was like an oven, and Gertrude was engaged as she spoke in doing the latter, wrapping a quilt very snugly around Myra and beginning to rock her. When Myra was displeased, she hollered, and if nobody knew what she was hollering about, she hollered until they found out. It usually did not take them long. It did not take Gertrude long to find out that she hollered now because the quilt was too snug, so she loosened it, saying, "You ain't killed, for heaven's sake," with great tenderness, while Myra allowed herself to be pulled up gently against her sister's small chest. Her arms and legs having room to wave, she waved them, like seaweed in moving water. Rocking, Gertrude began a song. It put the baby to sleep almost instantly, and they could lay her on the bed in the dark bedroom in seraphic slumber. At such a moment they never failed to admire her, and did now, while Gertrude covered her well.

"What shall we do?" Stellie whispered when they had shut the door cautiously and were back in the kitchen.

"The house is all cleaned up for tomorrow, so we can't clean nothing," Gertrude said, drawing a sigh and going to stand by the sparkling window. She pulled back the stiff white curtain and looked out at the cold green leaves in the spring sunlight. "We could eat something, I guess," she suggested.

"I ain't very hungry."

"Neither am I."

THEY had already plentifully sampled tomorrow's good things in the odorous pantry since mamma had departed, a customary procedure, full though they were of the more-than-adequate noon meal.

"We could ——" But Stellie did not really know what they could do, so she had to leave the sentence unfinished.

The knock at the front door was almost as good as a present. It was a stranger, of course, couldn't be anyone else. All friends, neighbors and relatives came to the back door. Delighted and expectant, Gertrude flung open the door.

As they hoped, it was a stranger.

It was an old woman with a carpetbag set down at her feet, a bundle in her arms, a big umbrella hooked over her wrist and a big purse clutched in her hand. "Is your mamma home?" she said. She had a baby's brown eyes (which begin as blue, the brown then creeping outward from the center) in reverse. Hers were brown turning blue at the edges. She was a small old woman and these eyes stood only a little higher than Stellie's. Her lips were faintly lavender as though she might have eaten a few grapes only now (but there were no grapes), and the routes for smiling and sighing were plainly marked about them and up and over her face in a way that would be easy to follow as on a well-drawn map. She did not have to reach for her handkerchief for it was already in her black-gloved hand, and she dabbed her damp forehead with it, under a gray fringe of bangs and a brown bonnet brim. "It's quite a

...e's worth
DOUBLE
...rotection!

...entists advise using two ...rushes for best results—a ...morning" brush and an "eve-...ing" brush.

Many dentists also advise ...sing a gentle-action Oral B ...r double protection. They say ...rushing your gums is just as ...mportant as brushing your ...eeth. The Oral B can do both ...obs safely with its softer, ...maller synthetic bristles. Their ...mooth tops clean teeth thor-...ughly and massage gums with-...ut injury.

Ask your dentist about the ...Oral B—the brush that protects ...oth teeth and gums.

...N 3 SIZES...
...OR ALL THE ...AMILY

Oral B TOOTHBRUSH

ORAL B COMPANY
448 S. Market St., San Jose 13, Calif.

Fine feathers for your Easter chicks . . . Stride Rite dress-up styles, made with the same exacting fit, the same high quality as all other Stride Rite shoes. At your dealer's now . . . in many styles, many, many sizes and widths.

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

ways up here from town," she said. "Is she home? Your mother?"

"No, she ain't," Gertrude said regretfully.

"She took Rudie down to the Z. C. M. I., for shoes," Stellie put in. "But she's coming home pretty soon. We're taking care of Myra."

"The baby," Gertrude explained.

"Are you, sweetheart?" the old woman said. "Well, maybe this ain't the right place anyways. I'm looking for a Mrs. Linnea Ecklund who I understood from a neighbor of mine in Ogden has got a nursing home."

The children's faces fell. "Mamma ain't got no nursing home," Gertrude said, shaking her head. "She just takes care of baby cases."

"Now where did I get that notion?" the old woman said. "I was as sure as sure could be. Don't she nurse sick people too?"

They both nodded. "But she goes out and does it," Gertrude said. "They don't come here."

"Oh, dear," the old woman said. "Ain't that the way of it? And I was so sure."

"Did you want mamma to take care of you?" Stellie asked politely.

"Yes, my child. For a little while."

"Well, mamma goes other places," Gertrude repeated. "There don't nobody come here to be took care of." The old woman's lips began to tremble and she blinked her eyes. "But—but—you can come in, if you want, and get rested up, if you want."

Gertrude thought of ushering her into the spotless parlor, as the honor due a stranger, but it was cold and she seemed too waxen and weary for that, so they led her into the warm bright kitchen, placing her bundle, bag, umbrella, purse, hat and shawl neatly on the lounge and herself in the Boston rocker up close to the fire. Gertrude knew what to do then too. She dipped fresh water from the bucket on the drainboard into the clean old granite-iron coffeepot, spooned out generously the rich ripe coffee and set the coffee on to boil.

"Ain't you folks Latter-day Saints?" old woman inquired. She leaned her head b against the comfortable old rocker and be to look at home and not so pale.

"Oh, yes." Stellie said, surprised.

"What become of the Word of Wisdor

"The Word of —— Oh!" Gertrude's f cleared. "We keep to it. Only just the co Mamma says she don't think the Prop Joseph meant to hold the Scandinavians that so exactly, she says."

"She says they seem to require it mo Stellie added adultly. "That's what she alw says."

"Well, I do too. I seem to require it to the old woman said encouragingly. She smi "I'm a convert."

"They're just as good," Gertrude said litely, coming over to set the table with g care, to show how well she could do it.

"She allows you to drink coffee, does sh

"Mamma, you mean?"

THEY looked guiltily at each other. "W we got to put water in it," Stellie said.

"Quite a lot of water," Gertrude confes coloring. "But whoever gets in their teens, t can have coffee, like Bertha does, for instanc

"Who's Bertha?"

"She's fourteen," Stellie said jealously. "S got a job."

"And how old are you?"

"I'm ten." Stellie did not admit it with m pride.

"And how old are you, my fine lady?" old woman asked Gertrude.

"I'm going on thirteen," she said.

"You just turned twelve years old!" Ste said, flaring up.

"Well, that's going on thirteen," the woman said soothingly. "It won't be long you're right up there. So you won't need worry about that, either one of you."

Her name was Mrs. Troon and she was lighted to take a chair at the table with so what embarrassed Gertrude and Stellie, w took upon themselves with great earnestn the duties of hospitality. She thanked th kindly and said that yes, she would take b cream and sugar. But though they pressed h she would not help herself to a piece of skor not even a slice of sweet citron bread.

"My insides have been acting up," she sa "and that's why I wanted to go to a nurs home. I can't hardly hold nothing down more," she said. "Of course it may be j something laying heavy here." She put a ha to the pit of her stomach. "But on the ot hand, it may be a growth of some kind. I went to a doctor or two."

"Couldn't they cure you up?" Gertru asked with tender solicitude, as much l mamma as possible.

"Didn't seem as though they could. Th give me a remedy to take, two or three ren dies. I got them with me." The old wom pointed at the shabby carpetbag. "The l doctor told me to make my peace with t Lord. He didn't need to butt in there, becau old folks do that, they got to, so I have, up a certain point. There's one thing ain't be settled. It may be that, laying heavy."

When Linnea came around the side of t house and in at the back door, the old wom lay on the lounge, having fallen into de slumber. Both Stellie and Gertrude rushed confront their mother and Rudie with a tated faces and fingers to their lips.

Linnea tiptoed over and put the meat a the box containing Rudie's new shoes on t kitchen table, now cleared of the afterno coffee things, looking with curiosity at t sleeper in the corner. "Who is it?" she wh pered. "Did she take sick on the street something?"

Gertrude stood beside her mother, looki down, too, possessively, as though upon a b she had just planted with pansies. "She ai sick. She's just laying down because she got tired and asked if she could, and then she we to sleep."

"She is, too, sick!" Stellie said. "She co here so's you could take care of her. S thought this here was a nursing home."

"But it ain't. You should of told h Where's she from anyway?"

"We did tell her," Gertrude said. "She from Ogden."

Here is a luxury everyone can afford—wonderfully gentle Soft-Weve

Women who want the finest

JUST NATURALLY CHOOSE THIS NEW KIND OF TISSUE

Gentle as facial tissue. Soft-Weve is the new kind of bathroom tissue. It's every bit as soft as your fine facial tissue—and here's the reason. Soft-Weve is made like your facial tissue.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong give Soft-Weve its wonderful combination of gentleness and strength. For your family and guests provide the comfort of Soft-Weve—it's another great Scott value for every modern home.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Linnea sighed. "Poor old soul. Well, we'll her sleep awhile. She sure looks all wore it. And then when she wakes up she can go mewheres else."

But when six o'clock came and they were ady to sit down and ask the blessing and eat pper, she was still there, and she sat down th them. All she would eat was a thin slice summer sausage and half a boiled potato, it she joined in the talk and seemed to enjoy rself even without eating. Her nap had been it a brief one, for Myra woke, and before amma could get her up in her arms was aking enough commotion to wake the dead.
fter that, the two women introduced them-lves, and while Linnea drank coffee and irsed the baby, they became acquainted.
rs. Troon said she wouldn't mind the noise the children, would rather stay here than to a regular nursing home, had no objecons to occupying the dining room (the only ssible spot for her in the small house), proded a bed could be borrowed (Linnea tried think from whom), and thought she would cover before long. She could also pay what-er was right, she said, which made Linnea ush and say, "Oh, my, we've got plenty of ne to think of that."

Her bed was secured from the Parmalees' own the block, who always had an extra one everything, complete with rusty springs and straw tick. There was no furniture in the rk, high-ceilinged room to be moved out—e dining table stood in the big kitchen and e chairs were needed there—nothing but an npty barrel the dishes had been packed in r the last move, and some dozens of fruit
rs. This was her storeroom, Linnea said, but morrow the bottles could go in the coal shed.

When she could, in private, Linnea got her ead together with the girls'. "You probably en thinking it yourself," she said tactfully, hat your bones is young, so you won't mind
ying on that straw tick while we got Mrs. roon with us. We'll change your mattress for rs, shall we?"

It has been said, "Demand of man his best d take no less, and he will give his best."
hey had not thought of it, but instantly did, r mamma's high opinion was something ey all craved. Stellie might have demurred a ttle, but would not be found more lacking in agnificence than her sisters. "The poor old dy," she said. "How long will it take for her get better?"

"Not long, I don't imagine," mamma said, inking of that final recovery wherein no ckness comes again, for to her eyes Mrs.
roon, up and around though she might be,
ad been tagged by Death.

Rudie and Stellie were delegated to discourse ith the guest as she sat by the stove in the oston rocker.

WHILE the three in the kitchen talked, amma and Gertrude changed mattresses and ave the old lady the comfortable feather tick.
Mamma whispered while they made up the ed that she would have been glad to give up er own mattress, except for papa's sake. "A an don't want any changes with his bed. You hange a man's bed on him someway and ou've got something on your hands. They're ore inclined to be set in their ways than adies, I always think. You'll notice when you et married."

Old Mrs. Troon went to bed in her night-own, shawl and nightcap. She joggled up and own two or three times and pronounced to innea, standing inquiringly in the doorway, hat the bed was excellent. "A person wouldn't ven mind dying in a bed this good," she said.
I declare if they would."

"Oh, you ain't going to die. You get rested p once and get so you got some appetite and ou'll be fine."

"I wouldn't put it past me," the old woman aid, shaking her head. "To die, I mean. Now hat I've done what I wanted. Done it up rown. It kept me busy, I can tell you that, for while there, busier'n a cranberry merchant.
No wonder I never had no time to think of othing else! But now ——"

Linnea came across from the door and ifted the quilts where they were tucked in too ight at the foot of the bed. "There ain't no iner feeling than to do something up brown," he said. "If it was something needed doing."

"Oh, this needed doing all right, but they'd have a conniption fit, I can tell you, if they knowed it," the old lady said softly. "I don't know what they'd do! I suppose cut me off the church, or no telling what. But what they don't know won't hurt 'em. And how are they going to find out, I want to know? Me and the heavenly Father"—she gazed up at the ceiling—"we're the only two that's in on it, and we're the only two that's going to be in on it, until—until—it all comes out there."

"Where?" Linnea asked gently.

"I'll tell you just one thing," the old lady said, hoisting herself higher on the pillow, "and that's this. What I done ain't supposed to be done. It ain't forbidden, that I know of, because it wouldn't be supposed nobody would even think of such a thing, but it ain't supposed to be done."

"I firmly believe you wouldn't do no harm," Linnea said.

Mrs. Troon's face cleared. "Not only would I not do no harm," she said gratefully, "but this here that I done is going to make two people happy throughout all eternity. And myself included makes three."

"Well ——" Linnea began.

"But every human being's got a conscience, and there's where the rub comes in," the old lady said. "Mine's been jawing away at me lately quite a bit. So that's why I don't know whether I got a growth in the pit of my stomach, or whether it's just my conscience."

"Maybe you'd ought to tell somebody sometime about it."

The old lady sat up and hugged her knees in the way of girlhood. It was odd and touching to see her. She must have been lovely once, very lovely, Linnea thought. There was still grace in her movements, a remnant of beauty upon her head, across her dimming eyes. "I wouldn't dare!" she said.

"Why not?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 97

DOROTHY GRAY Satura

WITH HORMONES AND VITAMIN A

DRAWS MOISTURE FROM THE AIR TO HELP DRY OR AGING SKIN LOOK YOUNGER...FRESHER!

THIS is the truly modern means to give your skin maximum benefits of beautifying moisture! SATURA, by Dorothy Gray, not only maintains the skin's inner moisture . . . it actually attracts moisture from the air to combat surface dryness and encourage the fresh, misty look of youth!

And SATURA does more! As its natural estrogenic hormones help "cushion" the skin against lines and wrinkles, its Vitamin A is absorbed by the skin to help relieve flaky-dryness. With these age-denying elements plus rich, skin-softening ingredients, SATURA is a most effective single preparation designed especially for dry or maturing skin. Use SATURA overnight and under make-up. It's greaseless, vanishing! 2-oz. $3.50; 4-oz. $5.00, plus tax.

For dry or over-30 skin follow the Dorothy Gray RULE OF THREE each day!

1 CLEANSE with Dorothy Gray Dry-Skin Cleanser . . . $1 to $3.50
2 STIMULATE with Dorothy Gray Orange Flower Skin Lotion . . . $1 to $3.75
3 LUBRICATE with SATURA at night

(Prices plus tax.)

TRUST  DOROTHY GRAY

for everything you need to stay a beauty!

Just made for the new hair styles

3 Lotions: Prom super, Prom very gentle, Prom regular. Also, Children's Prom

THE NEW WAVES are deep, definite, yet so soft they look as if they naturally belonged to you. The kind of waves that a Prom is just made to hold—month after month after month—in "Fontaine" and other new hair styles.

the easiest way in the world to get a wave that holds in the new longer hair

Hair is definitely longer with deep, even waves that give you a smoother elegant look.

It takes a real home permanent, the kind you roll up on curlers, to hold waves in the new longer, softer hair. A pin-curl permanent just won't job—it fades away too fast. You need Prom, the home permanent just m the new hair styles.

Unlike other curler-type home permanents, Prom is self-neutralizing sets easily into the new deep, smooth waves. And Prom lasts longer th other home permanent, bar none. Laboratory tests prove it.

Of course you already know that self-neutralizing Prom is the easie in the world to get a home permanent that lasts. So have a Prom and be a home permanent that's just made for the new hair styles.

$1.50 plus tax

Use Spin brand Curlers or any plastic home perman

12 New Hair Styles—10¢. Easy step-by-step directions, diagrams, pictures sho you can give yourself any one of these three new hair styles and nine others. send 10¢ and your name and address to Prom Cosmetics, Box 3524, Chica Illinois, for the booklet . . . "Prom's Parade of 12 New Hair Styles".

© The Gillette Co.

THE NEW CLASSIC is smooth and uncluttered as an elegant little cap. Up-keep? It's no problem when hair styles like "Classic" are based on a Prom, the self-neutralizing home permanent that you roll up on curlers.

THE NEW LENGTH is accented here with two broad waves tha meet at the nape of the neck. This fresh new "Couplet" hai style is simple to set and maintain with a long-lasting Prom home permanent.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 95

hy not? Why, because they'd put the h on it, that's why not. They'd fix it so I in't get to first base. They'd spoil every- that's why not, and all my trouble would en for nothing."

nea sighed, greatly puzzled. "Well, you own," she said, "and try to go to sleep. ll come out in the wash. Everything s out in the wash sooner or later."

Mrs. Troon obligingly slipped down the covers and pulled her pillow securely der her.

aven't you got no kinfolks?" Linnea , retreating to the door.

ot a soul," Mrs. Troon said. "I'm foot- and fancy-free. Go and come where I " ell, you try to go to sleep," Linnea ted.

Irs. Ecklund?"

ou're welcome to call me Linnea, if you "

innea. I wouldn't mind mentioning," Troon said, "I'm glad you took me in for ng. Your kids is— ely. I've softened em. And it's nice I wanted to men- it. I won't be any bother than I can and it'll be nice— to be so lone- ."

pang went ugh Linnea's . "As soon as the ement's over," she "I'll put up cur- s in here—and thing."

What excitement's "

h, the dedication rrow, and my coming, and then little neighbor ss the way expect- ny minute—why, naybe be tied up delivering just the ceremonies ing on. But after I'll see you get ains up and see it's r in here. I meant sk you. Was you ning on going g with us?"

To the dedication? I wasn't." The old an yawned.

Well, we're all go- to take it in, but won't mind be- here alone them hours. That is, if not tied up with Mrs. Lilygren." She ed. "Anyway, we'll see. It'll all come in the wash, this here with her and—and business, too, whatever it is. Tomorrow's ther day—ain't that right? You just drift " he must have, for half an hour later when family went to bed, they heard her gently ing.

E sunny day that dawned, if it had been le to order, couldn't have fitted the occa- better. Every green leaf stood out like a thumb, the flowers looked like organdy, breeze smelled sweeter than eau de Co- ne, and the sky was nearly out of sight. s. Troon, when she appeared early for akfast in the lively kitchen, was wearing her at-home costume, a shiny black serge t, a wine-red morning sack with a white collar and a large brooch pinned under chin.

This proved to be interesting on closer mination, being exactly like a minia- picture frame of oval shape, with beveled ss over two tiny coiled braids of hair. One id was very light brown and one was as ck as coal.

Gertrude sat next to her at table and was the t to remark at it. "My, that's a pretty ooch," she said.

"I like it better than if it was a solid mass of diamonds," Mrs. Troon said. "Though it ain't as valuable, in money."

Gertrude leaned over for a good look at it. "Is that real hair?"

"Human hair, you mean? Sure, it is."

"Whose is it?"

"Gertrude," mamma reproved her. "I want you to hurry your mush so you can iron out Myra's bonnet strings and do a few little things."

"Why can't I watch the baby?" Mrs. Troon said. "Why don't you leave her home? You don't want to have a baby to pack around if you can leave her home."

THE whole family took great pride in her and it was no chore for them to carry her around, the burden love bears being slight though it weighs twenty-four pounds, but for the child's own sake they decided to leave Myra behind.

Gunilla, Linnea's sister—without her husband, for in spring and summer he was away bartering tombstones—and her family of five arrived early. There was much to do for the next hour. The boys—Rudie, and Gunilla's three, Alfred, Thurval and Oscar, with clean shirts, string ties, new or well-blacked shoes, wool suits—were closeted in one of the bedrooms. The girls—Bertha, Gertrude, Stellie and their cousins Helga and Bernice—struggled in the other with "best" dresses, so hooked, eyed, buttoned and sashed that they required two pairs of hands apiece to get their wearers into them. Dressing for "good" was a serious business to them all and they took it seriously, the mothers running back and forth to do what supervising was necessary.

Gertrude had been dispatched to see how Mrs. Lilygren was holding up and returned to announce she was dressed and had her hair all done. However, she was crying, or had been, for her eyes were red and her nose looked like a new potato, it was so pink and shiny. This news sent Linnea flying to the side of her friend and neighbor.

Mrs. Lilygren had been crying. She cried afresh when she saw Linnea's concerned face.

"You poor little thing," Linnea said. "What in the world is the matter?"

The matter was, not surprisingly, Mr. Lilygren. He had refused to accompany his wife to the dedication ceremonies! "He says I got no business going. I never seen him so mad. He forbid me. But for the first time in my life I stood up to him."

"He give mamma a push," the pale Lilygren daughter said, coming into the kitchen. "Such a hard push, I thought she'd fall down. I wanted to pick up a chair and brain him."

"I never have heard you say such an awful thing," Mrs. Lilygren said reprovingly. "After all, he's the father the Lord gave you."

"I wish he was dead and buried."

"Ivy!"

"Well, I do."

"It maybe ain't to be wondered at," Linnea said. "But honestly, Mrs. Lilygren, do you think ——"

"That there temple was started the year I was born," Mrs. Lilygren said. "I told you how hard a time mamma had to raise me, and I've always said ——"

"I know," Linnea said. "But how do you feel?"

PLUM

King Henry VIII was furious when the Church refused to sanction his divorce from Catherine of Aragon, his first wife. He set machinery in motion to establish an independent English Church, and began plundering monasteries and convents.

As one institution after another was robbed by the monarch, the abbot of Glastonbury monastery became greatly alarmed. After consultation with John Horner, his chief steward, he determined to make a gesture of good will. During the Christmas season of 1535, he sent Horner to London with a gift for His Majesty—deeds to twelve estates that belonged to the monastery.

Horner came back and reported that the king was pleased, but failed to mention his own theft of the most valuable deed—to property worth £100,000. There was never any official action against him, but news of the exploit leaked out.

An unknown satirist composed a poem about "Little Jack Horner," who stuck his thumb into a "Christmas pie" and pulled out a "plum." For several generations, plum was slang for £100,000. Then the meaning expanded to include any "juicy prize."

—WEBB B. GARRISON

Meds tampons are so absorbent . . . so completely protective . . . and, what's more, so comfortable you never know you're using them. Meds are the modern form of sanitary protection—and Meds are the only tampons with their own exclusive, easily disposable applicators that can't fall apart.

"I never felt better."

"There's going to be such a terrible crowd, and when they get you cooped in and some of them patriarchs get to making a speech, there's just no end to it," Linnea said, biting her lip. "And you're upset anyway, over your husband. Ain't he really going? Or is he going by himself?"

"He's went down to the shop," Mrs. Lilygren said sadly, "and claims he ain't going a-tall, he's so mortally ashamed of me. He made poor Nephi go with him to the shop, so the boy ain't going to get in on it." Mrs. Lilygren's lower lip began to quiver and her eyes swam with tears again.

Herding the smaller children and letting the bigger ones proceed by two and two up ahead, Linnea, with her arm companionably through Gunilla's, said that for her part she was a little uneasy about Mrs. Lilygren. But then, the poor thing had got so little out of life with such a onry old skinflint as that husband of hers that it looked like she'd surely ought to be able to have her way for once, if she wanted. "She's dead set on it," she said. "It's kind of pathetic someway, ain't it? To be so poor off for something to get your heart set on, that you set it on something like these here ceremonies?"

"It is, someway," Gunilla agreed. "Why don't she divorce that old demon?"

"Well, naturally she's sealed to him. That's one thing."

"She can get unsealed."

"That's what I say, too," Linnea agreed. "But one of them meek little things like that, that can't call their soul their own, you don't generally get much action out of them."

As they approached Temple Square and entered the teeming crowds converging from all sides, Linnea called a halt, gathering the children around, giving orders. Bertha, Gertrude, Stellie and their Cousin Helga were to stay in a bunch even if separated from the rest of the family. Gunilla's three boys were to do the same. Linnea and Gunilla would take Rudie and Bernice with them. Now. Wa all straight in their minds? All straight. L had just time at the gates to add that w was over they were to make a beeline for h before they were swallowed up, and the l of them to be seen was, for a momen proud new daisies on Gertrude's hat bo ahead, before these, too, disappeared, waves of unknown humanity covered th where they had been.

The ceremony of dedication was not u a regular Sunday meeting in the taber only still more solemn. The same bearde long-winded man presided, the same ments were voiced, the same prayers ser ward. Today, however, not parts but the plete history of the church was unrolle long, long streamer around them all i high-ceilinged assembly room at the top building. Like a net for minnows it wa round them where they sat in row after se row on folding chairs, or stood six deep ar the walls or bent forward from the balco perched, as dozens of children did, upo circular staircases in each corner of the pillared hall. It wound them and bound together, this thin indestructible ribbo their tradition, stronger than steel. How they begun? As a handful. What had the fered? This was told them sonorously a detail, so that they could have wept, and did, into half-hidden handkerchiefs.

Gunilla noted with relief that Ber fidgeting little body had grown still and h and glancing down saw that her eyelashe come to rest upon her plump cheeks. sighed and shifted so that the sleeping chi more securely in her arms. She exchang look with Linnea, who was having no easy time with restless and bored Rudie who smiled as though to say, "It will soo over, they can't go on all day!" But there every chance in the world that they could would.

The windows were open, but it was ver in the room and the droning voices of the old men put many a believer perilously clo slumber. Poor kids, Linnea thought, t hard to spy out one of their faces, but were not to be seen in the range of her vi and she did not like to turn her head ar to see if they were somewhere behind her

Not all the rows of chairs faced the fr some went along the side and faced the mi and it was in the second of those to her r far up ahead, that she discovered the agit face of Mrs. Lilygren.

Linnea sat up straight, her heart begin to thud. Mrs. Lilygren was as white as a sh her eyes darting wildly everywhere like a caught in a trap. She was gnawing her lips. next to her, was as white as a sheet too.

Linnea thrust her elbow into Gunilla's s and her sister saw, after a moment's b staring, the anguished little face of Mrs. L gren under the outsize coiffure crowned by old-fashioned garnet hat. Her eyebrows up. "Oh, my," Linnea breathed, "I'm af we're in for it."

If I coula get her to see me, she thoug could maybe signal to her or something. Mrs. Lilygren's terrified eyes rested nowh saw nothing, brilliant and busy though t were. She's afraid to move, Linnea thou she's in for it now. She's so timid and so ho ward and so afraid of making a spectacle of self that she's going to sit there until it's late. No telling how long it's been going on ready. No telling how much time there is

She whispered into Gunilla's ear, "You k Rudie and stay right here till it's over," stood up. It was the most frightening thing had ever done in her life. "Pardon me, par me, pardon me," she said to boots, sh reticules, feathers, eyeglasses and gold wa chains as she made her way—she never kn how—to poor, trapped, agonized Mrs. L gren and led her and trembling Ivy down narrow aisle and out through the nearest do down one flight of stairs and into the ro that offered itself first.

And there Mrs. Lilygren was laid low.

Somehow or other Mrs. Lilygren's hat ca off and her hair came down, all that mass thick brown hair, and it was Ivy's shaking c cern to try to lift and pin it up again as thou

CONTINUED ON PAGE 100

JEWELRY BY VOGUE

At the top and toe there's invisible Nylace protection for all that beautiful sheerness in between. So dry your eyes . . . no more garter runs, no more toe runs! And because these full-fashioned Berkshires are proportion-knit, they fit your legs smoothly all over: are much less apt to snag and run. sheer sheer BERKSHIRE STOCKINGS

9500 Skin Tests Prove

Palmolive Soap Is Mildest! Better for Complexion Care!

BETTER THAN ANY LEADING TOILET SOAP... FLOATING SOAP... EVEN COLD CREAM

Palmolive's gentle complexion care cleans thoroughly without irritation!

here's nothing women envy more . . . or men admire so uch . . . as that lovely "schoolgirl complexion look." And u too, can have a younger looking, far lovelier complexion st by changing to proper care with gentle Palmolive. It es so much to help you have a softer, smoother skin!

Skin specialists agree that a really mild soap means less irritation . . . more gentle cleansing. And now, milder Palmolive brings you these benefits—so important for a softer, smoother, brighter skin. For Palmolive is not only mild—Palmolive has been proved mildest of them all!

See how regular care with Palmolive Soap really improves your complexion. How it leaves skin feeling so wonderfully clean and soft . . . how it cleans without irritation. Try mild Palmolive Soap. You'll find no other leading soap or cold cream gets skin thoroughly clean as gently as Palmolive!

Skin Specialists Say: "MILDER CLEANSING IS BETTER FOR YOUR COMPLEXION!"

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Any Other Leading Beauty Soap or Castile Soap!

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Leading White Floating Soaps or Deodorant Soaps!

Palmolive Is Proved Even Milder than America's Leading Cold Creams!

PALMOLIVE SOAP HELPS YOU GUARD THAT SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION LOOK!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 98

her mother's very life depended on it. Linnea was busy otherwise and in no time her neighbor was delivered of a baby girl, as red as a red Indian and wrinkled as a crone, with long little fingernails and toenails, delivered right there in the very temple that had been started the year Mrs. Lilygren was born!

For some reason, though it was only to be expected, it seemed extremely like a preternatural wonder. It would seem so later to Mrs. Lilygren, who was not quite ready for that or any other thought as yet. It seemed so to Linnea, who said so with triumph when the baby gave its first bewildered cry. It seemed so to Ivy, too, still involved with her mother's looping hair. It struck the same way a Sister Overland (she said her name was) who, timid of fainting, always lurked near the doorway in any large gathering and so was able to follow and offer her assistance.

Mr. Parmalee said he didn't know what else it was, if not a wonder! They didn't know he came after them, but there, blessedly, when the worst was over, he was. He it was who plucked two men from the outhanging branches of the audience, and two ladies, and with their aid, Linnea's, quivering Ivy's and Sister Overland's, got the limp mother and baby (bundled into Linnea's linen petticoat and Ivy's cape) down from the mighty temple and out of the grounds and into his buggy for the bumpy trip home.

"Well!" Linnea said brightly, when her charges, washed, tended and safe in bed, had fallen into a nap. "I guess that was something we never looked for, wasn't it?"

Ivy nodded, only now recovering from the ordeal.

"Like a miracle," Linnea said. "I declare if I don't think so."

She felt happy, for some reason, bubbling over with pride and delight. "How about if you and me treat ourself to a little cup of coffee?" she said to Ivy.

The girl jumped up from her seat on t low window sill, but then stopped in her track "Oh, my," she said, "Mrs. Ecklund, I ju don't know what to say. Papa don't allow in the house. We ain't even got a coffeepot

"Well, don't you mind," Linnea said. "He in good company, not allowing it, and got t Word of Wisdom on his side, which ought be lived up to. But I'll tell you what I'll d I'll go and get some!" She flew homeward.

While she was grinding the coffee bea (enough to fill a pint jar), she told Mrs. Trod all that had befallen.

So she was not there when Mr. Lilygren, h unhappy boy beside him, approached h house. Ivy was watching for him and when l turned the corner she slipped out through th back door and over to Linnea's.

"Please, Mrs. Ecklund," she panted. "Con quick, will you? Papa's coming home now an I know he's going to be awful mad about th baby!"

LINNEA got up instantly. She was in time t have stationed herself casually before Mr Lilygren's shut door when Ivy's father, short, square man with small deep-seated ligh eyes, and a muscular mouth turned sourl down, came into the kitchen. "Good evening Mr. Lilygren," she said cheerfully. "We got big surprise for you!"

"Born, I suppose," he said. He had brough some of his carpenter's tools home with hi and these he laid with a clatter on a bench b the sink. Nephi, a shy freckled boy of fifteer brightened and smiled, but glanced at hi father, not sure it was the time to speak.

"Born!" Linnea said. "And when you hea the whole story ——"

"Boy?"

"Girl, Mr. Lilygren. A regular little beauty And when you hear ——"

He looked expressionlessly into her brigh dancing eyes, ignored her broad smile, the turned to his daughter. "When will supper b ready?" he asked.

"As soon as you wash up," Ivy said coldly "I just got to bring it to the table."

He went over to the sink and poured wate from the bucket into the basin, reached for th bar of yellow soap and began to lather hi hands. "I was within my rights, then," he said. "She'd of been a fine one to try to go t the temple, wouldn't she?"

"Oh, but she went," Linnea said.

"Is she all right?" Nephi plucked up courage to ask. "And the baby—is she all right? Are they . . . all right?"

"Fine as silk," Linnea said, her gaze on Mr. Lilygren's broad bent back.

He turned and straightened slowly, reaching for the towel. "She went?" he said. "She went to the ceremonies? Then when ——?"

"In the temple, Mr. Lilygren," Linnea said. "That was part of the good news I was fixing to tell you. Your little girl was born right in the house of the Lord."

He took a threatening step toward her, as though she had slandered him. "It . . . ain't true!" he said.

"And why wouldn't it be true, Mr. Lilygren? Miracles sometimes happen, you know."

"Miracles!" he said. "Blasphemy, you'd better say. Profanation! She couldn't, she wouldn't of dared—they wouldn't allow ——" His lips worked. "In the house of the Lord!"

"Right smack dab in the middle of it," Linnea said firmly. "And it ain't nothing to get excited about but only to rejoice in, because if the Lord hadn't of wanted it to happen, He wouldn't of let it happen, which a religious man like you had surely ought to know!"

He seemed not to be listening while he grew bigger and taller and wider and deeper with a kind of baleful red glow upon his face as though a fiery furnace were casting its reflection there. "Defiling," he said, "defiling—polluting—with her sin and her shame—daring to profane—the holy place of God!"

Linnea grew, too, her eyes beginning to throw out sparks. "Now, listen here, Mr. Lilygren ——"

"You!" he said, clenching his fists. He might have struck her. They were not prepared for him to suddenly turn and point. They jumped, all three of them. "You're the one that's responsible for that, ain't you?" he shouted.

Color surrounds you! Surrender?

Van Raalte's "Trio Tone" $5.95

Because you love nice things . . . we had your sense of color in mind when we designed this exciting new petticoat. Lined up on this page are really twenty-four color tones—because each of our eight "Trio Tones" is dipped in three depths of color . . . such a beautiful way of showing how you feel about spring. And the color's permanently box-pleated—see how the rich flounce is designed. All this, in our own fabulous nylon Opaquelon. Just follow the rainbow to the nicest store near you.

And Van Raalte makes the nicest . . . handsome fabric gloves and Flex-Fit® stockings, too.

#6932—"Trio Tone." In three shades of: Bittersweet Brown, Blueberry, Lemon, Lime, Melon, Pepper Gray, Purple Heather, Rosemary Blue; S.M.L. $5.95.

ad forgotten to hide the pint jar of nd there it stood in plain sight on the ard.
e they stared, he reached out for it, to the stove and dumped the contents
"A woman who would do an under-thing like that," he said, "sneaking into house behind his back and conniving is family to break holy laws and rules, lo anything!"
v, you listen here!" Linnea said.
e gone far enough, you—you convert!"
her!" he said, jerking his head in the n in which his wife lay. "Deliberately nd defile—to stain and besmirch with nale filthiness—the temple of the All
!"

hush now," Linnea said. "You stop ht this minute. You—bully! Not only a bully but you are a fanatic, the t, most fanatic man in this town, and n't one in ten thousand like you, thank r we'd be a pretty sorry outfit as a You're just a jump this side of a crazy ou want to know. That's what you are!
ice little wife. Your sweet little innoby. And you standing there talking besmirching and polluting. Why, the ught to strike you with lightning this stant!"
tared at her, breathing hard, while she defiantly back.
! Ivy!" Mrs. Lilygren called, and a faint unpracticed crying began.
larted past Linnea into the room where ther lay.
avenly days, heavenly days," they Mrs. Lilygren say in terror. "Don't let ke a notion to lick Nephi or something.
dn't gone! I should of stayed home!
ly, heavenly days ——" They heard bing.
ea spoke first. "Ain't you proud of lf? Now ain't you something to be of?" Her scorn was withering.
u get off my property," he said harshly.
. . woman!" It was the bitterest epithet ld think of.
phi," Linnea said, "you go for Bishop
y. I want him to get in on this. I want see just what kind of a man your father

n't you go a step," the man thundered.
l whale the living daylights out of you."
phi, you go," Linnea said. "You go."
don't have to go," a voice said from the ay, and there, in her muslin nightgown nly good one she had, carefully washed oned for her confinement), stood Mrs.
en, deathly pale, but standing firmly on nall bare feet.
a!" the boy said, defying his father to go
. He was crying, tried not to cry.
put an arm around him, drew him up
. "He don't have to go nowhere," she ed. "It won't be necessary." She looked y at her husband. "Because I now ly ask you to leave this house, yourself, tto Lilygren. We don't want you any-s near here no more. We've stood all going to stand from you and today the end of it."
l oversize in rage, her husband stared at her.
made a little brushing motion with her "Get on out," she said. "I ask you ly. And don't come back."
et on out?" he exploded. "Are you out of weak-minded head?"
ot now," she said. "I been out of my -minded head for twenty years, but I out of it now."
o back to bed, Mrs. Lilygren," Linnea softly. "I'll handle this. You go back to there's a dear ——" did not attack her. They must have ght he would, for all three moved in r to give her protection. He glared bale-but did not move.
'd see me walk out of my house and ," he said. "I'd see me turn my prop-over to you. Woman!" Again he knew ing worse to say.
hen stay," she said calmly, "and instead alking out, go out feet first. If that's the would suit you better. Because you got it," she said, "and sooner or later some of them knifefuls you poke down is going to have poison in them, real, deadly pure rat poison. You'll poke one down someday and won't know what hit you! And you got to sleep," she went on, "and someday you're going to wake up smothered to death in bed. You've heard of people smothered to death with a feather pillow. You can't watch all the time. There's bound to be a time you ain't watching. And then's when you're going to leave—for good—carried out feet first—and good riddance to bad rubbish."

She couldn't mean it, but through the white lips under the glittering eyes it seemed like Gospel truth she spoke.

"If this is going to turn into a insane asylum," her husband said, beginning to shrink in size to what he normally was, beginning to back to the door, looking at all of them, one after another, to see who might spring first, "why, no man in his right mind would want to stay." His face had gone ashen. "But I'll tell you this much. You'll shift for yourselves. You'll never get a dime out of me. Not a dime."

"We don't want a dime out of you," Ivy said boldly, her chin lifting, for the first time lifting.

"No," Nephi said as boldly, without blinking his eyes.

"Walk out, or be carried," Mrs. Lilygren said. "You got your choice."

He took it. He kept on backing until he got to the door, turned and went through it, disappeared around the house.

"He'll come back." Ivy said. "That'll be him, you can depend."

"No," Mrs. Lilygren said, "he won't come back. So—don't you—never fear." She fainted so quietly and so unexpectedly that, close as they were to her, she slipped past them before they could make a grab, and landed flat as a pancake on the floor.

(To be Continued)

See your local newspaper on Thursday, March 17th through Sunday, April 3rd for advertisements of stores carrying the new ENNA JETTICKS.

THE UGLIEST WOMAN IN TOWN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62

Another person might have thought Netta addlebrained to come all the way from Paris to Philadelphia on impulse, without notice or plan. Softhearted Frances, however, though she felt a momentary twinge of annoyance, told herself that it was perfectly understandable. A divorce is a grave wound, even for those who pretend otherwise, and a person who is wounded often withdraws to a place he thinks will heal him, quite often his birthplace. The house in which Netta Tholen had been born had been sold long since, true enough, but her grandfather and great-grandfather had meant so much to Pennsylvania's history that—house or not, two divorces or not—she would always be accepted, always find herself at home in Glen Gwyllan.

"I'm awfully pleased you thought of me," said Frances quite sincerely. "Shall I drive in for you?"

"A cab will bring me out to you in half the time," said Netta. "Thanks so much, Fran. This is good of you. People haven't been too good to me lately."

Glen Gwyllan is one of half a dozen villages in the crook of Philadelphia's great arm that bear Welsh names, presumably because they are green almost the year round like Wales. It has no center, really; its landmarks, the Friends' meetinghouse of brown fieldstone and the red-and-white service station, are widely separated. The town line is merely a surveyors' line, drawn around twenty-odd estates with rolling meadows and miles of white-painted wooden fences. The Dickeys' fence encloses two hundred acres of emerald pasture. There is a long driveway under copper beeches, and then you swing around the gardens and confront a house like a fashioned seaside-resort hotel. Of stained shingles with white trim, it marc in all directions, and there are conical c and windows framed in bits of red an glass. As ugly as sin, the house is; and, li comfortable once you are in it. The se having learned the trick from those they are virtually invisible.

Netta, dark, slim, brittle and woma only a Paris suit can make a woman wo was given a bedroom, sitting room, d room and bath in what might be call southeast-by-easterly wing of the huge The tub in her enormous bath was of late marble with a mahogany rim, its fittings as smooth, after fifty years of z polishing, as wedding satin.

"I see you look as healthy and ha ever," said Netta to Frances, carelessly ing gold-backed combs and brushes or glass top of her dressing table.

Nobody with the smallest pretensi honesty was more complimentary than Frances Dickey.

And Frances—thick in the legs, chunk wrestler, square of jaw, with hair that to have been doused with weed killer a planted—Frances, wistful and adoring presence of beauty and chic, breathed, any husband could let you go, you go thing, I don't understand!"

"He said I spent money faster than he earn it," replied Netta. "It was my own for marrying someone who had to ea Well—easy come, easy go."

When Horton came in from his e mental dairy at five he said, "Netta? Oh she was the skinny Van Camp kid wh always smashing people's cars. Glad she's You don't see enough women, Franny. together too much."

Horton was handsome and massive. in character that he should remembe mashed cars, for above all else he de wastefulness: the largest gifts he made not to hospitals but to societies for the servation of salmon, white-pine tre mourning doves. As a boy at Princeton h once lost five hundred dollars in a stud- game and, walking home afterward wit other undergraduate, wept over it. A ished, the other boy had exclaimed, Hort, you can afford to lose five hu thousand." "I have no right to waste m other men in my family made sacrific earn," Horton replied; and that was th time he ever played poker for more twenty-five cents a chip. He is extravag generous, Horton, but he has the point of of a man who finds it a hard and unple task to take care of a fortune. The rest wish we had the task, but we have never h

THE Dickeys did not ask Netta wha intended to do next. It was clear that sh no idea. So they asked people who kne in for dinner and bridge, and Frances phoned to other friends in the yo crowd—Netta's, rather than her own— gesting that they rally round. Rally r they did, since they were well-mann young women, and it was while Netta lunching with an old school friend n Lucia that a mischievous idea entered—(be fair to her, was dropped like a pinc salt—into her well-groomed head. The I eys' guests are always well groomed. Th a combination barbershop and beauty p in the house.

"Staying with the fabulous Dickeys! always longed to. What a chance!" ejacu Lucia, a sallow girl with a passion for large, overbright bracelets. Once, becaus thought an attendant was too slow abou ing her tank with gasoline, Lucia took plane without waiting for him and within minutes of crashing in the cente downtown Philadelphia.

"Chance?" asked Netta. "To do what "To find out how Frances hangs onto H After all, he's something pretty special, an is the ugliest woman in town."

"She wasn't bad-looking at twenty. Bu course," agreed Netta, "none of us were looking at twenty. They have been ma for dogs' years, haven't they?"

t isn't only that. They still make eyes at other. Why," said Lucia, shocked, "at es they sit on love seats and hold hands— gorgeous man, and that ugly woman!"

Fran has a secret, I could use it. Me with strikes on me," said Netta.

We all wish we knew her secret," exclaimed ia. "Be a doll. Find out and tell us."

Maybe I will," said Netta.

here are still people in this world, even ple who regard themselves as sophisticated, believe they can get true answers to ques- s simply by asking the questions.

Tell me, Hort," asked Netta a few evenings . "How do you explain the fact that you Frances are so happy?"

nce the drawing room of the Dickey house signed for regimental reviews, the three of were drinking their after-dinner coffee small sitting room on the ground floor; one in the westernmost bay of the north- -by-west wing, with bronze-and-maroon paper in an ailanthus pattern and jig- ed walnut tables with chocolate marble .

That's easy," replied Horton. "The kid's a crush on me."

rances chuckled.

I would never have guessed," said Netta. is may come as a surprise to you, but lots eople fall out of love."

It doesn't come as a surprise to me," said ton with unexpected gentleness. "It makes unhappy when I hear of it. I'm sorry for people it happens to."

But you and Fran are as devoted after ten s as you were the day you got yourself aged in old Mrs. Willamander's green- se."

rances, sitting beside the glazed green k fireplace in a long dress, in which she mbled a bulky criminal attempting to k out of prison in disguise, looked up a grin in her broad, clean-scrubbed, wind- ned face. "Oh, we have our troubles," she , "Hort and I."

Don't be smug," Netta counseled her. "If e's any kind of wife I can't stand, it's a g one. The point is, what do you do to— l—stay in love?"

Horton stretched a tweed arm and patted on the head. "Oh, Netta, Netta," he said.

NETTA then did what a brighter woman uld have done in the first place. Asking no re questions, she put the Dickeys under veillance. The thing that struck her was the ailing courtesy they had for each other. It s deference far removed from mere man- s. Trying to define it, Netta told herself t Horton treated Frances as if Frances were gnant. Pregnant Frances was not, since she not have children; nevertheless, Netta saw, rton waited on her with the anxious, alert of an expectant father. And Frances be- ed toward Horton in much the same hion. She was always pausing in mid- tence to see if he needed anything, if there s anything she could do for him.

I've got it, Netta told herself. If married ple would be as polite to each other as they to the strangers who sit beside them in a ater, all marriages would be as happy as the ckeys'! And she was thrilled by her clever- ss until she recalled that some of the politest uples she knew loathed and despised each er. Moreover, she realized, the Dickeys' urtesy was not a cause but a result. They not love each other because they were nderly thoughtful. They were tenderly oughtful because they loved each other.

By this time it was tacitly agreed that Netta s to stay on in the Dickey house for how- long it took her to decide what she in- nded to do next. Two monumental trunks rived for her, and she promenaded in orthumberland tweeds by day and French ffetas by night, looking ultrafeminine in th. She pushed ahead with her crime detec- n. Was the Dickeys' secret, she asked her- f, the fact that they had no envy of each her? It seemed much too simple to be the ex- anation, but she tested the theory. She aised Frances' riding to Horton, for instance, d asked him how it happened that he was t a better horseman. "Oh, Fran is so good a horse I get more pleasure out of watching r," said Horton. She praised Horton's dollar-a-pint dairy herd to Frances, asking Frances why she did not go in for something equally worth while. "Because Hort has a brain that can handle bloodlines and butterfat figures," said Frances serenely, "and I haven't."

Jealousy, then? Could she slip a wedge between them, Netta asked herself, by making them jealous? She decided to try it as soon as an opportunity arose.

The opportunity arose one afternoon when they drove between white fences and herds of black-Angus cattle to a neighbor's place, the Wachtells', for cocktails. Susan Brace was there. Netta recalled that Susan and Horton at one time, when they were a year or so out of school, had seen a great deal of each other.

"You don't seem to be afraid to expose Hort to Susan, Frances," Netta remarked. "Aren't you afraid that old thing may start up again?"

"What old thing?" inquired Frances.

"They had a simply lurid affair."

"Not from Hort's description of it. It was sweet. Sweet and a little sad."

"Hort came within an inch of marrying her."

"He came close. And no wonder. Susan is a darling," replied Frances, "but I must say I am glad they didn't marry. It would have been a mistake for both of them. Susan is a big-city girl. She's in New York oftener than she is here, and Hort gets so tense and miserable in a city that he can't sleep. Katydids, yes. Buses, no. Susan wasn't for him."

Netta pictured Horton tense and miserable in the eleven-room apartment in New York he leased by the year so that Frances and he could have a place to change when they went to the theater. Poor boy, she said to herself. He ought to take a couple of katydids along with him in a bag. "Sometimes, though," she said aloud, with unblinking eye, "a married man decides he missed the bus, Fran, and goes back just for the ride."

But Frances' armor remained unscratched. "I know," she said, "but I don't think you sarong

the criss-cross girdle that walks and won't ride up!

Painting of Native Girl in a Pareu

DRESS BY CAROLYN SCHNURER

Every minute of every day, you'll enjoy new comfort in a boneless, lightweight Sarong. Sarong's unique criss-cross front follows your every movement, tucks in your tummy gently but firmly, never—never rides up! Its smartly contoured back and sides define your hips and thighs with today's new slenderness. What a wonderful feeling when Sarong slims you with comfort.

From waist length to corselette, zippers and pull-ons, there's a perfect Sarong for you. Sizes 24 to 40. $7.95 to $18.50. Sarong Jr. for the teenage and Junior figures. Girdle, $5.95. Panty Girdle, $6.95. Small, medium and large.*

Sarong® SARONG, INC. 200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N.Y. • IN CANADA: SARONG GIRDLES BY DOMINION CORSET CO., LTD.
TM: REGISTRATION WORD SARONG NO. 193886 • GIRDLE PATENT NO. 2445322 *PATENT APPLIED FOR understand. If Horton did that, it would be because he was convinced it was necessary and right for him—to get it out of his system, or something like that. And anything that's right for Horton is right for me. For me, and with me."

This, cried Netta within herself, is too much; really too much! She felt as she had felt as a child when, at Christmas, an uncle had given her a toy hatchet and she tried to chop down a hundred-year-old oak tree with it, whacking away for minutes without removing so much as a bit of bark. It's absurd, she thought. Who do they think they are, Tristram and Iseult?

The thought that they might indeed be a pair of lovers as dedicated as Tristram and Iseult made her furious. We cannot bear the admirable. Great lovers are all right in the movies, but not in the house.

With actual resentment, now, piled on top of the wish to amuse herself that had motivated her earlier, Netta looked around for a dynamite locker into which to fire a rocket. And when Horton came home from the city with a new hunting rifle she discovered a chance to make trouble.

"Oh, Hort," groaned Frances, "not another gun! You must have fifty of them now."

"This one is chambered for a new cartridge," said Horton. "It has the flattest trajectory ever."

"Prettying it up with scientific words doesn't change the fact that you're going to shoot deer with it."

"That remains to be seen," said Horton. "I'm going to try, yes, but the statistics don't guarantee I'll get the deer. According to the figures a good hunter, going out every day of the season, is lucky if he gets one buck a year."

Netta, standing by, realized that this was a genuine disagreement, that the Dickeys felt strongly about deer hunting. "Let the man hunt," she said to Frances. "What are you trying to do, keep him on your apron strings?"

"She's not trying to keep me on her apron strings," said Horton, turning before his wife could reply. "It's just that Frances is unrealistic about deer. She's emotional about them."

"I most certainly am," cried Frances. "How anybody but the grossest, cruelest person can bring down one of those lovely creatures I'll never understand. 'Bring down!' That's what they say in the ammunition ads, because the word 'kill' would make people think about what hunting really is, blood and butchery!"

"They do have those great sad eyes," agreed Netta, looking at Horton with great, sad eyes of her own.

"They have ticks too," said Horton. "What's more important, they have deficiency diseases just like human beings. Where there are too many deer, and they can't get a kind of tree bark they need in their diet, they die. A quick death from a high-speed rifle bullet is better than that. That's why the legislature declares an open season on them."

"Just the same ——"

"FRAN, we've been over this before," said Horton. "No decent soul likes to think of animals suffering. But we have to be guided by the facts, even when the facts are hard to believe, and the fact is that gunning actually steps up the birth rate of a good many game animals and birds. So I hunt in season when the law says I can." Smiling, he reached out for his wife's hand. And there the quarrel ended, before it had really begun.

But with her third week with the Dickeys at an end, Netta knew what it was she wanted to do next. She wanted to take Horton Di away from Frances and marry him herse

Now that it was clear to her, the pr struck her as so worth while, so manda that she could not understand why she ha thought of it sooner. Heavens! Here was a who would have been attractive as a lifeg at Eden Roc with nothing on his back but burn. And he was so wealthy that any wo he married, any woman with a decent li for wire-pulling, could travel far—very The First Lady? Well, perhaps not Horton was still a bit young for the p dency. But the United States appointed men as its ambassadors, and the embassy dence in Paris was a pleasant place. To sn Horton away from a wife known far and as the ugliest woman in town, besides beir easy as taking candy from a baby, would rescue, a public service, a charitable act. Why didn't I think of this the day I came to Gwyllan? Netta asked herself. But I did, sure I did; I must have been thinking abo all along in my sub scious. Of course I Somewhere deep in (for, like all of us, N believed she was d I've always wanted ton Dickey. And h am right on the spot grab him fast and n a dash for Paris him. Now, what's best move?

THE HOUR AND THE ARROW

By D. C. WILSON

This is the hour:
When moonlight drips from the acacia flower
White as the blossom drenched with the scent
Of night gardens. There, bent
Over the motionless mirror of the unmoving pool,
Stands the arrow-armed boy with the cool
Stone-blind eyes,
The white limbs of stone.
The water trembles, the wind sighs.

The hour, not the arrow, has flown,
Nor the unassuageable smart
Of the spent moment, and the unspent heart.

The move that surest to bring res she decided, somew unoriginally for on deep, would be to d onstrate that there females in the univ who were exciting that one of these, N Tholen by name, immediately availa On the following M day evening, theref when Frances drove in her small black t seater to a local mee of the political pa that raised Hort blood pressure, N put on a house-coat fr the rue de Rivoli t was designed especi for demonstrations the garment had bee phonograph record would have repea endlessly. "Oh-forg me-I-am-trying-so-hard-to-be-chaste-bu am-such-an-innocent-little-thing-I-do know-how." It was every bit as concealing a film of cellophane. So accoutered, she with Horton in the room with the ailant wallpaper and the green-glazed fireplace. switched off the lamps, saying that her e were tired, and kindled the fire, saying that was chilly. And now and again, after the was burning brightly, she took care to w languidly in front of it.

"You have a lovely body, Netta," remark Horton.

His tone was disheartening. But at least, s Netta to herself, he knows now that I hav body. This is progress.

They sat side by side on a down-filled cou and she spoke to him of the two brutal h bands who had so atrociously misunderstoo and mishandled her. They had been a pair torturers straight out of a dungeon in Babylon, she made it clear. Merely thinki about them made it necessary for her to se forgetfulness. For the forgetfulness she turn to Horton's whisky, which he got from a sm unadvertised distillery in Scotland. It w extraordinarily good whisky. Horton enjoy it too. Between the two of them they manag to empty the greater part of an imperial qu without difficulty. By this time Netta w weeping in the most appealing fashion ima inable, and Horton had an arm around her one arm. It felt as sure and strong and safe her, the arm, as a market closing with eve

CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

New war-proved healing agent*

heals chapped skin up to 3 times faster!

Only in Revlon

AQUAMARINE LOTION

...the luxury hand and body lotion!

A new concept in hand and body care! Never before a luxury lotion containing this war-proved magic* that heals up to three times faster!

Only healthy skin can look lovely. Have your hands been hurt by detergents? Now see them heal with never-before speed. Use this beautifying lotion all over...feel your elbows grow young and smooth, see "pump bumps" melt away.

Remember, only Revlon Aquamarine Lotion contains this active agent that heals, as it softens. Why not get this healing luxury lotion today?

* Glyoxyl Diureide (pronounced gly-ox-ill-dy-your-ee-ide) is a colorless, odorless ingredient whose effectiveness was proved during the war. It stimulates cell growth, forms healthy new skin unbelievably fast. The name is in medical journals — and now, on every bottle of Aquamarine Lotion.

1.00 plus tax

©1955 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP.

PERFECT COCONUT CREAM PIES IN HALF THE TIME!

1. New and nifty! Lots of shredded coconut right in this new Jell-O Coconut Cream Pudding and Pie Filling!
2. Takes only about 5 minutes from package to pie shell!
3. One package makes a superb pie—or enough pudding for four delighted people. Buy some Jell-O Pudding and Pie Filling today.

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon
Coconut Cream

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 104

tock up ten points. Let's see, said Netta to erself, after Paris I'll tear down this hideous ouse. Then ——

Aloud she said apologetically, "This is the rst time I've gone drippy about my troubles, Hort. I don't think I could do it with anybody ut you."

"Frances is a better listener than I am," said Hort.

"Well—time for beddy-bye," said Netta, etting to her feet. A knee buckled under her, s if she had stepped into a hole in an argu- ent, and she grasped quickly at the padded rm of the couch. "Wups," she said. "It's time, ll right. I'll never manage to get up those tairs."

"I'll help you."

"Are you strong enough to carry me?"

"Oh, I carry women all the time," said Horton, "but I'll just help you, I think."

In her room with its old-fashioned brass ed Netta said, "Don't turn on the light, arling. I sleep in a light dusting of bath owder and nothing else."

"The hall light is on," he reminded her.

"Is it? So. I don't eally mind, with ou," said Netta. aking off the house- oat, she tossed it in he general direction f Paris. "There, I'm n bed," she said. Sit with me, Hort. his is my bad time, hen I feel lonely nd scared."

Horton was sitting eside her bed when, lownstairs, the mas- ive door opened and rances called, Yoo-hoo."

"I'm up in Net- a's room," bellowed Horton, in a voice oud enough to wake he servants on the hird floor.

Frances stood at he foot of the stair- ase, beside the ewel post on which bronze Mercury on iptoe thrust aloft an bsurd electric bulb —an artistic triumph f 1905. "I think I'll o out to the pantry or a glass of milk," he said.

Confidence of such magnitude would have een hard enough for Netta to put up with in he reigning fashion model of the year. In the gliest woman in town, she found it simply in- ufferable. Flinging herself erect in bed, she ursed with vehemence and considerable vul- garity.

"Go down and have some milk," she or- lered Horton savagely. "It's yum-yum, oh, so ood, just like your Frances. Go on, damn ou. And I'm leaving in the morning. Early."

Gently, without reproof, Horton chuckled. "Ah, Netta, Netta," he said, and patted her ead and left her. He had been warned on his ourth birthday that people might one day try o marry him for his money.

He went directly to the huge bedroom he hared with Frances, pretty sure he knew what e would find going on there. Milk, indeed! ure enough, the handsome plastic-covered raveling cases he had given to his wife on her wn birthday, in gratitude for the miraculous act that she had been born of mortal parents, ay open on the white linen counterpane. rances, tidy even in the extremity of emotion, as neatly packing sweaters and skirts into hem.

Horton groaned. "Not again!" he said.

"I'm g-going," replied Frances, crying so ard that she stuttered.

"To the Aleutian Islands, at this time of ear? I see you're taking nothing but woolens."

"L-laugh," sobbed Frances. "I don't -blame you. It was l-laughable for me ever to hink I could be a good enough wife for you."

"How true," responded Horton.

"It is true. And I know it's true." Drying her nose inelegantly on the back of her hand, with a sniff, Frances thrust her favorite alligator shoes into their flannel cases. "Having Netta here b-brings it home to me. Think what a marvelous life you can have with her."

"I'm thinking," said Horton with a repressed, gentlemanly shudder. "We could rent a table by the year at the Stork Club."

"You're only t-trying to spare my f-feelings."

With the regularity and determination of a shuttle, Frances was marching back and forth between her chest of drawers and the loaded bed. Timing his move, Horton stepped into her path, so that she ran into him. He caught hold of her shoulders.

"Let me go," she said.

"Never in this world, Mrs. Dickey," said Horton.

She pressed her forehead against his sizable chest. "But you must," she said soberly, "for your own sake. If not for Netta, then for some other woman you like better than you like Netta—some woman with looks and intelligence, and wit and style, and all the other things I don't have. I don't have any of those things."

"Nope," he agreed, "you don't."

"I'm just a s-shamble-footed cow, like the c-cows in your herd."

"Smaller," said Horton. "A Jersey, maybe."

"I'm stupid."

"Often," he agreed, with a solemn nod. "Right now, for instance."

Frances gradually quieted in his arms. She gazed up at him. "But you can't, you simply can't love me," she said.

"I do, though. Odd, isn't it?"

"How? Why?"

"Did you ever hear of minus signs?"

"Tell me."

"I will, so we won't have to keep on doing this every time we meet some babe you think I ought to think is delectable.

"I love you because you aren't beautiful. I love you because you think it's the ice cubes that make the refrigerator cold. I love you because you aren't witty. I love you because you aren't one of the five best-dressed women. I love you because you're nothing at all but a kind, sweet, generous, forgiving, unenvious, joyful, balanced gal with a heart the size of a watermelon. I love you because from the first moment you told me about the birds and bees in Mrs. Willamander's conservatory—you did tell me about the bees, you know; you said they were fuzzy little dopes and they never stung you, and I knew it was true—you were the only one for me.

"I fell in love with you again last Monday when I heard you talking to that dog that wandered in off the highway. I fell in love with you again last Wednesday when you locked your keys inside the station wagon and crawled in through the back panel hoping I wouldn't see you.

"It goes on and on, you see. Love replenishes love."

Frances sighed. "It's all true?" she asked in a small voice.

"And Netta's leaving in the morning," Horton replied. "Poor Netta—there's so much she'll never know."

"Oh, dear. Now," said Frances in sudden realization, "I have to put all this stuff back before we can go to bed."

"It's a big house. We have other beds," said Horton. "Let's try one." END

Crusade for Freedom balloons ready for flight near the Iron Curtain border. Weighted with varying amounts of dry ice—which releases the leaflets by evaporating over predetermined areas—balloons float across Communist barriers to drop their Truth leaflets over Czechoslovakia and Hungary. You can help launch freedom balloons—and support Radio Free Europe—by mailing your contribution to c/o your local postmaster.

CRUSADE FOR FREEDOM

TWO OVENS

in a 36-inch gas range!

It's a big Universal value at a budget price!

Bake at one temperature while you roast at another! That's the beauty of these two generous, separately-controlled Universal ovens. And you get this big-range convenience—a full 30 inches of oven space—plus a full-size smokeproof broiler and four big lifetime guaranteed top burners—all in just 36 inches of the most smartly-styled gas range that ever glorified a kitchen!

It has automatic controls, easy-to-clean removable burner bowls, and—yes, it has everything. Yet the price is only about the same as you'd pay for most ordinary single oven ranges.

See this beautiful new 1955 gas range value at your Universal dealer's right away. It's available for city or bottled gas—and built to give you a lifetime of wonderful Universal service.

Universal

GAS RANGES

Cribben & Sexton Co., Chicago 12, Ill.

Gas gives the easiest, cleanest, coolest cooking of all—for less. You bake best, roast best, broil best, cook best with gas on a Universal Gas Range.

Mrs. Nathan Twining, one of Washington's most attractive hostesses, pours after-dinner coffee, using demitasses from her large collection, which is housed in a big glass-topped coffee table in her living room.

Dinner party for 8—chicken is always a favorite

The chicken breasts and peas are baked in cream till meltingly tender. Wild rice is buttered, tossed with sliced sautéed mushrooms in a casserole. Special note: hot spiced peaches are an unusual accompaniment for the chicken. Dessert: fresh sliced-pear-and-apple compote.

Mrs. Nathan Twining tells her philosophy of entertaining to Nancy Crawford Wood

"When I Entertain"

For a small party
"sit-down" and buffet service can alternate

Soup as a first course, and it's curried crab mongole. The rare sliced fillet of beef is served with Frenched string beans which have been buttered and topped with slivered, toasted almonds. Baking-powder biscuits go with this, and a fluffy eggnog pie makes a lighter-than-air dessert.

Buffet for officers visiting from overseas

A delicious shrimp-and-oyster creole is the hearty dish, with golden rice and cheese popovers as accompaniments. A tray of crisp raw vegetables instead of a salad course makes service much easier. Dessert: orange sherbet with melon balls and frozen strawberries.

Buffet with a Hawaiian touch

Here's a melody of flavors: the Hawaiian swordfish casserole is lightly curried; the tomatoes herbed with orégano, and baked; the Melba toast brushed with garlic butter. Then a crisp green salad, and a "heavenly" dessert, chocolate sundae pudding.

STUART

"I LOVE to see people sitting happily around my dinner table," says Mrs. Nathan Twining, wife of our Air Force Chief of Staff. The secret of Maude Twining's charm as a hostess lies in her liking for people, her enthusiasm and friendliness. "Sometimes I think I'd like to be more 'sophisticated,'" she says, with a twinkle in her eye, "but my husband always says, 'How can you be sophisticated when you laugh so much!'" The Twinings, who live in an attractive old ivy-covered brick house on the post at Fort Myer, Virginia, give a large dinner party on an average of twice a month—"Perhaps entertaining visiting officers and their wives, or returning an invitation to an embassy party. This could mean as many as twenty or thirty people. In between, once a week or so, we have a small dinner for six or eight friends.

"My husband never seems to mind balancing a plate on his lap at other people's houses, but he doesn't like to at home, so I always arrange for people to sit down at a table, one way or another, no matter how many there are. Our dining table seats twelve, so for larger groups I rely on what I call my 'auxiliary table,' a drop leaf, seating eight, which stands against one wall of the dining room with its leaves down most of the time, acting as a convenient sideboard. When we have more than twelve (and any number up to twenty) both tables CONTINUED ON PAGE 110 are set up with linens and silver in the dining room, side by side.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 109

"Recently, for a party of twenty-four, I moved the dining table out and set up six card tables, with small cloths my mother gave me, in my favorite colors—pink, blue and green." In the center of each, Mrs. Twining placed a single low silver candlestick with a white candle, then twined strands of bright green baby ivy around the bases of the sticks and candles (securing it with cellulose tape). "I love ivy," she says, "and am always running out to pull some off the side of the house for flower arrangements."

Mrs. Twining relies on buffet service for large parties, except for an occasional "official" dinner party. "I think the order in which things are arranged on a buffet is terribly important," she says. "First should come the dinner plates, then the hot platters or casseroles, on warmers of some kind to keep hot. The salad should come after the hot food so that people can have it with the hot dishes, or later, if they wish. The napkins, knives and forks should come last, so that there is as little as possible to carry along the way.

"I don't usually use any sort of flower decoration on the buffet itself. There isn't much room, and the steaming dishes of food are attractive enough in themselves, I hope! Besides, we recently hung over the buffet a lovely gold-and-blue Korean painting given us by Syngman Rhee, and it's really all the decoration you could want. But I do pay special attention to party arrangements for the center of the dining table. My favorite of all is economical because it requires very few flowers. The foundation is a large piece of branch coral—pure white thick spikes of coral which stand up from the base like the spiky petals of an enormous Shasta daisy. I place it in a shallow bowl with enough water to cover the base, and stick six or eight red roses down in among the branches (which act, incidentally, as a perfect flower frog). The effect is like an enormous nosegay of white coral and red roses.

"Mirrors come in handy for flower arrangers. I have an old oblong mirror with a silver rim on which I place a low spread arrangement of a few purple and white and lemon leaves. The mirror reflects and makes it seem twice as important really is. At other times I use no flowers with the mirror as a base, take a small pie pink coral and some shells from H (where I was born), group them together trail two long necklaces of tiny pink and shells in among them. Some green leaves the garden here and there are pretty with

"Also in the economical vein, I love flowers, and have kept the same bunch silver pennies, dried wheat and Haw wood roses for years; use them in a ce piece with fresh pears or apples whene am in a hurry, or there are none of m vorite flowers in season.

"Washington is a town where everyon ways has a lot to say," says Mrs. Twining fact, you might call it a sort of 'hostess's adise.' There's no problem with stilted co sation, because you're sure that people come to dinner will have things in com and be interested in one another."

At her parties, Mrs. Twining keeps se as simple as possible, always. "I try to o ize things far ahead of time the day o party. When guests arrive, the dining tab tables are all set up with cloths, goblets silver. As in many old houses, our living r and dining room are separated by an e mous open doorway, with no doors betw so we use a pretty, gold-leaf Oriental fo screen in front of the entrance to the d room; if there are any last-minute touch flowers and table settings, they can be r unobtrusively.

"At a recent large buffet party for six we served shrimp-and-oyster creole as main dish—with golden rice, and a platt raw crisp vegetables instead of a salad. T was no first course, and guests filled their plates and sat down at the table. Des which was orange sherbet with frozen st berries and melon balls, was passed by houseman, already served on the plates, w is much speedier than having guests help th selves. At smaller parties, soup as a first co is more manageable; at a recent party some friends visiting from Alaska, cu crab mongole was a great favorite. Wher eight guests came into the dining room, soup was waiting for them (it has to be se boiling hot to allow for delays); then p were cleared away and guests went to buffet for fillet of beef, buttered biscuits string beans, waiting on warmers. You c easily convert this meal to a complete bu omit the soup, and have guests help th selves to the dessert—a delicious eggnog p as well as the main course from the buffet."

MRS. Twining likes to serve two choice good hors d'oeuvres as a prelude to her ties. Some favorites: halves or quarter chicken livers, sautéed in butter, sprinkled garlic salt, and speared with toothpicks, se hot; halves of shredded-wheat wafers, an anchovy fillet on each, and a small slice of Swiss cheese on top, broiled till bub "I love to get the tiny cherry tomatoes w they are in season," says Mrs. Twining, them in half, and put a dab of chicken s on top, or a bit of cream cheese which been softened with a little milk, and mi with bacon crumbles. I usually serve these two beautiful old blue spade-shaped pl given us by Lady Astor—the red toma look lovely against the blue. We also s guacamole—mashed avocado, seasoned taste with Tabasco, lemon juice and fi minced onion, with crisp potato chips scoop it up. At a party the other day, served an appetizer that was almost too s cessful—just a package of processed Ameri cheese, melted with a dab of butter i chafing dish, with three tablespoons chopped Mexican hot-pickle relish mixed and lots of shredded-wheat wafers for sco I say it was too successful because all the stood in a circle around the chafing dish you couldn't pry them away."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 112

Mom will love Presto®

and you!

Presto
Fiftieth Anniversary
Bonus Values

Greatest pressure cooking advance in 15 years!

New Presto Cooker

Give Mother the miracle of pressure cooking made easy as boiling water! Give her a New Presto Cooker!

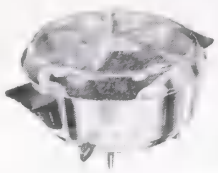
She will save up to 8 hours cooking time weekly because everything cooks 3 to 4 times faster. Pork chops in 12 minutes . . . potatoes, 10 minutes.

She'll save precious vitamins, minerals . . . retain natural food flavors. And she'll enjoy faster, tastier, healthier meals, the easy Presto way!

More Presto Cookers are sold than all other makes combined! Be sure it's a Presto. Look for the 3 exclusive new Presto features!

NEW AUTOMATIC AIR VENT

Automatically releases air . . . automatically retains pressure. No watching. No listening.



NEW PRESSURE-TRU INDICATOR

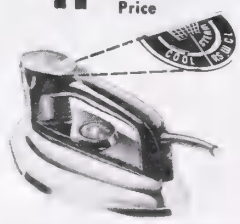
Automatically releases excess steam. Automatically shows pressure accurately. Tells when to turn down heat and when to open cooker.

NEW COOKING GUIDE

Gives correct timing for many popular dishes right on the handle.

Presto Cookers from $11.95 Fair Trade Price

PRESTO FRY-PAN CASSEROLE
Plug in anywhere, cook and serve on the spot. Automatic Controlled Heat. Twin handles. Silversmith finish $21.95
Heat-Resistant Glass Cover, $2.00
Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00



PRESTO SKILLET
It's an automatic electric frypan, saucepan, casserole and chafing dish—all in one! Cook, serve on the spot. Silversmith finish $24.95
Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00
FREE! 50th Anniversary Bonus
$2.00 Value! Heat Resistant Glass Cover
(limited time only)

PRESTO COOKER/FRYER
New 2-in-1 automatic electric appliance! Cooks, deep fries, roasts, steams, braises, bakes. Silversmith finish $28.95
Complete with cover and fry-basket.

PRESTO COFFEE MAKER
It's fully automatic! Perks coffee to your favorite flavor-strength twice as fast! Silversmith finish $29.95

VAPOR STEAM AND DRY IRON
Scorch Preventer indicates when heat and steam are perfect for the fabric. And only Presto has it!. . . . $17.95

*Trade Prices, Fed. Tax incl.

50th Anniversary BONUS OFFER!
WITH EVERY PRESTO PRODUCT
NEW PRESTO ELECTRIC TRIVET

Large, de luxe size. A table-top beauty for serving . . . warming food. Black antique finish. Complete with cord. $4.95 Value. Only $2.50. Save $2.45. Ask your dealer.
(This offer good in continental United States only.)

Copyright N. P. I. I. 1955

National Presto Products

Over 21 Million Satisfied Presto Users

National Presto Industries, Inc.,
Eau Claire, Wisconsin

Icebox cake on only one hour's notice?

Yes! And so special with fruit cocktail with character ☆

☆ the sparkling clear colors, trim, tidy cuts and perfect flavor blend you always get in DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail

Always expect a real welcome for DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail! You can count on it for color that never fails to sparkle—good looks and tempting flavor that never disappoint you.

That's what makes DEL MONTE America's favorite brand of fruit cocktail. And you'll never find a brighter way to save time and work in salads, first courses, or desserts. See how easy this is:

QUICKIE ICEBOX CAKE

- 1 can (1 lb. 14 oz.) DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail
- About 24 small vanilla wafers
- 1 envelope unflavored gelatine
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 cup heavy cream
- 2 teaspoons sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla extract

Now you needn't plan hours ahead for icebox cake! Drain fruit cocktail thoroughly, setting aside 1 cup for garnish. Fit wafers upright around inside of an ungreased 8-inch layer-cake pan, 1½ inches deep. (If wafers stick up above rim, trim them back.) Soften gelatine in the cold water, dissolve over hot water. Whip cream; add sugar, vanilla. Carefully fold in well-drained fruit, softened gelatine. Spread quickly in cake pan; lay additional wafers on top to cover, pressing down slightly. Chill. (In freezing compartment, it will be ready in about 45 min. Or chill in coldest part of refrigerator at least 1 hr.) Unmold; garnish with fruit cocktail; cut in 6 to 8 wedges.

Del Monte® Fruit Cocktail

—the brand you know puts flavor first

the pantie girdle
your legs can't feel

Pantie fan or not, you'll be completely won over by this completely different new Gossard. It combines 3 (!) kinds of elastic to ensure absolute leg freedom plus fine figure control. Of nylon tissuenet with satin elastic panel and lacy elastic finish at the legs. White (Petite-S-M-L), $7.95. Black (S-M-L), $8.50

curved and lacy
so it never,
never binds your legs!

seated low so it holds
you in—beautifully!

paneled so it smooths your tummy—unbelievably!

at leading stores and shops
or write us,
we'll tell you where

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H.W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 110

Here are the recipes for four of Mrs. Twining's favorite party menus:

CURRIED CRAB MONGOLE

Combine in a saucepan 2 cans condensed tomato soup and 2 cans condensed pea soup. Gradually add 2½ cups light cream and 2½ cups chicken broth, stirring until smooth. Season with 2 tablespoons onion powder and 2 to 3 tablespoons curry powder mixed with ½ cup water. Open one 6½-ounce can crab meat. Remove bones and flake. Add to soup and heat until hot and well blended. Makes 2 quarts.

FILLET OF BEEF

In a saucepan melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add ¼ cup soy sauce, 1 clove garlic, crushed, 1 tablespoon powdered ginger, 1½ tablespoons lemon juice and 1 tablespoon sugar. Simmer 5 minutes to blend flavors.

Place 1 large whole fillet of beef, which your butcher has wrapped in fat, on a broiler pan as far from the heat as possible. Broil at the highest heat for 15 minutes, turning three times, and basting each time with the above sauce. Remove fat from fillet. Broil another 10–15 minutes, basting and turning three times. Slice and serve. This will be rare. Increase time for medium, and for well done. Serves 4 to 6, depending on the size of the fillet.

EGGNOG PIE

Prepare and bake a 9" pie shell. Beat slightly 4 egg yolks with ½ cup sugar and a pinch of salt. Scald 1 cup milk and add slowly to egg mixture. Cook in double boiler until custard consistency, stirring constantly. Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Add to hot custard, stirring until gelatin is dissolved. Flavor with 3 teaspoons rum extract. Chill until mixture begins to thicken. Beat 4 egg whites until stiff but not dry, gradually adding ⅓ cup sugar. Fold into cooled custard; fill baked pie shell and chill until set. To serve, cover with whipped cream and sprinkle with nutmeg.

CHICKEN BREASTS IN CREAM

Season 8 uncooked chicken breasts well with salt and pepper. Dip in beaten egg and roll in packaged dry bread crumbs. Sauté until golden brown in ¼ cup butter or margarine mixed with ½ cup salad oil. Place the breasts in a large baking dish. Add 2 packages frozen peas. Over them pour 2 cups heavy cream mixed with ¼ teaspoon salt and 2 cloves garlic, crushed. Dust with ½ teaspoon paprika. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 45 minutes to 1 hour, basting occasionally, until chicken is tender.

SHRIMP-AND-OYSTER CREOLE

Cook, shell and devein 2 pounds fresh shrimp. In a large skillet heat 4 dozen shucked oysters in 1 tablespoon butter or margarine for about 5 minutes, or until the edges curl. Drain and set aside both the oysters and liquor until later.

In the same skillet sauté until tender in ½ cup butter or margarine 1 cup chopped celery, 2 cups chopped onion, 1½ cups diced green pepper and 1 pound mushrooms, sliced. Add two 1-lb.-12-oz. cans tomatoes, 1 bay leaf, crumbled, 1 teaspoon tarragon, 4 teaspoons salt, 3 cloves garlic, crushed, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon sugar, a pinch of cayenne pepper, 3 dashes Tabasco and 1 cup oyster liquor. Simmer 20 minutes. Then add cooked shrimp and oysters. Heat quickly and serve immediately. Makes 4 quarts or 12 servings.

GOLDEN RICE

Brown lightly 1½ cups chopped onion in large skillet, using 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. When onions are brown, add ⅓ cup more butter or margarine and 4 cups packaged precooked rice and sauté till rice is golden. Add 4½ cups canned chicken stock in which 3 chicken-bouillon cubes have been dissolved. Stir in 2 small cloves garlic, crushed. Bring quickly to a boil over high heat, uncovered, fluffing rice gently once or twice with a fork. Do not stir. Cover and remove pan from heat. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes 12 servings.

CHEESE POPOVERS

Combine 1½ cups flour with ½ teaspoon paprika and 1½ teaspoons salt. Gradually add 1⅓ cups milk and beat until smooth with rotary beater. Beat 3 eggs well and add to milk-and-flour mixture. Add 3 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese. Beat for 1 minutes. Batter should be free of lumps. Preheat greased muffin pans or heavy custard cups in a hot oven, 450° F. Fill hot cups about one third to one half full of batter. Bake at 450° F. for 10 minutes and then reduce heat to 350° F. and bake for an additional 20 minutes. Popovers should be golden brown and irregular in shape. Makes 10–12 popovers.

WHAT CHILD IS HERE?

By POLLY TOLAND

This is the springtime of my year, later springtime summer's near;
my April's grown so very fast
I'd hardly know her if she passed,
walking in my field.

But summer's coming, nearly here,
the rich bright season of the
year,
big with flowers, pregnant too with their twin, my love for you who walks in April's field.

HAWAIIAN FISH CASSEROLE

Steam 3 pounds fresh swordfish until thoroughly cooked and then flake it. Prepare a thick cream sauce with ½ cup butter or margarine, ½ cup flour and 3 cups milk. To the hot sauce add ½ cup chopped onion, ½ cup chopped parsley, 2 teaspoons curry powder, 3 dashes Tabasco sauce, 2 teaspoons salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Stir in 2 eggs slightly beaten; place the flaked swordfish and the sauce in layers in a shallow greased baking dish (about 14"x9"x1½"), ending with sauce. Cover with 1 cup soft bread crumbs which have been moistened with 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine. Bake for about 20 minutes in a moderate oven, 350° F. Watch closely after 20 minutes so that sauce does not curdle. Makes 8–10 servings.

TOMATOES ORÉGANO

Cut 6 large ripe tomatoes in half. Place each half cut side up in a baking dish. Sprinkle liberally with orégano, garlic salt and pepper. In a small bowl moisten 1 cup soft bread crumbs with 1 tablespoon salad oil. Top each tomato with some crumbs and 1 teaspoon grated Parmesan cheese. Bake 25 to 30 minutes in a moderate, 350° F., oven. Serves 12.

CHOCOLATE OR SUNDAE PUDDING

Sift together into mixing bowl 1 cup flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons cocoa, ⅔ cup sugar. Blend well with the dry ingredients ½ cup milk, ½ cup chopped nuts, 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine, 1 teaspoon vanilla. Pour into greased 1-quart casserole.

Mix together ½ cup brown sugar, ¼ cup white sugar, 3 tablespoons cocoa, 1 teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon salt. Spread the mixture evenly over batter. Pour 1 cup boiling water over all. Do not stir. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., for 1 hour. Cover the casserole during the last half hour. Serve hot or cold with whipped cream. One casserole serves 4–6.

END

ECREATION CENTER FOR A CALIFORNIA TOWN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26

per, so much hardware or asphalt tile.' ey couldn't give us exactly what we needed, ook what they had and traded it with body else. Very little material had to be ht."

peaking of that"—member George Mon- grins—"Joe Eades was the best high- er of materials we had."

sky Joe Eades declines the honor vehe- ly. "Everybody worked hard. Remember nan—his name was Moore and he didn't live in the Franklin Park area—who ed five miles every Sunday to help out? heard the project was for kids. He liked "

'll never forget the day a stranger came nd asked, 'Need a wood butcher?'" Ruth "Turned out he was an expert carpenter. there was the man who brought his whole around to finish the roof in one day."

Ve had so much fun at those Friday meet- I don't see how the work got planned," Caven reminisces. "But it did. Nobody ned jobs or made excuses. And on Sun- the work got done."

here was a lot of grumbling about 'rock l,'" says Charlie Haun. "Hauling rocks he fireplace was no cinch for people who n't used to physical labor. Forty-pound s in the morning were hundred-and-forty d rocks by night."

Ve got pretty toughened up after a while," J. D. Howard. "When we knocked off rest period occasionally we relaxed by ing baseball."

Yes," adds Joe Eades rly. "I remember the I got a three-base hit— a Charley horse be- n first and second !"

February, 1953, the a Rosa Press-Democrat ed FPA president Dan- "The clubhouse is more than fifty per cent pleted." The same issue carried the FPA's al for funds to complete the job. So far, ding donated materials and labor, the ding had cost $600 in actual cash.

month later the association announced it would present the clubhouse to the city June first ceremony. "No strings at- ed. The clubhouse is for the use of all the ple of Santa Rosa."

few construction chores remained. Major en equipment like the gleaming stove and gerator was provided by a gift of $375 the Santa Rosa 20-30 Club. But the en's tile took some thought. The tile had donated by a local firm, and it came in izes, shapes and colors—odd lots of ma- l. Ingeniously used in what is described as ything from "patchwork" to "a Joseph's- pattern," it makes the kitchen gay as an tration from a child's picture book. More ated "odd lots" of interior paint were com- d, mixed with a little lampblack and t sienna and "slapped on the walls with e and a prayer because nobody knew what r it would turn out to be." Everybody was ved at the final result, a pleasant soft -green.

n April Fools' Day the great field-stone lace was finished. This fireplace with its hearth, its "true Roman arch complete keystone," was a thing Fred Daniels had red long and mightily over. "Try it out!" w members urged. Paper and wood were ght, a fire lighted and everybody stood to watch. Immediately, choking billows moke filled the room. "You should have Fred's face!" FPA-ers recall. "Five ths' work and the fireplace wouldn't draw. as a bad moment until the two jokesters the roof removed the wet burlap sacks 'd stuffed down the chimney. The fireplace w fine after that."

May came Santa Rosa's Rose Festival. As r entry in the parade of floats, FPA-ers red the Franklin Park Special. (This crea- is also known as the Too-Too-Twain by dreds of children who have enjoyed rides wo gay red-and-yellow cars that roll along ind a convincing "locomotive"—a small sport car with a fanciful plywood casing. The train has been a popular feature at many a school, church and community fair, and the FPA gets half of the train's earnings.)

For the Rose Parade, association members stayed up all night covering the train with fresh rose petals. In the morning it chugged off, complete down to a burning torch tucked in its rose-covered smokestack. Somehow the torch slipped and set fire to the stack. "We managed to put the fire out," Fred Daniels says. "And I guess the blackened smokestack did lend authenticity because we won second prize." Loyal FPA-ers, however, are certain their entry would have taken first prize if that torch had stayed where it belonged.

The project's greatest day was June first—Dedication Day—when association members turned over to the city the clubhouse they had worked so hard to build. They were able to mark it "Paid in full" after a pancake-and-sausage breakfast (they cooked and served it themselves) netted $400 to pay the final bills. Then, to everybody's horror, a forgotten account for $100 turned up. To take care of that, FPA members built a storage shed for their creditor, who felt it to be more than fair exchange.

The city accepted the Franklin Park Recreation Center with gratitude and pledged a maintenance fund for its upkeep, also offered a plan for future expansion of the park.

The cost of this $20,000 center to the taxpayers who used their "will and skill" to build it? They aren't positive: "Money never seemed important, somehow." But they figure that an estimate of 10 per cent ($2000) "wouldn't miss by much" the actual cash they put into it. Profit to those same taxpayers? They sum it up:

"I wouldn't take anything for my experiences in FPA." . . . "The benefits of friendships made are so great you can't estimate them." . . . "It seemed to bring the whole town closer together. I'd meet people on the streets—strangers—and they'd ask 'How's your project coming, out at Franklin Park?'". . . "It builds confidence to see what people, ordinary people without 'influence,' can do."

Profit to the children for whom the center was designed? "Their clubhouse is the most-used building in town. We wish we had three more just like it." Last year 320 meetings were held there. Sometimes there are six requests for the same evening—wedding receptions, dances and parties as well as meetings. Only private groups pay for use of the building. There is never any charge to nonprofit youth organizations. Children are in and out of it all day, supervised by tiny, dark-eyed Louise Reifman, a trained arts-and-crafts instructor as well as supervisor. (She says, by the way, that she has never seen children take such care of a building—"They know it's theirs.")

Friday nights are reserved for the FPA. There's special thought and planning behind this too. Parents can't attend these Friday-night meetings without their children, children must bring their parents. "Too many people just don't know how to relax and have fun with their kids," Fred Daniels says. "We think that is a contributing factor to the whole juvenile-delinquency problem. We don't mean to have that trouble in Franklin Park." Together, families enjoy a potluck supper, play games, map out future plans for the center.

"This is a continuing thing with us." Fred Daniels points through the window. "You see that hill out there?" Not far beyond the clubhouse terrace rises a steep, grassy mound. "That's a natural site for an outdoor theater. Just scoop out this side of the hill, put in seats and you've got it. Too, the Scouts could use an outdoor cooking pit ——"

If the FPA thinks the Scouts could use an outdoor cooking pit—or a swimming pool, someday, when that promised plan to enlarge the park goes through—they'll probably get it. Santa Rosa's FPA-ers have a pretty firmly established habit of getting what they think their children need. END

Time wasted is existence; used, life. —YOUNG

Just 1½ ounces and it's an all elastic Flair

SHEER FLAIR WEIGHS LESS AND DOES MORE THAN ANY OTHER KIND OF BRA

Very different! Sheer nylon with Gossard's exclusive body-contour strap. Lightest finish ever with a single anchoring elastic band—not bound or binding. And Flair's all-elastic design lifts as nothing else can. A, B, C cups. White and just $3.95

other Flair bras from $3 at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H. W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • New York • San Francisco • Atlanta • Dallas • Toronto

Tonight, mon cher husband, you get a surprise!

Paris comes to your table...

French Style Onion Soup

by Crosse & Blackwell

THIS robust soup, say Europeans, tastes best at four in the morning after a wild night in Paris. But at six P.M. in the U.S.A., it's even better, the way Crosse & Blackwell makes it. C&B gives you rich beef stock, savory onions, delicate seasoning. You supply a little Parmesan Cheese and the hungry husband. Then you heat the soup, and serve it. Voila! Happiness! For name of nearest dealer, write: CROSSE & BLACKWELL CO., Baltimore, Md. Fine foods since 1706.

Try these C & B Soups, too:
Cream Vichyssoise, Cream of Onion, Consommé Madrilène, Creme Mushroom Bisque, Clear Green Turtle, Black Bean with Sherry, Cock-a-Leekie, Crab à la Maryland, Cream of Shrimp.

YONDER COMES MY BEAU

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 54

want to be friendly like." He came closer so nobody could hear but me, and the look on his face put me in mind of a little bitty boy. "Honey, I like you and you won't ever look my way at all. Maybe that's the reason I like you, but what's the matter, don't you like menfolks or are you just bashful?"

"I'm ugly!" I whispered. I don't remember ever saying that to anyone before and I felt right good about it. Cleve looked like I was crazy.

"Why, you're not ugly. What makes you say a thing like that, you—you—redhead!"

"It's awful to be a redhead. Little younguns follow you around, say,

'Redhead, gingerbread,
Five cents a cabbage head!'"

Well, in no time we were both laughing and joking and everything I said was coming out just right. Came time for the geography and for the first time I didn't know a one of the answers. A funny thing about that was, Mr. Hall didn't seem to mind. Once I looked up quick and caught him smiling down at Cleve and me, for all the world like he knew a good secret.

That evening I went home from school and threw down my books, and took to the hills to hunt the cow without anyone telling me to go. I raced through the woods like a deer, laughing and making speeches on top of high rocks, and cutting such a shine that I was ashamed of myself, but that nor nothing else could stop me. The old cow was waiting at the gap, and I let down the bars with a great clatter and hollered, "Heigh!" at her so loud that she must have thought I was plumb crazy.

I marched down behind her with my stick over my shoulder, singing to the top of my lungs. I never usually hollered out on a song like some folks did, but now I purely felt like it.

Aunt Mary Ann heard the racket and came out on her porch and I could tell by the way she stood there that she was wondering what on earth had come over me. I thought to myself, Right now Aunt Mary Ann is saying to Oly, "Why, that's Balis' youngun going 'long up there. Swear I reckon he's araising him up a right wild girl."

THAT night after we got supper over and the dishes washed I was trying to get my lessons but I couldn't to save my neck do a thing but write Cleve Hamilton's pretty name over every page I turned. Dad came in off the back porch with a great log for the fire. He threw it on the fire in just the right place and a thousand sparkles cracked out and sailed up the chimney.

"Shore is a fall time out tonight. Makes me wish I had a little patch of cane—might' near the best stirrin'-off weather I ever seed."

I got a quivering breath and my heart near failed me at the thoughts of a stir-off. I'd make Cleve go and we would stand in the dark and talk, like the other girls and their boys did. I never said a word, though. I felt like if I cleared my throat everybody would know what was in my mind, and they'd let off to shaming and making fun.

"I know who's raising cane this year." Mom looked up from the Bible she was reading, halfways smiling, teasing us.

"Who wouldn't know that!" Wilmer said. "It's Lee-up-on-the-Branch. I saw that cane patch when the cows broke out of the pasture one day last month. A right pretty patch of green cane."

Dad warned, "Maybe he's akeeping it a secret. Maybe he don't aim to have a stir-off for everybody."

"Well, the secret's out now. I already told a lot of boys about it, and we won't let him stir-off by himself!" Wilmer laughed.

Sure enough, one day not long after that, Dosh Brashear, Lee's woman, passed by on her way from the store and stopped to talk a while with mom like she always did. She said they had gathered in the cane, and tomorrow they would gin it. If all went according to p they'd stir-off just after dark tomorrow ning. "We had a right smart patch this s so you'ns can bring your bucket!"

Next day at school when Cleve came to seat, I let him know in a roundabout way I was going to a stir-off that night. He said was funny, he was going to the same one

"I reckon I'll see you there then," he s "If I do, will you talk with me?"

"I been brought up to be civil to everyb mister."

"Aw. You know what I mean. You better be there, that's all!"

As I recall those days, it was the cra feeling I had about Cleve. I liked him a didn't. I liked him whenever he sat in my at school and all the other girls saw us wished they had him. But I didn't like when he'd come and butt in on the game girls were playing at recess, or when catch me drawing paper dolls and laugh at I liked for the girls to see him put his around the back of my desk and hug m little before I could stop him. It tickled me them all to see it, but it really would make mad for him to do that, and when I'd get and tell him he better stop I meant it. I coul stand for him even to touch my hand.

It was a strange thing; in my heart I wan him to touch me, I would dream day and n about him holding my hand, about hov would be to comb his curly head with fingers. I would dream and tremble v pleasure, but as soon as he would get nea me, and take hold of hand, I would get mad begin to fight him, say m things, and tell him to me alone. Then he'd la and call me his little wild but after a while, three four weeks after he first gan to pay attention to I began to catch him lo ing at me when he thought I wasn't notic in a way that caused me to be afraid.

One learns to itch where one can scratch.
—ERNEST BRAHAM

The day of the stir-off was a Friday, school let out early for some reason. On way home Sallie suggested that some of us early and watch Lee-up-on-the-Branch gin cane. Mom said I could go, but we must watch and not get in the way of the wo Pauline and Jewel and Wilmer would co after dark.

I had on my prettiest blue dress, and my h tied back with a big blue ribbon because Cl was coming. But I clear forgot about Cleve soon as we younguns started racing each ot up the branch. For a while we tried to which one could outrun the others, then played banner. Sallie's baby brother Cot was the banner and he led us through thick of blackberry briers and all manner of plac and we had to follow him or we'd be out. walked the foot logs on their tip edges and jumped the branch in the widest parts. did everything that he did until just before got to Lee's he bannered all of us girls by ing skin the cat on a tree limb. We all h dresses on and couldn't do it.

"There's where at they're ginning! Do there in the big bottom hyonner!"

"Yeh, look at that old mule going rou and round, I'll beat you all down!"

We sailed down that mountainside like had wings. There was Lee watching the ca juice squeeze out into the pans, and emptyi the full ones into the big long stirring-off p over the pit. They were almost done ginnin Already there was a fire blazing in the pit, a two of Lee's boys were feeding the last bunch of cane stalks into the gin.

"Why howdy, chillern. Little early no Help yourselves to some good juicy ca stalks to suck on, then you can help dig t skimming hole. You've come in fine time f that."

Lee-up-on-the-Branch pointed to a pla not far from the pit, where he wanted to ha his skimming hole dug. We all stood arou sucking our cane stalks and taking tim

CONTINUED ON PAGE 117

Now you can make golden-crisp TV Snacks from plain, ordinary noodles

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

Cook narrow noodles in boiling salted water until partially tender (5 minutes). Drain, rinse in cold water, then drain very thoroughly on towels. Fry in small amounts in deep, hot Spry (390°) in any French frier or one of those wonderful Westinghouse Cook 'N Fryers. When the noodles are golden (8-10 min.), remove and drain on paper towels. Sprinkle with salt.

You already know there's nothing like pure, digestible Spry for making golden, delicious French fried potatoes. Well, Spry gives the same goodness to noodles. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees that with Spry you can turn noodles into tempting TV snacks, just like those in the photograph. You'll agree, or we'll return your money. For more easy recipes, drop a postcard to Spry, Lever Brothers Company, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

STEW 'N TOMATO BISCUITS

A delicious new way to serve stew

There are two delicious "twists" to this recipe.

First. the use of Hunt's Tomato Sauce in the biscuits. Wait till you taste their exciting new flavor and see their appetizing color!

Second. the hearty flavor of the stew itself. which you get simply by using Hunt's Tomato Sauce in place of some of the water.

In the same ways, you can gain flavor for dozens of your own recipes with Hunt's Tomato Sauce. It's the all-tomato cooking sauce that blends so deliciously with other ingredients. No starchy fillers, not diluted. Enjoy it in your casseroles, meat loaf and gravies!

2 lbs. stewing beef
1 teaspoon salt
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce
1 cup water
1 large onion, sliced
1 cup sliced celery
1 cup peas
4 medium carrots, cut into pieces
½ recipe biscuit dough (use Hunt's Tomato Sauce as liquid)

Brown meat in greased 2-quart baking dish in moderate oven (375° F.). Add salt, 1½ cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce. water and onion. Cover. bake 45 mins. Add other vegetables. Cover. bake 45 mins. longer or till vegetables are tender. Prepare biscuit dough substituting ½ can Hunt's Tomato Sauce for milk. Roll about ¼-inch thick. Cut into six 2-inch biscuits. Increase temperature to 425° F. Place biscuits on top of stew. Bake about 20 minutes longer till biscuits are done. Serves 6.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Hunt—for the best

WANT RECIPES? There's a delicious one on every can of Hunt's Tomato Sauce —at your market.
Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, California

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 114

digging with the pick and shovel. body was making big plans about who he push into the skimming hole before the was out.

sky darkened and the hoot owls began ler along the black ridges. If you looked from the fire, up through the woods to eep, deep gray sky and the cold pale and heard the owls and other night birds g their doleful songs, it seemed like a y scary, lonesome place to be. Then you d back quick at the bright blazing fire e sweet molasses bubbling soft green- bubbles in the big pan, and boys and aughing and chasing one another, and n lights along the high hill road bring- ore and more folks to the party. That beautiful sight, and the warm brightness olded in around you and kept you from rk.

was time to skim the molasses. Lee took immer, a great wooden spoon with a e four or five feet long, and passed it the top of the bubbling mass. He d off as much as he could of the green h skim which lay on the top, and the mptied it into the skimming hole. I be- o chew up one end of a cane stalk and d the chewed end into a nice brush, to be to dip into the pan. That is one of the astes on earth. You dip your cane stalk into the boiling pan, catch the yellow on the end of the stalk, wave it in the til it's cooled some, and suck it off. Again gain you dip it in, for once you start s no stopping. It's far better than the ed molasses; the taste of it puts you in offall winds and wood e and dancing in the and games played in cret dark.

saw me fixing my and laughed. "Here here's a little girl go- o eat her skimmings ! Put that stick away least another hour. to skim another time or two yet, 'fore immings get yellow. Green foam'll make ick sure."

e young folks heard that, and they d to work fixing a place to run a set. made everybody help.

ere, let's yank up these old stalks and us down a level place. Here, you little guns, get to trompling, you got nothing do. Stomp it until it's just like a floor."

ney hasn't no music come yet, Wint. run a set 'thout music. Not a solitary amongst us."

hucks, they'll be a fiddle or a banjer or thing turn up soon. Anyway, we can Cedar Swamp right now. Get you a gal lon't be bashful, and mind the skimmin' " been wishing in the back of my mind vening that Cleve wouldn't come. It d be no fun at all at a stir-off, I decided, ld to stand around and talk to an old boy vening and not get to run and wrestle the younguns as I was used to. Besides, we had been rolling and tumbling about, at my pretty blue dress was wrinkled he hem was torn with the briers. My rib- was gone and my long hair was blown t my face and I had to keep brushing it I was one of the children, and mighty of it—not old enough to court.

.

t when they commenced lining up for r Swamp I wanted to play. I stood with ther littler ones and wished someone d ask me to play, but no one did. Some- whispered, "Where's Cleve at?" and I ed to die. Now everybody would think d made it up with me to come, and then pointed me.

ove the singing voices and dancing feet rd the clear high sound. Faraway it was, so faint that it sometimes got lost, but was no mistaking what it was.

last they heard it too.

lush, boys. Swear if I don't hear that old a-whinin' down the holler som'ers!"

Whose bow is it? Chad McDaniel's?"

Law, nary a bit like Chad. Hush, there More like Cleve's."

"Cleve Hamilton. That's who it is. That youngun can really play. What's his tune? Listen. Hush."

Dad said, "I can hear plain as day. That chap is playing Goin' to See my Truelove."

He began to hum the song, and some joined in:

"The days are long and lonesome,
The nights are a-gettin' cold:
I'm goin' to see my truelove
'Fore I get too old.

"O get around, Jenny, get around,
O get around I say,
O get around, Jenny, get around,
Long summer day.

"I went up on the mountain,
Give my horn a blow,
I thought I heard that pretty girl
Say 'Yonder comes my beau!'

"Ast that gal to marry me,
Tell you what she said.
Picked her up a knotty pine stick
And like to broke my head.

"I went up on the mountain,
Give my horn a blow,
If I can't get the gal I want,
Let that ole gal go."

Well, when I heard Cleve's fiddle playing that tune, I began to brighten up. I must have looked better because Jim Hall came over and asked me to dance with him. It made me proud to be dancing when Cleve came into the firelight. I was glad I wasn't standing with the little children, looking on.

A man is only half a success until he has a good wife.
—JOHN A. BRODY

Then Cleve played for the sets, and it seemed like that fiddle music turned the devil loose amongst the boys. One of them would be standing beside of his girl, patting his foot and clapping and waiting his time to dance out, then the dancing couples would go by him, and next minute, splop! there he'd be up to his shins in the skimming hole, mad and sputtering. I guess they finally had shoved all the boys and one or two of the tomboy girls into that hole before Lee finally hollered out to us:

"Here, younguns. Run dip in your stalks. Prettiest yellow foam you ever did see. Dip in, dip in there, and eat all you can. Ollie, Abbie, hand me your buckets here. This foam'll settle to more'n half molasses, you'll see."

Aunt Mary Ann said, "Just fill my bucket halfways up, Lee. I know this ain't the last skimmin', I'll finish filling it whenever you skim her for the main last time. That's the best foam."

"Why yes, I guess you will! The last skimmin'll be most all of it pure molasses. Well, I don't reckon I mind giving a good neighbor a quart of molasses. There'll be some for sale in the wintertime and I'll get a good price out of you for it, lady!"

I was down at the foot of the big pan with Cotton and Kathleen and little Amanda, eating 'lasses foam to beat the band. Cleve came up behind me and pulled me by the ends of my long hair away from the others. He looked mad.

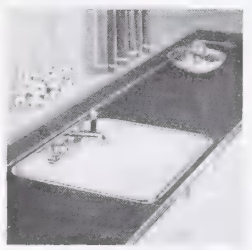
"Well, do you want to see me or not? Fine way to treat someone. Here you run off and I had to walk up this long dark holler all by myself ——"

"You scared of the dark?"

"No, I'm not scared of the dark, but just the same I don't know the road much well, kept hearing all kind of strange noises in the woods, seeing eyes looking at me ——"

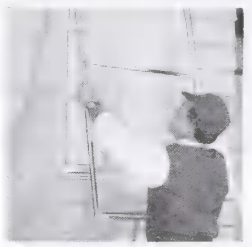
"Wonder the hants didn't get you. Wisht they had!"

"Spiteful! Then I get up here, and you are dancing with everybody else, and me having to play the fiddle all the time. Then you won't even offer to feed me off'n your cane stalk. You set down here eating like a little pig, and now you stand there laughing at me. I ought to whup you, that's what I ought to do."

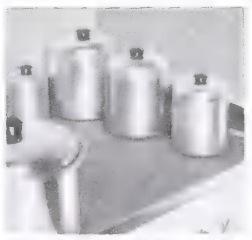


We both were laughing then and I began to like him again.

He whispered in my ear, "Come walk with me."



Fast as lightning! Brillo® Soap Pads make the scorchiest, crustiest pan shine like new!



Nothing shines Aluminum like BRILLO Soap Pads

Faucets, counter tops come glossy clean with Brillo Soap Pads. Sturdy metal-fiber pads polish away food stains and sticky spills.

Aluminum storm windows and door frames stay new-looking with Brillo! Paint specks, weather stains and streaks disappear—fast!

Aluminum canisters, cake covers, ice buckets — so smart, and so easy to keep bright and spotless with thrifty Brillo Soap Pads!

No soaking, no hard scrubbing! Brillo Soap Pads whisk off scorch and crust. No need for messy scouring powders, brushes, dishrags . . . Brillo polishes as it cleans. Every metal-fiber pad is plump with special-formula soap containing jeweler's polish. That's why nothing shines aluminum like Brillo Soap Pads! And Brillo is wonderful for cleaning sticky stove-tops, burners and ovens. Grand for casseroles!

Brillo Soap Pads (red box) Soap-filled pads
Brillo Cleanser (green box) Pads plus cake soap

THERE'S POLISHING SOAP IN EVERY BRILLO SOAP PAD

THRIFTIER! 5 and 12 pad boxes design becomes texture when this shadow-gray arabesque is delicately traced on the luminous ivory tone of FRANCISCAN fine CHINA.

Five piece place-setting (dinner, dessert, butter plate, cup and saucer) $21.75

Franciscan fine China and Franciscan Ware are made by Gladding, McBean & Co.
Los Angeles, Calif. Established 1875

"Whereabouts?"

"Over yonder, anywhere, where they can't spy us. Never did like to stand and talk to my girl in front of everybody."

"What's wrong with talking in front of people? They won't care."

"Aw. Come on. Most of the others are off walking and talking out there in the field. What're you afraid of, little baby?"

"I said I'd talk with you, but I didn't promise to walk."

"You're my girl, ain't you? If you're not now, I want you to be my girl. Then walk with me a little."

"Well, just to the edge of the dark there. Now what do you have to say that's so blessed important?"

"I don't know now. You look right pretty, with your hair blowing back wild like that on the night wind ——"

"I lost my hair ribbon, running with the others ——"

"And your pretty blue dress that I love so well, that fits you so neat ——"

"I tore it in the berry briers, playing banner with the children ——"

"You look like a little girl, and yet like a woman grown, and the sight of you takes out of mind all the things that I had to say to you ——"

"Here we are on the edge of the dark. Take me back ——"

"No, no, look on out there in the fields. It's not dark out there. It just seemed so when you were by the fire. The full moon is halfway the sky. How can it be dark?"

He had hold of my hand and we stood still. I trembled for a while but he said not a word. Then he said listen to the wind in the ridges, and the hoot owls calling out bad news, and he said look at the stars and how pretty the moon is, and after a while I stopped trembling. Back at the fire someone hollered out:

"All right, we going to play five-ten. I'll count first and everybody hide, but not more'n a hundred feet away!"

The voice began to chant:

"Five, ten, fifteen, twenty,
Twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five, forty ——"

"Come on, let's hide together. I know a place ——" We began to run.

"Forty-five, fifty, fifty-five, sixty,
Sixty-five, seventy, seventy-five, eighty ——"

"Cleve! Stop it, stop, we're way over a hundred feet ——"

"Right here. Old fodder stack, nobody'll look for us here!"

"Eighty-five, ninety, ninety-five, hundred.

"Bushel of wheat, bushel of rye,
All ain't hid, holler 'I.'

"Bushel wheat, bushel cotton,
All ain't hid, better be a-trottin'!

"Bushel wheat, bushel clover,
All ain't hid, can't hide over!"

We ran, stumbling and panting, to the fodder stack and fell down behind it. We were both laughing so hard we were afraid the counter would hear us, and I couldn't stop laughing at all, so that Cleve clapped his hand over my mouth to keep me quiet.

I had never before been so close to any boy. I sat leaning my back against him, very quiet, and it seemed like I had a hundred hearts all inside of me trying to get out. I didn't have the power to move, to do any more than breathe, but I wasn't resting easy. I kept trying to act to myself like it was Kathleen or Cotton or some of the others there behind me. If it was one of them I wouldn't be shaking and shivering this way. It would just be fun, hiding there in the dark. But I couldn't forget it was Cleve. The hand holding my mouth was the shape and the smell of Cleve's hand, the breath that moved the body behind was his breath.

Out there in the moonlighted field the counter roamed about in the shadowy places. He'd see someone and then they'd break in a race for the counting tree. Sometimes the words that rolled over the field would be "One-two-three for Pauline!" and again would be "In free! In free! One-two-thr me!" Their voices and laughing and the of their running came clear to us and s very near, but the counter never came o far as our fodder stack.

I heard the sounds of the game as t they were dream sounds. Everything I see and hear around me seemed so que was like the whole world was changing from me, everything was different, n was real. This morning I had dreamed ing near to Cleve; now here it was and I like it. It was the feeling inside of m came along with being alone with him

®PAT. APPLIED

- PERFECT DRAPERIES have sharp, uniform pleats
- PERFECT DRAPERIES must never, never sag!
- PERFECT DRAPERIES look crisply professional!

NOBODY BUT CONSO has NIP-TITE Pleater Hooks, those amazing draper hooks with the hinged locks that grip al pleats tightly to keep them crisp and pro fessionally uniform.

NOBODY BUT CONSO has Bestpleat, th firm, wear-like-iron pleater tape with th woven-in pockets that never "give" – draperies cannot sag.

DON'T WASTE WORK ON DRAPERIES THAT 'LET YOU DOWN'!
EASY! Stitch Bestpleat to top of fabric.
QUICK! Insert NIP-TITE Hooks.
INEXPENSIVE! Lock pleats and hang.
No need to tack or sew pleats with NIP-TITE!

You can be sure of perfect pleated drap-eries every time with Conso Bestpleat and Nip-Tite Hooks. At drapery departments everywhere.

SEND FOR The NEW, 11th edition of "1001 Decorating Ideas." 64 pages crammed full of the latest deco-rating tips, illustrations and simple, practical directions. A valuable book.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeepi

Send 25¢ in coin to Dept. LJ-4
CONSO® 27 West 23rd Street, New York

didn't like. I didn't know what to do with it. I had never had this kind of feeling before. There was almost something nice about it, but I was afraid and miserable and wanted to cry. I kept having to swallow for no reason and the sound of my swallowing was louder than the beating of my heart. I knew Cleve could hear and I was shamed to death. He'd think I was a fool and a baby.

His hand moved away from my mouth, over my face and forehead, and smoothed on my hair. He put his other arm around my waist. I sat there stiff as a board, wanting to holler out and yet wanting to let him hold me; wanting to run away and wanting to stay. I remember that most of my mind was to run, but some stubborn thing or other made me want to stay even against my liking. It was something inside of me that had to know what this strange feeling was, had to find out things everlastingly. So when he turned my face to him, I sat still and waited. He leaned over quick and kissed me on the mouth. I just looked at him right straight for a while, kind of foolish. I thought I was going to cry sure, I was so disappointed. Everybody'd talked about kissing and hugging; why there wasn't a thing in the world to it anyway.

"You like that there kiss, honey?" Cleve looked anxious.

"Well, I don't know hardly. You better kiss me again."

He did it different this time, slower and softer. He wouldn't stop. I jumped up and lit out across the fields before he could come to himself. I wiped my mouth hard with my hand. I couldn't wait to get to some water and wash my mouth out good. Cleve was running after me now, I could hear him brushing against the crackly cane stalks, stumbling over the dried clods, cussing mad. I was mad too. Why had folks led me to believe that love was so wonderful, that a kiss was such a pleasure? I was glad, too, as I ran. Let the boys chase me or not, I wouldn't care either way. I could be scornful of them all, now that I was free of their spell. I laughed out loud, and all at once I was almost up to the fire and the young'uns were motioning me to be careful or the counter would see me.

"Lay low, lay low!" they chanted out. I glanced behind me and saw that Cleve had stopped in the field and was rolling a cigarette like he never had a thought of running after me. I dropped to the earth and watched the counter looking about for me. It was Sallie, and at last she strayed away from the counting tree and I saw I could make it.

"Come in, come in!" I heard them call. I rose and made for the tree and beat Sallie to it and got in free. She looked around a while longer. Then she gave up finding the rest of the hiders. She cupped her hands and hollered:

"Bee, bee, bumble bee, all's out's in free!"

"Why, who else is out? Nobody but Cleve. Now where could he be?"

"Aw, he's not even playing," I said.

Some of the older folks had begun to stir around to go home; they gathered their buckets and their little children and lit their lanterns. Pretty soon their lights were fading this way and that way through the hills. The fire in the pit was low, almost ashes. Some of the boys were staying to put it out, and to wash up the stir-off vessels. Over to one side, the good-smelling molasses was cooling in a row of big shiny milk buckets.

The young folks were leaving now. They lingered about the fire long enough for their families to get a head start and then the sweethearts began to pair off down the holler and through the woods. I got with Kathleen and Cotton and Amanda and wouldn't let them game along too much, for I didn't want to see Cleve. I might have to let him take me home. We hurried along in the dark and we'd catch up with one light after another and pass the sweethearts by.

I got to wondering whereabouts Cleve was. My mouth still burnt me, and I knew that if I got in the light too much everybody could see where Cleve had kissed me. I was as sure as I ever was of anything that my mouth didn't look the same. Every time we passed one of the lanterns I'd turn my head to the dark. What would I do tomorrow when I had to face the light of day, what would I do and say? How on earth could I hide it?

That worried me more the farther down the branch we got and I walked quiet. The others were getting sleepy-eyed and they began to sniffle and fuss. What babies! Couldn't even stay awake on their own feet and it not midnight. At last I couldn't stand their trifling little ways any longer. I decided to walk faster and catch up with mom. Then I decided to walk slower and watch for Cleve to come along. Not that I wanted to walk with him, but I was peevish because he didn't seem to be trying to find me.

The fiddle sung out then, far back up the dark holler, not a dancy tune. A slowlike tune, a lonesome love tune. Sometimes it sailed clear up to the night sky and sometimes it sunk down and got lost in the branch waters. All at once I had a frightening thought that the music was a living thing, lost and crying, the fiddle bow making little slides and quavers and trembles all around the tune, like teardrops. Every note of it seemed to light in my breast; I was that song.

The sound came nearer and nearer, and my steps fell slower, keeping time, and as Cleve came up to my side, the words came and sang themselves inside of me:

Awake, awake, you drowsy sleeper,
How can you lay and slumber so
When your truelove is a-going to leave you Never to return any more?

How can you slumber on your pillow
When your truelove must stand and wait,
And must I go and wear the willow
In sorrow mourning for your sake?

Down in yon valley there grows a green arrow,
I wish that arrow was shot through my breast,
It would end my grief, it would end my sorrow,
And set my troubled mind at rest. END

she likes MODERN...she likes Traditional

They both like STEGOR* SILVERPLATE

the NEXT thing to Sterling

For the Modernist, Stegor's stunning, simple Pace II and Wheat II patterns offer great versatility of use. For example, place knife, fork and spoon fit both luncheon and dinner settings. Spoon bowls have full oval form for better serving, easier handling. For the Traditional minded, graceful, decorative New Elegance* and Invitation* will lend authentic beauty to any table. For lifetime service, Stegor by famous Gorham has exclusive VP-125 plating; substantially more pure silver than the accepted standard for the finest silverplated flatware—not just at a few of the points of greatest wear, but over the entire piece, including edges of bowls and tips of tines. Exclusive Stegor knife handles are rattle-proof; can't come apart or discolor at the seams. Open stock and in services for 4, 6, 8 and 12 from $24.95. Available on easy budget plans.

*TRADEMARKS

Pace II* and Wheat II* patterns also in fine quality Stegor Stainless.

Made and guaranteed by Stegor Division, The Gorham Co., Providence 7, R. I.

WESLEY BALZ

You have all seen plenty of houses in the same predicament.
Now you can see how one house got out of it.
And how in the process it acquired an attractive entrance patio on a two-year budget plan for a total of $324.

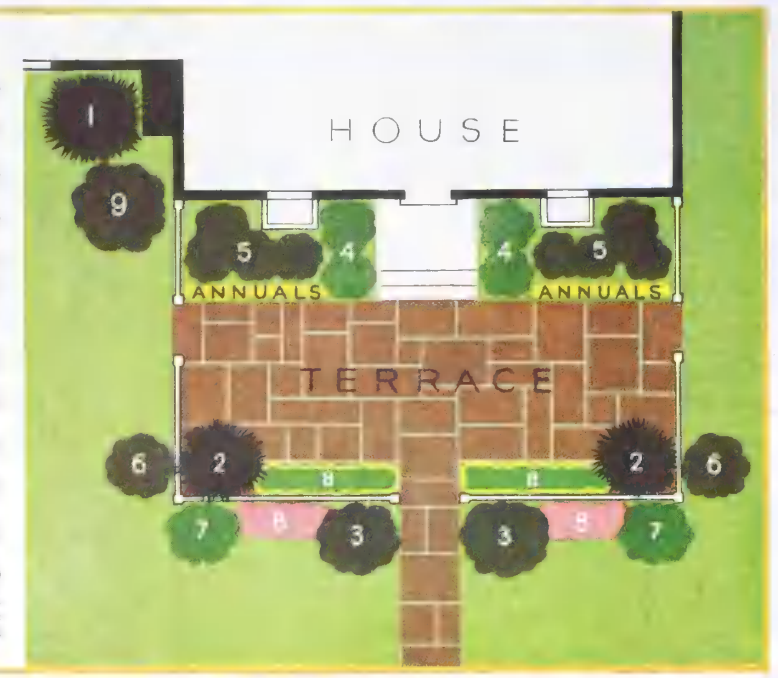
THE HOUSE THAT COULD HARDLY BREATHE

MERCADO



The evergreens that were replaced by the patio.

THE FIRST YEAR

1.	The arborvitae that stayed where it was	$ 00
2.	The 2 arborvitae that were moved (labor)	25
3.	2 female American hollies (Ilex opaca)	60
4.	4 little leaf Japanese hollies (I. microphylla). Flagstone and sand for terrace paving	20 65
		$170

THE SECOND YEAR

5.	8 box-leaf Japanese hollies (I. buxifolia)	$ 32
6.	2 upright Japanese hollies (I. crenata)	12
7.	2 Charles fragrant viburnum (V. carlesii)	12
8.	16 floribunda roses in large paper pots	26
9.	1 small male American holly (I. opaca)	12
	60′ of picket fencing 30″ high	60
		$154
	Total	$324

By RICHARD PRATT

IN no time at all this house would have been completely smothered behind a wall of overgrown evergreens.

"And the funny part is," the owners told us, "the plants looked so little when we put them in."

In the end, two rows of evergreens that were rapidly hiding the windows were dug up by the nurseryman when he delivered the first batch of new plants. The right plants this time, please note. While there, he moved forward the two tall arborvitae which stood at either end of the house.

With the two arborvitae in their new positions (2), a beautiful extravagant pair of female American hollies (3) were planted for the gateway, and a double pair of Japanese hollies (4) for the doorway. The terrace flagging was laid that fall and the beds prepared.

Next spring the fencing was put up and the planting practically completed. Eight smaller Japanese hollies (5) for the beds where the too-big evergreens had been, and two faster-growing kinds (6) to help two choice varieties of viburnum (7) cushion the outside corners of the fence. The beds of floribunda roses (8) were filled from a roadside stand in June, when the plants could be picked for color. And that second fall the final plant was put in—a small male American holly (9), without which the two female American hollies by the gate would not bear the bright red berries that make the place look like Christmas from Thanksgiving to Easter, whenever you happen to walk past.

New Frigidaire Imperial COLD-PANTRY

Stores Food The Way You Buy It and the way you use it, too!

WE STUDIED YOUR SHOPPING HABITS in the supermarkets—then combined a huge separate food freezer and refrigerator into a brand-new kind of kitchen storage center. With supermarket conveniences! Everything in plain sight, comfort-level, within easy reach. Even special space for special foods. And more useful space to store the larger loads of frozen food you now buy.

Huge Refrigerator with Flowing Cold—on top. No squatting! All food rolls out all the way to you on full-size Roll-to-You Shelves. New Flowing Cold bathes all items in gently-moving, just-right cold. Cycla-matic Defrosting is completely automatic.

Huge "PictureWindow" Hydrator—in the door. No stooping! Vegetables swing down for convenient use at "counter" height. Always crisp and on display. And the new deep-set Pantry Door stores butter, cheese, tall bottles, left-overs—eggs by the dozen.

Huge Separate Food Freezer—in the bottom. No hunting! 66 lbs. of frozen food roll out in the open. Juice cans slide out in tray. Freezes 8 lbs. of cubes and new Cubelets.

In color! . . . Sherwood Green, Stratford Yellow and Snowy White . . . yet costs only $4.81 weekly after minimum down payment. Ask your Frigidaire Dealer for exact terms on all the appliances Arthur Godfrey recommends!

Frigidaire

Built and backed by General Motors

How to fit a lady to a....

'NO-KNEE-ROOM'

IRONING TABLE!

● No magician is needed to make knees disappear when you're lucky enough to have a Rid-Jid Knee Room Ironing Table. You sit completely into the table with those marvelous curved legs. Iron right over your lap. No bending, twisting or stretching. No bumping your knees, no snagging your stockings.

As a matter of fact . . . the Rid-Jid Knee Room table has everything. The patented, fully ventilated open-mesh steel top whisks moisture away; makes ironing easier, faster and cooler. The pad never touches the floor. Instantly adjusts to any height for comfort level ironing. Automatic opening and closing. And beauty beyond compare in gorgeous chrome and yellow!

Want one? Get it at any hardware or department store. And cover it right with Rid-Jid Air Flow pad and cover set!

HAPPY EASTER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 80

Lively as a cricket. "Lively as a cricket" and "irresponsible as a young lamb" describe the emotions of the moment, as the pièce de résistance comes up, which is

ROAST STUFFED LEG OF LAMB

Have your butcher bone a leg of lamb weighing in the neighborhood of 7 pounds. Brown 1 cup crumbled soft bread in 1½ tablespoons butter or margarine. Add ½ teaspoon celery seed, ½ teaspoon salt, a little black pepper and ¾ cup well-drained crushed pineapple. Season the inside of the pocket and the outside of the roast with salt and pepper, and stuff the pocket.

Fasten the open edges together with skewers. Insert slivers of garlic here and there in the roast, making slits in the roast with point of a paring knife. Rub the lamb with 1 tablespoon softened butter or margarine, and sprinkle with ¼ teaspoon powdered ginger and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Bake in an open roasting pan in a moderately slow oven, 325° F., about 2½ hours. During the last 15 minutes, glaze the top with currant or crab-apple jelly. Currant is better, for its tartness overtakes any "muttony" taste. Remove roast to a hot platter and keep warm while you make gravy from the pan drippings.

Conversion is good. Some folks like hollandaise sauce. Some plump for good old mustard. There are two schools of thought. Two sides of the fence. Two breakdowns or whatever. I like both. It depends on the vittles they are invited to adorn. And not to be accused of a biased and partial nature, I won't even point to this or that dish, but let you point. And to lean over backward, way over, I shot a double bolt with

MUSTARD HOLLANDAISE FOR ASPARAGUS

Melt ½ cup butter or margarine in the top of a double boiler. Beat 4 egg yolks slightly with a fork, add ¼ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons lemon juice and 2 tablespoons prepared mustard. Stir the egg mixture into the butter or margarine. Place over hot water. Heat just enough to keep water under boiling point. Beat egg mixture with a rotary beater until thickened. Add ¼ cup light cream and continue beating 2 minutes longer. Serve immediately—or remove from the heat and reheat at serving time.

HERB ROLLS

Soften ¾ cup butter or margarine. Season with 1 teaspoon sweet basil, 1 teaspoon tarragon and ½ teaspoon chopped parsley. Mix and mix and mix some more. And mix once more, for luck. Slice 12 pillow-shaped crusty rolls into about 6 slices each, cutting down through the roll, but not cutting clear through, as you do for French bread. Separate slices a little and spread on both sides with herb mixture. Place on a baking sheet and heat in a moderately slow oven, 32 about 15 minutes until hot. And I guar that these are hot stuff any way you lo it. And as good as they are hot. You'll them to sharpen many a dull meal, a they don't sharpen the bread-and-b knives into steak knives, I'll miss my g Let me know about it.

CELERY-AND-MUSHROOM MEDL

Cut enough celery into ¼"-thick cres to make 3 cups. Simmer in 1 cup chi broth until just tender, then drain. S one 3-ounce can sliced mushrooms tablespoons butter or margarine. Se with a little black pepper and 1 teaspoo sauce. Add to the cooked celery. Toss ½ cup toasted, slivered, blanched alm and serve hot.

Once upon a time, as the fairies say, was a tried, true, never-fail formula for sert, especially if men were participatin was pie. Pie with cheese and no nonsense. yellow crumbly cheese guarded a slab o ple or mince or berry pie as surely as c was on hand to wash it down. But times cha Nowadays, lighter, more surprising des hit the eye, and men have learned what wo have known all along—that there are c loves in the offing. One of these I have n for your Happy Easter feast. It is

LEMON-CHIFFON RING WITH FRESH FRUIT

Sprinkle 4 teaspoons unflavored gelatin ½ cup cold water. Let stand a few min to soften. Meanwhile, mix together ⅔ sugar and ⅔ cup lemon juice. Separa eggs. Add a pinch of salt to the yolks beat them until quite thick and light-colo Try matching them to a lemon, a sort of lemon, you know. Add the lemon juice sugar to the egg yolks, stirring constan Cook in the top of a double boiler until ture forms a thin coating on the spoon—a custard. Remove from heat, add the s ened gelatin and stir until dissolved. Ad teaspoons grated lemon rind.

Chill in the refrigerator until it begin thicken. Beat the egg whites until they st up in peaks. Add ⅓ cup sugar, a tablesp at a time, beating well after each additi Fold into gelatin mixture. Pour into a la ring mold and chill until set. Unmold and center with seedless green grapes and fr strawberries. Ring may be frosted w whipped cream to which chopped mint been added, if desired.

Now we look forward. Winter wasn't bad, and didn't last too long. Let's look the first violet and savor the early columbi And in every spring breeze hear an echo, as a silver bell calling, "Happy Easter to yo The happiest you ever knew, is the wish fr

Your ANNIE

SPRING TIDE

By MILDRED COUSENS

The moon had flooded the field with silver.
And pear trees covered with snowy white
Shook their petals in little showers
At the slightest breath of the sleeping night.

Fragrance of grass that was half sweet clover
Floated like bubbles upon the air.
Mingling with scent of mint that clustered
Beside the brook meandering there.

Slowly, as motion under water.
The cows moved forward a yard or more.
Their brass bells sounding a wild sweet jangle
Such as no one had ever heard before.

Suddenly earth went dipping, reeling.
Sailing out on a sea of stars.
While the girl with her head flung back, hair streaming,
Clung for her life to the pasture bars.

Color
THAT CAN'T TARNISH

...stays bright without polishing

You'll welcome these beautiful new utensils with open arms—they're so beautiful and so easy to keep shining. The copper color of the covers is an actual part of the metal, not just a coating; and because that metal is a special aluminum alloy, it won't tarnish. Hallite utensils are made from a thick, extra hard alloy, to give you years and years of service. Select the utensils you need from the big 1955 Hallite line. Or get one of the 2, 4, or 5-piece sets. Transparent leaf hangers are included with each pan and cover, so that you can hang Hallite decoratively in your kitchen. Hallite is available at leading stores everywhere.

See HALLITE on the NBC-TV HOME show with Arlene Francis and on CBS-TV "See It Now" with Ed. R. Murrow

10-¾" Covered Fry Pan

9" Covered Fry Pan

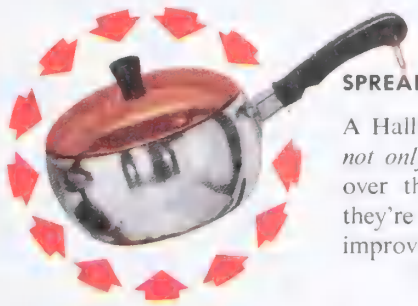
8" Covered Fry Pan

6-qt. Covered Sauce Pot

3-½ qt. Covered Sauce Pot

2-½ qt. Covered Sauce Pot

9" Brazier
—Casserole
—Server



3-½ qt. Covered Sauce Pan

2-½ qt. Covered Sauce Pan

1-½ qt. Covered Sauce Pan

2-¼ qt. Double Boiler
(use as 2-½ qt Sauce Pan, too)

4-cup Egg Poacher
(It's an 8" Fry Pan, too)

SPREADS HEAT FAST FOR SUPERB COOKING

A Hallite utensil spreads heat fast and evenly—not only across the bottom but up the sides and over the top. Foods cook deliciously because they're surrounded by uniform heat. You can't improve on aluminum for fine cooking.

THE PERFECT GIFT

Hallite by

WEAR-EVER

WEAR-EVER ALUMINUM TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. HALLITE

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY, INC., NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

New UNIVERSAL Toastamagic
with the REFLECTOR CONTROL

Now toast any bread one-third faster!

Here at last is the truly automatic toaster you've been waiting for—the new Universal Toastamagic, companion to the famous Universal Coffeematic. It's so fast heating that even the very first slice is toasted in a matter of seconds! And it's so automatic you never need change the control setting no matter what type of bread you use! You'll be delighted with a Toastamagic. $19.95

in copper $22.95

Reflector Control—New toasting principle automatically controls color by reflected heat from toast. Even rewarms cold toast.

ONLY THE GENUINE UNIVERSAL TOASTAMAGIC CARRIES THIS DESIGN . . . YOUR ASSURANCE OF QUALITY CRAFTSMANSHIP.

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Copyright 1955 L F & C

CLUB PROJECTS ABROAD

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23

Helping to clothe refugee students from East Germany who have left everything behind (there are about sixty a month), is another important project of the American Women's Club in Berlin. At sewing machines provided by the Ellen J. McCloy fund, club members and some students themselves mend and repair clothing sent from such organizations as the Kansas City chapter of Beta Sigma Phi sorority, Denver's Soroptimist Club and other women's groups in the United States (packages are addressed to the Welfare Committee, American Women's Club in Berlin, Germany, APO, 742 New York, N.Y., postage paid only to the latter). Almost everything is usable. "Why, someone sent us a dozen used choir robes, and the girls made them into dresses," Mrs. Adam Troska, President of the Berlin Club, told me. "But the occasional blanket that comes our way is the great prize. Our biggest problem, you see, is to get enough bedding to furnish the tiny room and make it comfortable for the refugee."

Most appealing of the many programs is a mothering project, started by a small group of wives belonging to a noncommissioned-officers' club, at a Kinderheim (children's home) in Frankfurt. Volunteers signing up for service at the Kinderheim work in groups up to twelve—caring for the small orphans and abandoned children, many of them crib-bound, giving them comfort and love, teaching them to feed or dress themselves, some to walk or talk. Some children in the Kinderheim have so won their way into the hearts of those who tended them that they are now permanent members of American families.

Such children are, of course, only a few of the thousands of German children adopted by United States military and civilian familie over the past few years. U.S. Army familie alone (exclusive of the Air Force, the U.S Navy and civilian personnel) have adopte some 3000 German youngsters since 195 Many have become the adopted parents of tw or more. In some instances a single family ha adopted as many as seven children.

For Americans in Berlin, the new life is de manding as well as challenging. Present-da housing differs greatly from the widely publ cized "luxury" homes occupied by a few im mediately after the war—when properties wer requisitioned from the vanquished Germans a no cost to the U.S. Government. Today American quarters often are crowded. Whe there is no government housing, each famil must find its own accommodations off th base. Sometimes the rent is high. Plumbing heating and other improvements must b brought up to minimum standards at the fam ily's own expense.

Emphasizing that Germans get to know ou country best through our citizens abroad, th conference suggested that Americans try little "back-yard diplomacy" by finding out a about their new community—without bein conspicuous— making friends with the milk man, garbage collector, policeman on th block. "Don't expect to love everybody," th advice continued, "but don't be critical. Abov all, hold in respect the customs and standard of the host country."

Margaret Hickey, a participant in the U. S. Departmen of State's Educational Exchange Program of 1954, ad dressed the biannual American Women's Activitie Conference in Berchtesgaden, Germany, last Octobe She also visited other parts of the country and viewe community action programs carried on jointly b American and German women's groups.

UNJUDGING LOVE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 53

octagonal room where he kept his photographs of exotic shrubs; and the long library where his greatest literary treasures were kept. Here he received younger brethren who came to him for advice, anyone he wished specially to impress. And here he decided, that December afternoon, to receive Mr. Lambert and give him tea.

He realized the moment Anton showed in Mr. Lambert that he had never liked the man. The shaggy tweed suit, the bristly mustache, the too-hearty manner. Without getting up from his own comfortable seat by the log fire, the dean waved him to one opposite.

Lambert, headmaster of St. Andrew's, Gilchester's ancient grammar school, had no more liking for the dean than the dean had for him. Why should this tiresome old bachelor have any say in the appointment of a new chaplain to the school?

The dean handed him a cup of tea, and pointed to the chocolate cake. "Help yourself, headmaster." And he went on blandly to talk about the film of Julius Caesar, which he had seen in London a week ago, and which he knew perfectly well Lambert hadn't seen. "In your opinion," he snapped suddenly, "what are the chief qualifications needed in a chaplain for St. Andrew's?"

Lambert was startled. "Not too old, of course. Not too young either. I think he should be married, preferably with children of his own."

"Oh? Do you?" The dean's voice was milder than a dove's, always a warning to the unwary. "You think married men have more character than bachelors?"

"More likely to understand young people, perhaps. We live in unsettled times. Young voyagers need someone reliable at the helm."

The dean hated metaphors. Buzzing a bell to order more hot water, "Well, now," he continued, "there are three possible names before me." He referred to a slip of paper on the table. "There is Rudwick, curate at Holy Trinity. I'm told he writes detective stories under another name—much too intellectual, I fear. What about Mr. Spicer? A bit of a boomer in the pulpit, married, with four sons, all crazy about sport. Interest you?"

The door opened and Anton came in. Holding out the empty water jug toward him, the dean glanced again at his list, giving Lambert no time to comment on Mr. Spicer.

"Finally, there's Mr. Hearne, of Hinton Parbury."

"I don't know him at all, Mr. Dean."

"Naturally," murmured the dean, "I am a little more familiar with the diocesan clergy than you are. Been at Hinton for twenty years. From what I know of Mr. Hearne, he is a faithful parish priest and eminently deserve preferment. As you know ——"

"Wouldn't he be a little out of touch, Mr Dean?"

The dean blinked so mildly that Lambert thought he hadn't understood him. "As you know," the dean continued, cutting himself some chocolate cake, "the school chaplaincy carries with it the living of St. Martin's Wendon—not a bad living. I think the best thing to do is to ask Mr. Hearne to preach the Founder's Day sermon to your boys in the cathedral. Afterward, we can see how he reacts to the idea of a possible change."

"Is he married, Mr. Dean?"

"He is, headmaster. There is a daughter, a very good pianist, I am told. The son was killed flying, in the war."

"Well, Mr. Dean, I'd be glad to have a talk with him. But about my friend Harvey ——"

The dean broke in coldly. "There is no need for anyone to see Mr. Hearne at the moment. I shall write to offer him the pulpit on Founder's Day. Meanwhile, the appointment had better not be discussed."

Alone in the waiting room, Lawrence Hearne turned the pages of an old copy of the Illustrated London News. There was a gas fire in the room, yet he shivered and drew his woo scarf closer round his clerical collar. Turning the page again, he came upon photographs of Hillary and Tensing in the victorious assault upon Mount Everest. His tired face lit up as he studied the pictures.

The door opened and a manservant came in. "Doctor Pember is sorry to have kept you waiting, sir."

)h, not at all."
mber greeted him warmly, pointed to a chair and offered him a cigarette from a box. Lawrence refused this, and tapped a p stubby pipe on the fender. "No, I cling y old stand-by, thanks."
was warm in the room; there was a feeling curity and assurance here. Drawing at his Lawrence looked at a picture on the wall, roduction of Turner's Fighting Téméraire. blazing ship came alive in his imagination, rgot that he was in the doctor's consult- oom; there were men around him dying e savage zest of battle.
mber was talking, and Lawrence had not d him. Then he stopped, and there was a questioning silence.
'm sorry," said Lawrence. "My mind had dered away. Could you repeat that?"
Perhaps you'd prefer to read it yourself?" lber handed him the report from the hos- .
wrence read slowly, "Endocarditis lenta. 's what you thought, isn't it?"
was afraid so."
awrence got up and replaced the report on ber's desk. "It must be difficult for you," egan, "but —— Of course one has to ask iresome question. How long have I got?"
A year at the very most." Pember spoke ptly. "Absolute inactivity, complete rest t give you a little more, but ——"
People in my profession, or in yours, Doc- Pember, cannot think of complete rest."
expected you to say that—and I have no ver."
There's no need for me to tell anyone ut this—for the present, I mean—is there?"
Why should you, if you don't wish to?"
just see no point in distressing my wife daughter. Well, thank you."
e walked slowly to the door. Outside, in hall, he saw only one thing: a desk calendar he hall table which gave the date in large k type—7 December.
s he walked down the street, his umbrella up before him, he thought of the cathe- . The west window would be quite dark , the organ silent.

Martin Hood, organist and choirmaster of Chester Cathedral, was a misfit and he w it. In his late thirties he was getting fat, black hair was always too long, his shirt ar was never quite clean. He did not much for his appearance, and catching sight of face in a mirror above the music desk, he k out his tongue at the reflection. Tin Pan y is my natural home, he thought. And as girl at the piano went on playing Bach's omatic Fantasia and Fugue, he realized how unutterably bored he was—sick to death of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

The girl at the piano, who was Lawrence Hearne's daughter, Susan, went on valiantly. It was an important occasion for her—her last lesson under Mr. Hood.

He listened; one part of him heard every note while the rest of him thought of some café in the south of France, where guitars plucked love from the moon as she rose, dark orange, over the Mediterranean. Why had he ever done this? he asked himself. Why had he become a cathedral organist? Merely because he had wished to be able to declare to his parents (now both of them dead) that a living could be made out of music.

"No, no, no!" He rapped out. "You're scrambling it. We want Bach—not Miss Hearne."

She felt a blush mounting up her neck. She was furious but she went on, grimly holding back the natural accelerando which the music demanded. And Martin made another grimace at himself in the mirror, then threw down his baton, sprawled in a chair and closed his eyes.

The last entry came up in octaves from the bass. He sat up. Almost every girl he had ever known had made a bleary mess of this conclusion. But Susan had the grip of it. He turned and looked at her, reflecting how easy it would be for her to make herself look attractive. She could never go on a concert platform looking as she did now.

Then the last A-major chord sounded, and she lifted her hands cleanly from the keyboard.

"Was it all right?"

"I'm not going to flatter you and make you more conceited than you are, but it was good."

"I'm not conceited."

"Oh yes, you are. And you've a right to be. I can't do any more for you. You'd better make up your mind to let the London School of Music see what they can make of you."

"I've told you—I can't go and live in London. There's no money."

"If you win the scholarship all your fees are paid."

"But that doesn't keep me, does it? I can't demand more from my parents than they can possibly give."

"Have you ever even asked them?"

"No, but ——"

He got up impatiently, fumbled with papers on his desk, and found a form. "I've filled this in for you," he snapped. "All you have to do is to sign it. The examination isn't until March; it leaves you weeks to work things out. One day, when you've got the world at your feet, you'll thank me for this."

He put a pen in her hand, and she stared at the form, tears in her eyes.

"I was just wondering what you would do if Aly Khan became interested in me . . ."

UNIVERSAL Coffeematic

with the FLAVOR-SELECTOR

the fastest way to good coffee!

Enjoy the full-bodied flavor of real coffee made so quickly and so easily in a Universal Coffeematic. It brews to the exact strength you choose, signals when ready and keeps your coffee piping-hot . . . all automatically. With a Universal Coffeematic and its new companion, the Universal Toastamagic, you'll make tomorrow's breakfast automatically better. Ten-cup model shown—$29.95. $24.95 up Flavor-Selector—Automatically brews to the strength you choose...Mild, Medium or Strong. Makes perfect coffee every time.

ONLY THE GENUINE UNIVERSAL COFFEEMATIC CARRIES THIS DESIGN YOUR ASSURANCE OF QUALITY CRAFTSMANSHIP

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Copyright 1955 L F & C

"I didn't realize my last lesson would be like this," she muttered.

"What did you expect? A bouquet of roses?"

"I just thought you'd be a bit nicer, that's all."

Suddenly he laughed, and took her hand. "Don't torment this shabby old cathedral organist any more," he said. "It's given me pleasure to have a pupil who is worth while. It will give me more pleasure to see her go on to success—and success, my dear Susan, is never achieved except through a lot of pain and a lot of courage. Come on! Sign."

Slowly she signed her name at the bottom of the form.

Taking the form from her, he slipped it into an envelope. "Good girl," he said. "This calls for a drink to your success."

"No, thanks. It's kind of you; but I don't want a drink."

He was on his way to the cabinet where he kept glasses, and he stopped and stared at her. "Do you know," he said slowly, "I believe that Susan Hearne is afraid of life."

"No, I'm not afraid of life; I'll tell you what it is." She turned over the pages of some music on his desk, without looking at him.

"Well, go on. Tell me."

"It's making beds, scrubbing floors, washing up, cooking meals, shopping, getting more meals, washing up again. That's life. And I'm not a bit afraid of it."

"A very heroic speech," he said, "and if I had a tape recorder I'd like to play it back to you, so that you could hear the complacency in your voice."

"That's beastly of you!" she cried. "I hate you for saying that."

Seizing her coat and scarf from a chair, she went quickly to the door. Martin had the desire to catch her by the arms and shake sense into her; but he knew quite well what this would lead to. He stayed where he was. Unwise, he thought, to play with the emotions of a child of nineteen.

She had gone out to the hall; he waited to hear her slam the front door. Then, to his dismay, she came back. She had left her music case, and as she took it she said quietly, "I'm sorry, Martin. I shouldn't have said that. I am grateful for all you've done, I really am."

He knew only too well what the lessons had meant to her. But he spoke like a kind father, his hands clasped behind his back.

"My dear child, I have given you my best professional services and you, in return, have worked very hard. I would not like to tell you how many nitwits have sat in this room and murdered my piano. In your case, I have not had to submit to such torture. I thank you for it."

She looked at him for a moment, a shabby figure standing in the warm light of this well-remembered study; she desperately searched for something to say. But he would not look at her, nor offer her any more remarks. So she turned and went out of the house.

Rain trickled down the windowpane of the bus as it dragged up the narrow hill out of Gilchester. More people were cramming in. A stout woman with a dripping mackintosh and many parcels stopped by Lawrence. He saw that it was Mrs. Bratley, wife of Farmer John, vicar's warden at Hinton Parbury, and he immediately recalled a scene with his wife, Vera, when she had burst into his study some three weeks ago. "Lawrence, I hope I did the right thing—I was passing through the yard of Halsey Farm when I saw that detestable Willie Furze who works for the Bratleys handling a calf so brutally. I had to stop and tell him I'd report it to the R.S.P.C.A. It scared him, I think; and that horrible Mrs. Bratley did nothing but stand by the door and stare at me—never said a word. If Farmer John knew, he'd send him packing. Can't something be done?" But Lawrence had not "done" anything, knowing that it was not the time to disturb the old farmer, who had been seriously ill for weeks. He had not seen Mrs. Bratley since. Unfortunate, he thought, that I should be condemned to seven miles in the bus with the woman who dislikes me most in the parish.

"HALLO, Mrs. Bratley. Would you like my seat?"

"Oh no, thank you. I can stand as well as any."

Well, it was absurd to argue the question. "How is your husband?" he asked.

"He's not good at all," muttered Mrs. Bratley, in a tone that implied it was entirely his own fault he was ill.

"I must come up and see him tomorrow."

"If he hears you're coming, he'll only be trying to get himself up, parson. I'd sooner you waited."

No, thought Lawrence; Vera's denunciation would never be forgiven. Nobody could pretend that old John was exactly an easy m probably the wife had had a hard time o Yet the first wife had been a happy woma quiet, dignified and sure of herself. What made old John take this shrew to his boson his old age?

"Is there any news of Jim?" he asked.

"No. I wish there were. He never stops t ing about that boy. I tell him he's all ri there are hundreds of 'em out in Kore what's the good of thinking the worst?"

"Yes . . . but it is worrying, not getting ters," said Lawrence quietly.

"Worry makes things go wrong, that's w I always say."

It was not a conversation that could pr ably be continued. Lawrence sat very sti the bus went on into the darkness of the marshy country he knew so well, w twenty years of his ministry had been sp Twenty ineffectual years, they now seeme him.

Then he heard the words spoken by I tor Pember: "A year at the very most." It odd; there was nothing here to frighten on all. He was almost filled with a sense of re it was better to k the truth than to dure weeks of wai such as had beer lot lately—wai and trying to pret to Vera and Su that he felt be than he did. N at least, that over.

Smoke in his n trils, the murmur mumble and mu of voices in his e all of it so fami the chattering of and women be carried along home and sup bed and sleep. If could only see clear original tern, he thought only one could in her essence full personality that sadly unlik woman Mrs. B ley, whose wet ma intosh was now d ping rain on the cloth of his trous Suddenly he deci he could not sit below her any longer. ting up, he touched her arm.

"Now I must insist you have my seat, M Bratley."

She frowned hatred at him as she took She would not forgive this. A pity, thou Lawrence, that it is hardly ever given to u see one another clearly. Shall I soon see "fac face," not "through a glass darkly"? A yea the most. But even to that year, no certain only Faith and Hope and Charity to carry out to the ocean of eternity.

As he stood, he closed his eyes, and ag let the voices sink into his ears. "Thy kingd come," he murmured. Well, he might s know more about that.

The vicarage at Hinton Parbury had b built in 1875. Recently water had been brou to the village, so there was now a proper ba room, and a sink in the kitchen. Vera Hear who had never been a complaining type woman, now looked forward to a day wh electricity would follow water, and she wo be able to switch lights on and off. Meanwh it was her proud boast that no lamp had e smoked in the vicarage, that the best bak could be done in an oil cooker. She genuin loved her husband. She was married to a go man; and it made life very difficult for he particularly when the wind rattled the p branches, and the rain thrashed the pseu Gothic windows, and she was filling the lamps. That was now her task: waiting alo in the house filling lamps, feeling desolate.

She got up, took the lamp and went in the living room. The fire was nearly out, a

CONTINUED ON PAGE 128

NEXT MONTH

● The letter was marked, "Delivery Delayed." It had been mailed ten years before, by a man named Jeremiah Clay. Now it had come out of the past to wreck Martha Radcliffe's life, to make her doubt the man she loved.

My husband is a thief and a murderer, Martha thought. What shall I do? I am not a saint, and there is a place where a conscience must stop. My own family must come first, no matter what George has done.

Had George Radcliffe really killed Spindell? Had he stolen the money, and accused an innocent man? And if he had done these things, could his wife betray him?

FIRST TRAIN TO BABYLON

By MAX EHRLICH

Novel complete in the May JOURNAL

Cream City MET·L·TOP®

the only IRONING TABLE with a ventilated double steel top

At last it has happened. Women are going on a sitdown strike against ironing board drudgery. Why stand in a back-straining position when you can sit relaxed and iron in comfort? The new MET-L-TOP "floats" the ironing table right over your lap, leaves plenty of room for knees and legs, adjusts instantly for the height that's right for you. It's built to give you a lifetime of ironing ease and energy-saving efficiency. Ask your dealer to show you the MET-L-TOP Model C-690.

GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO., MILWAUKEE 1, WIS.

Instantly adjustable for sit-or-stand ironing, at the height that's just right for you.

AT ALL GOOD STORES

$13.95

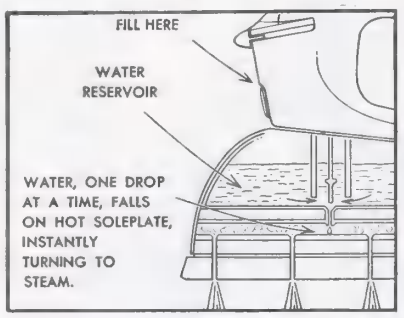
in decorator colors

Cream City MET-L-TOP PADS AND COVERS

Made right to fit tight over back and nose of MET-L-TOP, and all standard ironing tables. Sanforized cover. Strong elastic edge.

Iron most fabrics without sprinkling

WITH THE NEW G-E STEAM AND DRY IRON!



IT'S TWO IRONS IN ONE!

G-E STEAM & DRY IRON

USE IT AS A STEAM IRON!

1. "IRON WITHOUT SPRINKLING," says Kathie Norris, "everything except heavy cottons, linens and starched fabrics! The steady flow of steam moistens fabrics, saves you the time and work of sprinkling."

2. INSTANT STEAM! Drop by drop, water falls onto hot soleplate . . . flashes instantly to steam. Steam stops automatically when iron is placed on heel rest. Uses tap water in all but extremely hard water areas.

3. PRESS LIKE A TAILOR! Press suits, skirts and sweaters without a damp pressing cloth! You can see where to put creases, so you press perfectly! Save money on pressing bills—you can do it at home, professionally.

USE IT AS A DRY IRON!

1. FOR HEAVY COTTONS, LINENS and starched fabrics, use it as a dry iron. Just press the button to change your steam iron to dry—no need to let iron cool down or even empty the water! You make the change instantly!

2. LIGHT, LIGHT WEIGHT! Only 3¼ pounds! Weighs less than a woman's purse. Means easy handling and less work. Larger soleplate—more than thirty square inches—covers wider ironing area in fewer strokes.

3. NO MORE SCORCHING! Visualizer Fabric-dial gives perfect heat for whatever fabric you're ironing! See it at your G-E dealer's today! General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

E these other wonderful irons at your E dealer's: G-E Visualizer Iron ($12.95*), E Budget Iron ($9.95*), G-E Portable am Iron ($14.95*), G-E Automatic vel Iron ($9.95*).

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 126

she carefully put little pieces of coal on the dull embers. As she stared around her the very walls of the room seemed to close in on her and stifle her, like a story by Edgar Allan Poe. Nothing was any longer her friend here. Yes, there was one exception. She approached the framed photograph of David, the last picture taken of him in his uniform.

She sat down, holding the picture. It was many years since his death; she had quite got over the shock, she had fought her way back to a belief in her faith which this tragedy had so shaken. And yet, and yet . . . if the Lord gave, why did He have to take away? Those dreadful hollow words from the burial service which had been so often spoken by Lawrence in the graveyard, and yet could never be spoken by him for the committal to earth of their own son's shattered body, rang mockingly in her ears. What should we say in our human span of anybody who gave merely in order to take away? "Blessed be the name of the Lord"?

"I must do something," muttered Vera, "to take my mind off such evil thoughts."

Something to do . . . something to do. . . . On the card table she saw a blue bank envelope. It was the collection from the special Advent Service last night, which Lawrence should have banked today. He had always been rather careless about money, and it had become a habit for Vera to check the collections for him.

"Well, I can count that, I suppose," she muttered.

As she counted, there was a gentle yet imperative tapping at the door knocker. She was holding two and six in her hand—Dorothy Hunter's contribution, she thought, and probably that was Dorothy Hunter at the door. Sliding the coins back to the envelope, she went to the hall.

It was Miss Hunter. "Oh, Vera, dear. I had some butter sent from my Irish friends, and I've brought you some."

Frail, ascetic, tall, Miss Hunter offered the butter eagerly. Everything about this kind, ugly old woman was urgent and eager; she always spoke breathlessly.

"That's very sweet of you, Dorothy."

"No, no, it isn't. I couldn't be a pig and gorge the lot. Oh, my dear, I must tell you—Nicky Hocking is on the drink again. I saw him reeling into the Crown just now. I thought I'd better tell you, because you know what he gets like."

"He made a solemn promise to Lawrence after the last bout that he wouldn't touch a drop till Christmas."

"WELL, I don't know what's sent him off this time. But you know the saying about Nicky in the village—he always drinks before he digs a grave." Miss Hunter laughed a little wildly. "I believe the old man's got the evil eye, but one can't help liking him. By the way, I hear that poor John Bratley is really very ill."

"I don't wonder, with that wife," said Vera.

"No, she can't exactly be a consolation, can she? I must fly; I've got some bunion ointment for old Mrs. Webber—I found it in that herbalist's in West Street."

The door opened and closed. Miss Hunter darted out into the December night.

In Hinton Parbury there were two public houses: the Crown, and the Parbury Arms. There were only three people in the bar of the Crown that evening: old Simon Webber, on his usual bench by the fire; Nicky Hocking, who leaned over the long curving bar and wagged a horny forefinger at the third person present—Charles Munson, the landlord.

Nicky, the sexton, could get drunk on three pints. He had had those three, and was now arguing with Mr. Munson about the fourth.

"No, Nicky, I'm not chalking up any drinks to you."

"And who said, who said about chalking—who said?" Nicky passed his large knobby hand across the air before Munson's face, as though to mesmerize him.

"Well, let's see your money, then."

NICKY had no more money, and Munson knew it. Pushing the empty glass away from him with contempt, Nicky spat on the floor. "I've got more money than you've ever imagined could be," he said. "Proper job coming off, that's what I got, a proper job. I'll have parson get you the sack—you wait, Charles Munson."

"Out you go!" snapped Charles. Coming from the bar, he took hold of Nicky's arm.

"Take your heathen hands off of me!"

A car had drawn up outside, and just as Munson seized hold of Nicky and propelled him through the swing doors, two people were coming in.

"Oh, Nicky!" It was Susan who stood there, staring. Nicky bowed very low, looked up at Susan, then down again. "We have done those things which we ought not to have done, he muttered. "And there is no health in us . . . no health in us, missis . . . poor old man . . . never meant harm ——"

Pushing past the young man who had come in with Susan, he swayed out into the dark cobbled yard and crossed the street.

"The last time he drank," said Susan, "he fell into a ditch, and daddy had to get up in the middle of the night and drag him out."

"Who is he?"

"The sexton. Father's the only person can deal with him when he's like this."

They went into the bar, and Charles Munson welcomed her effusively as, a little nervously, she sat in one of the window seats. She had been in the bar before, out of hours, with her father, when he had been making a sick call; but she had never come during licensed hours.

Kenneth Foley ordered light ale. After that, there seemed to be nothing to say. Sipping her ale, Susan looked into the fire, wondering why she had allowed Kenneth to persuade her inside. "I believe you're a girl who's afraid of life." She could not forget Martin Hood's words. Perhaps they were true.

Kenneth had met her in Gilchester on her way to the bus station, and had wanted her to go to the cinema with him, but she had insisted on returning home, so he had offered to drive her. He had met Susan some months ago, during a concert which it was his duty to write up for the local paper. He had noticed something alert and arresting in this severe flaxen-haired girl. There had been other meetings, then the affair had stuck; neither of them quite knew where they were.

"Very nice here," said Kenneth. "Such a lot of lively talk, and people hopping in and out. I've always thought that Gilchester is pretty hot, but this beats it."

Susan got up irritably. "Let's go," she said. He followed her out to the little two-seater.

"Was I stepping off on the wrong foot?"

"You know quite well you were."

"Look, Susan, what's this all about? I thought you wanted to get away from this antiquarian's paradise and find some life of your own—like me."

"It's easy for you to get away. You're a man."

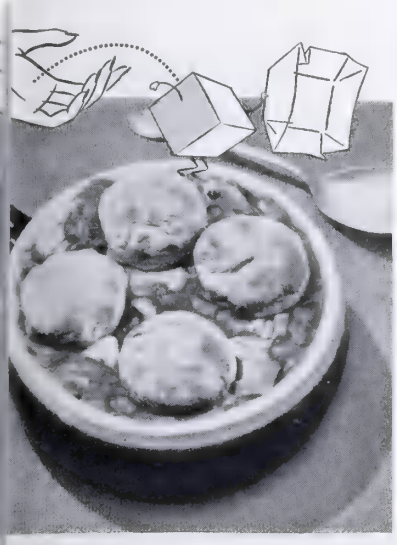
"It's not so easy. Do you think my mother's going to like it, with young Peter in his last

WHEN BEAUTY WALKS THE APRIL HILLS

By LUCY EMBURY

Beauty will not be denied,
But from afar may be descried
Running through the winter chills
On light feet
On white feet
To dance the April hills.

To dance upon the April hills
Freeing little, clear-voiced rills
Blowing on the brown old earth
With sweet breath
With warm breath
That brings fresh green to birth.



You hear a bigger whoosh
You smell a fresher aroma
You taste an extra richness

Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

Chase & Sanborn

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

Tuna with a difference!

Good to eat and good for the budget!

TUNA TEMPTER—Saute until soft ½ onion, chopped. Blend in 3 tbs. , salt and pepper. Add 1½ cups Herb-Ox table Bouillon, ½ cup milk. Stir until e boils. Add 1 can tuna fish, 3 hard- ed eggs sliced, 1 cup celery diced. Turn casserole. Top with biscuits and bake in oven (400°) until biscuits are done. es 4.

Money-Saving Magic—26 delicious recipes show how Herb-Ox makes food taste better, less. Write to: The Pure Food Company, Dept. LHJ, Mamaroneck, N. Y.

LOW-CALORIE, HIGH-PROTEIN

Herb-Ox

America's Largest Selling
OUILLON CUBES

WAYS CRISP'N TENDER!
OLLY TIME POP CORN

rnish Your Best Dishes
t the way the world's famous chefs theirs . . . with Sexton relishes and kles.
Here are but 3 of many mouth-watering ton delicacies that grace the tables of drawer clubs and restaurants around corner or around the world.
They can be had at better independent d stores.

Sexton
Quality Foods
ohn Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

year at St. Andrew's? But I know one thing: she doesn't want me to hang around in a fusty old cathedral town all my life."

"You hate Gilchester, don't you, Kenneth?"

"I don't exactly hate it. But it hasn't got any meaning for you unless you're over sixty."

"It wouldn't mean anything to you that for twenty years my father has celebrated the Holy Communion and said Matins and Evensong every morning and evening in that church." She pointed across the road. At the top of some rising fields, they could see the small squat tower of the church.

"How many go?" asked Kenneth.

"That isn't the point. It's there, if people want it."

"Well, don't you think it would be more to the point to try to find out what people really do want, and give it to them—and make some money in the process? This religion you defend so much—it hasn't done much for you, has it?"

Without answering, she ran across the road and began to walk down the avenue to the vicarage gate. Quickly Kenneth followed.

"Susan, I don't want to quarrel with you."

"Then you go a funny way about it."

"Don't you care a bit for me?"

"Oh, I can't talk about it tonight."

As Susan hurried down the lane, Kenneth stared after her. If it wasn't for daily Matins and Evensong, he thought, she might have been quite an amusing girl.

Susan let herself in quietly by the back door. She dreaded seeing her parents. There was a struggle going on inside her, and she knew that in this mood she might blurt out the news of the scholarship in the wrong way.

In the hall she paused. She could hear voices from the living room.

"Aren't you hungry, darling?"

Lawrence was making a valiant attempt to eat Welsh rabbit and fried tomatoes, and when Vera spoke he jabbed at the toast heartily.

"Of course. I was thinking, that's all."

"Did you get through your business?"

"Yes, thank you, dear. All quite satisfactory. I dropped into the nave for a bit of Evensong. They were singing the Bell Anthem—really very lovely. Hood played it beautifully."

"You know it was Susan's last lesson with him today?"

"Oh? I'm afraid I'd forgotten."

"You are rather inclined to forget things about Susan, aren't you, my dear? Forgive my saying so, but I sometimes think you just take her for granted. She's got more than ordinary talent, and what are we doing for her?"

"My dear, if you don't mind, could we talk about this some other time? Just at the moment ——"

"Just at the moment"—Vera got up and dropped the darned sock in the chair—"just at the moment, you're tired, and I'm tired, and that is how it goes on, and we never have time to talk of what is nearest to our heart. It doesn't seem right, Lawrence—it just doesn't seem right."

He did not answer.

OUTSIDE, Susan stood nervously by the door. It was always the same when you were foolish enough to listen; you never knew when to make the right entry.

Quickly Susan pushed open the door and walked in. "Sorry I'm late. I met Kenneth Foley and we had a snack. Don't get up, mummy. I'll get mine from the oven."

"You must bring this young man to see us sometime," said Lawrence.

"And how did you get on?" asked Vera. "Was Mr. Hood pleased?"

Now was the moment to talk. But Susan could only say, "Yes, quite pleased."

A moment of silence, when the clock on the mantelpiece ticked away ironically as though it challenged them all to say what really lay in their minds. Then Lawrence said, "I think I'll go to the study. I've got those electoral-roll forms to go through."

"But you're not particularly busy tomorrow, are you, dear?"

No, he thought; he was not particularly busy tomorrow. It was simply that tomorrow had ceased to exist.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 131

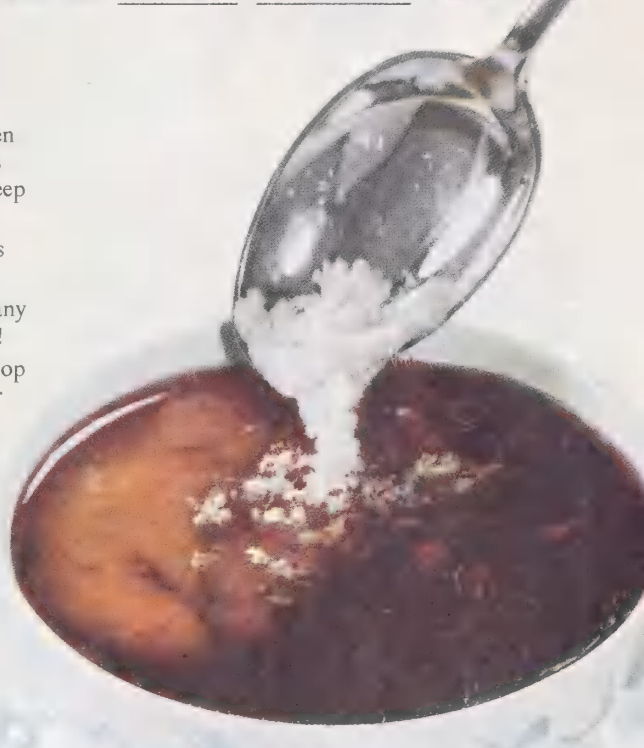
Pream is also available in glass jars in some areas.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

New easy thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN INSTANT POWDERED FORM



Rich and delicious! Made entirely from fresh sweet cream and other milk products. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful. Keep handy in cupboard or refrigerator!

So economical! Costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! Only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream!

Instant dissolving! Put Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

SALLY ROSS,
Pream Home Economist, says

"FOR RICHER FLAVOR TRY PREAM'S SHORT-CUT RECIPES!"

New easy way to luscious no-cook chocolate frosting!

Cream 3 tbs. butter or margarine. Gradually blend in 3 cups sifted confectioners' sugar mixed with 1 tbs. Pream. Add 3 tbs. hot water a little at a time. Blend in ½ tsp. vanilla and 1½ or 2 squares melted, unsweetened chocolate. Enough frosting for two 8- or 9-inch layers.

Send for FREE Recipe Folder

To: Sally Ross
Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

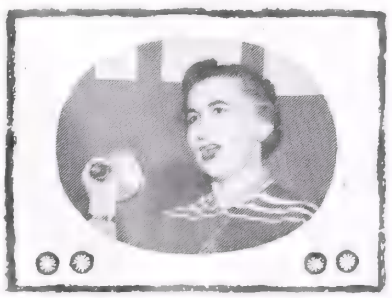
Street_____

City_____ Zone____

State_____

Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska, and Hawaii.

© 1955, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio



WHERE DID THE MORNING GO?

Time for lunch already?
Where did the morning go?
The chores are done, the house is tidy . . . but it hasn't seemed like a terribly tiring morning.

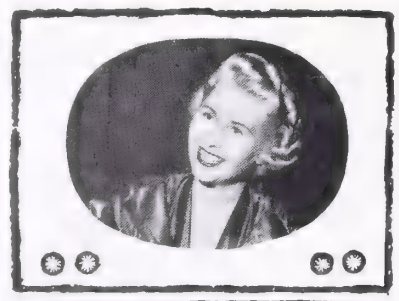
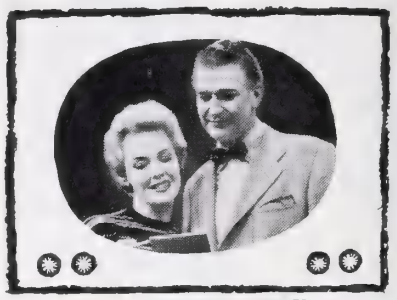
First there was breakfast, and that was pleasant. We all got the news from "TODAY," and Dave Garroway had some fascinating guests. The children were still laughing about J. Fred Muggs when they left for school.



Then I sat Kathy down in front of "DING DONG SCHOOL" and I didn't have to worry about her while I tidied up. Miss Frances got her interested in finger-painting, and after the program Kathy just went on playing quietly.

"WAY OF THE WORLD" had the second installment of the new story, and I couldn't miss that. It's like a magazine serial — you keep looking forward to the next episode. And beautifully acted, with new stars for every new story.

I think I started the ironing while I watched "THE SHEILAH GRAHAM SHOW". First she discussed the latest Hollywood news and gossip. Then she interviewed William Holden, and showed parts of his exciting new movie.



And I finished the ironing while I watch "HOME". I couldn't count the good ideas I had from Arlene Francis and her expert assi ants on health, home decorating, gardening a food. I added a few things to my shopping l

Any morning of any day, "THE TENNESSE ERNIE FORD SHOW" can brighten things for me. Tennessee Ernie and his talent friends joke, sing and share the fun with ever one . . . at the studio and at home.

And then "FEATHER YOUR NEST", whe that lovely couple won a living room suite, a Bud Collyer and Janis Carter were so nice them. And I think that it's a wonderful id that viewers at home can win prizes, too.

The morning was a pleasure instead of drud ery. And yet I have everything done . . . haven't really wasted a second. It's the way like to have the morning go.

EXCITING THINGS ARE HAPPENING C

NBC TELEVISION

a service of RCA

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 129

I'd better get it done," he said quietly. As closed the door he wished that it were pose to discuss, quite coolly, the verdict upon n. It was, after all, the verdict upon the ole human race; only a question of time e made any difference.

t was a night of sudden violent gusts of d and pelting hail showers. Upstairs in a all attic room in Halsey Farm, propped up a brass bedstead, with a lamp burning on a le beside him, old John Bratley shook his at the window as the wind rose. He was ry with life. He wanted to get up, and did know why the fool of a doctor had or- ed him to stay in bed. There were these ping pains from time to time in his stom- But he was used to them.

He wanted to get out and see what the winter n was doing, and whether they'd stacked t rick properly. Where was Jim? Why sn't he here to carry on the work of the m? What were those foreign devils doing h him out in Korea?

He groaned. Reaching to the side of the l, he managed to grasp a thick stick which ned there. He knocked it sharply on the or.

He heard the voices below in the kitchen p. Then he heard his wife coming slowly the stairway; the door opened, and she od there.

'Well, John, what do you want now?"

'Bring me some er. Who've you got vn there gabbing to ?"

'It's Willie Furze, t's all."

'Nice old time 're having down re while I'm lying k up here, aren't , woman?"

Without answering, closed the door l left him.

n the kitchen, Wil- Furze, a burly mid- -aged man who s seated with a cup tea before him the table, glanced cautiously as Mrs. Bratley came down.

'What's wrong now?" he asked.

'Wants you out of the way," she said.

'Shall I go, then?"

'No, stay. It's my house. Why doesn't he out and have done with it? And he won't ich the tablets the doctor's given him."

'Listen, Sarah." Furze lowered his voice. Why don't you have him taken off to hos- al? He's never slept away from here. That'd sh him."

'He won't go. He'll fight to his last breath. ke more than cancer to beat him."

'He can't last long now."

'Sometimes they hang on for months—even rs. If I'd known it would be like this, I uldn't have married him."

'Well, you got it all coming to you, Sarah."

'Oh, yes, the place is mine all right—I've seen will. But he doesn't trust me an inch, and I n't like it."

'What do you mean, doesn't trust you?"

'He's got a black case locked away upstairs d he won't give me the key."

'What's in it, then? Deeds of the land?"

'No, they're with the bank. It's money."

HERE was a silence. Furze drank his tea oughtfully. "Well, you've no need to worry," said presently. "It's yours one day."

'I'll see it is," she said. Then she went up stairs with the cup of water.

The farmer was sitting on the edge of the d, struggling to find slippers, cursing.

"What are you doing?" she cried. "Get back o bed. What do you think the doctor will ?"

"Damn the doctor. I want something."

His legs were very weak, his face yellowed d anguished with pain, and as he spoke he l back upon the bed, helpless. His wife took feet, lifted them in under the sheets, and rmured, "There, there, John—what is it u want? Let me get it for you."

Under the pillow she saw a small key. Her hand stole toward it.

Suddenly his huge hand shot out and gave her a blow which sent her staggering against the door. "You leave that key alone," he growled. "Get down and lock the house, and turn that fellow out, d'you hear me?"

When she had left he sat back against the pillows, panting with exhaustion. "I'll send for parson," he muttered. "He'll help me."

It was after eleven, and the vicar sat in his study, before an ancient roll-top desk littered with papers. A lamp was on the desk, and the rest of the room was lost in shadows.

The door opened, and Vera came in. "Lawrence, dear, may I have a few words with you on something important to us both?"

He was startled. Was it possible she had guessed? "Of course, my dear. What is it?"

"Susan. She's told me wonderful news. Mr. Hood has entered her for a scholarship at the London School of Music. He says she's sure to win it. It will mean two years' study in London, under the very best masters. If she works, she may become a great pianist—she may become famous."

He said nothing. Every second he failed to answer, Vera grew more impatient. "Well, don't you feel pleased?" she asked.

"Of course I am. It's wonderfully good news."

"But you see what it means, Lawrence? She'll have to be kept in London. I'm going to write to my sister Edna—she could give her a room, I'm sure."

"The scholarship would pay only her fees, I suppose?"

"Yes. That's what we must talk about. Edna can't afford to have her for nothing; but I know she'd be content with very little. She'll need clothes, and ——"

Lawrence interrupted. "Yes, yes, dear. It can't be worked out in a moment. There'll be a solution. I feel sure God means there to be a solution."

She spoke coldly. "I think it's about time we used our heads—isn't that what God means us to do? Lawrence, this is our problem ——"

"Vera, I don't think we're in a mood to talk about it tonight. Whatever can be done for Susan shall be done."

"I shall write to Edna for a start. If Susan wins the scholarship, she won't have to go to London till after Easter."

She moved slowly toward the door. She wanted to go on talking, she wanted to consider every practical possibility: what they could sell of any value; whether there wasn't some fund to assist in such matters. But he was unable to give her that. She felt cheated.

He walked up and down the room, considering the problem of Susan's future. He knew that Vera was right. This was a question he had constantly put aside, being unable to find the answer.

The living of Hinton Parbury was worth six hundred and fifty pounds a year. Out of this figure, when pension funds and various essential contributions were paid, he was left with just under six pounds a week on which to run this decrepit old house. It was perfectly evident to anyone except the Chancellor of the Exchequer that it was not possible even to clothe himself and his family on his income.

The room was very close and the lamp smelled. Going to the heavy blue curtains, he drew them aside, opened one of the windows and stepped out onto the lawn. It had stopped raining, the wind was quiet, the stars clear.

He heard a rustling in some bushes, and turned sharply. Nicky Hocking fell in a bundle at his feet.

"Sorry, parson—I've fallen again. It's the devil, he led me astray—it was him what tempted me ——"

Lawrence bent down and pulled the old man to his feet. "Come on," he commanded. "You can walk all right, Nicholas. Go straight back and tell your wife you're sorry, and go to bed and sleep it off. You'd better leave me to pull the bells in the morning."

"It was the devil, parson."

"It's high time you stopped blaming the devil, and blamed yourself for a change."

Slowly the old man shuffled away. Closing the window and drawing the curtains, Lawrence stood very still. The house was dead quiet now.

Going to his desk, he unlocked a drawer and took out a notebook. It was a journal in which he wrote his thoughts. Now, staring at the blank page, he felt that he should have much to write; and yet he did not know where to begin.

FROM LAWRENCE HEARNE'S JOURNAL

December 7. I am aware that I am seeing things differently, but it is hard to define it more clearly. This morning I was bewildered and irritable, not at all looking forward to the appointment with Pember. Tonight I am not bewildered. Do I "look forward?" No. It seems to me that I look inside, truly, for the first time in my life.

WORDS THAT WORK

WHEN THE CHILD NEXT DOOR COMES TO PLAY

● "Go on and play with Paul, Junior. Don't just stand there."

Negative and overgeneral.

● "Is this truck something Paul could use? Good. You hand it to him."

Specific and includes a positive and child-like suggestion.

Get this Useful NEW "TOPMASTER"
JAR and Top OPENER
8¼" long for only 50¢
and 2 Ideal Dog Food labels
What a handy kitchen tool!
Opens the most stubborn jar top or bottle cap instantly. Made of high-quality cadmium-plated steel, will last forever, can't rust. Lightweight, easy-to-use for:
Hot Food Tongs for Corn on the Cob, Baked Potatoes, Barbecues Syrup, Olives, Sauces, Nail Polish
Baby Foods, Peanut Butter, Jam and Jelly, Soda
Fruit Jars, Mayonnaise, Refrigerator Jars, Home Canning
So easy to get!
Just send 2 Ideal Dog Food labels and 50¢ for each Topmaster Jar Opener desired with the order form below. And remember, you're giving your dog full nutrition when you feed him Ideal Dog Food. It's the complete 7-course meal for dogs (cats love Ideal, too).
DON'T FEED JUST HALF A DOG... nourish him completely with Ideal Dog Food.
Ideal DOG FOOD
Send 50¢ and 2 Ideal Dog Food labels to:
Ideal Topmaster
Dept. 3, 310 W. Washington Blvd.
Chicago 6, Illinois
Allow at least 2 weeks for delivery.
IDEAL DOG FOOD
Made by Wilson & Co.
MEAT PACKERS
© 1955 WILSON & CO., Inc. Chicago
CONVENIENT ORDER FORM
Be sure to enclose 2 complete Ideal labels and 50¢ in coin for each Topmaster.
Meat Packers
Ideal Topmaster
Dept. 3
310 W. Washington Blvd., Chicago 6, Illinois
Please send me..... Topmasters. I am enclosing 50¢ and 2 complete Ideal Dog Food labels for each Topmaster desired.
Name.....
(PRINT PLAINLY)
Address.....
City..... Zone..... State.....
Offer expires Dec. 31, 1955, or when supplies are exhausted. Good in U. S. A. only. Void in any state or locality where such transactions are taxed, licensed or prohibited.

You're sure to find the color you want in

Super Kem-Tone

the washable LATEX wall paint

$5.59 GALLON
(Deep tones $5.85 a gallon)
No thinning
Just Stir and Apply

Looking for the perfect wall color to give your rooms new beauty and go with your furnishings? You'll find it in SUPER KEM-TONE . . . more than a hundred lovely new colors, in a wide range with plenty of subtle shades to provide exactly what you want. And, SUPER KEM-TONE is so easy to apply. Goes on smoothly with Roller-Koater® or brush over wallpaper, plaster, wallboard or painted walls. It covers most surfaces in one coat, dries in an hour, and it's guaranteed washable. A gallon does the walls of an average room!

THE SHERWIN WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Kem-Glo are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit . . . W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh . . . The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton . . . John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia . . . The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago . . . Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

For Kitchens, Bathrooms and Woodwork Throughout Your Home!

KEM-GLO®

Looks and washes like baked enamel. Resists steam, cooking spatters, grease, and alcoholic beverages. Same lovely colors as SUPER KEM-TONE.

Nothing at all remarkable has happened. I have merely been told by Doctor Pember that I am suffering from an incurable disease of the heart and can expect at the most a year more of life. There is nothing remarkable in this. We all know that death is inevitable; yet we live as though it did not exist. To be told you soon have to die—what does it mean? Practically, it is of course a nuisance. I think of all that I wanted to do and it seems to me that I have done none of it. I think of S. and V. and what it will mean to them.

I am sweating a little, as though the effort to think with any clarity were too much for me.

Your life is like a little winter's day
Whose sad sun rises late to set too soon. . . .

I chanced on those lines of Belloc's a few days after I had heard of David's death, and then it did indeed seem to me that human life was pathetic—so brief, so inarticulate, so desperate a striving for expression which only the great saints and artists ever begin to achieve. For us without such endowments life is a little winter's day—this day of December when I, by the grace of God, still live, still breathe, touch, taste and smell.

Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say, rejoice!

December 8. Visited John Bratley. I was not allowed to be in the room more than a few moments before Mrs. B. hustled me out, I can't tell why.

I have tried to avoid talking to V. She is restless and miserable. About S. I feel powerless to act.

All day heavy ragged skies, ponderous clouds over the flooded marshes, not a gleam of sun—nor rain, nor wind. Ominously still. I write this, again, late at night. Have I ever really begun to think deeply about anything? Has it all been superficial? I have baptized scores, married and buried two generations of people—why does it now seem to me nothing but hypocritical lip service to a system which seems worn out and moth-eaten?

Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom;
Lead thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home . . .

At the end, did Newman see the light?

December 10. Among bills and circulars, a letter from the dean asking if I would care to preach the annual Founder's Day sermon to the boys of St. Andrew's School in the cathedral. I was completely bowled over by it. Doesn't he know that I have never preached a decent sermon in my life? My immediate instinct was to say no—but V. was so distressed by this reaction I had to agree I would undertake it.

I rang Bridger in Gilchester today and asked if he would come and make an offer for my library. He said he'd come. I can't see that there is anything in the vicarage to raise money on.

December 16. A primula is out under the drawing-room window. It is wonderfully mild, the birds sing in the early morning as though it were April.

Susan is practicing the Waldstein Sonata for hours on end. She has chosen to play it to the examiners, and I can't help thinking she is unwise. It sounds to me a very masculine work, not suitable for a young girl.

December 22. Bridger came over to value my books. Twenty-five pounds for the lot! Of this, three pounds for the Archaeologica Britannica, and seven pounds for the bound volumes of the Strand Magazine with the Sherlock Holmes stories. He was extremely nice, almost apologetic. "But nobody is buying books."

I decided not to sell. It would be unbearable to face all those empty shelves in return for a sum that could not help Susan at all.

December 25. Christmas dawn. Impossible to sleep. I have crept downstairs. I am worried about V. When I gave her Communion at the midnight celebration I felt again that rapid beating in my heart, a sudden swift pain like a sword; and when I saw her hands outstretched for Communion, I felt I wanted to take them and lift her away from the dea ness of this existence. We have lost our w we are struggling across an unending mo land, trying to find the star which never shin God help me to get through these days Christmas, to say nothing unkind or cynic

Later. I have not been able to go back bed. It is nearly seven, and soon I must p pare for the eight-o'clock celebration—I m minister to my flock, feed my sheep—me, unfaithful shepherd.

My God, my God, why hast Thou f saken me?

January 1. Like a child, I find myself sayi "This will be a better year." New Year's D Turn over the new leaf, Lawrence! Stop ask God for things He does not intend to give y "Be strong, and play the man"—that is wh I used to say to David when he was a chi in distress about something. If David w here now, and I were to confide in him, tha what he would say to me. But for him, turning over of a new leaf. I am glad he d before his manhood could be sullied.

February 8. Days of unending rain. Nic has felled the dangerous ash in the avenue, we shall have some firewood to get by for rest of the winter. Today I tried to chip so small bits off with the ax, forgetting for moment. But it is no good, I am frightened any heavy work and, indeed, if Pember right, it is no use embarking on it.

I do not know why God is keeping alive—unless it is that I have something to Is it merely to find money so that S. may co tinue her career? I must write to old Patri He is the only friend I know who might ha money—and would prefer to give a pres rather than be asked for a loan which I cou never repay.

February 12. Patrick Bellerby, my old friend, died yesterday. I hope and pray th he never read my letter. Requiem aeterna dona eis Domine.

March 9. V. asked whether I had written Founder's Day sermon. I said I had started which is not true. She suggested as a text, fro St. Paul: "Run, that ye may obtain." I said thought it very suitable. She later told me th she is thinking of going to stay with Ed next month. We did not discuss money—it h become the impossible subject.

March 19. Bitterly cold, with snow—and t coal is running out. Nicky brought in a lot wood, but we shall burn it quickly th weather.

This journal has become nothing but dreary account of day-to-day affairs—mea ing nothing. What has happened to my sp itual fortress? I realize that I have ceased think eternally during the last weeks. I about my daily affairs mechanically, yet n unhappily.

There is a daily growing sense of excitemen in me, as though I were walking to the bri of a precipice, very slowly, and would see when I got to it—and threw myself down, wit out care, or sense of loss or regret. I mu learn to love. I must learn to let God work H way in me. There are no more questions to as March 22. Why has V. suddenly become loving and attentive? Is it because I myself b gin to see life more clearly? God knows, must have been a drag on her lately! B now . . . I am urged not to catch cold. I he such remarks as "We must do everything help your father." It is quite beyond me to u derstand this sudden change of mood, sin they cannot possibly know my actual conc tion—it would hardly produce this reaction.

Was it true? Vera asked herself. After these years, was it possible? Sitting in the R fectory Tea Rooms, with wind-nipped daff dils in a brass pot, and a glimmer of blue fro a decrepit gas fire, she stared at a list of cath dral services pinned to a notice board.

"Mother, you're miles away. What are y thinking about?"

Vera put her elbows on the checked tabl cloth. "Pour me some more tea, darling. I' got some news for you."

s only tea leaves now, I'm afraid."

h—then get some water." Vera leaned he table and sank her voice. "You know the dean wrote to daddy asking him to this Founder's Day sermon? I felt must be something behind it. So I men- it to Dorothy Hunter—you know how ts the cathedral gossip. Well, it's almost n they're going to offer your father the aincy of the school—and the living of St. n's Wendon goes with it."

ıt are you sure of this, mother?"

sure as one can be. My dear, St. Mar- lone is worth nine hundred a year—and he chaplaincy, that would bring it up to fifteen hundred."

San frowned. "I don't understand why isn't told."

magine the dean's going to leave that till the St. Andrew's Evensong. The sermon ind of—how shall I put it?"

ou mean—it's like a test?"

ra did not answer at once. Back over y years she remembered—or failed to mber—Lawrence's sermons. She searched ind. Surely, something memorable? Yes, had been an original angle on the parable e unjust steward, now she came to think es," she agreed, "a sort of test. But I it's a mere formality—the dean will ably ask your father to tea afterward, and offer him the job."

ut, mother, it's like an answer to prayer."

n answer to my prayer for you, darling, aps. Yes, I think it's meant that way. But see, darling, how frightfully important is for daddy? We've just got to put him in everything for the time being."

Mustn't we talk to him about it?"

Oh, no, it would be all wrong if the news from us."

e stopped. A waitress was standing by the More hot water, please," said Susan.

ıt Vera changed her mind. "No, I've got a l job I must do in the town, and you want e Mr. Hood, don't you? Let's meet at the station for the five-thirty."

ey came out to the High Street. Kissing daughter, Vera watched her go down street. Then she walked up the hill and t into a jeweler's shop.

e had to wait some moments. A fat, over- sed woman was making a fuss about a l necklace which had not been properly ired, and Mr. Handley, the jeweler, was mining it. A girl assistant came to the nter. "No, thank you," said Vera, "I'm ing to see Mr. Handley."

Now the fat woman had gone and Mr. Handley was looking at Vera. She opened her handbag, produced two rings.

"These are the rings I phoned you about, Mr. Handley." She realized that she was sinking her voice. Then she raised it as though to let everyone know she was selling jewelry. What on earth was there to be ashamed of? The fact that they had been her mother's rings, what difference did that make?

An age passed while Mr. Handley pored over them. "Very nice work. We really can't rival it today."

Vera took a quick breath. "Then you would be able to ——"

He shook his head. "I'm afraid I couldn't offer you more than twenty-five pounds for the pair. There's hardly any demand for Edwardian jewelry. I have a friend who specializes in the Edwardian and late Victorian—would you care to leave them so that I can show them to him?"

She hesitated. Then, in a strange mounting anger, she spoke. "No. I'll take them, thank you. Not a penny less than a hundred pounds would be of any use to me. And they're worth more than that."

To her annoyance she banged the door of the shop. What a waste of energy it had all been, she thought. Anyway, they could do without the money now. It was only a matter of tiding over the next few months.

In only six days, Lawrence told himself, he would be standing in the pulpit in the nave of the cathedral, preaching to a great company of boys. He sat staring at torn-up sheets of paper.

Getting up, he found a straggle of tobacco in the tin. It was almost dark, yet not dark enough to draw the curtains. For two hours he had been wrestling with something that daily grew more impossible. "Run, that ye may obtain. . . ."

He heard a car coming along the drive. Looking out, he saw a small two-seater. A young man got out, then Vera and Susan. He went out to the hall to let them in.

"Oh, Lawrence darling, wasn't it nice? Susan's friend, Kenneth Foley, met us and gave us a lift home."

"That's splendid! Come into the study, Mr. Foley. I've looked forward to meeting you."

"Are you sure you aren't busy, dear?" asked Vera.

"No, no! Glad of a break."

Kenneth looked quickly around the study in the glow of the fire. It was much as he had imagined: untidy, yet easy and inviting. "I've

"Oh, that five dollars? Well, sir, I went on a splurge—had a gay wild time and blew in the whole business on four lamb chops. Why do you ask?"

You'll find a new decorating thrill in

SUPER KEM-TONE Applikay TRADE MARK

lovely designs you ROLL ON your walls!

Now you can have exquisite designs on your walls . . . distinctive patterns and effects in wonderful variety. Beautiful decorative possibilities are unlimited with APPLIKAY designs and colors over SUPER KEM-TONE colors. And you can do it so easily . . . the special APPLIKAY twin roller does the work . . . rolls on the APPLIKAY design right over your SUPER KEM-TONE walls. APPLIKAY bonds itself to SUPER KEM-TONE, smooth as silk; and, when dry, both are completely washable. See APPLIKAY wherever SUPER KEM-TONE is sold.

$2.19 Pint
. . . enough to do the average room

FREE!

"The Home Decorator"

. . . 44 colorful pages full of wonderful decorating ideas. Write Sherwin-Williams, 1105 Midland Bldg., Cleveland 1, O.

THE SHERWIN WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Applikay are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit . . . W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh . . . The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton . . . John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia . . . The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago . . . Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

hoped to meet you for some time, Mr. Hearne," he said. "Susan and I have got . . . quite friendly."

"Yes, I know. You're on the staff of the Echo, aren't you?"

"That's right. Pretty dreary."

"Weddings, funerals, flower shows, with diamond weddings thrown in as a diversion."

Kenneth laughed. "I did manage to get a line in on the Potter murder case last year. Since then, nothing worth writing up."

"Oh, that dreadful case. How odd to think that to fellows in your job it could prove useful. It makes you wonder about the mystery of evil, doesn't it?"

"In what way, Mr. Hearne?"

"I mean . . . it's the wretched murderer who gives the judge and the police—and we'll include you and me—their livings, isn't it? Wipe out murder, the effect might be chaotic. There's a line for you, Foley. Write something sensational on the origin and purpose of evil."

Kenneth laughed. "That's out of my line, I'm afraid. Why don't you do it yourself, sir? Some editors are very keen on contributions from the clergy now that religion seems to be so dead —— Oh. I'm sorry, I didn't mean that."

"Don't mind what you say to me, please. Religion is pretty dead if you go by the numbers that attend orthodox places of worship."

Lawrence paused, standing by the table and turning the pages of an issue of the National Geographic Magazine. It was his one monthly diversion.

"Are you a Christian?" he murmured.

Kenneth hesitated. "I don't think I am really. I never go to church."

"Were you baptized?"

"Oh, yes. My mother and father thought that was the right thing to do, I suppose. I remember when my young brother Peter was confirmed a few years ago, I felt that I ought to think it all out. But somehow, I never did."

"You have a young brother?"

"Yes. He's at St. Andrew's School."

Lawrence suddenly felt timid. "Does he like it there?"

"Not much. He says it's moldy with tradition. He was saying only last night he was thinking of going on strike and refusing to be present at the annual Founder's Day service."

"Was he? What would happen if he saw that threat through?"

"Oh, mother and I dissuaded him. It would mean the sack probably and ruin his chances of a scholarship to Cambridge."

There was a voice outside. "Are you coming to have tea, Lawrence, dear?"

"Yes, yes," the vicar called back. Drawing his arm through Kenneth's, he went slowly out to the hall. "Incidentally, Foley— very glad about you and Susan. What happens, I wish you luck. Come and again."

Later that evening, Lawrence was still in study. He had managed to scribble a few pa of his sermon, and felt easier about it. He reached a point where he had made a que tion: "God give us men! A time like this mands strong minds, true faith and — There his memory failed him.

He went to his bookshelves. The volu he needed was too high to reach. Drage out a small shelf ladder, he climbed the st and reached out toward the book. S denly he slipped, and found himself spra ing on the floor. A sick dizziness overca him, a pounding in his heart. He did not d to move.

The door opened and Vera came in. Acr the hall he could hear Susan playing the Ba Chromatic Fantasia.

Vera gave a cry and ran toward him. S helped him back to his desk chair. "Oh, poor dear—whatever were you doing?"

He felt the sweat tingling on his forehea "Very stupid of me," he murmured. stretched out too far—too far, Vera."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 136

They all use this ALKALIZING LAXATIVE that gives MORE COMPLETE RELIEF!

The big difference in Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is that it's an alkalizer as well as an ideal laxative! This means that in addition to giving wonderfully gentle and effective relief from irregularity, Phillips' also eases away the acid indigestion that usually accompanies it. Thus, Phillips' gives you better, much more complete relief than any single-purpose preparation.

What's more, two to four tablespoonfuls taken at bedtime work leisurely—without embarrassing urgency. So, when morning comes, you start the day feeling fine. Get Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—the best laxative money can buy.

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA

LIQUID or TABLETS
The convenient 4-ounce size ..... 28¢
The economical 12-ounce size ..... 55¢
The money-saving 26-ounce size ..... 85¢
Also available in tablet form, 30 tablets 28¢

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 72 & 73

Below is illustrated another version of a circular skirt. Sunburst stripes printed with pale blue and turquoise flowers. Write for complete information and where to buy.

Vogue Design No. 8476. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress or apron; 10 to 16, 28 to 34. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8586. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4600. One-piece dress and jacket; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. $1.50.

Junior Vogue Design No. 3596. One-piece dress, or jumper dress, blouse and skirt; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8590. "Easy to Make" blouses; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8584. Skirt; 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8493. "Very Easy to Make" blouse and cummerbund; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8578. One-piece dress: 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c. 1¾ yds. beading needed around collar of size 16.

Ordinary plastic bandage. There's no medication to protect against infection. So you fuss with bottles and cotton and applicators.

New CURAD plastic bandage. Already medicated — no fuss — no bother. And the medication doesn't sting. Or stain.

New CURAD® plastic bandage has the germ-fighter right in it!

(and it's painless!)

The built-in medication in new CURAD doesn't hurt... yet it's so effective no separate medication is needed

Waterproof, too! You can wash or bathe or do chores with a CURAD on. New CURAD is designed to stay on under water.

Here's the one and only leading bandage with a special medication already in it. New CURAD plastic bandage with Furacin*-Tyrothricin right in the pad. This is the wonder drug that in laboratory tests killed or inhibited all 28 common wound germs. No sting or stain. Check your medicine cabinet now. Get new CURAD right away.

*Eaton Laboratories, Inc., brand of nitrofurazone

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Company

FLESH COLOR or WHITE

Regular size 39¢

Economy size 69¢

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 135

She stared at him. "But are you sure you're all right, darling?"

"Yes, of course, Vera. I want to thank you, and Susan, for being so extraordinarily kind to me lately."

"Oh, Lawrence, I don't think I have been very kind."

"Yes, you have. And as to Susan—don't worry."

"I'm not worrying any more. How have you got on with your sermon, dear?"

"I don't know. Take a look at those pages."

Vera took the pages, brought them over to the fire and read them slowly. As she read, her heart sank. There was nothing wrong; but she had heard it all before.

"Oh, I like it," she said brightly. "It's just what the boys need."

There was a long silence. Then Lawrence laughed. "I expect I can liven it up somehow. I've still got five days. I'll sit up late and work on it. You go to bed, my dear."

The privilege of holding an annual Evensong in the cathedral on Founder's Day had been granted to the scholars of St. Andrew's School early in the nineteenth century. The date chosen was the Thursday before Passion Sunday.

And on the Thursday afternoon there trooped into the nave a long procession of boys, prefects, masters and the governors of the school. The sixty foundation scholars, wearing their dark purple gowns, formed a separate procession and were ushered into seats just under the pulpit. Hunkin, the oldest verger in the cathedral, performed this task with bitterness. This event was always a nightmare to him, from the moment when the great doors were thrown open and these gangs of noisy louts swarmed in to the moment when at last they left its holy peace—with chewing gum stuck under seats and toffee papers gummed in hymnbooks. Hunkin disliked anyone who came into the cathedral; could only tolerate those who were paid of cials of the place, in some capacity—even t cleaners. But above all, he hated this rabb from St. Andrew's.

Each year a new preacher was asked to d liver a special sermon. And because of so lar a congregation, the service was held in t nave, not in the chancel. The choristers hat it because there was no anthem, only hymr It could safely be said that this Evensong which had originally been planned as an i spiration and encouragement to the scholars had become the dreariest and most meanin less farce of the scholastic year.

So here we go again, thought Martin Hoo peering through the carved woodwork of t choir screen at the rapidly filling chairs. H was feeling unusually cynical that afternoo He fell into a march in B-flat major. Couplin the full swell at the right dramatic moment just as the choristers were turning the corn from the transept and climbing up the da steps—he killed the sound of six hundr shuffling feet as they rose, in a stormy modul tion to B major, then slid down again rapid to his original key—sighing away to silence the knees fell upon moth-eaten hassocks.

Lawrence was on his knees, his hands cove ing his face. He had never preached in t cathedral before; never, in fact, preached so large a congregation. But here he was, h sermon on the desk before him; and as eve second ticked on the moment came nearer.

Mercifully the service seemed to go ve quickly—and here they were again at a hym This time he did not even consciously hear t words, as he slowly began to walk to the win ing steps of Bishop Crichton's pulpit.

Now he was standing before the readin desk, he had placed his Testament before hin opened the pages of his manuscript. Raisin his head, he forced himself to look dow along the nave as the last verse of the hym was reached. He knew that Vera and Susa were somewhere, but did not try to loca them. One figure caught his eye: a gooc looking young man with a bored air, yawnin It was Kenneth Foley. Then his gaze fell to t seats immediately below him. A boy of abo seventeen had surreptitiously brought o from his jacket pocket a small Oxford editio of some classic and was opening it, as thoug to settle to some decent reading. Lawren could not help smiling; this was a sensib child.

A sudden thought gripped him: all thes young lives—how long had each one of the in which to accomplish whatever they wante or had been meant to accomplish? For a se ond Lawrence closed his eyes. He knew that h was extending this silence beyond a reasonabl point. The words of his text, "Run, that y may obtain," were on his tongue—but h could not speak.

Suddenly his gaze fell again on that one bo who was frowning over a difficult sentence i his book.

Not aware of any particular thought in hi mind, Lawrence quietly took the pages of hi sermon, held them out in the air and tore ther in two. Then he tore these half pages again and dropped the pieces on the floor.

"You have just seen me tear up a sermon was going to preach to you on this importan occasion—your Founder's Day. Although took great trouble to compose it, the truth is all the time I was writing it I felt that it did no really contain anything to encourage you t look at your lives with more-seeing eyes. S that is why I have torn it up. What I am goin to try to say to you will come from my heart."

Lawrence was aware that the boy with th Oxford classic was sitting forward, his chi cupped in his hands. The pulpit had suddenl become comfortable; he felt that he was a home in his old armchair, talking to on person.

"You and I are travelers through thi strange and challenging journey we call by the name 'Life.' Most of you are young, and you will certainly think of me as being old. But I can't say I feel old; I only feel, as I hope you feel, that I am starting out on a voyage of dis-covery.

"It is a proper tradition for a Christ preacher to take a text from Scripture. S

Forest Lace print . . . keyed to Pacific's monotone Fleetwood Towels for a Decorator-mated ensemble

Newsiest ever!—Pacific's Decorator Towels

Causing talk, talk, talk . . . Pacific's new bathing beauty, showered front and back with leaves. Co-ordinated with its own monotone towel-mate, the ensemble is just one from a new Decorator series . . . all in Supersorb terry, fluffy as a powder puff on your skin. Choose from an array of colors. Super-big bath sheet, 36" x 78", about $5. Bath towels, about $2. Hand towels and face cloths, too. At all fine stores.

PACIFIC MILLS, 1407 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18, N. Y.

PACIFIC SUPERSORB TOWELS

ake as my text words which you will find Matthew's Gospel: 'Take no thought r what ye shall speak: for it shall be ou in that same hour ——' In that faith go on.

st now, I spoke of 'trite statements.' sort of statements? I mean . . . state- on which most of us hang our destiny— ats on a hatstand we have never even l at closely. Statements which you have ard repeated over and over: about the om of Heaven; about future rewards for established on this earth; about punish- in hell for sins committed. Now don't way with the idea that I am a mere clast—that I wish to discredit the ian scheme of belief. I certainly don't. It interpretation of such statements I on—and ask you to question. Were or example—intended to pursue through- l the days of our lives a deadly policy of first,' simply because we were afraid of g mistakes which might merit punish- hereafter? Believe me, God doesn't care e man who never dares to make a misppose that hatstand were suddenly ed away, and we found we had nothing ng our tattered old hats and caps on? there might come to our minds—if we the Gospels at all—a remarkable state- accredited to our Lord in St. Luke's el. The Pharisees have asked Him when kingdom of God' shall come. And His er is: 'It cometh not with observation'— annot expect to find it here or there. It is n fact ——" wrence deliberately paused, leaned for- , and spoke very quietly. "—— it is not, t, necessarily a future state of blessedness l. For the Lord continues: 'The kingdom od is within you.'" paused again, as though to listen to the ds within himself.

don't want to weary you with any theo- al interpretation of that remarkable state- . I am only going to point out that if you hine it—if you really take it as a new and ound summing up of the essential mystery r lives—it will probably upset your whole ept of heaven as a place where angels sing harps are played and a lot of virtuous ple sit around and do . . . well, do what? really don't know.

To return to the Gospels. Jesus gives us y hints about this extraordinary kingdom: ll come like a thief in the night, it will grow n a grain of mustard to a huge tree, and n. His analogies are always exciting— len, swift and bold. What I do suggest to young or old, thinking of life or thinking eath, is that we might all be very much aken to pin our hopes to this future state lessedness, this negative condition.

ook at it this way. Suppose you don't tell don't rob your friends, you don't give way hat are called impure or wicked thoughts, you go to church twice every Sunday. pose you do all that; and then suppose you nd out that there was no special sort of ard for any of these actions—would you that you had done them all for the wrong son? Would you perhaps then come to ize that your heaven is here and now—not nething round the corner but something ch is the intrinsic part of this very living ment—while I am talking to you and you listening?

Does that idea find an answering echo in ir hearts? I believe it does. I believe that all us really feel that life is such a wonderful ng that every second of it is more precious n any conception of a future state can ever And what I want to say to you is: if you do ll that, then trust your feelings more, and nk less."

Suddenly Lawrence's easy conversational nner changed. His voice rang out in a di- t command:

"Turn your heads and look at that magnifi- nt west window!"

Three hundred young heads swiveled round; ler people tried to pretend they had eyes in backs of their necks.

"As you probably know, three hundred irs ago, before Cromwell's troops smashed at window, each pane of glass went to make a picture of a saint or a martyr, or holy man or woman of God. When, later, they came to assemble the broken bits, it was impossible to find the original design. Stupid vandalism had wrecked forever what had been a perfect pattern. So the builders did what they could; they put the pieces back at random, saving even the tiniest precious chip of colored glass, and they hoped for the best. 'It shall all be there,' they said, 'even if we can't see it as it was before.' That is what God has done to us—this miracle of reconstruction—losing nothing through the tragedy of our fall from grace. There, in that window, you have a picture of human life as it really is—our triumphs, follies, tears, laughter, what is called good, what is called bad, all mixed up in kaleidoscopic confusion. Try as you will, you cannot see the pattern clearly. Sometimes the setting sun will show you hints of what it was like. And yet it is there—it's all there—if you had but the power to reassemble it properly. Read that wonderful window—it has more to tell you than any book—and come to think of the whole span of your lives as being existent, here and now—then I believe you will learn to realize that merely to live life on a strictly moral basis is to be like a man who has twenty grand suits in his wardrobe and never dares put them on in case it rains."

Halfway down the nave, Kenneth Foley was scribbling rapidly in his notebook.

"Don't run away with the false idea," continued Lawrence, "that you are at liberty to live life on an immoral basis—far from it! But in this struggle between the good and the evil if you are not careful—or rather, if you are too careful, too much on guard against the snares of the devil—you may miss the whole point of living—which is to realize your own true pattern.

"Life is—here and now. As Mr. Eliot says 'Quick now, here, now, always.' What, then, are you going to do about it? 'Ridiculous,' says Eliot, 'the waste sad time, stretching be-

Wonderful Pacific Contours!...precision-tailored, Sanforized® — they can't wrinkle, can't come un-tucked!

Most-wanted ever!—famous Pacific Contour

Pacific Contour Corner gives 3-times faster bedmaking!

...the box-cornered wonder with the deep tuck-under that keeps your sheet taut, that never droops at the sides. No re-tucking in the morning! Pacific Contours are Sanforized®...have an inherent "elasticity" which keeps them smooth—all week. There's only one genuine Contour—for Contour is the registered trademark for Pacific's mattress-fitting sheets. White, Pink, Maize, Green, Blue, Lilac. In muslin, percale, and new Miracale†—the most luxurious sheet you ever dreamed on!

EVERYBODY'S CHANGING TO PACIFIC Contour® SHEETS

† TM Pacific Mills

fore and after.' Are you going to waste life in miserable speculation on how much money and worldly goods you will have—what sort of pension there will be when you are over sixty—or are you going to treat life as an adventure, setting out on the road, as the Lord commanded, with no thought of the morrow, no purse, no caution as to your next step? I suggest to you all—boys who have faith and courage, as you sit here in a building which is one of the supreme glories of Europe—unless you forget how to be careful you may end by not being able to be anything else. Suppose you suddenly knew your last day had come? And you looked back, and saw that, through a policy of timidity, you had accomplished nothing? Then you might indeed endure the pains of hell—the pain of knowing that you had never looked on all the familiar things around you and seen how grand and rich they were: the face of a friend, an unfolding flower, a river in full spate; all such things would have tremendous importance for you, and you would realize only one thing: if this earthly life is all that there is—and remember, as Dean Inge was fond of pointing out, we priests can really tell you no more about that than any other man—then it is tremendously important; if, on the other hand, it is but a hint of the full clear pattern, which the window in its day of glory revealed, then life becomes infinitely more important.

"That is all I want to say to you. Except, in the words of the great Advent message, 'Be careful for nothing. But rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say, rejoice!'"

The cathedral was loud with sound. Hood was playing Stanford's Sonata Britannica, and boys were tumbling out into the sun which streamed in through the west window. One of them threaded his way in the opposite direction. An Oxford classic, a copy of Plato's Dialogues, stuck out of his pocket.

As Vera and Susan stood aside to let the boys past, Kenneth Foley came up to them. "Look," he said, "I'll meet you in the Refectory in about twenty minutes. I've just remembered a bit of telephoning I must do; do you mind?"

"No, of course not, Kenneth," said Vera. Her voice was dull and distant.

"I thought Mr. Hearne preached a marvelous sermon," said Kenneth.

"It was the best he ever preached," said Susan. "We're just going to have a word with him before he goes round to the deanery."

Up in the transept, the boy waited. Vera and Susan came up there too. The dean was talking to Mr. Lambert. Vera watched them nervously, but could not hear what the dean said.

Suddenly she started forward. Lawrence was pulling on his old mackintosh. Just as she was about to go to him, the boy darted forward.

"Mr. Hearne, may I speak to you, sir?"

"Yes, of course." Lawrence rubbed his hands across his eyes as though he felt tired.

"I thought it was a fine sermon, sir. I never expected anything like it. Some of the fellows asked me if I'd ask you to address our debating society. Will you, sir?"

"I'll certainly think about it. Thank you very much for asking me."

The boy was about to say more, but a fa red-faced clergyman came waddling towa them. It was Tom Hayley, of Compton Mars "Well, well—what am I going to call you Hearne the Heretic?"

Lawrence blinked. "That sounds like som thing gone wild in Windsor Forest, Hayley

At last Vera managed to catch Lawrence eye. "I'm so sorry, dear," he said, "that yo and Susan can't join me. But the dean didn think to ask you, and ——"

"It doesn't matter, dear. We're going to th Refectory with Kenneth Foley." Then, whe he did not answer, she muttered, "How cou you have been so foolish?"

Without another word, she caught Susan arm and hurried through the transept gates.

Lawrence shook his head a little sadly. H did not wish to take tea with the dean, but that moment the dean came up to him. "Sha we go, Mr. Hearne?"

All through tea the dean talked about noth ing but exotic shrubs, showing Lawrence hi collection of photographs. On the whole Lawrence enjoyed the tea, though he felt a the time he was expected to say something and never could, except to mumble, "Ah yes a friend of mine once had a paulownia which thrived in the worst soil ——"

At half past five, as the sun was fallin through the window in noble streams of re and orange, he was glad to get up and go, an profoundly grateful to the dean for making no reference, even obliquely, to his sermon. Onl at the door Wetherby said, "Mr. Lambert ha hoped to come to tea to meet you, but I fear h was detained on school business."

"Oh, a pity," mumbled Lawrence, wonder ing why Lambert should wish to meet him anyway.

Just as he was about to close the door, the dean said, "Next time you preach in the cathedral, Mr. Hearne, we must see that you have a wastepaper basket in the pulpit." Then he closed the door quietly.

GOING PLACES

IN THE

EASTER PARADE IN

Little Yankee Shoes

For Toddlers, Teens, In-Betweens!

Don't settle for less than the best when you get your children shoes this Easter. Get the quality you want, the style you want, the fit you want . . . at a price you want to pay—from $4.50 to $8.95. Get Little Yankee Shoes!

Designed with fit in mind

Little Yankee Shoes

THE YANKEE SHOEMAKERS, Division of Sam Smith Shoe Corp., Newmarket, N. H.

Delight your guests! Give your home a party dress — with colorful trimmings of Dennison Crepe Paper. The party starts in a festive atmosphere with easy-to-make decorations and favors. Dennison Crepe Paper and Streamers come in a rainbow of brilliant colors.

For party ideas get "PARTIES WITH PURPOSE" at retailers, or send 25¢ to:

Dennison
Manufacturing Company
Framingham, Massachusetts

Martin Hood reread the letter he had just written to a friend in London, not sure whether he wanted to post it.

A record of Segovia was playing. It was one of his various antidotes to cathedral music. He got up, opened the windows and stepped out into the garden. He slipped the letter into its envelope, and walked to a door in the wall. Here there was a postbox and as he slipped the letter in he met Lawrence.

"My dear Mr. Hearne," he said, "you couldn't have turned up at a better moment. I am depressed, idle and irritable—and you must dispel all three vagaries by coming in and having a drink with me."

"That's very kind of you. As a matter of fact, I've just missed my bus, and ——"

"Splendid! Then you have an hour's wait."

As they went back through the door Martin touched Lawrence's arm, and said, "Do you know, yours was the first sermon I've heard in the cathedral that meant anything to me."

Lawrence stared. "I can't believe that."

"Oh, yes! I can assure you, it's nothing but drivel Sunday after Sunday."

Martin closed the windows and lit the gas fire. "Now, will you have a spot of gin?"

"No, thanks. I hardly ever take spirits."

"Sherry, then?" Martin poured him a drink, pointed him to a chair, and raised his own glass. "To the present," he said. "Here and now!"

"Ah!" Lawrence smiled. "You liked that bit, then?"

"I liked that bit very much. Mr. Hearne, I want to ask you something. I believe you're the only person I could ask, and get an honest answer. Is it a violation of one's truest nature to suddenly throw up all that you had once believed to be true—and walk out?"

Lawrence thought before replying. "The best way to answer that question," he said, "is to ask another. If you knew you were going to die in a week's time, how would you spend the next seven days?"

"I suppose it might depend on your age, to some extent."

"Well, then, let's say we're talking of a man in his late thirties—you, for example."

Martin laughed. "Yes. Me. I'm desperate, you know. Five years ago, I was full of enthusiasm—very proud of myself. Now, do you know how I see the organ loft? It's a prison."

"In that sense, Mr. Hood, all life is a prison. Your only freedom lies inside yourself. It doesn't matter what you do."

"If that's true, then I'd like to cut my throat."

LAWRENCE got up. He felt distressed by the weight of unhappiness in this man. "Listen, my dear chap—what do you want to do?"

"I just want to throw up my job here. I can't believe in the daily routine of organized Christianity. I can't hear the word of God any longer from these frostbitten canons—who mouth the Bible as though it were Bradshaw, and ——"

Lawrence interrupted with sudden anger. "You have no right to criticize those who are only trying to do their duty as they see it. Forgive me, but one hears so much criticism of the clergy, and one gets weary of it. We are all human."

"I'm sorry," muttered Martin. "Yes, I see I'm wrong. But it doesn't make any difference to my own feelings."

"From what you've said, Hood"—Lawrence spoke more gently—"I should say you should certainly resign your position. You're young enough to start a new life, if you know what it is you want, which I rather doubt."

"Well, you're wrong. Because I do know."

Lawrence stared at him. "You do know? Then what in the name of heaven are you waiting for? If, at your age, I had suddenly realized that the priesthood had no meaning for me—do you think I would have dared to stay for one second where I was?"

"The odd thing is, Mr. Hearne, I had the strongest feeling when you were preaching today, that that is just how you do feel."

Lawrence was silent. Then, "No, I don't feel that. I believe I am an instrument through which God's will is meant to flow—and that I have to stay where I am as long as I am allowed to live. That may be, as you said, just a question of age. But, practically—what would happen to my wife and daughter if I did give up? Where would Susan's future be then?"

"Susan will not get anywhere merely because you are the prop, Mr. Hearne."

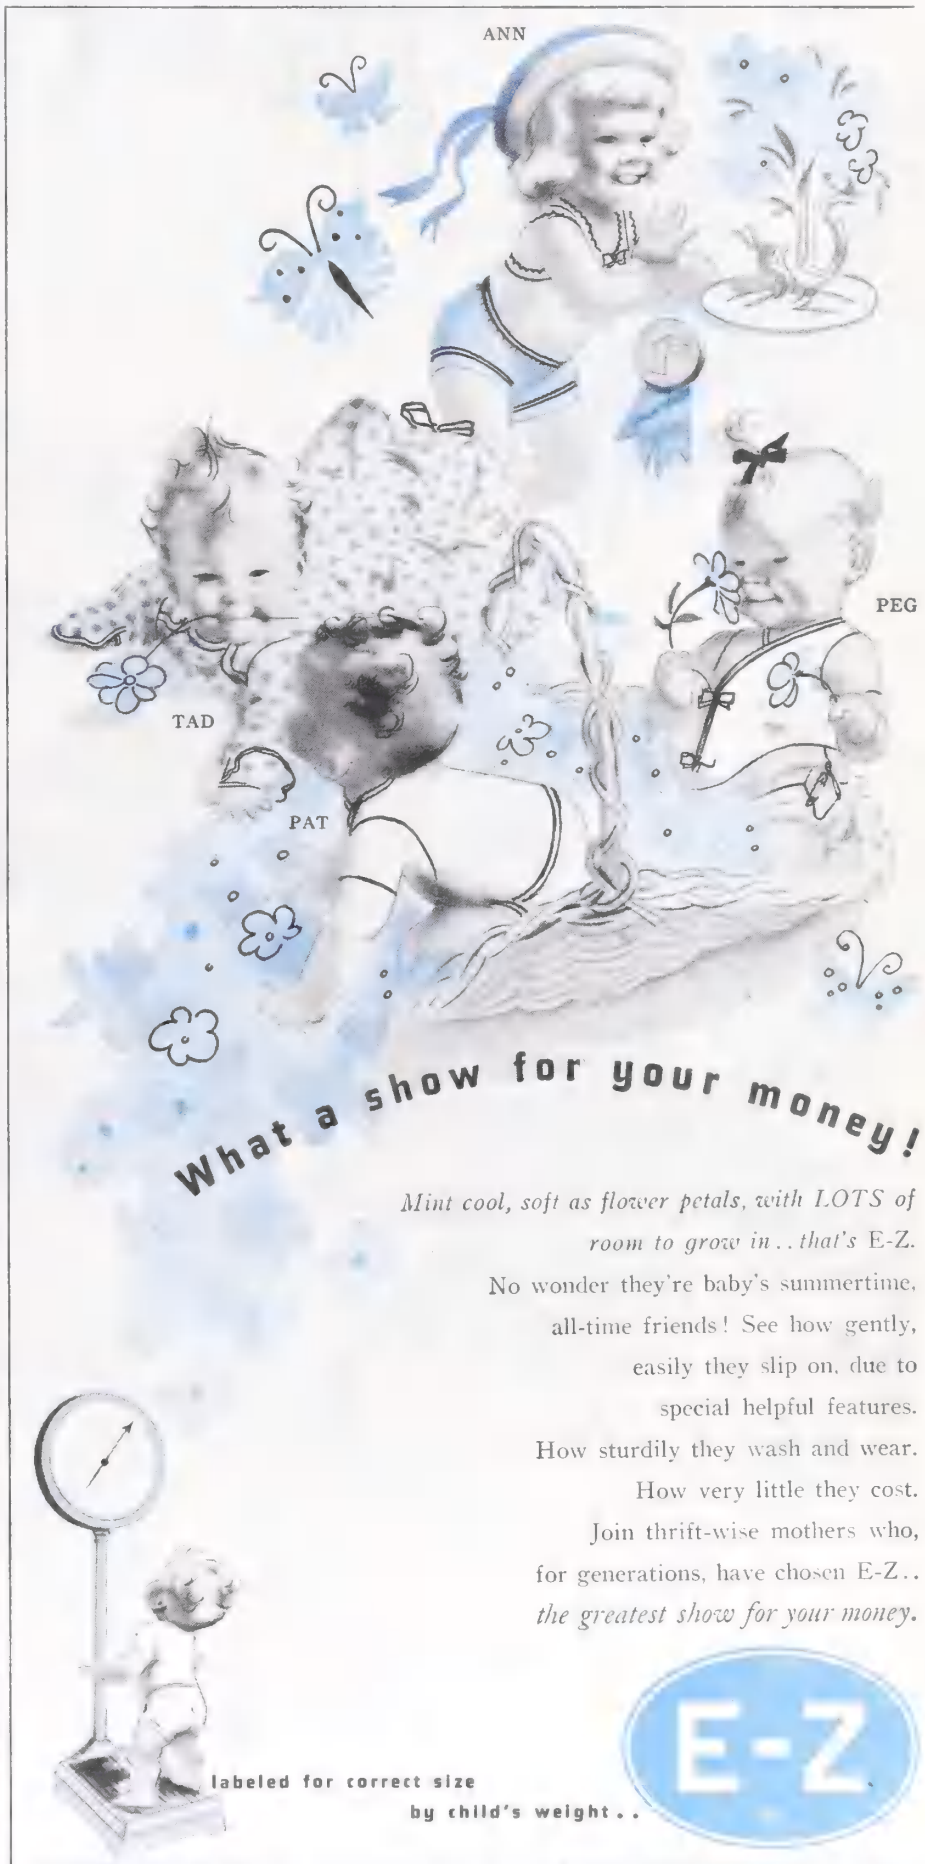
"You know quite well, Hood, that I am no sort of prop."

There was a long silence.

"Don't go on doing things that mean nothing. Do something." He turned at the door, and suddenly gave a deep chuckle. "Those are the last words," he said, "of Hearne the Heretic to Hood the Hunter."

When he returned to the vicarage, he found Vera sitting alone by the fire in the living room. There was a strained expression on her face; he realized she had been crying.

"I'm sorry, dear. I missed the five-thirty, and had to catch the next." He did not feel he wanted to tell her about his talk with Martin.



She stared at him. "Lawrence, did the dean say anything? I can't wait any more."

"Mercifully, no."

"And Mr. Lambert—didn't he say anything?"

"Mr. Lambert?" He was surprised. "He wasn't there. Apparently he had hoped to meet me, for some reason, but found he had another appointment ——"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 141

ANN's cool vest with tiny bow, tops panties, tinted gay as flowers . . bluebell, jonquil, poppy, pink, aqua, mint. Of soft combed cotton. Sizes 2 to 7, each 49¢; 8 to 14, vest 59¢, pantie 65¢.
PEG's comfortable tie-side shirt fits beautifully . . has FZ-HOLEPRUF diaper tapes for long service. Of soft combed cotton. Sizes 3 months to 2, 69¢.
TAD's gay gown ties warmly over his feet . . keeps small hands snug in convertible mitten cuffs. In E-Z's new wash-fast Animal Fair print. Infants sizes, 1.49.
PAT's soft combed cotton shirt goes on like a dream . . thanks to the smooth-fitting EZ-ON neck. Sizes 3 months to 3, 50¢. His panties are double thick. Sizes 1 to 3, 50¢.
AT LEADING STORES HERE AND IN CANADA . . E-Z MILLS, INC., NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAKE IT YOUR "BEST EVER" HAM

WITH

Nature's most refreshing flavor

TROPIC-FRESH IN CANNED PINEAPP

Ham or any meat without canned Pineapple is all very well—with Pineapple it's special! New taste delight...and glamor too...come to the simplest dishes when you add this golden fruit. So as you plan main-course dishes...salads, desserts or bakings... take down a can from your "PINEAPPLE SHELF." Appetizing variations in recipes and menus are e with 5 forms to choose from. Count on canned Pineapple—with flavor born under the tropic sun—to lift meals out of the ordinary!

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Fr

Baked Ham crowned with Pineapple Slices: In uncovered pan, bake ham in slow oven, fat side up according to directions for type of ham used. Take from oven ½ hour before done, remove rind, spread thinly with prepared mustard and sprinkle with brown sugar. Then spread drained Pineapple Slices on ham and continue baking until browned and glacéed.

CHUNKS of canned Pineapple (bite size) are fine for fruit servings, to sauté with meats, for hors d'oeuvres, as cake decorations

CRUSHED canned Pineapple, good to eat "as is," also makes delicious pies, cookies, puddings, icings, sundaes and sauces

TIDBITS of canned Pineapple are favorites for salads, fruit cups, to sprinkle on puddings and cereals

PINEAPPLE JUICE tastes best when you chill and shake (or stir) each can before serving

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 139

She interrupted, her voice rising angrily. For some reason! Can you stand there and ell me you don't know the reason?"

"I don't understand, Vera."

"Then you really didn't know?" Her voice as hard and cold. "It never struck you that he dean had a reason for asking you to preach oday?"

"It certainly bewildered me a bit. I couldn't hink why he should ask an obscure parish riest to ——"

"Well, I'll tell you why. He was going to ask ou to accept the school chaplaincy—and the ving of St. Martin's Wendon goes with it. t would have meant fifteen hundred pounds a ear, Lawrence."

He stared at her. "Surely it can't be true?"

"It was true. It was all mapped out—and ou know what you've done, don't you?"

He began to realize all too fully what he had one. He had to think, he told himself, only of hat this had meant to Vera; in some way this ad ironical moment had to be redeemed. Yet he only truth he had at his command with which to answer Vera's bitter resentment was the fact of his own mortal illness. And this he ould not use.

She was repeating her question, her oice, shrill. "You now what you've done? When you tore up your sermon you willfully tore up Susan's future."

"Vera, before God, I assure you—I never did anything willfully. I acted only as I felt I had to act."

"What you have done, Lawrence, is to throw away the one chance that will ever come our way. But I'm not standing by and seeing Susan waste her life. I've tried and tried and tried—for twenty years now—and what has it brought me?"

Suddenly the door burst open, and Susan came quickly into the room, holding a cup and a drying cloth in her hands.

"Stop it, mother!" she cried. "Don't go on at daddy like that—I can't bear it. I don't want to go to London ——"

"You're not to say that!" cried Vera. Crossing the room in a fury of anger, she seized the cup from Susan's hands and dashed it on the floor. "I won't have you sacrificed, Susan. It means everything to me, everything ——"

Her voice trailed off into anguished sobs. Lawrence went quickly toward Vera, but Susan put her arms round her, and shook her head. "No," she muttered. "Please leave her to me, daddy."

As they went upstairs, Lawrence, standing stiff and heart-stricken, heard Vera sobbing, "Oh, I'm so sorry, Susan. Try to forget you ever saw me like that—just try to forget ——"

As Lawrence closed the door in the garden wall behind him he realized he was a little late. Nicky had stopped ringing the two bells, and was now pulling on one. Usually, the one bell started at three minutes to eight, as Lawrence let himself in by the vestry door.

No good hurrying, he told himself; yet he found it difficult not to, simply because in twenty years he had hardly ever been even a minute late for any service. He stopped a moment to get his breath. The effort to walk up the slightest hill had lately become greater.

The clock struck eight. Lawrence heard footsteps behind him, and turned to see Miss Roberts, the district nurse.

"Oh, vicar, forgive me, stopping you just before service, but I felt I had to speak to you about Mr. Bratley."

"He's not gone, I hope?"

"No, but Mrs. Bratley called me late last night, and I'm afraid he can't last long. He was all the time muttering your name and begged me to ask you to see him as soon as possible."

"I'll go straight there after the service."

The bell stopped as he went into the vestry.

Back in the vicarage, he did not stay for breakfast. Quickly drinking the tea which Susan had ready for him, he took his bicycle from the old coach house. Just before he left, he asked, "How is mother?"

"She's better. She's getting up now."

"Explain to her, will you? I must go to old John."

Halsey Farm was a mile and a half from the village. Fortunately, the wind was behind him, so cycling was not difficult. Within a few minutes he was pedaling down the cart track which led to the bleak stone building and its sheds. Leaving his bicycle against the wall, he pushed the gate open.

There was nobody in the yard. Tapping on the kitchen door, he waited a moment. "Is anybody there?" he called. There was no answer.

He stepped into the kitchen. Greasy plates were on the dirty tablecloth, which covered only half of the table; newspapers scattered about. A radio had been left on and a dance band was playing Some Enchanted Evening.

He called, "Are you there, Mrs. Bratley?"

He heard the gruff voice of old John. "That you, parson? Come up—come upstairs."

He climbed the narrow stairs and pushed open the door of the small room where the farmer lay.

It was some time since Lawrence had seen John Bratley, and he found it difficult to repress the shock he felt. This was the shadow of the man he had known for twenty years—the heavy head against the pillows, the white beard, the roving burning eyes, the great ungainly hands which could not keep still.

"Parson, I'm glad ye've come. I've been wanting to speak to you for days."

Lawrence sat on the side of the bed. "You're troubled, John. How can I help you?"

"I'm finished, see? There's a damned old robin been trying to get in the window—and I shut the window, and she comes up and tries to open it, says I must have air. Damn her."

"John, is it any good having feelings like that about her now?" Lawrence put his hand on the farmer's hand as it lay on the coverlet.

John growled. "You know, they all know why she married me. For what she could get—and as soon as I'm gone she'll have it all—and that Willie Furze. But there's one thing she's not going to have, parson—and that's the little bit I've saved for Jim when he come home."

"If you want your savings to go to Jim, you only have to make it clear in your will."

The old man pulled out a small key from under the pillow. "This is what she been trying to get," he muttered. "Unlock that drawer, parson." John pointed to the rickety chest of drawers across the room. When Lawrence unlocked the drawer he saw an old black leather dispatch case inside. "Take it out," ordered the farmer.

Lawrence did so.

John tried to pull himself up. His eyes roved toward the window, his hand reached out to pull back the dirty lace curtains.

"Let me do it," said Lawrence.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 143

How to make a smooth, easy Hollandaise Sauce for fish and vegetables

½ cup butter (1 stick)
2 egg yolks
1 tbsp. fresh lemon juice
Cayenne pepper

You can't beat the real thing—real butter

Step No. 1. Divide stick of butter into thirds. Place one-third in top of double boiler. Use very little water in bottom of boiler—just enough to heat top pan but not to touch it. Use medium heat so water is hot but NOT boiling. Melt butter.

You taste the difference even more on hot foods

Step No. 2. Add lemon juice, cayenne pepper and egg yolks and mix well. Stir constantly with wooden spoon while cooking. As soon as mixture starts to thicken, turn off heat.

Butter is churned from 100% real cream

Step No. 3. If mixture thickens too rapidly, lift top, allow heat to escape. Replace and continue stirring. Add second one-third of butter and mix well. Then add third portion of butter and mix. Use wooden spoon.

Your family deserves real butter

Step No. 4. Serve with asparagus, broccoli or other vegetables, broiled chicken or fish. Serve immediately —or if necessary this Hollandaise can be kept over warm water for as long as half an hour. If any separation occurs, just add a tablespoon or two of boiling hot water and mix again.

Foods made from real butter belong on your family table

This message is paid for by dairy farmers across the Nation as part of their program to show you how you can live better with foods made from milk

American Dairy Association

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer" ▪ 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois

Watch Disneyland on ABC-TV, Bob Crosby on CBS-TV

Aunt Jemima legend

Coax as long as they might, guests at Colonel Higbee's plantation never could get from Aunt Jemima the flavor secret of those wonderful pancakes.

What Aunt Jemima would never tell them...she got her matchless flavor with a blend of four flours

Wheat, corn, rye and rice flours were blended in the treasured Aunt Jemima recipe to give the tenderest, best-tasting pancakes anyone ever had.

Today, Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix is faithful to that recipe. It's produced now, of course, with all the advantages of modern milling methods.

Over the years as other pancake mixes have come and gone, none ever made pancakes with such flavor as the Aunt Jemima brand. Really, it's true: You can't duplicate in a homemade batter or get with any other mix the matchless flavor of Aunt Jemima pancakes. For a special treat team up that flavor with fresh asparagus in the delightful springtime way shown here.

ASPARAGUS ROLL-UPS. Prepare pancakes according to Deluxe recipe on the Aunt Jemima package. Roll each hot pancake around several spears of cooked asparagus. Serve with cheese sauce. Garnish each roll-up with a strip of pimiento or sprinkle with paprika.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 141

...lo, leave it. I thought she were coming. ..., I made a will, parson—it's all proper, as ...said. The house and land go to her—as I ...ised when I married her. But what's in ... case—that goes to Jim. I've put it in the ... and I've said I'm passing it over to you to ... in trust for him like, when he comes ...."

...But, John, this ought to be done properly, ... a solicitor present."

...here aren't time. She'd stop me. I wrote a ... to Hodgkins and Witney and told 'em ... I wanted done. Now you take it, par-...-take it quick before she sees you."

...How much money is there here, John?"

...Well nigh seven hundred pound—I haven't ...ked it proper, in case she catch me. She ...t know how much it is, parson."

...Very well, John. I'd better count it now, so ... we are agreed as to the amount."

...he old man's hand ... out quickly. "No. ...might come up any ...ute—and if she see ...e notes spread out ...the bed, she'll go ...; she'll make it ...se for me." The ...ther caught Law-...e's hands with an ... grip. "You got to ...his for me, parson! ...re's no one else I ... trust. Now get out ...k—before she see ..."

...'ll have to talk to ... about it," warned ...rence. But the ...her did not answer. ... hands fell away ... Lawrence, his eyes ...ed, a deep painful ... came from his lips. ... a moment Lawrence ...ght the end had ...e.

...ut suddenly John ...ned his eyes, and a ... smile flickered on ... face. "That old ...n won't beat me ..." he muttered. "'Tis ...nny thing—life and ...th—I lie here and ...k what wrong I ...e, and yet I don't ...eve I been more ...ked than most peo-..."

"John, have you ...ught of praying?"

"What for?" The ...e came in a whisper. "Won't stop me dying, ... it?"

"No. But it will help you to die, John."

"You do that for me—up in church. 'Tis ...r job. I done mine."

Hanging over the fireplace, Lawrence saw ... framed words, "God bless this home." ...d he remembered ... line of Eliot's: "Home ...where you come from."

...As he went down to the kitchen, there was ... no sign of life. This is an impossible situa-...n, he thought; I must find Mrs. Bratley, I ...pose. But it was absurd to go in search of ... now; better to ask her to come and see him.

...Vera stood in the hall, turning the pages of ...imetable. There was a small suitcase beside ... "Yes," she said to Susan, "I'll catch the ...ven-twenty. Darling, don't worry. I'm quite ... right."

..."I only want you to know, mother, you ...edn't go up on my behalf."

..."I'm not just going to town on your behalf, ... you put it. It's time I saw Edna, anyway. ...u don't mind looking after daddy for a day ... so, do you?"

..."Of course I don't."

...HE front door opened, and Lawrence came ... with Farmer Bratley's dispatch case under ... arm. Vera went quickly to him.

..."Oh, I'm glad you've come. Is he very bad?"

..."Yes, very," he answered and walked to-...rd the study with the dispatch case.

"Darling, can I talk to you?"

"Is it something important, Vera?" Then he noticed she was dressed for going out. "Are you off somewhere?"

"I want to go to London." She paused, then went on quickly: "It will pull me together. After a day or so with Edna and George I always want to come back—and everything will seem fresh and alive again. Do you understand, darling?"

"BUT of course!" He was, in fact, greatly relieved.

"Can you forget last night, dear?"

He put his arms round her. "The things I cannot forget," he said, "are the thousands of loving acts you have done for me over all these years. God bless us, Vera! We'll pull through somehow."

"But of course we shall. And so will Susan—I know," Vera replied.

His fingers were on the case, absent-mindedly fingering the clasp, his mind still on the scene in John's bedroom.

"What's that?" asked Vera.

He laughed ironically. "Poor old John! It's his savings—given to me in trust for Jim. Isn't it pathetic, Vera? The old man hating to die, and his one thought that his wife might get this money. Seven hundred pounds—that's all he could think of, on the brink of eternity."

"Seven hundred pounds? But that's a lot of money, Lawrence."

"Yes. I shall have to bank it—then see the solicitor, I suppose." Opening the case, he peered inside. There were several bundles of bank notes, most of them tattered and greasy. Pushing the case aside, he changed the subject. "What train are you catching?"

"The eleven-twenty."

In the hall, the phone rang. "Susan will go," said Vera. Suddenly she came close to Lawrence, and took his hands. "Kiss me, darling. I want to be forgiven. Really, I loved your sermon; it was the best you ever preached."

Susan appeared in the doorway. "Give you three guesses who it is," she said.

Lawrence groaned. "Dorothy Hunter?"

"Yes. Very important, she says. Tell her your breakfast's being ruined, daddy."

She hurried back to the kitchen as Lawrence went to the door.

"Shall I talk to her, darling?" Vera asked.

"No. I can deal with her quicker. What you can do for me, if you've got time—start counting that wretched money."

Urgent as usual, with the emphasis on the unexpected words, Dorothy's voice came over the line. "Oh, vicar—I hate bothering you, but I've just had a letter from my old friend Monica de Rugeley, and she says she will do us a Michael for five pounds, so reasonable."

"You mean for the children's corner?"

"Yes. Of course you know her work. Now, don't think I'm rushing you into anything—but if you will let me commission Monica I want to undertake to contribute half whatever the cost may be ——"

Lawrence broke in. "Could we leave it for the moment?"

"Well, now"—she paused, and even in a long pause she could still somehow hold the line, you could not ring off—"the point is simply this: Monica is terribly busy and she said she had just got a spare day or so while she is waiting for the wood for the crucifix she's doing for the Roman church in Barton—so this is really the moment to act, vicar, and ——"

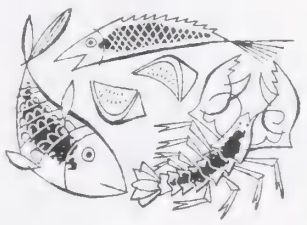
THE WINDFLOWER

By MARION LINEAWEAVER



I shall go softly along this Sunday,
Receiving peace. The sky is blue
As the veil of a madonna,
The sun is a blessing.
Birds, cool-throated,
Resting with folded wings,
Pour song into the breeze.

Willows and larches list over the river
In attitudes of grace.
In the cathedral quiet of the forest
Floats a pine incense. Columns of light
Stain the surrounding air glass-green.

Moving with care, I look among the ferns,
The fresh young leaves and moss,
And there, shining before me,
Five petals ajar,
White as the winds of heaven,
Blossoms a star.

Secrets from the Sunkist Kitchen

Tips for fish—Out here near the blue Pacific waters we think of tuna, swordfish, halibut, maybe abalone. But whether you serve Maine lobster, Gulf shrimp, or frozen fillets, there's no finer partner for fish or seafood than plenty of fresh lemon. So be sure to serve plump wedges—easier to handle.

Got a pullman kitchen? In small space or large, you can minimize cooking odors by rubbing fish inside and out with fresh lemon before frying or broiling. And a few squeezes of lemon juice while "defrosting" frozen fish perk up the flavor wonderfully . . . make it taste truly fresh-caught.

Rice goes so well with fish we might as well let you in on this secret: To keep rice white squeeze lemon into the cooking water.

SWEET-SOUR BARBECUED FISH

Sweet-sour barbecue sauce may be mixed ahead of time and stored in the refrigerator in a tightly covered jar until needed. Just remember to stir well before pouring over fish.

½ cup fresh Sunkist lemon juice
½ tsp. salt ½ tsp. black pepper
¼ cup salad oil 2 tbsp. grated onion
1 tsp. dry mustard
2 tbsp. brown sugar

Mix ingredients well, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Place 1 pound fish fillets or fish steaks in shallow pan and pour sauce over. With pan about 2 inches from heat, broil fish on both sides until brown and tender, basting frequently with sauce. Serve immediately.

If spuds could sputter—they might yelp "How different can you be!" But just try this and see: To your mashed potatoes add chopped parsley, butter—and lemon juice—just before serving. Surprisingly better!

We've compiled some of the finest main-dish recipes known in a valuable little folder called, "Favorite Lemon Recipes for Fish and Meat." It's FREE. Just write us at Sunkist, Section 204, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, California.

Counting calories? Whether you're dieting strenuously or just trying your best to hold that waistline, here's an easy way to drop 200 to 300 calories from your daily diet:

1. Instead of mayonnaise or oil dressing, make your salads tasty and tantalizing with a generous sprinkling of fresh Sunkist lemon juice!

2. Instead of topping hot vegetables with a pat of butter, squeeze over them a generous wedge of Sunkist Lemon. Try it!

Easy way to cut lemon meringue pie: dip knife in warm water before each cut. Makes a clean cut without sticking. To keep meringue from being runny, watery, or from falling, add 1 tsp. lemon juice to 3 unbeaten egg whites.

Worried? Tense? Take time for tea—hot, tangy. Lowest in calories. Highest in true refreshment. Least trouble. And so delicious with slim slices or wedges of lemon to give it piquant flavor.

Tea-with-lemon, of course, is true American style and rightly so. An eighth of a lemon has only two calories—compared with 50 calories for ½ ounce of cream.

Don't forget fresh lemons the next time you shop. Remember, only fresh lemons give you the true lemon flavor! There's just no substitute for that wonderful "lemony" aroma and tang of the fresh fruit! The best cooks use the most lemons. And the best recipes call for fresh Sunkist Lemons.

Fresh Sunkist Lemons

California-Arizona

so good so easy

so thrifty

PERFECT RICE IN ONLY 14 MINUTES!

What a joy to build meals around delicious easy-does-it River Brand or Carolina Brand Rice. Cooking time is cut to 14 minutes and you can be sure to have tender, fluffy, snowy-white rice everyone will enjoy. No compromise with flavor either! You get the natural flavor of white rice . . . just as nature intended. River Brand and Carolina Brand are budget stretchers, too. Give you up to 3 times as much rice per package as artificially processed brands. Buy 'em . . . try 'em . . . you'll never be without 'em!

14 MINUTES FROM START TO FINISH
Amazing new fast cooking recipe on every package.

RIVER BRAND
the popular low-cost regular grain rice.

CAROLINA BRAND
The King Size extra long grain rice.

RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.
New York, N. Y. · Houston, Texas · Memphis, Tenn. · El Campo, Texas · Eunice, La. · Jonesboro, Ark

© 1955 RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.

Lawrence took a wild plunge. "I tell you what, Dorothy. Order some flying oxen for the Christmas crib."

"What? What did you say, vicar?"

But he had rung off, and was laughing. "So silly," he remarked to Vera, when he returned to the study. "She really forces me to be facetious. Yet I don't know what we should any of us do without our Dorothy Hunters. What's the matter?"

Vera was flipping her fingers through a bundle of ten-pound notes, and frowning.

"Did you say there was supposed to be seven hundred pounds here?"

"About that," John said. "Why?"

"Because there isn't. I've only run through it very quickly—you'll have to check it yourself. But I don't see how there can be more than five hundred."

He sat down at the desk and looked irritably at the piles of notes Vera had assembled there. "I'm usually right, you know," she said.

"I know you are. I've never caught you out wrong in the collections yet."

Vera stood watching as he counted slowly. After a few moments, Susan appeared again. "It's twenty past nine," she said. "You'll have to go, mummy."

"Oh, dear! I must rush. Susan, take my case, will you?"

Lawrence looked up with a sigh. "I believe you're right," he said. "I wanted him to check it there, but he wouldn't hear of it. I'll have to see him."

"What did Dorothy want this time?"

"Oh, she wants me to order some flying angels, what she calls a 'bunch of guardians.' Well, darling, I hope yours will take care of you."

At half past ten, Mrs. Bratley warmed some milk for her husband and climbed the stairs to his room. When she opened the door, she gave a gasp and the milk slopped over from the cup. The farmer had thrown back the bedclothes and lay across the bed, one hand hanging down. On the rug, Mrs. Bratley saw something lying. It was a key.

The farmer's mouth had fallen open, his eyes were closed, she did not know whether he was alive or dead. Putting the milk down on the chair, she quickly took the key and went to the chest. She unlocked the top left-hand drawer: nothing there but some old socks and a few handkerchiefs. Quickly she tried the other drawers. All were unlocked, and none contained what she wanted.

She heard a knock on the door to the yard, and a voice called, "Mrs. Bratley, are you there?"

Putting the key in the pocket of her p fore, she went to the landing. "Who's ther

"It's I, Mrs. Bratley."

She recognized the vicar's voice. She loo back at the bed. Her husband still lay in same position. She leaned over and placed ear to his mouth. He was breathing, at rate. Leaning across the farmer's inert bo she unlatched the window and threw it w open.

She turned and went down the stairs. L rence was standing inside the open door, w an attaché case in his hand.

"I called about an hour ago," he said, " couldn't find you anywhere. I'm afraid h very ill, Mrs. Bratley. I came back to g him Communion."

"Oh. Did he say he wanted it?"

"When people are dying," said Lawrer
"they don't always know what they need."

"Well, he's asleep now. And I reckon the best judge of what my husband wants."

Lawrence put his attaché case down on floor, came slowly into the room. He seem to be searching for the right words.

"You may not be the best judge at the n ment, Mrs. Bratley," he said. "If the doctor the nurse were to come, you would let th upstairs, wouldn't you?"

"That's a different matter."

"I've no doubt you see it that way, quite s cerely. But I don't. This morning I had message from Nurse Roberts, that he h asked several times to see me. Why didn't y pass on that message?"

"He never said nothing to me. All I kn is, visitors upset him."

"Then I must tell you, Mrs. Bratley. I passed over a sum of money to me which wishes me to keep in trust for Jim."

There was a long silence. Mrs. Bratle hand moved in her pocket, her fingers play over the jagged edge of the key. There wa step in the yard, and Willie Furze came i

"Well," said Mrs. Bratley, "seeing you've got it all taped between you, that's right then, isn't it?"

"I shall be seeing the solicitors as soon possible."

"And suppose," she snapped, "Jim nev does come back, what about the money then

"It's yours. Every penny of it," Furze spo suddenly.

Lawrence turned slowly. "I believe you' employed by Mr. Bratley to work on th farm, aren't you?"

"What about it?"

"I should get to your work. There must plenty to do on a fine spring morning lik this."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 146

DON TOBIN

"Give it a smack with your hand. It's just like a watch."

Choice coffee beans—the pick of the coffee crop from the finest South American plantations—freshly-roasted by Nescafé.

Nothing but delicious coffee!

—That's new Nescafé! Tastier coffee, with the lift and liveliness that come from 100% choice coffee beans—coffee that satisfies your coffee hunger! No wonder Nescafé is the family coffee, the friendly coffee, the coffee that "belongs" today! If you haven't tried it, why don't you? Get tastier new Nescafé at your grocer's!

ALL COFFEE— Nothing but Coffee!

© 1955 The Nestlé Company Inc.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 144

Lawrence turned back to Mrs. Bratley as though Furze were not there. "If it should happen," he said, "which please God it won't, that Jim doesn't return from Korea, this sum of five hundred pounds would come to you as John's wife. But it will all be made clear in the will."

"You mean seven hundred, don't you?"

The words came sharply from Mrs. Bratley, and at the same moment she gave a quick glance to Furze. But he had turned and was going out to the yard again.

Lawrence was about to speak again when there was suddenly a chilled and terror-stricken cry from upstairs: "Shut this damned window—shut it—shut it ——"

"God bless the poor soul," muttered Mrs. Bratley. "What's he up to now?"

But Lawrence did not wait for her. Quickly he ran up the stairs. When he got to the bedroom, he saw the farmer kneeling on the bed, trying to reach the window latch. The window had swung out, the curtains were fluttering in the breeze, and as Lawrence put out his hand to try to ease the farmer back to his pillows, the old man crumpled forward. Lawrence supported him, his hands under his armpits. "I'm here, John, I'm here," he murmured. Gently he raised the fallen head to bring it back against the pillows. It did not move; there was no longer any resistance. Lawrence put his hand under the knees and straightened them out, so that at last the old ma was lying back straightly in the bed.

He heard Mrs. Bratley behind him.

"Close the window," he said firmly. But he spoke, he heard a fluttering, then a cris cheerful, heartless twittering, and a rob alighted on the window sill. There was a stir movement in the face on the pillow, as thoug the wing of a butterfly had quivered in th loose wrinkled parchment of the yellowe skin.

"No," said Lawrence. Mrs. Bratley ha leaned her arm across to draw the window t "It doesn't matter now. Farmer John is dead.

For some moments Lawrence forgot Mr Bratley standing there. Automatically, as h had so often done before, he knelt by the bed his right hand touching the farmer's. Then h took the hands, laid them crosswise on th breast.

The silence was broken by the ugly half strangled sobs of Mrs. Bratley behind him Getting up, he turned slowly toward her. I was impossible for him to say the conventiona words of comfort which usually rose to hi lips on such occasions.

"I will ask the nurse to come," he said.

When Martin Hood returned to his hous from the cathedral, the telephone was ringing Picking up the receiver, he recognized Mrs Hearne's voice.

"Oh, Mr. Hood, please forgive me bother ing you, but I'm on my way to London—I'm speaking from the station. I want you to do me a great favor. We had a little bit of an up set last night and I gather that Susan rang you to say she didn't intend to enter for the scholarship."

"She did, Mrs. Hearne. I told her not to be so silly."

"You were right, and I'm most grateful But as long as she thinks we're making sacrifices for her, she won't go. Now I've thought of a way of obviating this, but it will need your help."

"Well?" Hood was rather touched.

"It will need a little deception—but I think it's really justified. I'm on my way to town to stay with my sister—and I'm going to arrange for Susan to live there while she has to study in London. As you know, it's the question of money that bothers Susan. Well, I've been able to raise a small sum on some jewelry I sold, but it's no good my telling Susan this—it would only distress her. Couldn't you tell her that somebody—some patron of the arts—has put this sum at her disposal? If this news came from you—and you said that the 'patron' insisted on remaining anonymous—I believe she'd feel quite differently about it."

"Yes, I think you're probably right."

He heard a little gasp of relief from Vera. "I'm so glad you take it that way. Would you ring her and ask her to come and see you today? Then I can bank the money and you can tell her it's all arranged."

"It would sound more plausible if I told her the amount, wouldn't it?"

There was a moment's pause. Then, "I'm afraid it's only two hundred pounds," said Vera. "But I'm sure that my sister will cooperate, and it will help, won't it?"

"It will certainly help. But, with your permission, I'm going to tell her the amount is three hundred. I, too, have ways of raising money, Mrs. Hearne, and I believe it will be well spent."

"Oh, no, Mr. Hood—please ——"

"Oh, yes! I make it a condition. I will enter your little charade only if I am allowed to make my contribution. She's my star pupil and I want to see big results. I'll go over to the vicarage to see her today."

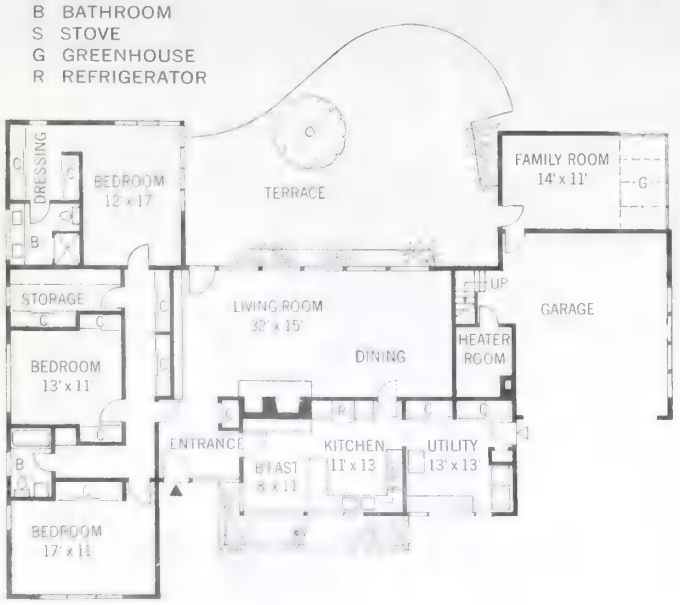
"Oh, I shouldn't go to that trouble, Mr. Hood. Ask her to come and see you. Now I must rush—there's only a minute before my train comes."

Leaving the phone, Martin went to his study. "What a fool I've been," he muttered. Yet there was something about these Hearnes; he had felt forced to come to the rescue.

He sat at his untidy desk, looking at the sheet of foolscap on which he had written down the music for the coming week's services. Pushing aside his chair, he stabbed his pencil

CONTINUED ON PAGE 149

ARCHITECTS: STUART & DURHAM, A.I.A.; PHOTOGRAPHS BY DEARBORN-MASSAR



Here is proof that unlimited comfort and seclusion can be built into a three-bedroom house on an average-size lot.

PLANNED FOR PRIVACY inside and out

C CLOSET
B BATHROOM
S STOVE
G GREENHOUSE
R REFRIGERATOR

By CAROL L. MERCADO

THIS house turns away from the road and looks out upon its own attractive terrace. Built-in plant boxes add glamour and privacy to front windows. Sleeping, working and living areas are well separated, yet all are handy to the entry. Carefully placed closets protect the bedrooms, give plenty of storage space where it's most needed.

One end of the living room is used for formal dining; intimate meals are served in the breakfast room, divided from the kitchen by counter-high cabinets. Living up to its name, the utility room houses laundry, freezer, sewing table and children's cleanup corner. A spacious closet takes care of their coats, boots and outdoor-play gear. Garage stairway leads to an attic storeroom over the entire garage-family-room wing.

The family room, household fun center, is accessible from garage or terrace. The greenhouse corner floods the room with sunlight, supplies the house with cut flowers all year round.

Cedar roof shakes are unstained; their weathered finish complements the rough-textured red-brick walls and the slate-blue painted trim.

BAKED HAM

10-12 lb. tenderized smoked ham
French's Whole Cloves
1 cup brown sugar
2 tablespoons flour
4 tablespoons French's Prepared Mustard

Wrap ham loosely in wrapping paper; place fat side up in uncovered roaster. Add no water. Bake in moderate oven (325° F.) 3½-4 hours or as directed on wrapper. After baking, remove paper and skin the ham. Score fat in squares. Stud each square with cloves. Mix together sugar, flour, mustard. Spread ham with mixture. Bake at 400° F.—15-20 minutes or until golden brown.

There's extra goodness in the golden glaze!

FRENCH'S MUSTARD
does something wonderful for Easter Ham!

- ✓ FRENCH'S pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.
- ✓ FRENCH'S rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.
- ✓ Get a jar tomorrow—and see what a wonderful flavor difference FRENCH'S makes!

FREE! 32-page COLOR RECIPE BOOKLET "Seasoning Makes the Difference!"

The R. T. French Co.
1010 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

No matter what else you do for a cold

...LISTERINE Quick!

Listerine Does What Non-Antiseptic "Cold Tablets" Can't Do— Kills Germs Instantly—By Millions

When you feel a cold coming on, go right after the germs that can cause so much of the misery . . . with Listerine Antiseptic! Non-antiseptic "cold remedies," nose drops, and aspirin may relieve some of the symptoms, but they don't kill germs the way Listerine Antiseptic does. Listerine gets way back on throat surfaces and kills those germs, instantly, by millions!

So, remember, no matter what else you do when you fight a cold, you need an antiseptic to kill germs.

Why take unnecessary chances with a cold? Closely supervised tests over a 12-year period showed that those who regularly reduced germs on mouth and throat surfaces with Listerine Antiseptic twice a day had fewer colds and sore throats than those who did not. The minute you feel a cold coming on, gargle Listerine Antiseptic early and often.

NO MATTER WHAT ELSE YOU DO FOR A COLD YOU NEED AN ANTISEPTIC to kill germs like these!

These and other "secondary invaders," as well as germ-types not shown, can be quickly reduced in number by the Listerine Antiseptic gargle.

(1) Pneumococcus Type III, (2) Hemophilus influenzae, (3) Streptococcus pyogenes, (4) Pneumococcus Type II, (5) Streptococcus salivarius.

A Product of The Lambert Company

At the first sign of a Cold or Sore Throat

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC-Quick!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 146

arily into the foolscap paper and went to th piano, where he began furiously to play n own extremely complicated version of Glenn Miller's Pennsylvania 6–5000. Facing th on the stand was a copy of Reubke's Organ Sonata—still a test for even the most b liant organist, and he had prided himself he could play it from memory at the age of seventeen. He had put it down on the program of an organ recital he was giving Easter week. B as he went on playing the crazy snatch of tune of Glenn Miller's, he tore the pages of the Reubke off the stand and flung them into the corner.

Then he stopped in the middle of a bar. He thought, Lawrence Hearne was right. "Don't go on doing things that mean nothing."

Going to the phone, he called the deanery. A few minutes later he was standing before the bust of blind Homer in the long library.

"I don't quite understand, Mr. Hood."

"Then allow me to repeat it again, Mr. Dean. I am giving three months' notice of my resignation. If possible, I would like my assistant to carry on over the Easter services. I would prefer to leave immediately."

The dean coughed slightly and fumbled in his cassock pocket for his handkerchief. "Are you after Canterbury?" he asked, with deliberate, almost malicious mildness.

"Canterbury? What's Canterbury got that I should be after it?"

"They pay more," said the dean.

"Oh, come, Mr. Dean. I'm not being driven here by the musicians' union."

"The post is vacant," said the dean. "If you have already applied and did not wish to inform us, I hope we would not stand in your way—though it would perhaps be an unethical way of approaching a change."

"Mr. Dean, I am not interested in Canterbury. I didn't even know it was vacant. Let me be brutally clear. I don't intend to listen to a note of cathedral music again as long as I live."

At last the dean was there. "Composition?" he murmured; and before Martin could reply, "Well, you have great gifts—no doubt a symphony or two up your sleeve—I can understand that you see farther than the organ loft."

"Composition—and performance—of a slightly different kind," murmured Martin.

"You mean, perhaps, the ballet?"

"No, Mr. Dean. I do not mean the ballet. Light music—jive, bebop, swing—very fascinating."

The dean looked startled. "I beg your pardon?"

Martin sighed again. "I can't explain, Mr. Dean. I'd only like to say that in leaving the cathedral I have nothing but gratitude to you personally. But the system—that's beaten me. I've got to get out of it before it stifles me to death."

The dean began one of his famous slow, intimidating walks, up and down the length of the library. He spoke in a distant voice. "Do you seriously mean that?"

"I know exactly what I am doing. The cathedral has had enough of me. There's a world outside—and that's the world I want."

The dean did not wish to talk any more. Opening the door, he ushered Martin out, and they walked down the wide stairway.

THE dean said, "I do not think you can expect us to be without your services over Easter, Mr. Hood."

Martin hesitated. "Very well, I'll carry on until then."

Now they were at the open door. "And what was it," asked the dean, "that you mentioned you were interested in?"

"Jive," said Martin. "Bebop. Swing. The whole works."

"Ah!" said the dean. "I see." He nodded slightly, as though jive and bebop were something like the quilismas of plain chant, fit to be pursued by a bachelor of music of Cambridge University.

Susan was in the kitchen that afternoon, studying a cookery book. She was determined to give her father an unusual supper.

She heard the toot of a car horn, and saw Martin's ancient Austin drawing up. Out of it he got, pausing to light a cigarette, and shading his eyes against the flood of bright sun. "Is it you?" he asked. He was a little shortsighted.

"Of course."

"Turning housewife now your mother's gone to town?"

"How did you know she's gone to town?"

HE realized he had made a mistake. "Don't suppose," he said, "that you can do anything so daring as going to London in Hinton Parbury, and it won't be broadcast in Gilchester. Where's the vicar?"

"He's gone to see Nicky—to find a place for poor John Bratley's grave. He died this morning. I'm afraid it upset daddy a lot."

"So you're alone? Well, I shall seduce you with some news that will make your hair stand on end."

He stood with his face turned to the kitchen dresser, his fingers toying with a cameo brooch which was resting near a little box. His eyes caught sight of a card on which were the words "To Susan from Kenneth." Turning, he walked blandly round the kitchen, picking up saucepan lids and spoons and examining them.

"What news?" asked Susan.

"Very nice news," he told her. "Somebody wishes to back your career to the tune of three hundred pounds."

"What?" She could not believe she had heard the words.

"But of course you're not going on with it? Not really interested any more?"

"But who is this person?"

"Ah, that's a secret. I can only tell you that a certain rich man, who amuses himself in beating the income-tax fiends at their own game, wants to get rid of three hundred pounds—which is about twopence-halfpenny to him."

"But Martin—how did he know about me?"

"Oh, my sweet vain child! He did not know about you—he applied to me. Had I any promising pupil who could benefit by it? So I accepted on your behalf."

"Oh, Martin ——" Suddenly she began to cry.

Repressing his sigh of irritation, he turned back to the dresser and picked up the cameo brooch. "Who's Kenneth?" he asked casually.

"Kenneth Foley—he's a journalist. He had to go to London last night on some business, and he gave me that before he left."

"Well, why don't you do something with it? Haven't you ever realized that with one interesting piece of jewelry, a pretty scarf, a twist to your hair and a certain look, you could give any examiner something to think about? They're not solely interested in music, you know."

"Martin—I must tell you—can't you guess why I never really wanted to go and live in London?"

Sitting down on a kitchen chair, he said, "I think you'd better tell me. It will be better for you to get it out, Susan."

"Because I couldn't bear to be away from you."

"Listen, my dear," he said quietly, "if you must go on being in love with me—a most unprofitable occupation—put it all into your music, and I swear you'll be happier."

"I shan't. I only want ——"

"You don't know what you want. Even if you stayed on here, you would not find me any more at Gilchester. Because I'm leaving."

"You're leaving? But where for?"

"I haven't the slightest idea. And I wouldn't tell you if I had." He got up and walked toward the door. "I am drifting into the unknown," he said. "Don't ask me any questions, please."

To Martin's great relief, he heard the tinkle of a bicycle bell, and the next moment the vicar came round the side of the house. "Here's your father," said Martin sharply. "Don't let him see you're upset."

As he raised his voice to call a greeting to Lawrence, he heard Susan run out to the hall, and upstairs.

"Hallo." Lawrence came into the kitchen. "This is an unexpected visit. Have you found Susan?"

"She's just run upstairs. I've brought her some good news and it rather bowled her over."

"Good news? That's nice. What is it?"

They walked toward the study and Lawrence, finding his pipe, filled it, then fell back into his chair.

"Tell me your news," he said. "I need cheering up."

Martin hesitated. "Perhaps I'd better get my own news out first. I've resigned my job and it was due to you."

"Good heavens! I hope I haven't encouraged you to do anything you'll regret?"

"No, no! You merely gave me the words that were needed. And, oddly enough, it was Mrs. Hearne's impulsiveness that finally led me to the decisive step."

"Mrs. Hearne? What has she done?"

At a dinner party a prominent businessman asked Albert Einstein how pure scientific research helped business. With a twinkle in his eye, Professor Einstein replied:

"Who can tell? After all, what would the suspender business amount to without the law of gravitation?"

THE GILBERT
VITALATOR
SOOTHES AND RELAXES YOUR TIRED BODY

Just slip the amazing Gilbert Vitalator over your hand . . . flip the switch. Like many skilled, supple fingers the Vitalator works the aching kinks out of your legs, arms, back and hips . . . eases strained nerves . . . lets you really relax. The unique "Swedish massage" rotary action sends waves of vibrations through your fingertips and into your body . . . makes you feel like new again. A.C. or D.C. Model B165A, $15.95.

AT COSMETICS OR HOUSEWARES DEPTS. OF THESE AND OTHER LEADING STORES:

AKRON, OHIO — The M. O'Neil Co.
ATLANTA, GA. — Davison-Paxon; Sears Roebuck & Co.
BALTIMORE, MD. — Hochschild Kohn; The May Company
BOSTON, MASS. — Jordan Marsh
BUFFALO, N. Y. — The Wm. Hengerer Co.
CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Belk's Dept. Store
CHICAGO, ILL. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO — The H. S. Pogue Co.; The John Shillito Co.
CLEVELAND, OHIO — Higbee's; The May Company
COLUMBUS, OHIO — F & R Lazarus
DALLAS, TEX. — Titche-Goettinger
DAYTON, OHIO — Rike-Kumler Co.
DENVER, COLORADO — Denver Dry Goods; The May Company
HARTFORD, CONN. — The G. Fox Co.
HOUSTON, TEX. — Foley's; Sears Roebuck & Co.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND. — W. H. Block Co.
JACKSONVILLE, FLA. — Furchgott's
KANSAS CITY, MO. — Macy's
LOS ANGELES, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
LOUISVILLE, KY. — Stewart's Dry Goods Co.
MIAMI, FLA. — Burdine's
MILWAUKEE, WISC. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — The Dayton Co.; Donaldson's
NEWARK, N. J. — Kresge-Newark
NEW YORK, N. Y. — B. Altman's; Hammacher Schlemmer; Lewis & Conger
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA. — Gimbel Bros.; Snellenburg's; Strawbridge & Clothier
PITTSBURGH, PENNA. — Kaufman's
RICHMOND, VA. — Miller & Rhoads
ROCHESTER, N. Y. — Sibley Lindsay & Curr
ST. LOUIS, MO. — Sears Roebuck & Co.; Stix Baer & Fuller
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA. — Maas Bros.
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — Auerbach's; Paris Company
SAN ANTONIO, TEX. — Joske's
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SEATTLE, WASH. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SYRACUSE, N. Y. — E. W. Edwards & Son
TAMPA, FLA. — Maas Bros.
TOLEDO, OHIO — LaSalle's
WICHITA, KANSAS — Innes

A PRODUCT OF A. C. GILBERT, NEW HAVEN, CONN. PRICES SLIGHTLY HIGHER DENVER AND WEST

"I realize I'm probably betraying a confidence. But I'm sure she means you to know."

He told Lawrence of Vera's telephone call. Halfway through, Lawrence got up and walked to the window, turning his back on Hood.

"Don't tell your wife I told you this," Hood finished. "When I started, I imagined you knew all about it. I'm sure she just wants it all to be a fait accompli—she means to tell you when she returns. Well, I've done my part, and I think you'll find Susan will be worth it."

"Then—you have told Susan?" Still Lawrence did not turn round.

"But of course. The scholarship means everything in the world to her—and the news quite overwhelmed her. That's why she must never know where the money really comes from—it might wreck her chance of success. Mrs. Hearne is right."

"You're sure of this, Hood?"

"Surely you know Susan better than I do."

"A father doesn't always know his daughter properly. I think that you, as her teacher, have been able to observe her more closely in the past year."

"That may be true, Mr. Hearne."

Slowly Lawrence turned round. Martin could not see the expression of pain on Lawrence's face. "How much did you say the amount was?" he asked quietly.

"Two hundred pounds. But I shall be able to add to that, from a private source, a further hundred. It should at least keep her going for a year—and who can dare to look further into the future than that in these days?"

"Who can, indeed! I'm very grateful to you for your part in this, Hood—and especially grateful that you told me all about it."

"And you will keep it to yourself, won't you?"

"Oh, yes." Lawrence echoed the words slowly. "I shall keep it to myself. I am glad to think it will mean so much to Susan."

For some time, when Martin had left the vicarage, Lawrence sat by his desk. When he moved, it was to unlock a drawer. Inside was Farmer Bratley's dispatch case. He stared at it, opened it, then suddenly closed it again and locked it back in the drawer. He had counted the money too many times since the scene with Mrs. Bratley that morning. There could be no mistake—the amount was a little over five hundred pounds.

Something had to be done which he did not care for, but it must be faced.

Walking upstairs, he paused for a moment outside Susan's door. "Are you all right, my dear?" he called. Her voice came from inside. "Yes, daddy. I shall be down in a few minutes."

He passed along the landing and opened the door of Vera's room. It was a room that they had shared together until fairly recently. Now he slept in a small room adjoining.

He lit the candles. Taking one, he went to Vera's dressing table. There were two or three little jewel boxes there, and an old chocolate tin which she also used for keeping her trinkets. He opened all these, but he could not find what he was searching for—the rings she had inherited from her mother. She never wore the rings—they were large for her fingers. "Please God I don't find them," he muttered.

He opened one of the drawers, and rapidly rustled through a confusion of stockings, scarves, handkerchiefs and odd gloves. What was this? Something wrapped in a green silk handkerchief. He unfolded it. He was holding in his hand a collection of toys—a kettle, a thimble, a horseshoe, a sledge—all that remained of a box of miniatures which David had treasured as a child.

He closed the drawer and for a moment nearly gave up the search. Why did he need to do it? What had come into his mind as Hood had been talking to him now seemed unthinkable. Yet now he had opened the adjoining drawer and was running his fingers through the collection of objects there. And here was a small crocodile purse which Vera had not used for years. Opening this, he found her mother's rings inside.

He took the candle, for it was now dark, and went to the landing. Susan's door was still closed, and he went rather quickly down the stairs. Taking up the receiver, he gave a London number. The line was engaged, he was told; should they ring him back? He hesitated for a second, then said yes.

He walked up and down the hall, waiting for the bell to ring. More and more, this all seemed trivial—a shabby little drama in which he was caught. Then he would recall the scene in Mrs. Bratley's kitchen, and knew only one thing: Vera must come home tomorrow, and somehow he must convey on the line, without stating it in so many words—for the local exchange was not to be trusted—that she must bring the money back with her.

Suddenly there was a light coming down the stairs, and Susan stood before him, holding a lamp in her hand. She had done something to her hair, pulled it back so that her ears showed; and round a plain black dress which she had borrowed from her mother's wardrobe she had tied a vivid emerald-green scarf. Her whole personality seemed different, vividly alive. Vera had looked like this the first time he had seen her.

Before he could say anything, she had set the lamp down on the chest, and was holding out her hands to him.

"Daddy, you've heard the wonderful from Martin?"

"Yes, I've heard."

"I suddenly realized," she said, "when upstairs—I'm going to win that scholar Do you know that? I'm going to be w that three hundred pounds."

The telephone rang suddenly, startling t both. Taking the receiver, he spoke int quickly. "Is that you, Edna? This is L rence. Has Vera arrived safely? . . . Oh, y He waited.

"Let me tell her," begged Susan. "She'l so thrilled."

He smiled and nodded at Susan. Then, voice that seemed very far away, he he Vera. "Oh, Lawrence dear, I'm so glad rang. Is everything all right?"

"Everything's fine!" He spoke too lou "Susan's here—and she's got some news you. Hold on, dear—before she tells you just want to say—you're not to worry ab anything—about anything at all. I want yo stay and have a really good rest. Oh, one ot thing: that business with the B.'s—yes, money—I got it all straightened out; jus misunderstanding, that's all. Now, her Susan. Look after yourself, my dear—a don't hurry back for any reason."

He handed the receiver to Susan, and as crossed the hall to his study heard her s "Oh, mummy—such wonderful news—M tin Hood's just told me ——"

He closed the door of t study.

Never make love to a woman without thinking what will happen if she returns it.

—MICHAEL SADLEIR: The Anchor

The following day La rence wrote a letter to Ve then tore it up, for it did n seem to say any of the thin he wanted to say. There w one thing he knew he shou do that morning: go to G chester and bank the mon in his possession. But t time came to eleven o'clock, he had miss the bus, the bank would be closed. So he r mained in his study, pleading a headache, ar asking Susan to bring him lunch on a tray.

He found her new happiness hard to fac She sat on the arm of his chair and toyed h fingers through his hair and kissed him.

"I think I've got the most beautiful parents, she said.

"Do you? Well, I've no complaints abou you, my dear. You're very happy about every thing, aren't you?"

"Yes, I am. I feel full of confidence."

"You must play the piano this afternoon, he said. "You haven't touched it for the las two or three days."

"Not this afternoon. Kenneth's back fron London and he wants me to go for a wall with him."

"Oh. Bring him in to tea."

When Kenneth Foley returned with Susa later in the afternoon they had tea in the study Lawrence found himself faintly irritated by th boy. Several times he referred to the sermon in the cathedral—a sermon which Lawrence wanted to forget.

"It was very unorthodox, wasn't it?" asked Kenneth.

"I really don't know," said Lawrence. "I can't remember now all I said. But I'm glad it it pleased you."

"It made a lot of people sit up," said Susan. "Daddy, do have one of my buns. They're not as frightful as they look."

"Thank you, my dear." He crumbled a bun thoughtfully. "I'm rather afraid," he said, "that unconsidered utterances from the pulpit may do more harm than good."

"Oh, don't talk nonsense!" cried Susan. "It's something fresh that everybody needs."

"There's nothing new under the sun, my dears. Only a new way of putting the old truths—that's all."

"But if you've got the new way of putting it," said Kenneth, "then it ought to get over to the greatest number of people. What the church wants is a first-class publicity campaign."

Lawrence broke in crossly. "Religion isn't a mass business. Getting over—as you put it—to an immense crowd of people doesn't mean much. It's a private individual matter."

Bridal rose

Modern manners, Grecian beauty...

TexturTuft "Classic"

The Greek-key motif of Morgan-Jones "Classic" bedspread opens the door to cool new summer loveliness for all of your bedrooms, modern or traditional. You'll love the cloudlike softness of its luxurious, lint-free tufts; the frothy fringe that accents its lavish size; the way it grows ever fluffier with laundering, never needs ironing. And "Classic" is so reasonably priced that you'll want to freshen all your bedrooms.

Morgan-Jones, Inc.
58 Worth Street
New York 13, N. Y.

Morgan-Jones

EW and BETTER

Sani-Flush

With a top that opens at the flip of a thumb

ASY OPENING TOP!

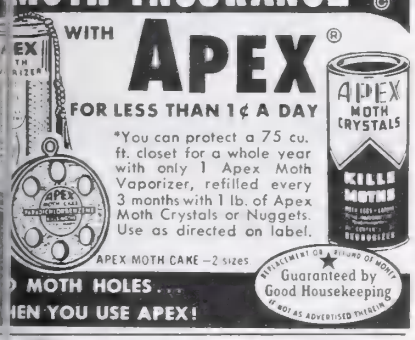
Press thumb under tab—it snaps right off. Snaps back on to close. Spill proof, too!

AST-ACTING FORMULA!

Cleans toilet bowls faster. Makes stubborn stains disappear like magic. Mildly perfumed. Safe with septic tank systems.

In the familiar yellow can!

Sani-Flush



he Hygienic Products Company
Canton 2, Ohio

You Get ALL-YEAR MOTH INSURANCE"* ©

WITH APEX ®

FOR LESS THAN 1¢ A DAY

*You can protect a 75 cu. ft. closet for a whole year with only 1 Apex Moth Vaporizer, refilled every 3 months with 1 lb. of Apex Moth Crystals or Nuggets. Use as directed on label.

APEX MOTH CAKE —2 sizes

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MOTH HOLES . . .
HEN YOU USE APEX!

Beautiful floors Quick and easy with wax-o-matic

floor waxer by Master

No kneeling, bending, splashing, scrubbing . . . Wax floors from the comfort level . . . with Wax-O-Matic trigger control.

Non-clogging . . . easy to clean . . . three year guarantee.

Get Wax-O-Matic at your favorite store.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

3.95 complete

replacement applicator 1.50

MASTER MANUFACTURING CO.
LORAIN, OHIO

"What about the Sermon on the Mount?" said Susan. "Our Lord didn't worry about publicity, did He?"

"He never asked for it," said Lawrence.

"But He got it," said Kenneth.

There was a silence. Lawrence sipped his tea, filled his pipe, and suddenly changed the subject. "Susan has told you her good news?"

"Oh, yes! I'm awfully glad."

Lawrence noticed a quick look pass between Susan and Kenneth. Then Susan said, "Kenneth has something to ask you, daddy."

"What's that?"

"It's just that I suggested I could drive Susan to London when she goes up for her examination Wednesday. Do you mind, sir?"

"Why should I mind? Make a good day of it—enjoy yourselves. You're far more likely to play well if you do."

Later, when Susan was seeing Kenneth off in his car, she said, "He was funny about his sermon, wasn't he?"

"Yes. I wish I hadn't talked about it. I wanted to draw him out, but he didn't seem to want it."

"You're pleased about things, aren't you? You sold your article in London."

"Yes, but I half wish I didn't."

"What do you mean, Kenneth? I don't understand."

He laughed. "You will—when you read it."

"But I'm longing to read it. It means a lot to you, I know. I expect you'll find a good job in London soon."

"Maybe. And then you'll be too busy to be interested in me."

"Oh, Kenneth, don't say that."

"I don't know, Susan You're a career girl."

She stared after him with a puzzled frown as he swung his car out of the drive. She liked him a great deal; but she wished he could excite her as Martin Hood did.

It was Passion Sunday. Lawrence had been quite unable to write a sermon the night before; he had only made a few notes. He walked slowly toward his church.

The day was again fine and clear. The spring had burst suddenly on the land; and the story of Christ's suffering, which the faithful were now called upon to contemplate, seemed to have little relation to the budding trees, the primroses in the hedges, the impulsive thrust of eager life everywhere around him. As he came to the lich gate he saw, parked by the church wall, four or five cars. One he recognized as Commander Black's. But the others were strange to him. Few of his congregation came in cars to church.

He was a little early, and did not go at once into the church, but walked to the gates which led to the west door. Then he was astonished. Rounding the bend, he saw more and more cars parked.

The two bells were sounding, and he stopped, feeling suddenly nervous. Then he heard footsteps behind him, and turned. It was Dorothy Hunter, with a newspaper in her hand.

"Oh, I waited for you, vicar," she said. "It's quite wonderful. I do congratulate you."

"About what, Dorothy?"

"But—haven't you seen it?" Excitedly, she opened the pages of the Sunday Record—one of the cheaper Sunday papers—and thrust it before him.

He stared at a headline: "CATHEDRAL OUTBURST." And underneath, he read: "Clergyman tears up sermon in pulpit. Questions afterlife. 'Ignore rules,' call to youth."

In the middle of the article were a picture of Gilchester Cathedral and a photograph which Lawrence did not at once recognize.

He could not speak, or even read more. Dorothy Hunter looked at him anxiously. "Of course," she said, "it is a little unfortunate that they've picked out the more revolutionary parts of the sermon ——"

"But where did they get this photograph?" he cried. "It was taken twelve years ago."

"Oh, I think it's very like you," murmured Dorothy. "It reminds me of the day of your institution here."

Racing his eyes down the page he saw another caption. "SAFETY LAST." The article was divided into several sections, with some in blacker type. He read: "Is heaven a place where angels sing and harps are played and a lot of virtuous people sit around and do nothing? And suppose you found that this was your reward for what are called 'virtuous' actions on earth? You might then bitterly regret the fact that you had done nothing but avoid the occasion of sin."

"But this is monstrous!" he cried angrily. "You mean to tell me that this—this garbled version of what I said Thursday is now reposing on everyone's breakfast table?"

Their conversation was broken by the bluff voice of Commander Black. "Well, this is a nice state of affairs, vicar!"

"My dear commander, you mustn't blame me for this hideous publicity."

"Well, there's one thing," said the commander, "it's brought them into church. Preach another one and we might get enough money to relead the nave roof."

Lawrence crumpled the paper in his hand. Suddenly, he felt furiously angry.

"If you think," he snapped, "I intend to tell people to live immoral lives merely to raise money for the church roof, you're very much mistaken, commander."

Cramming the paper in his pocket, Lawrence strode toward the vestry door. He paused there for a moment, his hands over his no matter what you pay in furniture in mattresses

in sofa sleepers

you get more* for your money in products built with stronger, longer-lasting PERM-A-LATOR® wire insulators

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Look for this Tag!

Perm-A-Lator's Name Is Your Guarantee!

No "Coil-Feel"! No Sagging!

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET SHOWING 3-WAY COMFORT TEST

NOW! In furniture, as well as mattresses, you can get the extra strength, extra value of Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators. You can be sure of longer-lasting comfort and beauty. Perm-A-Lator's closely spaced spring steel wires keep padding out of spring openings permanently . . . there's never any "coil-feel," lumping, or sagging. This extra value costs you no more, yet gives you more for your money. Ask for stronger, longer-lasting Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators in all the furniture and mattresses you buy!

*TORTURE TESTS PROVE WIRE INSULATORS LAST TWICE LONGER THAN ORDINARY INSULATORS

Millions of rolling cycles prove conclusively that wire insulators give permanent protection against "coil-feel" . . . add longer life to all upholstered products.

Perm-A-Lator Wire Insulators Manufactured by FLEX-O-LATORS, Inc., CARTHAGE, MO.
Plants in Carthage, Mo. and New Castle, Pa.

CELESTE 5-piece place setting 10.75

Almost everyone recognizes at first sight Syracuse' special beauty and quality. It's so obvious — from warm, glowing design and color to superb smoothness and lustre.

But it's the hidden quality — remarkable hardness and strength — that makes Syracuse yours to enjoy every meal, every day. And it all costs so little!

Experience and research over the years have shown Syracuse how to make finer china—less expensive.

FREE Portfolio of Syracuse patterns in full color . . . hints on choosing, using and caring for your china. Send for your copy today. Syracuse China, Dept. J-4, Syracuse 4, N. Y.

Priced slightly higher west of the Rockies

CORONET 5-piece place setting 15.75

DORIAN 5-piece place setting 15.75

PATRICIA 5-piece place setting 11.75

SYRACUSE China

Beauty that works for a living!

eyes, trying to pray. He would not preach this morning, he decided.

In the bus Vera read and reread the brief letter she had received from Lawrence:

"My dear, it is very quiet on this front. Susan is out with Kenneth. It is splendid news that she has had from Hood. I cannot tell you what a difference it has made to her. I realize now how right you were. My dear, you are not to worry about anything here—but try to enjoy this wonderful spring weather. And don't hurry back. . . ."

She did not know what to make of the letter. Why was there no reference to the amount of money John Bratley had handed over? Enjoy the fine spring weather. . . . She could not. She could only stare dully out the window, clutch her handbag, watch the hurrying crowds of people and envy those who were carefree on such a day as this. She changed her bus and walked toward a branch of the Midland Bank, not far from the London School of Music. She walked past the doors of the bank, then wheeled sharply back.

She went in. Whatever happened, the money had to be out of her possession. It must be banked at once; then she would at least be able to walk about feeling less of a criminal.

There were three customers at the counter and she had to wait. The heavy leather handbag became an intolerable weight. She began to feel faint, and the old rheumatic pains drove again in the center of her back.

At last she moved to the counter and heard the young cashier speaking.

"Yes, madam?"

She had to say something. Suppose she said, "I have just stolen two hundred pounds and

I'm not one of those as can see the cat in the dairy, and wonder what she's come after. —GEORGE ELIOT

I am tired of carrying them around; they are for my daughter—she has a great career before her. Will you kindly take this horrible money and give me in return a nice new check book?"

She did not realize how white and strained she looked as she said, in a distant voice, "Can I see your manager, please?"

"Have you an appointment, madam?"

"No. I'm afraid I haven't."

"He's engaged most of the morning, madam. Would you care to make an appointment for two-thirty this afternoon?"

The clock said eleven-thirty. Three more hours of this—and then to come in again —— "No, that's quite impossible, I'm afraid. I'm far too busy. Good morning."

Then she was outside on the pavement and the world was spinning round. She had to lean against the wall, by the night safe. She had dropped the handbag and was staring at it on the street. She could not bend to pick it up, but gasped a little, as though she were choking.

A policeman was standing before her, the bag in his hand. He was offering it to her. "Are you all right, ma'am?" he asked.

"Oh, thank you, thank you." She took her bag. "I'll just get myself a cup of coffee."

The policeman watched as she went to the curb, waited a moment, then crossed. Not until he saw her go into a café on the other side did he resume his beat.

It was a grubby café, the tablecloth was stained, and a teacup full of tobacco ash was before her. A girl came up and Vera ordered coffee—then closed her bag, seeing that the wad of notes was safe inside, and placed it on her lap.

She saw a pile of old newspapers on a chair and mechanically took one up. She found herself staring at an old picture of Lawrence.

Lawrence raised his voice a little, and spoke the words more clearly into the air. "—— that, when we shall depart this life, we may rest in Him, as our hope is this our brother doth; and that at the general Resurrection in the last day ——"

He finished the prayer and waited a few

here's my 'SEAFOOD SPECIA

Famous chefs agree nothing gives fish the tang a man loves like Lea & Perrins, the original Worcestershire Sauce. Take this tip; use it generously in your cooking, too. Not only seafood but meats, gravies and soups as well.

LEA & PERRINS THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE

FREE! Recipe Book, DISHES MEN LIK
• 168 easy recipes
• 84 'good go-togethers'
• 7 pages carving diagrams
Write LEA & PERRINS, Inc.
241 West St., New York, N. Y. Dept. J-4

HIP-O-LIT
The ORIGINAL Marshmallow Crem
FREE Recipe Book:
"It's a grand substitute for whipped crea —and saves eggs and sugar, too. Try it
Write Hip-O-Lite, Dept. L-IT, St. Louis 1, Mo

EXTRA INCOME?

OF COURSE! Write to the address below and we'll send you details about a money-making offer. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
886 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

Looking for compliments? Serve . . .

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

RITZ CLOTHS

A Ritz quality cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store.

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 Franklin St., N.Y. 13

RITZ Since 1892

ents, looking down at the coffin, and the hs lying round the side of the grave. The w was standing near, with her sister and ster's husband. Back a little farther stood e Furze.

wrence moved away. Then he walked y down the path. But he had not gone far e he heard his name called. It was Mrs. ey, with her sister and brother-in-law d her.

es, Mrs. Bratley?" he asked gently.

e sister said, "Go on, Win. You tell the end."

t's like this," said Mrs. Bratley, dabbing yes with her handkerchief. "I've been told ntitled to legal advice on the way I stand. ke to get that little mistake put right."

What mistake?" Lawrence felt his heart ping.

Over that money John gave you. I think it t to be counted out, proper, in front of s the widow."

awrence answered quietly, "Since you wish legal advice, Mrs. Bratley, there is no t in our discussing anything personally. your solicitor to get in touch with me."

here was a silence. Then the brother-in-law ghed. "Best be getting back, Win," he said ngly. "Parson's right."

Without another word, Lawrence turned walked down the path, going slowly, his olice fluttering in the breeze. It was neces- not to hurry, not to give her the oppor- ty to say he had tried to slip away without ing to her.

Mrs. Bratley, weeping now, became the cen- of a consolatory little group. It was not l they reached the gate that she suddenly st into speech.

"He can get his pictures in the papers, and k he's clever, can't he? A lot of fancy —he ought to be ashamed of himself, 's what I say."

"Hush, Win, don't go on like this for every- to hear," muttered the brother-in-law.

"Do you think I care who hears? Do you k I care? And his wife can go off to Lon- , can't she? And you know what she told t Miss Hunter only last week? She said 'd go off her head if she didn't get some ney somehow for the girl's college fees— l, I ask you, what's she gone to London for ey can't afford college fees?"

There was suddenly an interruption. Doro- Hunter had pushed her way through the up. "How dare you say such things, Mrs. tley!" she cried. "Everybody knows we are ssed with a vicar who has served this parish hfully—and has patiently put himself at the posal of us all. I will not hear such things d of a saint—yes, a saint!"

Leaving an ashamed silence trembling in the behind her, Dorothy caught up with Law- ce just as he was opening the door in the den wall.

"Oh, vicar! I have heard the most abomina- insinuations being uttered publicly by Mrs. tley about you and Vera. It was so atro- us I felt forced to protest publicly."

LAWRENCE groaned, and passed his hand er his forehead. "What is the good of stir- g up people's feelings all the more?"

"But how could I keep quiet? She had the trageous impertinence to criticize dear Vera going to London—saying she was spend- money she couldn't afford. Such people ould do public penance before the whole ngregation."

"If all of us had to do public penance for r indiscretions," rapped Lawrence, "the urch would be very full indeed!"

He went angrily on to the vicarage, and sed the study door. As he took off his hood d stole he felt furious with himself for losing s temper with Dorothy. Yet if she had not pt him talking on the phone three days ago, would not now be in this shameful and miliating position.

Susan had gone to Gilchester; he at least anked God that she had not been here to verhear the conversation between himself nd Dorothy Hunter.

Suddenly the telephone bell rang. Impa- ently, he picked up the receiver.

It was Kenneth Foley. "I'm in the village r, and I want to see you—but I don't know ow I'm going to face you."

Lawrence gave a bark of laughter. "No, I should think you didn't."

"I meant to tell you on Saturday, but I knew ——"

Lawrence cut in. "Come and see me. I'm alone here."

A few minutes later Kenneth was in the room. Immediately Lawrence felt sorry for him.

"Look here," he said, "I'm not your late headmaster, so you needn't stand there looking sheepish. But couldn't you at least have asked my permission?"

"I'm terribly sorry, sir. I just didn't stop to think. I felt it was the sort of break I'd been waiting for. And I simply had to get it to the Record on Friday."

"But why in the name of heaven didn't you see the sermon was accurately reported?"

"I may have got a few phrases wrong, but most of that messing up happened in the sub-editor's office—they do that sort of thing."

"Well, I hope you realize I've got to get a corrected statement in next Sunday's issue?"

"That's what I wanted to talk about, sir. The point is ——"

"Wait a minute!" snapped Lawrence. "Have they paid you for this job?"

"Yes, as a matter of fact ——"

"How much?"

"Twenty-five pounds. That's another thing I had in mind, sir. I wanted to give the money to Susan—to help pay her expenses in London."

"Hand it over to me."

Kenneth stared at Lawrence. Then he fumbled in his pocket, produced an envelope, and took a check from it.

"Thanks," said Lawrence, with a sudden grim smile, putting the check in his pocket-book. "While thanking you for the thought you had on Susan's behalf, I must point out that this is virtually my money."

"Look here, sir—if you'd let me speak a moment. The editor of the Record has had scores of letters about your sermon ——"

Good, Basic Styling of Heywood Modern Furniture Allows Unusual Freedom of Arrangement

Any way you arrange the Modern shown above, you'll find that the handsome sectional sofa offers maximum seating area, eliminates clutter and gives your room a feeling of luxurious spaciousness. Another important advantage of Modern's simple, clean-cut design . . . it will live harmoniously with the furnishings you already own.

Heywood-Wakefield, also makers of Ashcraft and Old Colony Furniture

Another excellent example of the consistently simple design found in all Heywood Modern. Your assurance that first purchases will blend happily with each new addition you make. See Modern at your favorite furniture or department store.

Skillfully crafted of finest solid birch, in several beautiful finishes, Heywood-Wakefield Home-Planned Modern is available in over one hundred pieces for every room in the home.

HOME-PLANNED modern by HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD EST. 1826 Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

NEW "HOW TO DECORATE WITH MODERN" BOOK

Mary L. Brandt, nationally known decorating consultant, tells you how to plan an attractive home with Modern. Send 25¢ in coin for 28-page book. If you'd also like our decorating book on "Home-Planned Old Colony," send 50¢ in coin for both.

Heywood-Wakefield, Gardner, Mass., Dept. LH-30

I enclose ____ in coin for your decorating books at 25¢ each. (check your choice)

☐ Modern ☐ Old Colony

Name _____

Street _____

City & Zone _____ State _____

"About the garbled version of my sermon!" snapped Lawrence.

"All right. The point is—he wants to know whether you'd care to do a series of articles on religion."

"Does he expect me to go on saying there's no moral law and heaven doesn't exist?"

"Of course not. You can say what you like."

Lawrence suddenly laughed. "You told me Saturday it was time the church began a publicity campaign."

"I know. I hoped you'd agree with me. I was trying to lead up to telling you what I'd done—but I couldn't get round to it, when I saw how you disapproved."

"What length articles does he want?"

"About fifteen hundred words."

Lawrence got up and walked to the windows. "Tell me this: how much do you think this editor of yours is prepared to pay?"

"If you'll allow me to act as your agent, I'll get the best figure I can."

"I want two hundred pounds," said Lawrence. "If he wants my articles he can't have them for a penny less than two hundred pounds. And he must pay me in advance."

"Well, I'll do what I can, sir."

"You certainly will!" Lawrence clapped Kenneth on the shoulders and walked to the front door with him. "Next time you pinch material from me," said Lawrence, "do me the honor of taking a new photograph."

In the morning he was unusually vigorous, approaching his breakfast with relish and chuckling over odd items of news in the paper.

"Daddy, you're in a very good mood," said Susan.

"I'm excited about your great day tomorrow. I feel as though it's happening to me."

"Are you nervous?"

"Yes, a bit. But that's a good sign. I was nervous before I preached in the cathedral. And look at me now—I'm a celebrity. That's what you're going to be, my dear."

There were two letters on the table and he took one up. It was from Vera. He read: "My dearest, thank you for your letter. I feel I ought to return at once, there will be so many things Susan will need. Then I tell myself, perhaps it's better not to fuss her. I had such wretched dreams last night, I felt something awful had happened at home. Dear Lawrence, please ring me tonight and tell me it hasn't. I try to enjoy being here, but it's just as I told you—a day or so away from home and I always want to be back. . . ."

"She's not returning today, is she?" asked Susan.

"No. She's staying a day or so."

He put the letter in his pocket and then opened the other. Scrawled on a half sheet of cheap lined paper, in an illiterate hand, were the words: "Certain people are saying that a certain sum of money went where it shouldn't the vicar had better look out what hes doing." It was unsigned, there was no address, no date. The envelope bore the Gilchester postmark.

He got up, pushed his plate aside.

"Aren't you going to finish your breakfast?" asked Susan.

"Oh, I'm sorry. I . . . suddenly felt a bit queer."

She went over to him with a frown of anxiety. "Daddy, I don't believe you're well. I think you ought to see Doctor Pember."

"There's nothing wrong with me, my dear. I'll take my tea to the study and have a little rest."

The anonymous letter was still on the table. Casually he picked it up and put it in his pocket.

In the study, he sat at his desk, his face buried in his hands. The letter had come like a stab in the back, the more dreadful because it was justified—if anything could justify an anonymous accusation. But he could not now turn back on what he had done; that would be worse than cowardly. Susan must never know about this; she must go to London tomorrow with a clear conscience. And since, in the strangest way, it had perhaps been made possible for him to earn the stolen money, what was there really to worry about?

Do nothing, said a voice in him; do nothing at all. Wait. Yet not to act on this letter was tantamount to admitting guilt. He must act as though Vera were not guilty of this theft. Deception must always breed deception. This was the evil he was caught in.

MRS. BRATLEY was in the kitchen, with her sister, when Lawrence called at the farm.

"Is there somewhere we can talk, Mrs. Bratley?" he asked. "I want to see you alone, if I may."

"Better go in the parlor, then," she muttered.

"Thank you. I remember Jim's christening party in this room."

It was a room hardly ever used, and it smelled stale. In a large cabinet with glass doors were the many cups John had won at cattle shows; on the mantelpiece, cards announcing first, second or third prizes.

"It will be a great day when the village welcomes Jim home," he said brightly.

"Has there been news of him, then?"

"I've been in touch with the War Office, Mrs. Bratley. And I'm told there's no special reason for anxiety. Mails are often delayed."

"Is that what you come to see me about, parson?"

"No, Mrs. Bratley. I wanted to ask if you knew anything about this." Quietly, he put the anonymous letter down on the table. Mrs. Bratley leaned over, stared at it, then turned angrily to him.

"How should I know anything about i "Do you recognize the writing?"

"It's none of my business."

"Mrs. Bratley, this letter makes a seri accusation. If I showed it to the police, th would be trouble for the sender. But I do intend to do that. I want the sender in he please. I want to talk to him."

"I tell you I know nothing about it."

"Only one person could have written t letter. Ask Willie Furze to come in, pleas

She turned and left the room. A few m ments later Furze came in, his hands shov down the pockets of his dungarees, a dang ous half-smile on his red face.

"This wouldn't have happened if you'd cleaned the car windows with Windex Spray!"

Tsk! Tsk! And all it takes are a few seconds to clean windows, mirrors, all kinds of glass surface with Windex Spray. SWISH—you spray it on! WHISH—wipe it off. And there—you have sparkling clean glass in half the time it takes other cleaners! Stays clean longer, too. There's no waxy film left to attract dust.

And talk about thrifty, it only costs ¼¢ to clean 4 large windows. You get an even better bargain with the large 20-oz. refill size. Ask for Windex Spray at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also sold in Canada.

So quick, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Hey, you can't steal that. This is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains!"

Almost as menacing as a burglar are the dangerous sewer germs that lurk in every drain. They breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Only Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck —and keeps drains germ-free and free-running.

Make one day a week—Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Won't harm septic tanks, makes them work better. Get Drāno today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like Drāno . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.

TANGY, FRESH

LEMON PIE

NO COOKING!

MAGIC LEMON PIE FILLING

Made the easy Eagle Brand way!

1⅓ cups (15-oz. can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
½ cup lemon juice (fresh or frozen)
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
2 egg yolks

This real homemade pie is easy as a mix! The secret is Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk—a blend of pure milk and sugar, already cooked to creamy smoothness. Just combine ingredients in mixing bowl. Stir just until mixture thickens. That's all! No cooking! Pour filling into 8-inch crumb crust or cooled, baked pastry shell.

If desired, top with 2-egg-white meringue. Bake in slow oven (325° F.) about 15 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool.

Copyright, T. B. C.

FREE!

Get Elsie's 28-page, full-color recipe book

The Borden Company
Dept. LHJ-45, Box 171
New York 46, N. Y.

Please send me Elsie's free recipe book, Borden's Eagle Brand 70 Magic Recipes.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____

...rence spoke. "Mr. Furze, I believe you ... that letter." He pointed to it where it ...y on the table.

... Furze would not look at it. "You're ...g," he said slowly. "I haven't written no ... to you."

"...ook at it!" snapped Lawrence.

... a moment Furze's glance fell to the ... Then he smiled. "What good would it ... to write a letter like that?"

"...here's an easy way of proving it," said ...ence. He took a pencil and a notebook ... his pocket. "Let me see a sample of your ... writing. If you wish to clear yourself, it's ... easy."

"...ell, if you wish to clear yourself, parson, ... easy too. You can have that money ...ed out in front of Mrs. Bratley."

"...he amount will be counted out in front ...m Bratley when he returns, and then ...ed to him. That was Farmer John's dying ...st."

"...ell, you'll see he has the lot then, won't ... said Furze. "Seven hundred pounds will ... ry useful for the boy."

"...nd it's his interests we're looking to," ... Mrs. Bratley. "Don't you think we're ...

"...either of you has led me to suppose that ...care a rap about his interests!" said Law... His voice rose angrily. He felt caught in ... of evil, and the more he talked, the ...er he fell. He said, "May I ask, Furze, ... you are so certain of the amount of ...ey in that case of Mr. Bratley's? He told ...e had never even disclosed the amount to ... Bratley."

...look of quick suspicion passed from the ...w to Furze. Before either could speak ...rence went on: "Writers of anonymous ...s have usually some guilt of their own to ...eal."

...cking up the letter, he tore it into pieces. "...haven't done nothing wrong," mumbled ...e.

"...You know far more than you ought to ...t your late employer's affairs," rapped ...rence. "Let me tell you this. If it is found ... amount of money is short, you will not ... a very happy position."

"...Accusing me of stealing it, are you?"

"...He wouldn't do such a thing—would you, ...?"

...Irs. Bratley's voice had an ugly ring of de...ciation in it. As Lawrence looked at them, ...most became the truth in his mind. Had ...een only the victim of an ironical coinci...ce? Guilt was written in the red, furtive ... of the farm laborer.

"...So that's what you think of me, is it?" ...led Furze. Suddenly he turned on Mrs. ...ley venomously. "After all I done for you ...—and you hating the old man like you ... I never touched his damned money. It ... you who wanted it."

... seemed to Lawrence that he had done ...ing but add to the burden of evil in this ...e. Turning, he spoke gravely.

"...HIS is the last I wish to hear of it. I have ...ady told Mrs. Bratley, if she has any com...nts, she must address them properly, ...ough her solicitor. The money entrusted to ... by Farmer John will be given to his son ...n he returns. That is all I have to say."

...iding his bicycle along the rough rutted ...k from Halsey Farm, Lawrence suddenly ... a pain in his heart. He got off, leaned the ...cle against an ash tree. The pain grew ...se, he felt himself sweating. "Please God, ..." he heard himself muttering. Then he ...ected, Whatever we do, every moment is a ... moment to die. Is there a second in life when ... can come completely to accept the mystery ... death? Yet it was necessary; and even ...w—necessary at this living moment. What ... left behind was no longer his affair. So he ...de an act of faith, threw his mind away ...m the material cares which had ensnared ..., and murmured, "If it is Your will, yes." ...d again, he said, "I am Thine, oh save me." ...mmediately he realized he was not meant ...die at this moment. The sun moved slowly, ...y slowly across the sky. In the distance he ...ard the church clock striking twelve.

...Getting on his bicycle, he pedaled slowly to ... vicarage. When he got back, Susan had a message from Kenneth Foley, who had just rung. She was to tell her father that everything was fixed up, and there would probably be a letter in the post tomorrow.

"He wouldn't tell me what it was all about," said Susan. "What are you up to, daddy?"

"Learning how to save souls and be properly paid for it," answered Lawrence.

Going to the study, he reread the pages he had written last night. Then he got out his typewriter.

In the Royal Festival Hall the pianist who was young, and a little nervous when she heard the applause that greeted her, turned toward Sir Kenneth Corporal in his rostrum, and shyly extended her bare white arm toward him.

Away in the back of the hall, which was crowded, Vera Hearne clapped with the others. There was an intermission; it was just nine o'clock. Vera looked at her program. She did not really want to hear Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, but she had paid seven and sixpence for the seat, and an ingrained inability, cultivated through years of semiprivation, to waste a pennyworth of anything she had paid for made it almost impossible for her to leave the hall. Yet she was worried. She should have phoned Edna. It was only on the spur of the moment she had come to the concert, seeing the bill posted on the wall and deciding that she ought to go to hear a new pianist; it was her duty to know something about contemporary music. And it would carry her mind away, she had told herself—away from the wretched burden it had borne all these days.

Getting up, Vera wandered with the crowd out to the wide stairway. She looked through the glass doors to the restaurant—how exotic, how humming with an inner well-being it seemed! Little shaded lights, and dishes of hors d'oeuvres, and slender bottles on the white tablecloths. She thought she could recognize J. B. Priestley at one of the tables; at so easy to use in dozens of ways

COLORFUL, LONG-WEARING

Boltaflex BY-THE-YARD

FIX IT! Dinette chairs and hassocks are easy to recover with Boltaflex. Food stains and sticky handprints wipe away with a damp cloth.

MAKE IT! New breakfast nook—window valances—headboard? It's easy with Boltaflex. Stretch in place and tack. Won't chip, peel or scuff.

SEW IT! Boltaflex sews right on your own machine! Make handyman's aprons—toys—gay gifts for your family and friends. Easy, fun, economical!

Brighten your home and your life with beautiful, dutiful Boltaflex—the modern material for dozens of practical home uses.

You'll find Boltaflex by-the-yard at your favorite store in a wide selection of striking patterns and latest decorator colors. Send coupon below for free booklet. Try it! Do it yourself and save!

GENERAL PLASTICS
The General Tire & Rubber Company

BOLTA PRODUCTS, DIVISION OF THE GENERAL TIRE & RUBBER CO.
Lawrence, Massachusetts

Yes, I want to make beautiful things for less money! Enclosed is 10¢ for your booklet "At Home With Boltaflex".

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE___ STATE _____

Your hair won't go wild when it's washed with Halo!

Have lustrous, sparkling easy-to-manage hair right after shampooing!

When you "just can't do anything" with your hair, use Halo! Whether it's dry, oily, or normal, your hair will be softer, springier, look pretty as a picture—right after shampooing! ■ The secret is Halo's exclusive ingredient that leaves hair silkier, faster to set, easier to comb and manage. What's more, Halo's own special glorifier whisks away loose dandruff . . . removes the dullness that hides the natural beauty of your hair . . . lets it shine with far brighter sparkle! So, when your hair is hard to manage or simply won't "stay put" . . . you'll find it just loves to behave after a Halo Shampoo!

Halo

the shampoo that glorifies your hair!

for dry, oily, normal hair any rate, it was somebody whose picture she had seen.

Suddenly she heard a voice beside her: "Well! And what did you think of Mr. Trembath's jolly racket, Mrs. Hearne?"

She was startled. "Mr. Hood! How extraordinary to see you here!"

"Is it?" He laughed and flicked cigarette ash from a long black holder; he was wearing a shaggy greenish tweed suit, no tie, but a silk scarf wound round an open shirt, and he looked very different from the man who came down from the organ loft. "Where would you expect to find me? But tell me—what did you think of the concerto?"

"Oh, I liked it very much." She spoke eagerly. She was sure it was right to like it.

"Well, you're brighter than I am," he said. "I never heard such a Marxian din in all my life. And what did you think of the girl?"

Vera hesitated. "I don't really know."

"I'll tell you. She's a first-class second-rater. She'll turn up again at the Three Choirs Festival, and ultimately she'll lecture. Let's leave this intellectual aquarium. Would you care to accompany me somewhere else?"

"After the concert, you mean?" She spoke in a bewildered way. It began to dawn on her that he was a trifle drunk.

"The concert?" he said vaguely. "Haven't we had it?"

"There's the Beethoven."

"Surely you don't want to hear Corporal do the Eighth? I imagined you only came to hear the girl play."

She laughed. She began to like the exuberant disdain of his voice. "You're quite right. I did come to hear the concerto."

"And you were thinking of our pet pupil, weren't you? Mrs. Hearne, there's nothing you can't tell me about the thoughts of mothers. I had one once myself, you know."

They were making their way by this time toward the entrance. He pushed open one of the doors and stood aside, waiting for her to walk out.

There was a cold wind blowing up from the river, and she shivered. But Martin Hood, standing there without an overcoat, seemed to revel in it. "I feel young tonight," he said. "Shall we feel young together, Mrs. Hearne?"

"I'm rather tired, to tell you the truth. And not much looking forward to a long bus journey."

"Bus? Where to?"

"Barnes. I'm staying with my sister."

He lit another cigarette. "Mrs. Hearne, I can't allow you to bus to Barnes. You should never use buses unless you're a conductor and hate the human race. Will you let me take you somewhere—oh, very quiet! I assure you. I just feel happy, and I've no one to talk to—and, you know, I have a very great admiration for you and —— Taxi!" he suddenly shouted, startling Vera.

A taxi drew up, Martin murmured something to the driver and held the door open for her. But she hesitated. "It won't make me very late, will it? I must ring my sister."

"We can do that where we're going. And don't worry, please, about this excursion to Barnes. Leave that to me."

The Polypheme was a club existing mainly for addicts of jive, bebop and swing. On Saturday nights there were jam sessions, but tonight it was reasonably quiet. The moment Vera entered she knew it was not the sort of place she should come to. A band, composed mainly of saxophones, with a double bass plucking out a lazy rhythm, did nothing to reassure her.

"Don't worry," said Martin. "Very respectable joint."

He steered her to a table, under a white-painted arch with a glow of amber light from a hidden bulb. As they sat, the light changed to crimson. "Yes, it goes on doing that," said Martin. "Just ignore it. Now, Mrs. Hearne—a bottle of wine, yes? I should drink the rosy wine—it's safe. And sandwiches—what do you like?"

"Oh, please—no wine. It always goes to my head, and I've got such a long journey back."

"I asked you to let me see to that. As to wine going to your head, you're lucky. It always goes to my feet and fingers."

Before she could protest further, a boy had placed glasses and a bottle of wine before them.

The band suddenly hotted up, and a singer broke into a song.

"Do you often come here?" Vera leaned over the table to make him hear.

Now some couples were dancing and, in spite of her initial feelings, Vera began to feel a curious attraction toward the place.

Martin took up his glass, held it to the shifting color of the light, and cried, "To Susan! And may she be worthy of a good mother!"

She smiled faintly, and sipped the drink. It was pleasant; she had not drunk wine for so long and, taking more courage, she half emptied the glass, and pretended not to notice when Martin tipped the bottle neck, filling it again.

"Do I often come here?" He took up her question. "Whenever I manage to escape from Gilchester, generally I come here. Today is a special day for me. I've escaped from Gilchester forever, you see."

But she had not heard him, she found it difficult to hear anything but the extraordinary wailing music.

"Do you really like this sort of music?" she asked. "If it can be called that."

"My dear Mrs. Hearne"—he spoke in a shocked voice—"it is the only kind of music I do like. And I'll let you into a secret: I write it myself, or try to. In fact, you may hear a little number of mine presently. It's called Just a Quick One."

He went on talking and she sipped her wine, not hearing half he said, her mind troubled, realizing that somehow she was letting herself slip away and then always coming back to one visual object—her handbag on the table. He was telling her why he had left his job at the cathedral. He had felt the need to talk to someone who would understand his background. This rather sad-faced woman, with the beautiful large blue eyes, the faraway look and the dignity of remembered beauty—there would be some heart of true understanding in her, he had told himself.

And there was a quality to her which touched him also; even if she did not enjoy it, he had wanted to give the vicar's wife something different to remember.

But she was only half listening and in the middle of a sentence, as another bottle came on the table and he put his hand in his pocket,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

TO A GENTLE LOVER

By BARBARA SHOOK CONKLIN

I love the fragile beauty of your ways;
Your fingers cool and hushed as April rain
Can calm my world and make it whole again.
For your touch takes the sting from harshest days.
Nothing I've known is tender as your smile;
That small swift look you give me when we pass,
So warm and glad, like sunshine spilled on grass,
Makes where you are a brilliant sunlit aisle.
Time-weathered rocks may crumble, streams run dry,
But beauty frail as yours can never die:
Yours is the strength of simple heartfelt things,
Of sun and seed and daffodils in spring;
Not hard nor harsh as stone, yours is the might
Of the small bright star that comforts us by night.

There's Gas wherever you live—suburbs town or country

No matter where you live, you, too, can enjoy the modern convenience of automatic gas appliances with Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LP-GAS). It's like natural gas except it's delivered by truck. Also known as Butane, Propane, Bottled Gas, Tank Gas.

enjoy the modern benefits of faster cooking

automatic incineration

cleaner home heating with dependable

LP GAS

Write today for free booklet!

LP-GAS INFORMATION SERVICE
Dept. LHJ-1, 185 N. Wabash Avenue
Chicago 1, Illinois

N puts the work space handily in front, the burners at the back. Rich, gold-colored trim makes this one of the handsomest new automatic "CP" Gas ranges.

See the Spring Showing of new automatic GAS ranges for the world's smartest ranges

HE NEW AUTOMATIC CLOCK CONTROLS. See ovens big enough for 35-lb. turkeys. separate broilers, waist-high broilers, broilers that cook a whole meal to -kissed perfection. See all the different top burner arrangements, and note ascinating choice of top burner controls. (Some push in; some "click"; all instant on-off heat.) See how easy it is to keep one of the new Gas ranges —even the burners come out for easy sudsing. Only Gas gives you so many rn features – in such a wide choice of automatic ranges. See them at the g Showing, now going on at your Gas company and your Gas appliance r's. And remember! . . . the new Gas ranges cost less to buy, install and use.

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Only Gas gives such matchless performance

—the modern fuel for automatic cooking . . . refrigeration . . . water-heating . . . house-heating . . . air-conditioning . . . clothes-drying . . . incineration.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 156

she stopped him. "Let me pay—please." Her hand went automatically to her bag.

The music had stopped, more people were cramming down the narrow stairway, the air was growing thicker with smoke.

"No, no!" cried Martin. "Of course you mustn't pay." He flicked a pound note across to the boy, who searched for change.

Vera had opened her bag, and suddenly she burst into silly laughter. "I've a lot of money," she said. "And I can't get rid of it. Let's have some more wine."

Martin realized that something had gone wrong, that Vera's laughter was unnatural. He would have to get her a taxi home, and he had no money left but the change there would be from this pound note, and a few coins. Yet somehow he must stop her paying, that was too humiliating; he could borrow from someone here later on.

"No, no!" he muttered. Putting out his hand to prevent her using her money, his glass was knocked over, and a pool of wine dribbled across the table as her bag fell open and some crumpled five-pound notes slid out. He noticed her quickly stuff the money back and close the bag. By now the boy was giving him change and mopping up the wine. The band had started to play again.

"Mrs. Hearne"—he spoke gently—"isn't it a bit unwise to carry such a lot of money around with you?"

She began to laugh again, her voice came in spasms. "I—can't—get rid—of it. I just—want to get rid—of it."

He stared at her. Suddenly he put his hand across the table, and took her long slender fingers in his. "There's something wrong," he said. "Won't you tell me about it? This is the sort of place where you can talk, you know."

Modesty is the gentle art of enhancing your charm by pretending not to be aware of it. —OLIVER HERFORD

Vera realized she was gabbling something half incoherent to Martin, while his hand still clutched hers. At last she stopped talking. Martin took his hand away and pointed to her glass. "Drink up," he said.

"No, I daren't. I've drunk too much. I don't know what I've been saying."

"I do, my dear. I'm going to put you in a taxi in a few minutes. But before you go I want to tell you something. I admire you more than I did when you telephoned me on Friday. But please will you do one quite simple thing?"

She nodded, without answering.

"Susan will be in town tomorrow for the examination. I think you should go back to Hinton by the morning train. I shall be catching it myself, I'll look out for you on the platform. When you get home there'll be nobody there except your husband. Just tell him all about it and give him back the money. That's all."

"But Susan ——" she whispered.

"The ten-twenty," he said. "And I shall meet you with all the best magazines."

Getting up, he put out his hand to help her to rise. She reached for her handbag, but he took it. "Allow me," he said. "I know this place better than you do."

Holding Vera's arm, he guided her up the stairs. She gasped when she felt the fresh wind on her face. Her head was hammering.

"I never rang Edna," she said, as they waited on the curb for a taxi.

"Tell me the number. I'll call her and explain."

At last a taxi came. Dragging from his pocket all the silver he had, Martin opened the door, bundled Vera inside, put the handbag firmly on her lap, and then spoke to the driver, giving him the silver.

"Be sure this lady gets home safely," he said. "I want you to see her to the door."

Back in the club he found the telephone, rang Edna, told her that he was an old friend, a doctor, and that Vera was far from well, must be put straight to bed.

He came back again into the dense smoke of the room, and as he passed the band pianist

NEW MUM MIST PROTECTS EVEN THE 2 IN 5 WHO PERSPIRE FREELY

Here's deodorant protection you never thought possible!

New Mum Mist spray deodorant stops perspiration instantly and for hours. Contains miracle hexachlorophene to prevent odor all day long—even if you are one of the 2 in 5 who perspire freely.

No more messy running or dripping!

Mum Mist sprays on, stays on. It dries fast—won't run, won't drip. Completely safe for normal skin—doesn't damage delicate fabrics. For protection that's fast, protection that lasts—get new Mum Mist!

At all toiletries counters 59c

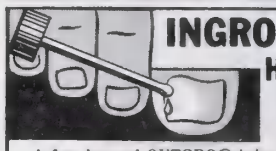
with hexachlorophene

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS



IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURITIS NEURALGIA

get FAST RELIEF WITH

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend

Here's Why... Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today.

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You

Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

LONGEST SHORELINE IN THE NATION

AIR CONDITIONED FOR YOUR PLEASURE

Michigan

3121 miles of breeze-cooled beaches, plus 11,037 fresh water lakes, make this Water Wonderland your perfect vacation choice. Drive Safely!

MICHIGAN WATER WONDERLAND
Room 14, Capitol Bldg., Lansing 1, Mich.
Send me Michigan's free color booklet. Also include literature of regional tourist association checked.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY ZONE STATE

1 ☐ Upper Peninsula Development Bureau
2 ☐ West Michigan Tourist Association
3 ☐ East Michigan Tourist Association
4 ☐ Southeast Michigan Tourist Association

45

spered to him. Then he sat down, lit a cigite, and waited. The band started to play. irl was singing:

Just a quick one—before you catch the train, omething to pick one up—again—
Oh, don't we need it!
The life we lead—it's Insane. . . ."

pleasing sinuous melody in D minor, with idden change to F major, simple enough cunning. A bit too much like early Coward? asked himself. But as it went on, and the ples began to dance, he smiled. It didn't ter if it was like Coward; there was someg of Hood in it; and it had more relation 954 than Boyce in C.

he fine spell of weather had broken, and it raining heavily when Vera paid the taxi- and darted into the porch of the vicarage following afternoon. It was just five ock—a time of day when Lawrence was rly always in. Vera remembered Martin od's last words to her at Gilchester station: on't think about it; go straight to him and him." But here she was, hardly able to g herself to turn the iron ring which lifted heavy latch of the door.

At last she opened the door and went inside. re was not a sound in the house. In a large henware pitcher on the chest were some ch leaves and sprays of forsythia; and e were two letters waiting to be posted. glanced at them. One was typewritten, adssed to the editor of the Sunday Record; other, in Lawrence's hand, was addressed he Dean of Gilchester. She was besieged h curiosity about both of them; why should e writing to the dean, and why such a large elope to the Sunday Record?

She left her bag in the hall and went to the ng room. Everything was very neat and ; on the table was a tray covered by a clean ite cloth. Lifting it, she saw a cup, a plate, ad and butter covered by another plate. a was touched to see how well Susan ked after her father; all this must have been e before she left that morning.

Coming out to the hall again, she called, awrence, darling! Where are you?"

There was no reply. And as she waited she an to feel as though her personality had sed to exist. In a strange way the house, ich had been her home for so long, did not m to want her any more. It was as though re were nothing left for her to do. The ger she stood there the more she felt a nger. If Lawrence died would this be how would feel—without anchor or direction—king back only to tired and wasted years? uld it be like this?

"Silly, silly," she muttered. Lawrence was dead, he needed her as he had always ded her.

She went to the study. One letter lay open the desk, written in pencil on lined paper. e read: "Dear Vicar: Would you please te and tell me how the old man is doing? He er says much in his letters, but the last one d he was worried because he hadn't heard m me for several weeks which I can't underand—and I got a sort of feeling he's ill. . . ." en Vera read the signature—Jim Bratley. e date was three weeks back.

HE stared at the letter, hardly seeing it. Suddly she pulled at the bottom right-hand wer, where Lawrence had put Farmer n's black case the morning she had gone ay. But the case was not there, nor was it in y of the other drawers. There was still a nce, she had thought; she could still return stolen money, and later, when she saw wrence, pretend to complete ignorance of whole matter. But the case wasn't there. e was not to be given this final relief.

She came out to the hall, to the kitchen, ked outside to the coachyard, saw his bicle resting by the wall, called his name. Incredibly, she both needed him desperately yet ented that fact. But he was not there. Com back to the hall, she went slowly upstairs, ling an overpowering weariness.

Just before six, Lawrence shook his dripping brella outside the door, and went into the hall. He saw the two letters on the chest and was annoyed by his forgetfulness. Both of them were important; in particular he wanted the dean to know that he deeply regretted the fact that he had been pestered by questions from the press. As to the other envelope, probably if it arrived Friday morning it would still be in time. He would telephone the editor tomorrow and tell him the first two articles were in the post.

As he hung up his mackintosh he tripped over something. He looked down. It was Vera's suitcase. And beside it was her handbag.

He could not quite believe it. Picking up the bag, he held it in his hands, looking at it with a sad, affectionate smile. It was worn, she badly needed a new one. He was reluctant to open it, and hardly knew what he expected to find if he did. Then at last he did open it; and there, stuffed inside, was a thick bundle of bank notes.

For a moment, he was angry; not because she had taken the money—he was almost relieved at last to know he had not been mistaken about that—but because she had been so stupid as to carry it about with her in this bag. Then he was moved to a feeling of great tenderness for her, and standing there, he buried his face in his hands, groping in his own darkness for some expression of thanks, feeling as he had felt as a child when something wrong he had done had been found out, and he had been forgiven.

He found her in the bedroom. She was lying with her knees drawn up, under the coverlet. The room was cold, and he lit a lamp, and went about very quietly, not wishing to wake her, happy only to know she was home again.

Then she woke from a sleep that had been very deep. She saw him standing by the bed, and without a word she put her hand out, knowing it would be taken.

"My darling Vera."

He did not say any more, and neither could she speak. He sat on the bed, held her in his new! deep magic

facial cleansing lotion by Toni cleans your skin up to 3 times cleaner than soaps or creams

now you can have a clearer skin

because you can have a cleaner skin. New Deep Magic actually deep-cleans your skin as much as three times cleaner than soaps or creams—without soap drying, without cream greasiness!

It leaves your skin far cleaner, radiantly clear the very first time you use it. Lanolin-gentle Deep Magic actually replaces natural oils, leaving behind an invisible powder base.

Try Deep Magic today. See the wonderful magic it works on your complexion!

(60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, wherever cosmetics are sold.)

non-drying—contains no soaps, no detergents, no alcohol

No other cleansing method leaves your skin

So clear, So soft, So radiant

Tissue-Test proves it!

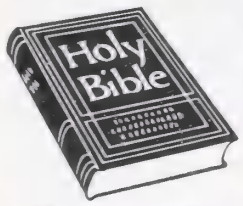
After you think your usual cleansing method has cleaned your skin, use a few drops of Deep Magic. Then look at your tissue. See all the clogging make-up that only Deep Magic can remove . . . Proof that Deep Magic cleans deep, deep down—where beauty begins!

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

TURN YOUR YOUNG MAN'S FANCY toward you this Spring . . . by turning your hair into a glimmering, shimmering halo of beauty. You can, you know . . . if you give yourself a MARCHAND'S Rinse after each shampoo! And that's exactly what I urge you to do . . . for after a MARCHAND'S Rinse, your hair looks fresh as flowers . . . so bright with glorious color and sparkling lights it attracts all eyes! And whether you're a blonde, brunette or redhead, there's a MARCHAND'S Rinse made for you . . . with 12 nature-matched, safe, Government-approved colors and special shades for lovely white hair to choose from. All are temporary, too . . . they wash out easily with each shampoo and leave no revealing stains around the hair line. MARCHAND'S also conditions your hair . . . keeps it satin-soft and silky, always a darling to manage! Still a MARCHAND'S Beauty Treatment costs very little . . . only 25c for 6 Rinses, 10c for 2. Better make a note of it . . . if you want him to take note of you!

SPRING SHOWERS may bring May flowers . . . but they also bring a storm of housecleaning chores. You'll really be deluged with things to do . . . but most important of all, you'll want to give your rugs and upholstered furniture a thorough cleaning so they'll look new, fresh and last longer, too! You'll also want to dry clean your drapes and store them for winter . . . then hang frilly curtains in their place. And no matter what cleaning chores are on your agenda, you'll certainly want to save work and money! That's why the makers of ODORLESS RENUZIT chose this time to make you this:



SPECIAL OFFER . . . during the month of April, you can get the one gallon can of RENUZIT (regularly priced at $1.79) plus the handy RENUZIT eraser (a 35c value in itself) BOTH for $1.79! The eraser is FREE, the gallon can is economical . . . and they're all you need to take care of almost every housecleaning chore with a minimum of work and expense. Remember . . . April is ODORLESS RENUZIT'S "special" month! So get your can of RENUZIT and FREE Eraser . . . while this offer lasts.

APRIL IS MY FAVORITE MONTH . . . I love every minute of it. But the other day I had a shock . . . when I came indoors, I was "met" by a not-too-pleasant combination of household odors. So now I'm using GOOD-AIRE as regularly as I did in winter . . . for nothing I've ever tried beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear! Yet all you do is push the lever on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . odors from cooking, bathrooms, pets and the nursery, along with odors from stale air and tobacco smoke fade away. Imagine . . . with a mere touch of the finger you can get rid of unpleasant odors and give your home a pleasant April air. So think of GOOD-AIRE as good etiquette . . . a courtesy you owe your family as well as your guests! It costs only 89c for the regular size and $1.98 for the large economy size . . . at Drug, Grocery, Hardware and Dept. Stores. P. S. GOOD-AIRE is made by the makers of Bridgeport® Aer★A★Sol Bug Bomb and other Aer★A★Sol products.

I WANT TO SPEAK TO YOU for a moment about the Revised Standard Version of the Bible . . . the most perfect Easter gift I can possibly suggest! Of course, most of your loved ones already own a Bible . . . but chances are it was written hundreds of years ago and is filled with out-of-date language that discourages daily reading. However, the Revised Standard Version is written in the easy-to-read language of today . . . and is so clear and powerful, I'm sure they'll turn to it twice as often! This great Bible is more accurate, too, and more faithful to the earliest known manuscripts . . . so let me humbly recommend it for your Easter giving. And I have an Easter GIFT for you . . .

A FREE leatherette bookmark with the beloved 121st Psalm ("I lift up my eyes . . .") stamped in 23-karat gold . . . which will acquaint you with the power, clarity and beauty of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible. This OFFER is limited . . . check OFFER #1 in box today! And tell your friends about it . . . they'll want one, too.

ARE YOU LIKE SOME MOTHERS I KNOW . . . who think all diapers are alike? Well, that was my opinion . . . until I learned that actual tests proved that CHIX* Gauze Diapers are more absorbent and stay absorbent . . . even after countless washings and wearings. It's true, too . . . and what a blessing it is . . . because it means that clothing and bedding stay dryer while baby enjoys more protection for greater comfort. Furthermore, CHIX Diapers are made of top-quality surgical type gauze by a patented process . . . which makes them easy to wash and keeps them wrinkle-free . . . wash after wash! They're also whisper-soft on a baby's sensitive skin, fold to fit any size baby . . . and never, never seem to wear out, either. And last but not least, they're made by a Johnson & Johnson Company . . . makers of CHUX* Disposable Diapers, REDI-FOL* Diapers, CHIX* Crib Sheets and CHIX* Diaper Liners. But let me send you this:

SPECIAL SAMPLE of a CHIX Diaper . . . to try before you buy! Then you'll see . . . it's all I say and more! Still it's yours for only 25c . . . see OFFER #2 in box. *Trademarks

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J-2, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:
☐ OFFER #1 . . . FREE Leatherette Bookmark with the 121st Psalm stamped in 23-karat gold.
☐ OFFER #2 . . . SAMPLE Chix Gauze Diaper. Please enclose 25c.

Name.....
Street.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

arms, and smoothed her hair away from her eyes.

"I thought I had lost you," she said. "I thought I'd lost everybody. Oh, Lawrence, I've done such a dreadful thing."

"I don't think it is so very dreadful, Vera."

"Did you know all the time?"

"Yes, I knew in my heart. But it's all right now. And you were right about Susan."

"Was I—was I really, Lawrence?"

"Yes. That's why I couldn't tell you I knew. So you see, I am just as guilty as you are. It's over now, a very small bit of pain we both had to have—so trivial that even to dwell on it for a second would be a waste of God's time."

"Don't you think I was very wrong, then?"

"Yes, of course you were wrong. But who isn't wrong? How can we help being wrong sometimes? I expect your worst misery lay in the reflection that you, who had never done a dishonest deed in your life, had suddenly fallen. Wasn't it?"

"I don't know. I just found that I hated life. And I hated the money, and blamed the money. And then I resented everything—I felt that all we had tried to build up together had come to nothing."

"But you don't still feel that?"

"No. I'm happy just to be here. You are the only person in the world who really knows me. Being married is just that, isn't it? Getting to know each other."

"Yes. It's a joint voyage of discovery."

"It's so silly"—she laughed a little—"to have carried that money about for five days—and then to bring it back. And all the time I was dreading the bag would be stolen. Did you know I'd brought it back?"

You can spot a happy husband by how happy his wife is.

—JOHN J. PLOMP

"Yes, my dear. I opened your bag."

Lawrence walked over to the dressing table and fingered her things there.

"There's something else I want to tell you," she began. The scene at the Polypheme returned to her mind; she wanted to tell Lawrence about her strange meeting with Martin, but before she could begin, Lawrence broke in:

"Don't let us talk any more about it. Susan will be back late tonight, very tired; we must be at our best to welcome her."

"I know, Lawrence. But we still haven't solved her problem, have we?"

He laughed suddenly. "But of course, you don't know. We have solved the problem. The editor of the Sunday Record has offered me two hundred pounds for a series of articles on religion."

"Oh, Lawrence! How did you do it? I can't believe it!"

"Don't ask me how I did it. Slap me on the face for not learning to do it much earlier."

"But it's wonderful. Oh, Lawrence! I believe we're meant to have a wonderful future!"

"There isn't any doubt about that," he said. "If we want it enough, it will come. And it will be wonderful."

FROM LAWRENCE HEARNE'S JOURNAL

April 11. Palm Sunday. The first of my articles appeared in the S.R. I have to confess that I feel as pleased as a schoolboy who has written his first decent school essay. It does not seem to me to read badly. The church was nearly full again. V. and S. were very thrilled. But I can't get used to it—I feel slightly cheap. I did not preach this morning, but reread the long Passion. What a cruel triumph for our Lord today! And how ironical the expectations of the crowd—that here was their King come to deliver them out of present misery! Is it always the same? Do we always demand the short cut? Do we always grudge payment? I must beware of holding out to people anything in the nature of an easy way to happiness. Nothing kills religion more than making it easy. But neither must we rebuke the crowd for waving palms. When God rides on an ass, His children are right to rejoice.

Smartly RUBBERIZE
YOUR STAIRS AND FLOORS
Make them safer, cleaner, quieter, more beautiful with ACE TEXTO TRED stair treads, matting and mats.
TEXTO TREDS
Look like carpet, at fraction of cost. Choice of green, gray, rose or beige. Long lasting. Runners to match.
ACE Sets the Pace®
ACE WELCOME DOOR MAT
3 Sizes
WELCOME
3 Colors
Symbol of cordiality. Excellent footscraper. Dirt and water drop through perforated waffles.
Get ACE RUG GUARDS for your car. Pair, left and right, protect front floor. At auto supply stores.
At Better Stores Everywhere
ACE RUBBER PRODUCTS, INC.
110 Beech St. Akron 8, Ohio

Do FALSE TEETH Rock, Slide or Slip?
FASTEETH, an improved powder to be sprinkled on upper or lower plates, holds false teeth more firmly in place. Do not slide, slip or rock. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. FASTEETH is alkaline (non-acid). Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

FREE Catalog and Color Swatches
NO-IRON
Fiberglas
CURTAINS and DRAPES
NOW IN 5 COLORS
SAVE $2 to $13 a pair!
What wonderful curtains and drapes amazing Fiberglas fabrics make! Never need ironing, stretching, starching! You can wash, hang and drape them in 7 minutes! Guaranteed never to shrink, fade, stretch, sag! 30 sizes to fit any window; 7 colors in drapes. And our huge buying power and direct-to-you selling policy lets you pay as little as $2.69 per pair. Write today for FREE Catalog and Color Swatches.
RONNIE, Dept. 76JJ-3
487 Broadway, New York 13, N. Y.

April 13. Always Holy Week passes slowly. day yesterday I tried to write the remaining icles, and now they are typed, for better or rse they must go.
D. H. insists on helping with the spring aning. I am very much afraid there is a conracy to get at the study.

April 14. I decided to go to Gilchester for my n particular spring cleaning—an overhaul m Pember. He was astonished to find me oking so well and went so far as to say Miracles can always happen." But was there y real improvement in my general condin? He could give no sure answer to that.
Afterward, called on Hood—rehearsing ster music with the boys. What a fine usician H. is—I find it hard to believe he can right to throw it up. And yet . . . he has tegrity. When the boys had gone he told e that Doctor Sinclair, one of the judges r the piano scholarship, had phoned him at there was a division of opinion as to the erits of two candidates, one of them Susan. Sinclair's opinion, it should go to Susan—t this was not to be passed on to anyone, rned Hood.
Later. Praise be to God! Hood has just teleoned to say that the examiners have decided favor of Susan. She has won the scholarship.
Still later. So much talk and chat of the ture, and D. H. buzzing about, talking of a rewell party for Susan when she goes to Lonn next month—I did not quite know where was, and came to the study, and here I have en since ten. It is nearly midnight.
I have been reading back some of these enies. How strange it is that one's deepest misies fade so far away! "My God, my God, hy hast Thou forsaken me?" Thus I wrote on hristmas Day. Now it reads almost like a asphemy.
Upstairs, S. and V. sleep more happily than ey have done for weeks. I am tired, but don't ant to sleep. It seems absurd to go to bed. I ish I could talk to David. There is a scent of ossoming trees from the garden. Very soon will be summer.

"Very soon it will be summer."
The words were written at the bottom of the ft page, and although more was written on e right, Vera stopped reading. She had raced rough the pages very quickly, not always able decipher Lawrence's small and hurried riting, and now she turned back a page and tared at the remarks concerning his meeting esterday with Doctor Pember. "Miracles can lways happen."

ACROSS the garden came the sound of the hurch bells—so familiar that she hardly heard em. It was nearly five to eight, the morning f Maundy Thursday. She had wanted to go to ommunion today, and had asked Lawrence call her. But he had said, "After all the exitement of the good news about Susan I think ou'd better sleep it off." It was true she had een very tired last night, and had only woken uddenly at twenty to eight, quickly dressed nd rushed downstairs. Then she could not nd her scarf, and had come into the study, remembering she had dropped it here yesterday vening, and in searching for it she had found erself standing before Lawrence's desk, with is journal open there. Lawrence's journal had een a slight family joke; for years he had, nore or less from day to day, written down houghts that came into his mind. But he would never let anyone read them; he kept hese notebooks locked in one of his drawers. o Vera had paused, full of curiosity, the scarf orgotten.
The bells went on. She knew she would be ate if she did not hurry, but she could not rag herself away from the journal.

The bells went on. And up in the belfry of St. John's Church, the vicar, standing with his hirt sleeves rolled up, pulled and eased the ropes, and pulled again. On the occasions when he rang the bells, Lawrence took a delight in competing with Nicholas. He would ring as a kind of challenge to the sleeping sexton, with even a hint of reproach in the sound, knowing that the sound of the bells would float across the fields to the cottage bedroom where he slept off his drunkenness.

I suppose, thought Lawrence, Pember would be shocked if he saw me doing this; and certainly it wasn't very easy work. Yet there was a zest to it which he enjoyed. He moved his stance a little, and was thus able to see more clearly up the church to the altar with its two candles, its simple purple frontal. Today, since it was Maundy Thursday there were two vases of daffodils and white tulips between the candlesticks, which Dorothy Hunter had put there. Now she had come in through the south door, and went to her pew and knelt.

His eyes turned to the shaky little table a few yards away, by the arch to the belfry, and he read the words on the six-page pamphlet he had written on the history of the church and parish. "The price of this pamphlet is a donation to the restoration fund of this church. The sum of two thousand pounds is urgently needed." It would be a long time before two thousand pounds was raised at sixpence a pamphlet, for few visitors came to this out-of-the-way place. Looking up again, he wondered if he would ever be able to go forward with his plan to pull down the ugly Victorian screen and throw the choir open to the nave, thus bringing more light down the length of the church. There was nothing particularly distinguished about the church, and only a thorough cleansing out of many ugly Victorian and late eighteenth-century memorial tablets could really do anything.

Have I failed? he asked himself. Failed to leave any sort of mark on this place? The altar table was new in his time; the children's corner had been started by him; one new stained-glass window had been put in the south aisle as a memorial to those in the parish who had fallen in two wars. It seemed to Lawrence now that he could have done much more to improve the building.

Noticing that Dorothy Hunter had turned and glanced at her wrist watch, Lawrence let one rope go and pulled on the tenor alone. Time to stop, he told himself. But there was a Treat yourself to a new Toni . . .

it's even easier with Coets !

Next time you treat yourself to a Toni Home Permanent, use COETS quilted cotton squares to apply the waving lotion and neutralizer!

COETS are much better than plain cotton for home permanents, because they are quilted—don't wad up when wet—don't "fuzz off" in your hair—are wonderfully easy to handle—and are just the right size.

COETS, the perfect cosmetic accessory, are available at your favorite store. Box of 40—23¢, box of 80—43¢.

Coets® Quilted Cotton Squares and Toni Home Permanents go together!

zest to this which held him; he found it difficult to take his hands away from the rope. There was something about such physical operations which could mesmerize you. To swing a scythe through the orchard meadow in high summer; to extend the arms in the breast stroke and see the shore coming nearer and nearer; to pull with even weight and distance on the bell rope, knowing that the sound of the bell flooded out to the village, that the milk carrier would hear it as he stopped his lorry by the wooden ledge in the farm wall, that the postman would hear it as he cycled to outlying cottages, that his own people would hear it in the vicarage—this was a means of communication better perhaps than any spoken word, a melancholy sound in a sense, yet always a summons to remember, to remember.

The word "remember" lingered in his mind, and he found himself repeating words from Ecclesiastes: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth"; and as he bent his whole body down on the rope his eyes were fixed on the panel of names under the war-memorial window where the words "David Hearne" seemed to glow like the fire of the sun, and he wondered vaguely why it was that the rope slid away so easily from his fingers and Dorothy Hunter was running down the church toward the belfry. If he was a little late in starting the service on this Maundy Thursday, did it matter?

The bell stopped. And when it stopped, Vera, with a guilty start, realized now that she would certainly be late. She ran to the study door with a letter in her hand, and called Susan. She was wildly excited.

When Susan came from the kitchen, she saw her mother standing there by the hall chest, reading the letter.

"Mother, what's happened?"

"Oh, my darling. I can't believe it! Read that. It must have come for your father this morning. I found it on his desk. Put it back—and don't tell him you've read it, whatever you do. I must fly—I'm late already."

Staring after her mother, Susan looked then at the heading to the typewritten letter. "The Deanery, Gilchester." Then she read:

"Dear Mr. Hearne: You need not have taken the trouble to write me your courteous note of apology. Please do not imagine I frown upon your efforts into popular journalism. Why should I? Indeed, I like the first of your articles in the Record and agree with what you say.

"Will you be so kind as to have tea with me at the Deanery on the Wednesday after Easter? I have a proposition to put to you regarding two important appointments—but it will need discussion."

The sun was bright across the field as Vera walked quickly. She had never liked being late for church, though she knew that Lawrence did not mind. Now she longed to see him, she felt she could not wait till after the service. So strange and silly, she thought—why couldn't I have had more patience? To have submitted herself to all that misery, to have fallen so low—for no reason. Yet what had Lawrence meant in his reference to Doctor Pember. He had never talked to her of any physical trouble; she had only been aware that some of his old vigor seemed to have left him, that he w not so quick as he had once been. But neith was she herself.

Halfway up the hill she stopped suddenly. figure had climbed the stile at the top, and w running down toward her. It was Dorot Hunter.

Dorothy was waving and running qu frantically as though she were in fear of h life. Then Vera stopped dead, unable to mo as Dorothy came nearer.

When the other woman reached her, the was a strange silence. Dorothy's hand lay Vera's coat sleeve, and Vera stared at the t eager woman.

"Tell me, please. Something has happen to Lawrence."

Dorothy nodded. Vera put her arms rou her and held her, while the tears ran. "He di before I could reach him. He fell as he was pu ing the bell. He should not have been doing Vera. But Nicky wasn't there."

With the news of death, the world assumes different face. The familiar becomes startling unfamiliar. Vera thought she could hear th bell again, then realized it was not ringin Lawrence was dead. What did that mean? Sh could not tell. It was not the moment to thinl Tomorrow he will not come up the path, I sha not cook his midday meal, I shall not smell h tobacco again. It was not the moment. It wa the moment only to linger in the living realit of the person she had most loved.

Then she took hold of Dorothy by the arm "Don't cry," she said. "I know he wouldn want us to cry. Let's go to him."

As the two women entered the church an walked toward the belfry, Susan still stood b the desk in the study. She had returned th dean's letter to its envelope; but now, like he mother, she had found her attention drawn t the open notebook, and for some moments sh had been reading what Lawrence had written tee virginity any more than its absence proves the lack of it. A great many brides have an erroneous conception of the sex relationship, derived from gossip, superstition, newspaper accounts of sex crimes and the unrealistic ideas expressed in some romantic fiction. Teaching that the hymen is a sealed barrier which must be broken at the first intercourse in order to prove virginity might have been sound philosophy in the Middle Ages. But it can also create, for a bride and bridegroom, the anticipation of a painful crisis on their wedding night which might be psychologically as well as physically traumatic and lead both to the conclusion that they are sexually incompatible. Instead of 'living happily ever after' as the fairy tales have it, the result might be an annulment of the marriage."

"Very soon it will be summer."

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

"But, Doctor, I've already told you that I am willing to undergo surgery if it is necessary ——"

"It will not be necessary. I am sure that, by means of a simple instrument, it will be possible to dilate the small hymeneal opening sufficiently to remove the factor of obstruction—a procedure which is in line with the foremost medical thought of today. But let me say again that before anything else I will want to have the conference I mentioned with you and your fiancé both."

"Well, all right. But I'm perfectly certain he will feel just as I do. After we've all three had this talk, will you do the test for me?"

"Possibly, although I cannot be enthusiastic. There is nothing in the examination I have just made or your history to suggest any tube abnormality. I wonder, also, if you realize that, even though we could prove both of your Fallopian tubes to be open, I would not guarantee a pregnancy.

"Let me ask you this: suppose we should discover some small abnormality involving one of the tubes, would you go to your young mar and call off the wedding? Of course not. Anc he would seem to be a pretty poor sort if he allowed you to do that. My advice is to gc ahead and marry this young fellow. If you come back again in six months and tell me you are unable to become pregnant, I promise that I will carry out the most intricate sterility study I can to discover the cause.

"In the meantime I can see no reason for undertaking such a schedule with two obviously healthy, normal individuals. It seems much wiser to delay that until after ordinary attempts at conception have failed."

"But he's been examined and proved all right and I thought I ought to ——"

"And what of that? Even though you are both able to prove yourselves physically normal in every respect, it would not necessarily mean that you two can accomplish a pregnancy."

"I didn't know that."

"It is true, though quite unexplainable in the light of our present knowledge. It seems to me that you have developed a fixed idea over this question—and that isn't good either. Let a little romance in, my dear. Or isn't yours a romance, at all?"

"Oh, but it is, Doctor—it certainly is!"

"Then let it go at that. And act as though you have a romance. Now go home and talk to the man you are going to marry. Bring him here tomorrow, if you wish. If he sees eye to eye with us over the suggested treatment for that small anatomical barrier, we will go ahead with it forthwith. Fair enough?"

"Yes, Doctor. You can count on us being here tomorrow."

"Very good. And I will explain to you then how you can help establish the far more important postulate that you are ovulating regularly, with only a little time and effort on your part."

END

Obstacles are those frightful things you see when you take your eyes off the goal. —HANNAH MORE

L, 1955

You look wonderful···because you feel wonderful

when you use

YARDLEY LAVENDER

for the freshest, youngest feeling in the world

It's so much more than a delightful essence. Yardley Lavender is a feeling. There's no lift like its crisp coolness, no other fragrance that makes you feel so fresh so long. Enjoy Yardley Lavender in its many other forms. The essence, from $1.10 plus tax; Soap, box of 3, $1.50. Created in England, made in U.S.A. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

WOMEN NEED NO LONGER DIE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 61

for womankind. And now that the secrets and mysteries of cervical cancer are better understood, they can be stopped. By far the most important weapon against cervical cancer right now is much more widespread and effective use of the Papanicolaou vaginal-smear technique. This technique, as most people know, is based upon the fact that cells are constantly being sloughed from the inner female organs into the vaginal fluid. Examination of samples of the fluid under the microscope has revealed cancer cells in countless cases, long before any signs or symptoms suggested that anything was amiss.

The physicians at the American Cancer Society meeting were told of improvements in the technique which now make it possible to detect not only cervical cancers in the early stages, but conditions which, it is believed, may be precursors of cancer. This makes it possible to deal with a cancer before it is a cancer! Says Dr. Charles S. Cameron, medical and scientific director of the American Cancer Society, "Years of experience with this technique have shown that it will disclose 95 per cent of cervical cancers in the early and precancerous stages, when they are most readily curable, and 85 per cent of cancers in the body of the uterus."

But though the Papanicolaou smear technique has been practically a household word since 1947, its benefits have been limited to the hundred thousands of women, instead of to the millions who should have them.

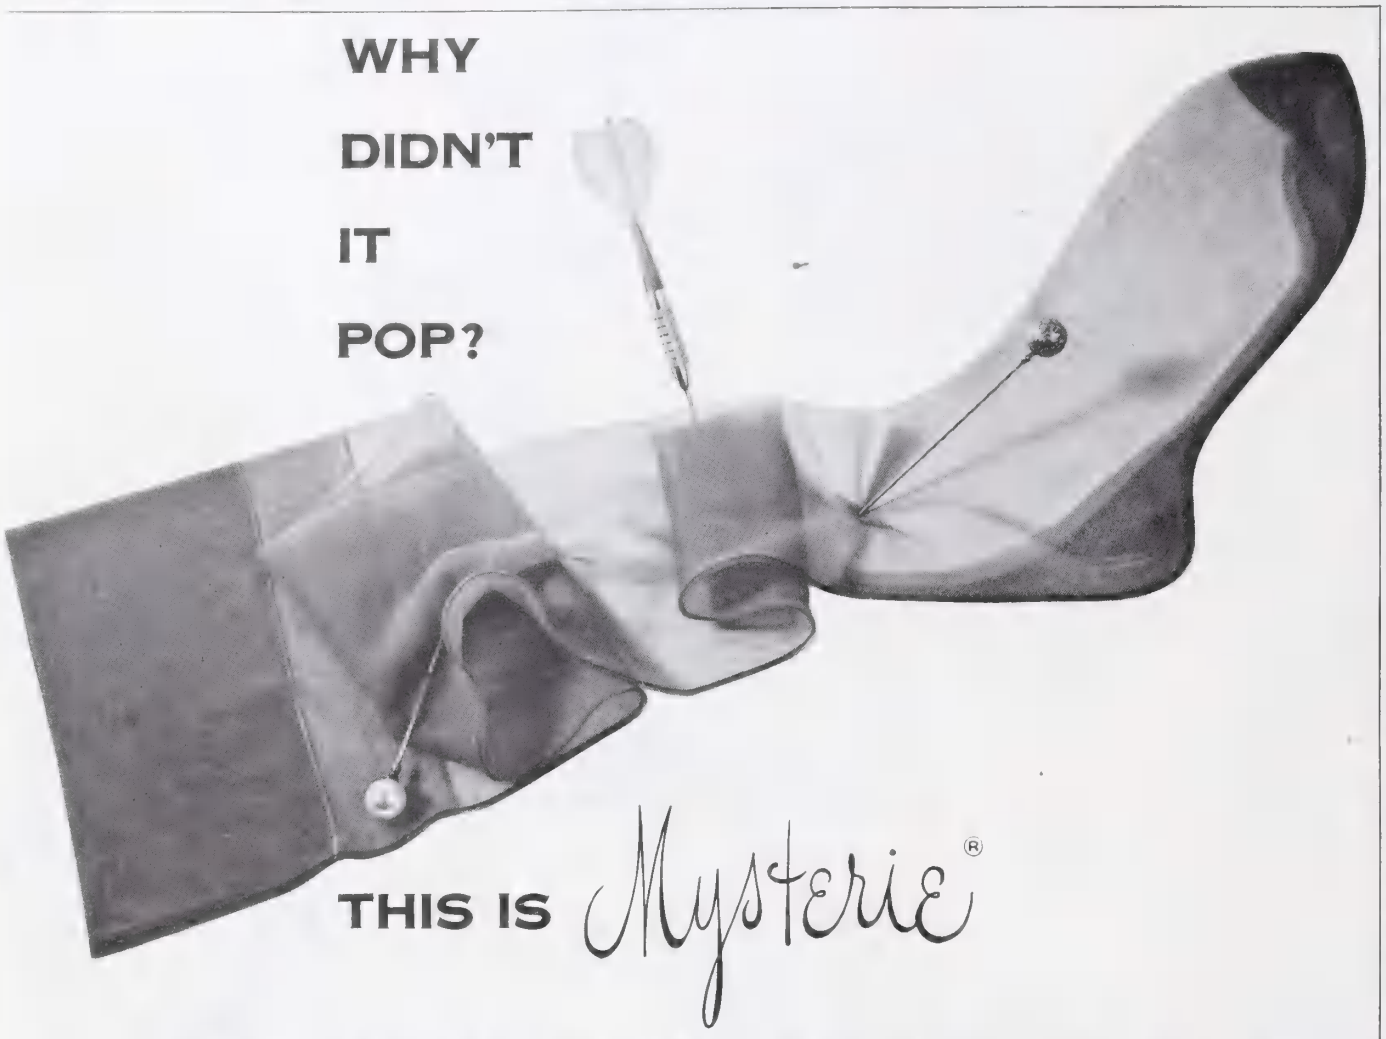
Many doctors still do not include it in a physical examination, even one undertaken for the purpose of early detection of cancer. Or the patient, having received a clean b health after one examination, fails to re for further ones.

This weakness in the program for sa women from cancer deaths is now bein tacked vigorously by the medical profes Already a mass testing of all women in population is under way in Memphis-Sh County, Tennessee, directed by Dr. Cyru Erickson, of the University of Tenne School of Medicine.

Among the first 70,000 women of all who were given the smear test in this pro 544 cases of cervical cancer were found, 129 "borderline" cases. Of the 544 pr cancers, 60 per cent had not been suspe either by the women harboring them o their doctors. According to Doctor Er son's report, the evidence indicates that t 60 per cent would not have been diagnose that time had not mass testing, using the sn technique, been carried out.

Two different projects in New York have shown that it is feasible for women to their own smear specimens. This will be a calculable saving of the time doctors nurses would have to devote to mass test

One bottleneck remains for smear tes on the mammoth scale that would all but v out cervical cancer as a cause of death would require at least one hundred times present staffs of cytologists—laboratory perts who analyze the slides. But somethin being done about that too. The Ameri Society of Clinical Pathologists has un taken an intensive drive to bring young pe into the field of medical technology, which cludes cytology. This is a most promising fi with practically unlimited job opportunit



In addition, a machine has been devise the Sloan-Kettering Institute and construc at the Airborne Instruments Laborat Mineola, Long Island, thanks to funds c tributed by a number of cancer-fighting ganizations. Called the "Cytoanalyzer," works by electronics and singles out, at a h rate of speed, the five to ten slides requir further study from the ninety to ninety-five nocent ones. The machine is being tested n for accuracy. The engineers hope, also, to velop the machine to a point where it can g some idea of the nature of abnormali found, thus lightening the load of the hun analyzers still further. The Cytoanalyzer, creators believe, will be ready for clinical in the next several years.

But women need not wait for these gr new projects to get protection from one of most dreadful feminine ailments. "It is my lief that we could begin right now to deaths from cervical cancer by 80 per cen says Doctor Cameron, "if every woman, af she reaches the age of thirty-five, would go her doctor twice a year for a thorough physi examination, including a vaginal smear.

"There is a further possibility. It has be found that many cervical cancers exist in wh we call a 'cocoon' or inert phase before th begin to encroach at all upon adjacent tissu They remain in this stage for an interval time, and sometimes the interval is a long o If further study shows that all cervical canc pass through this phase, by a proper spaci of smear examinations we may be able eliminate death from this disease."

It is an added precaution for the doctor treat any lacerations, infections or "erosion (ulcerated conditions) that he may find at t semiannual examination, either in the vagin tract or in the cervix itself. Two separate stu ies have shown that where large groups women were treated as such manifestatio showed themselves, cervical cancer rarely a peared.

Doctor Cameron believes that a physical e amination every six months, if it includes vaginal-smear test, will in most cases reveal cancer before it has developed to an incurab stage. But every woman should also know th symptoms of early cervical cancer: lengthenin of the menstrual period; discharge of an type; bleeding after menopause; bleeding b tween periods, no matter how slight; and an bleeding after marital relations. All these co ditions can be due to things other than cance But they should be reported at once to woman's doctor, and the cervical tissue

THIS IS Mysterie®

AN ENTIRELY NEW KIND OF SHEER STOCKING

Wear or beauty? You don't have to choose — because, at last, there's a stocking that gives you both.

- It outwears other nylons three to one
- Cuts down mysterious runs, pops, breaks — by a startling 90%

And Mysterie flatters as never before. It looks so alluringly dull — gives you leg-hugging fit that keeps seams straight. See for yourself! Mysterie is the stocking in your future — because it's the stocking with a future!

Now at fine stores everywhere—in Gotham Gold Stripe keyed colors, perfect-fit proportions. All — for a long-lived $1.95.

GOTHAM GOLD STRIPE BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

Gotham Gold Stripe®

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC.,
MAKERS OF LUXURIOUS LINGERIE AND BEAUTIFUL NYLON STOCKINGS

GOTHAM HOSIERY COMPANY, INC., 1955

What a relief!

Alka-Seltzer®

for COLD DISCOMFORTS

Get quick relief for the one-all-over, feverish feeling of a cold with ALKA-SELTZER. Helps you FEEL better while you're GETTING better!

AT ALL DRUG COUNTERS

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., ELKHART, IND.

Free Vacation Guide TO TENNESSEE'S MOUNTAINS! LAKES! SHRINES!

Scenery, sports, shrines — you'll find them all within easy driving distance in Tennessee! You'll visit the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, see Eastern America's tallest mountains, climb the romantic Cumberlands, and fish and boat in Tennessee's 19 Great Lakes. Fine accommodations everywhere, plus 204 boat docks. See the homes of 3 presidents . . . hallowed battlefields . . . Mississippi River cotton plantations. Big 40-page book, full of pictures, gives complete details. Get your free copy now.

FREE COLOR BOOK

Tennessee Division of Information
1235 Cordell Hull Building, Nashville, Tennessee
Please send Free Color Book on Tennessee
NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY & STATE_____

should be examined thoroughly before the possibility of cancer is ruled out.

Needless to say, the presence of cancerous or precancerous cells in a smear specimen also calls for the most careful examination of the cervical tissues, to find out where the cells come from. Biopsy is employed first. This is snipping off a bit of tissue and studying it under the microscope. Should biopsy fail to ferret out the site, curettement or scraping of the entire inner surface of the organ may be urged.

Today's bright prognosis for cervical cancer when caught early enough, the brightest for almost any form of cancer, rests on the very facts that made its earlier detection so difficult before the vaginal-smear test was discovered. It begins in a small, sharply localized area and in its early stages seldom metastasizes—that is, travels to distant parts of the body through the blood or the lymph glands. Hence it is among the most readily curable of all cancers if found before it has damaged adjacent organs seriously. Today much cervical cancer is being cured by radiotherapy alone, through radium or a combination of X ray and radium, without surgery. This is true even of some quite advanced cases.

However, a certain number of cervical cancers do not respond to radiotherapy, and authorities urge that the attending physician must be left free to decide whether to employ radiotherapy or surgery in an individual case. A test has recently been announced by top figures in the cancer field for determining which cases will do better with surgery, which with radiotherapy. If it proves out, it will greatly increase the percentage of cures.

One facet of the cervical-cancer pattern remains controversial. A condition known as "cancer in situ" may occur in women considerably younger than those who ordinarily develop a so-called invasive, or indisputable, cancer. Cancer in situ has the same cell abnormalities as invasive cancer, but does not spread to the surrounding tissues as true cancer does. It often has no symptoms at all, or the only one may be slight bleeding after marital relations. Sometimes cancer in situ develops into true invasive cancer. Sometimes it stays as it is for a woman's lifetime. And sometimes it disappears altogether! Because of these peculiarities, medical opinion differs as to whether or not it should be treated as true cancer.

The trend today is toward conservative treatment, though many doctors think it best to remove the entire uterus. This question remains to be threshed out by the medical profession. From the standpoint of the laywoman, the present chief significance of cancer in situ is that any bleeding between periods should be reported to the doctor, no matter how young a woman may be. And bleeding after marital relations should be regarded as an urgent danger sign. But the strangest part of the cervical-cancer pattern is the body of evidence that has been built up in the hope of preventing it entirely. The research here forms a fascinating chapter in the long story of medicine.

It was obvious that a connection existed somewhere between cervical cancer and a woman's sexual and reproductive life, since married women are its prime victims. Many theories have been evolved, a favorite one being that childbearing itself was responsible, another that various contraceptive measures were to blame. But its incidence varies widely in different populations. It is much higher among Hindus and Negroes, for instance, than among American white women. Extremely rare among Jewish women, it accounts for half of all the cancers in Puerto Rican women. So another favored theory was that a racial element enters in. Yet against this was the fact that though cervical cancer accounts for 45 per cent of all the malignancies in Hindu women, it comprises only 29 per cent of those among Indian Christians, 18 per cent among Moslems and 16 per cent among Parsis, another religious group centered about Bombay. Here was a further puzzle to add to cervical cancer's many contradictory features. And it was this puzzle that Dr. Ernest L. Wynder, Assistant Professor of Preventive Medicine at the Sloan-Kettering Institute, research unit of Memorial Center for Cancer and Allied Diseases, New York City, determined to solve.

To prevent a disease, one must first pinpoint its cause or causes. Doctor Wynder set up simultaneous studies of cervical-cancer patients in hospitals in this country and in Bombay, India. For a control group, women were used who were in the hospitals for other ailments of the reproductive organs, but not cancer. Both sets of women were asked searching questions about various aspects of their sexual and childbearing histories. When the results were tabulated, two factors associated with the development of cervical cancer seemed of particular importance. One was early marriage, or otherwise starting an active sex life at an early age, and continuing an active sex life. The other, insufficient attention to intimate personal cleanliness on the part of the male sexual partner or partners!

Meanwhile, Dr. Fabien Gagnon, of Laval University, Quebec, was supplying confirmation for Doctor Wynder's findings in reverse, so to speak. Medical supervisor of several convents, he had been struck by the fact that though the nuns under his care developed breast cancer and cancer of the uterus, none got cervical cancer. He went back over the health records of nuns in seven different religious orders in Canada, in some cases for twenty years, in others for twenty-five. Among these consecrated virgins, there had not been a single case of cervical cancer!

they're standing on their heads with excitement about...

Daniel Green's "Outdorables"

Young! New! Versatile!

Smoothly fitted for indoor, outdoor living!

The weight of wings . . . perfectly poised on firm little heels . . . It's the gayest, newest indoor-outdoor footwear you can buy. You'll adore "Outdorables"! Featured: Stalker—Cabretta leather in dark blue, powder blue, buttercup, red, pink, black. Widths AAA to B. $6.50. Also: Tuscan—Chambray, leather trim. Faded blue, red, navy, gold, pink. Widths AAA to B. $5.50.

(prices slightly higher west of the Rockies)

Daniel Green

FACTORIES AT DOLGEVILLE, NEW YORK

Yes, Lana Turner uses Lustre-Creme Shampoo. It's the favorite of 4 out of 5 top Hollywood movie stars!

It never dries your hair! Lustre-Creme Shampoo is blessed with lanolin . . . foams into rich lather, even in hardest water . . . leaves hair so easy to manage.

It beautifies! For soft, bright, fragrantly clean hair—without special after-rinses—choose the shampoo of America's most glamorous women. Use the favorite of Hollywood movie stars—Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

Hollywood's-favorite Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Never Dries—
it Beautifies!

Lana Turner co-starring in THE PRODIGAL

An M-G-M Production. In CinemaScope. In Color.

Concurrently with the foregoing studies, Dr. H. K. Pratt-Thomas and several associates, of the Medical College of South Carolina, were attacking the puzzle from a widely different angle. Twice a week, for a number of months, they inserted into the vaginal tracts of mice a substance which accumulates under the prepuce, or foreskin, of the uncircumcised human male if he is not careful to wash it away. This substance is called smegma and it is high in cholesterol. Cholesterol is a fatty substance contained in all animal fats and oils; in a number of foods; in various body tissues in small amounts; and in cancerous tissue in high concentration. Significantly, a large proportion of the female mice developed cervical cancer when exposed to human smegma regularly, over a considerable period of time as mouse lives are figured.

From these studies has emerged a new theory as to the cause of cervical cancer. The theory remains to be proved in human beings, on a long-range basis, but it has caused much excitement in the medical world. For it now appears that not childbearing, not sex relations in themselves, but fairly regular exposure to smegma, begun at an early age and continued, may be a major precipitating element. Or that at the least, long-continued exposure to smegma may be an important link in the total chain of developing a cervical cancer. Doctor Wynder presents evidence for this view:

"Among Jewish women, the incidence of cervical cancer is from one fifth to one tenth as high as among non-Jewish. For thousands of years, Jewish boy babies have been circumcised soon after birth. Removal of the prepuce almost automatically insures against an accumulation of smegma. There is the further point that Jewish girls do not marry early as a rule.

"The Parsis, next lowest group in the incidence of cervical cancer, do not circumcise, but exercise scrupulous body cleanliness, and their girls marry unusually late. The Moslems, like the Jews, practice circumcision but their girls marry very young, which might account for the slightly higher rate of cervical cancer in this group than in Parsi women.

"Studies made in other countries and among other religious and racial groups tend to confirm our observation that where there is a high incidence of cervical cancer, a high proportion of the girls either marry or otherwise begin sex lives at an early age; the males are not circumcised and practice poor hygiene. In these latter groups there is more cancer of the outer male reproductive organs, too, than in those where circumcision or cleanliness rites are part of the religion."

DOCTOR WYNDER'S study also seemed to show an association between the number of sexual partners a woman had had and cervical cancer. Several marriages appeared to increase the risk considerably, especially if the first one occurred when the patient was sixteen or younger. Early marriage likewise seemed to favor the development of the cancer in the patient at an earlier age.

Science has coined a name for the new theory—the "carcinogenous [cancer-producing] male." To husbands, this is an idea as shocking as it is embarrassing, and Dr. Wynder hastens to give reassurance. Whether or not the smegma theory stands up under lo range testing, a diagnosis of cervical cancer wife does not necessarily mean that her band has failed in cleanliness.

"WHEN it comes to cancer," Doctor W der emphasizes, "nothing is all or none. have seen three authenticated cases of cerv cancer in virgins, and eleven in Jewish wor whose sex relationships had been confine their Jewish, circumcised husbands. I am aware that the two factors we establishe early marriage on the part of the cancer tim and faulty hygiene on the part of her sex partner or partners—represent only part the picture. Undoubtedly many other fact must be present which remain unknown to u

Various authorities suggest four fact which, they believe, must be present woman is to develop cancer of the cervix. C it is true, is faulty male hygiene, and the seco is frequent sex re tions. But the third a chronic inflamm tion or infection the vaginal tract, wh sets up a condit favorable to the velopment of canc And the fourth is woman's basic s ceptibility to canc which is probably t up with her hormo functioning and con to her through h genes. It is consider conceivable that woman may have su a strong tendency ward cancer as a sult of her hormon and genetic make- that she will get c vical cancer in spite the utmost cleanline on her husband's pa or even if she remai a virgin.

Enough eviden has been assemble however, to warra the recommendatio that all boy babi should be circumcise non-Jewish as well Jewish. Doctor Wy der's statistical studi appear to show that woman whose hu band is uncircumcise has a two and a ha times greater chanc of developing cervi cancer than the wo man, married only once, whose husband circumcised. The operation is a slight or and is considered a good health measu for the male, irrespective of the pa it may prove to play in wiping out cervic cancer in future generations of women. As matter of fact, general circumcision of bo babies is already in a fair way to come abou in this country. Hospitals over the Unite States report that in the last decade, around 8 per cent of non-Jewish boy babies have bee circumcised, as against some 20 per cent be fore that. Doctor Wynder believes that thi should bring about a marked decrease i cervical cancer in the next generation.

But he does not suggest that husbands wh have not had this operation should rush t have it performed forthwith.

"That is the first question men ask us whe they learn of the new findings in cervical can cer. It isn't really necessary. Careful hygiene a the time of the daily bath or shower may serv the same purpose.

"The most important thing today is tha women need not die of cervical cancer, whati ever their basic susceptibility to it, or whatever facts remain undiscovered about the disease All they need do is take advantage of the means now existing for its early detection and treat ment. It is my personal belief that when all in the cancer-dangerous ages do this, cancer deaths of women can be drastically reduced."

END

THE FIRST APRIL FOOL

Nobody knows who started April Fool's Day, or when, or why. The earliest record of this festival of folly occurs in a journal kept in 1698: "Yesterday being the 1st of April, several persons were sent to the Tower [of London] to see the lions washed." This joke was repeated a century and a half later on a grand scale; in March of 1860 a vast multitude of people received through the mail a card bearing a seal and the invitation, "Tower of London—Admit the Bearer and Friend to view the Annual Ceremony of Washing the Lions . . . Admitted only at the White Gate." Cabs and hansoms rattled over the Tower Bridge all morning, to the merriment of the unknown author of the invitations—for not only were there no lions, but no White Gate either!

For over 250 years the first of April has been the day for sending April fools on useless errands—to the dairy for pigeon's milk, to the hardware store for skyhooks, to the park to see Mr. A. Hamilton step down from his pedestal. The day itself marked the coming of spring in pre-Christian times. With spring comes spring fever; one of its symptoms, after the long cold winter, is a little mischief in the human spirit.

Pick of the season . . .

easy-care Du Pont Nylon

When it's whisper-soft . . . cloud-light . . . comfortable, you know it's Du Pont nylon. When it washes like a dream . . . drip-dries with refreshing beauty . . . you save time because it's Du Pont nylon.

And when you see the newest styles for warm weather, you'll want more lingerie like these pajamas of Du Pont nylon. Du Pont nylon travels light, too . . . it's your answer to a carefree vacation.

DU PONT

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING
. . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

Exciting new things are happening in NYLON—one of Du Pont's modern-living fibers

Today's great beauties choose this one perfect make-up!

Mrs. Bertrand L. Taylor, III

Unquestionably one of the loveliest of today's young social leaders, Mrs. Taylor—a member of the distinguished banking family—has sapphire blue eyes, soft-burnished hair. For her rose and cream complexion she chooses the make-up that's fresh and young as Spring. She says, "Flattering is really too mild a word for Pond's Angel Face—it is the one perfect make-up!"

No greasy fingers or wet sponge. Angel Face is easy glamour!

No spilly powder. Smooth on Angel Face any time, anywhere.

It makes beautiful women, like Mrs. Taylor, look their most beautiful —Angel Face by Pond's!

Vaporized Beauty Oils make it smooth . . . clinging . . . never drying to your skin!

You smooth it on in 5 seconds—then you look and look at yourself, not quite believing that any make-up could work such a lovely change!

Supremely delicate and sheer—Pond's Angel Face clings like a dream. Artfully hides little skin flaws under its heavenly color. (There are eight luscious shades, one made for you!)

And it can't dry your skin—because Angel Face contains vaporized beauty oils.

The extraordinary flattery of Angel Face has endeared it to every woman who has ever tried it. The proof: Surveys show more women use Pond's Angel Face than any other make-up.

Now! An extra puff with your Mirror Case! Now, for a limited time, each Angel Face Mirror Case comes with two puffs—the second one is free! Get your gift soon—in the special "extra-puff" box with the bright red band!

Angel Face

by POND'S

The ivory-and-golden Mirror Case with your most becoming Angel Face shade, mirror and two puffs, only $1*

Charming on your dressing table —the blue-and-gold box—with velour puff; 2 sizes: 59¢ and 89¢* *plus tax

MORE TIME FOR LIVING

As a city girl, she never boiled an egg. As a farmer's wife, she housekeeps for seven. Meet Valerie Valaas and her husband Bob—apple ranching in Wenatchee, Washington.

By JAN WEYL
PHOTOGRAPHS By BURT GLINN

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Wenatchee, Washington

Dear Editors: If you would like to portray a rural family nearly as fertile as the land on which we make our living, perhaps you would consider us. As we approach our twelfth wedding anniversary this March, we have five healthy children and hope for eight. Our doctor, I am sure, looks on me as a sort of goose who lays the golden egg biennially, since our children all are beautifully healthy. We never let ourselves forget how truly fortunate we are in these five whole healthy people whom God has sent us.

Our orchard is nineteen acres, of which eleven are in apples, the rest uncultivated. We have a beautiful view over the Wenatchee Valley, and except for rattlesnakes (the children holler when they see one and I rush out with a shovel and clobber it), we have an ideal spot in which to raise a family.

Our budget is strained, but we eat well and the children are always adequately clothed. Any money we make above living expenses goes back into the orchard, and it is therefore necessary to hold down our expenses as closely as possible. I do not consider myself an overworked drudge. I am not half the work horse many farm wives are who park their small ones in an apple box under a tree and help their husbands thin, pick, rake rush and so on. I wish every wife were as lucky as I am. Come see us. Yours truly,

VALERIE VALAAS

P.S. I make nearly everything we wear, husband's shirts too, and we can or freeze around 350 quarts of fruits and vegetables which we raise ourselves every year.

VALERIE VALAAS' mother is still amazed at the way her daughter has turned out. "I've been living on an apple ranch for ten years now," Valerie says with a cheerful smile, "but mummy still looks aghast—first that I know how to do everything I do; and second, that I can stand doing it all the time. Actually she's very pleased." For it's "House and orchard are a handful, but we're not too busy for story hour and games."

The night the roof caught fire, Valerie rushed to save (1) children, (2) washer.

Bob worries at harvesttime over debts. "But he never lets the children know."

Phone messages, child care, cleaning 35-year-old house keep Val on the go.

She bought her last coat in '49, makes whole wardrobe. A neighbor marks hems.

Joan is theatrical member of family. They call her Tallulah. "She lives every minute."

Dresses are rare for the girls, overalls the rule. Boys wear jeans, homemade shirts.

Even haircuts are done at home. Nights out are few. "Last year we went to two movies."

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

First tools for Valerie's housekeeping lessons were a smoky black cookstove and a squeaky washing machine drained out with buckets.

obvious to the most casual bystander that Valerie, brought up to be a city girl, has found real happiness on a farm in the Wenatchee Valley of Washington from which she gets to a city "once a year—maybe."

Valerie's "undoing" began back in July, 1942, when she was working as a secretary in San Diego, California, and met a blond, ruddy-faced young sergeant named Bob Valaas. Bob was expecting to go overseas and had definite ideas about avoiding romantic involvements. "I tried hard, but I didn't stand a chance," he says now. "I was completely at her mercy from the start." The romance was sparked by communiqués from Jimmy Partain, a mutual friend: "Bob, I'm warning you about a predatory female." . . . "I cannot help but feel that emotions are involved." . . . "She will make you a wonderful wife. What a scope for machination!" At their small Episcopalian wedding eight months later Bob and Valerie toasted each other in champagne, set out with $31.30 for a "glorious" three-day honeymoon in the back country near San Diego to begin a marriage which would fulfill Bob's boyhood dreams of "an apple ranch of my own, a wonderful wife and lots of kids"—and change Valerie's life completely.

For while Bob was growing up on his dad's ten-acre apple ranch in Wenatchee, working summers in the orchard to save money for college, spending evenings at home reading while his friends went to the dances and movies his parents' religious convictions denied him, Valerie was having a very different childhood. Born in Walton-on-Thames, England, she came to the United States with her mother and sister at six, when her parents were divorced. She grew up in Topeka, Kansas, in a socially prominent family, classified herself as a "hopeless dope" during high school, but by the time she entered Washburn University had been caught up in a whirl of plays, concerts, dances; hoped to become a writer like her father. Careers for women were in the family tradition. CONTINUED ON PAGE 172 s 1950 jeep carries family to the orchards. All acreage has under-id pipe for insecticide spraying, but planting, frost-fighting, harvesting are heavy work. Bob sank $10,000 into the $23,000 ranch. "Good years, you reduce the bills—bad years, cross your fingers."

ly vacation is a 4-day camping trip—"No cost except gasoline. An s drive from home leads to big lakes, hundreds of picnic spots."

Most terrifying time: a moneyless year when Lisa, then 2 months old, fell ill. "We sold the children's bonds to break even."

Extra money goes back into the orchard.
"We eat off the land as much as we can—wild asparagus and wild strawberries.
vegetables and fruit we plant ourselves:
we're starting to raise chickens for eggs."

After play come chores. Andy, 8, waters plants. Girls mind baby Peter. John, 10, is lawn-mowing.

"Do work most parents do—Cub Scout committees, P.T.A. meetings and such." And Valerie teaches Sunday-school class at St. Luke's Episcopal Church "on alternate years when I'm not having a baby."

Last year, Bob reroofed and painted house. Next he needs to add 2 more bedrooms for extra space.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 170 Valerie's grandmother had been a practicing attorney back in the 1880's—along with bringing up six children. Her mother had traveled extensively as a child, found a good job with the highway commission after her divorce and, again in the family tradition, hired a full-time maid to do the housework.

Once out of college and ready to write, Valerie discovered she "knew nothing despite a magna cum laude," settled for shorthand lessons and a secretary's job; and when Topeka grew dull, migrated to California and more of the same. This, in due course, brought her to Bob.

The Valaases' war years were typical: several months together at camp where their first son, Johnny, was born; a year's separation while Bob went overseas and Valerie waited in Topeka; their big reunion at a family camp in Colorado when V-J Day came just before Bob was to leave for the Pacific. And then off to Washington to find an apple ranch.

"You can imagine how horrified Bob's mother was at me," Valerie said. "She had done housework all her life, and I knew nothing. My acquaintance with a stove was turning on the oven for a ready-made casserole CONTINUED ON PAGE 180

Again!...thrilling new recipes from Kraft

"Philly" pies!

The 6 most wonderful fillings you've ever made...with a fresh creaminess that's new

...really please your pie fans—
...ke a "Philly" pie.
...Absolutely elegant... but there's ...thing hard or tricky about the ...ipes. Philadelphia Brand Cream ...eese gives each filling a new kind ... creaminess. A light, fresh flavor, ... Just be sure the cream cheese ...u use is marked Philadelphia Brand ... the one that tastes richer, fresher, ...tter than all the rest.

...neapple "Philly" Pie: Blend ⅓ c. ...gar with 1 tbsp. cornstarch. Add ...c. crushed pineapple (not drained) and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is thick and clear. Cool. Combine a ½-lb. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese with ½ c. sugar and ½ tsp. salt; blend smooth. Add 2 eggs, one at a time; stir well after each is added. Blend in ½ c. milk and ½ tsp. vanilla. Spread the cooled pineapple mixture in 9" unbaked pastry shell. Pour on cream cheese mixture and sprinkle with ¼ c. chopped pecans. Bake in hot 400° oven for 10 min. Reduce heat to 325° and bake 50 min. Cool before serving.

FREE! 6 NEW RECIPES AT YOUR GROCER'S NOW or write for recipe booklet

Right now most grocers have the recipes for the 6 wonderful "Philly" pies printed on tear-off pads. Or you can fill in the coupon and get nine "Philly" pie recipes in booklet form. Free, of course.

Kraft "Philly" Pies, Dept. J-4, Box 748
Chicago 77, Illinois

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Baking bonanza COMES TWICE A WEEK

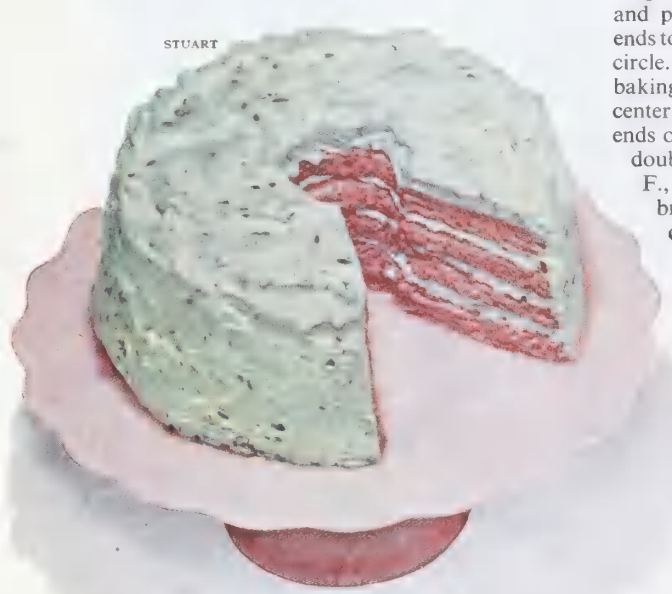
SUNBURST COFFEECAKE

I bake bread every other day, but twice a week I let myself &

We celebrate the smallest things, and when the weather permits, our party is usually a picnic. Everyone gets up and starts the day with a special breakfast. "Special" in this case means Sunburst Coffeecake.

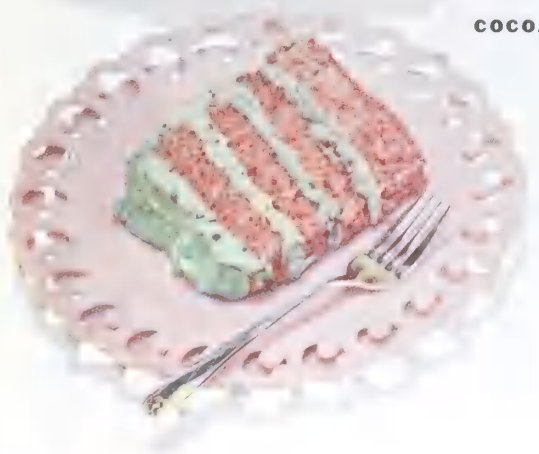
Sunburst Coffeecake: Prepare 1 package hot-roll mix or coffeecake mix according to directions on the box. After it rises, punch down, and divide dough into 12 equal parts. Roll each piece into strips 8″ long. With 6 strips, make 6 U-shaped pieces and place on greased baking sheet with ends toward the center, forming a scalloped circle. Arrange remaining 6 strips on the baking sheet so that the ends meet in the center and each oval covers the joining ends of the U-shaped pieces. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Bake in hot oven, 400° F., about 20 to 30 minutes until golden brown. Cool on a rack. Brush with confectioners'-sugar frosting made with ½ cup confectioners' sugar, 1 tablespoon milk and ½ teaspoon vanilla, and garnish with candied cherries and walnut halves.

Lisa, our Christmas baby, always has a birthday cake shaped like a Christmas tree. To the other children a cake isn't a birthday cake unless it has a hole in the middle. For me one of the happiest discoveries in the world was the cake mixes. I use a mix to make their favorite cocoa angel-food cake.



Cocoa Angel-Food Cake: Remove the egg-white package from any angel-food-cake mix. Pour 1 cup water into a large bowl. Add egg-white mixture, stir to moisten thoroughly. Then beat vigorously with a rotary beater, a flat wire whip, or use the highest speed of an electric mixer until very stiff peaks are formed when beater is raised. Sprinkle in 2 tablespoons sugar and beat about 10 seconds. Sift the flour mixture and ⅓ cup cocoa into a small bowl. Add 1½ teaspoons vanilla and ½ cup water. Beat until just blended, about ½ minute. Then slowly fold into the stiffly beaten egg whites until thoroughly blended. Pour batter into ungreased 9″ or 10″ tube pan. Cut gently through batter to remove large air bubbles. Bake in moderate oven, 375° F., about 30 minutes, or until cake springs back when pressed gently with finger. Cool in pan, upside down, until cold—1 to 2 hours. Then loosen from sides and center tube with knife and gently remove cake. Cut cake into 4 layers horizontally. Fill and frost with 2 cups heavy cream, whipped, flavored with 2 tablespoons sugar and ½ cup grated chocolate-mint wafers. Tint with vegetable coloring, if desired.

The children take to cookies like jets to the air. I bake gingersnaps once a week to keep them on hand for the lunch boxes and for after-school snacks, although sometimes it's like trying to hold onto an echo that's gone before you're sure it was there.



Gingersnaps: Melt ¼ cup shortening in 1 cup hot molasses. Do not let it boil. Sift 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon baking soda, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon baking powder and 1½ teaspoons ginger. Add the molasses and shortening to the dry ingredients. Mix well. Chill dough for several hours or overnight. Roll out very thin a small amount of dough at a time on a lightly floured board. Cut out with cooky cutter and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., about 6 minutes. Makes 12 dozen.

Baking bread every other day is one of my chores that isn't a chore at all. Bob likes

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

STUART

COCOA ANGEL-FOOD CAKE

GINGERSNAPS

DI PIETRO

oan and Lisa, my little bowl scrapers, love to sample the first batch of cookies.

APPLE-BRAN MUFFINS

muffins, cake and pie for weekends.

By VALERIE VALAAS

eese bread, so I make it often to toast for ndwiches.

heese Bread: Pour 1 cup water into nall bowl. Sprinkle 6 tablespoons nonfat y milk over surface of water. Beat with tary beater just until blended. Let stand refrigerator at least 1 hour before using. ald reconstituted milk. Pour into large ixing bowl and add 2 tablespoons sugar nd 1½ teaspoons salt. Stir until sugar and lt are dissolved. Cool to lukewarm. rinkle 2 packages yeast, compressed or y, on top of ¼ cup lukewarm water and t stand until softened. Add to milk. Beat one 8-ounce package sharp process eese, shredded, until smooth. Sprinkle 2 ps flour on top of milk-cheese mixture. eat until well blended. Add about 2 ore cups flour and stir until blended. urn dough out onto a lightly floured oard and knead approximately 10 min-tes or until dough is smooth, shiny and astic. Put dough into a large greased owl. Brush dough lightly with melted utter or margarine. Cover with damp oth and set in warm place (80°-85° F.) ntil dough has doubled in bulk. Remove ough from bowl and divide in half. Shape each piece into a loaf and put into a well-greased 8½″x4¾″x2½″ loaf pan. Let rise again until doubled in bulk; bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., for 25 minutes or until golden brown on top. When done, loaf sounds hollow when lightly tapped with finger. Remove from pan at once. Cool on rack. Bread slices better the second day.

Without a doubt Bob's favorite dessert is apple pie. However, I like having something different when we entertain. Peach Glamour Pie is different and easy to do and still has the ageless charm of peaches and cream.

Peach Glamour Pie: Put 1 cup blanched almonds through a food chopper, using a medium blade. Chop 1 cup moist coconut and combine with the ground almonds. Work in with fingers or spoon ¼ cup sugar and ¼ cup soft butter or margarine. Press mixture evenly in the bottom and up sides of a 9″ pie plate, saving 2 or 3 tablespoons for the top. Bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., until light golden brown, 12 to 15 minutes. Put topping crumbs in shallow pan and toast in oven at the same time, about 5 minutes. Cool thoroughly. About 1 hour before serving time, drain one 1-pound-14-ounce can peach slices on paper toweling. Blend into 1 cup thick commercial sour cream a few grains salt, 4 tablespoons powdered sugar, 1 teaspoon orange juice, 1 teaspoon coarsely grated orange rind and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Spread this mixture on the bottom and sides of shell. Top with drained peaches. Sprinkle with topping crumbs. Chill. Serves 8.

Andy is somewhat casual about small matters like keeping his shirttail in, but never casual about breakfast, especially when we have apple-bran muffins.

Apple-Bran Muffins: Pour ¾ cup milk over 1 cup whole bran and let soak 5 minutes. Cream 2 tablespoons shortening with ¼ cup sugar. Add 1 egg, beat well. Add bran mixture and ¾ cup chopped peeled raw apple. Sift together 1 cup flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon salt. Add to first mixture and mix until blended. Fill greased muffin pans ⅔ full. Sprinkle with sugar; bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., for 25 minutes. Makes 12 muffins.

CHEESE BREAD

PEACH GLAMOUR PIE

Lisa and Joan Valaas wearing blue pinafores over striped dresses. Machine-embroidered names on belts. Vogue Design No. 2719.

Sewing-Machine Magic

By NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

EVEN to Valerie Valaas, an accomplished sewing hand, the range and variety of decorative stitching which can be done on your sewing machine was a revelation. Tiny tucking, delicate scalloped edging, peasant embroidery usually seen only on handmade imports—these and many other designer touches of appliqué, insertion and colorful borders are easily achievable at home. Trying out first on a matching piece of fabric saves time in the long run and you preview two or three good ideas before settling for one. All these charming effects came after careful tryout. To duplicate them, write to us for further information.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Tucks are an ideal place for decorative edgings. This organdy blouse has tucks on each side decoratively edged in red. Vogue Design No. 8320.

Clear-cut prints are ideal for appliqués, cut-outs. Our sweater neckline of flowers was done with zigzag stitch. Skirt, Vogue Design No. 8300.

Yokes and bib fronts lend themselves to trim. On this blouse we have used a twin-needle design in two colors. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 8176.

This dainty scallop, whose size is regulated automatically, is pretty for necklines, tucks. Buttonhole stitch for beading. Vogue Design No. 8493.

A simple satin stitch is effective . . . especially in two colors. Ours in black and white on geranium red. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 8590.

SHARLAND

For lace insertions or appliqués, a zigzag stitch is practical, effective. Ours, a crisscross of Irish lace on linen. Dress, Vogue Design No. 8351.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 192

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5 cents additional for each pattern ordered.

ER E SUIT, A SACONY GIRDLE

*PALM BEACH TRADEMARK REGISTERED BY GOODALL-SANFORD, INC., MFR. OF CLOTH

How to buy this $25 Sacony suit of Palm Beach* cloth

Wouldn't you like to own this suit? Particularly when you consider that Sacony makes it in that remarkably fresh-staying Palm Beach cloth? And that it costs just $25. You can buy this suit right now in any one of fifteen colors, and in misses, petite or even half sizes. Here's how to go about it.

Pick up your telephone and dial Western Union. Ask for Operator 25. Say, "Where can I buy a Sacony suit?" She'll reel off the answer in one minute flat. Or, if you're a letter writer, drop a note to Sacony, College Point, New York, and have your store names by return mail.

Stores have so many suit departments—so to avoid getting hopelessly lost, take this ad along with you. It will help the salesgirl find the right suit, too.

Sacony suits are also made and sold at 27.50 in Canada. (For Canadian store names, write Sacony, 423 Mayor Street, Montreal.)

MORE TIME FOR LIVING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 172

on the maid's night out. I'd never seen a washing machine work, I didn't have the vaguest idea how to iron. When I asked Bob's mother how to can, she literally couldn't believe I didn't know how. It could have been ghastly, but Bob saved the day. He showed me how."

That first year on their first ranch was a test for any farm wife: "My life was dominated," Valerie said, "by a monstrous black cookstove whose oven refused to heat over three hundred degrees no matter how many slabs of wood I shoved into the fire, a hot-water tank which heated off the same beastly range, a squeaking old washing machine which had to be drained into buckets which were carried out by hand up steep cellar steps because there was no basement drain—plus being pregnant with our second baby, fifty miles from doctor and hospital. Topeka Junior League work faded gradually into the mists of another life, and I began to feel kinship with the neighbors to whom the term Junior League meant only a baseball team for small boys." Years later, when their roof caught on fire in freezing weather, Bob found Valerie pushing her new washing machine out the back door—"It was my emancipation and I wasn't going to let it become a mass of twisted metal!"

With a day beginning at six as the first young Valaas climbs into bed with her, going on until eight that night when the day "begins again" as she and Bob tuck in the oldest boys and have "two beautiful hours" to themselves before their own bedtime, Valerie says the amount of housework she does for seven people is "incredible." She has a modern washing machine, a drier ("without which I have no doubt I'd be ready for an institution"), a brand-new electric range which arrived unexpectedly just before dinner one night as a surprise from Bob—and dreams of buying a freezer she could load with home-grown vegetables, meats and her own baked goods "just sitting there waiting for the oven."

Her accomplishments are many. She taught herself how to cook ("easy because it's natural to want to eat"), to sew ("just follow the directions") and to clean ("a ghastly job no matter how you do it"). She does laundry seven times a week, ironing once or twice, bakes bread four days a week, and spends most of Saturday baking cakes, pies, cookies, a beef roast and anything else the family appetite demands, leaving Sunday free for an automobile ride, a family picnic or reading a good book. Everything she does is punctuated with interruptions—Peter's runny nose, Joan and Lisa arguing over a coloring book, Johnny and Andy's latest school project. If she takes a few minutes off during a weekday to come outside and relax or play with the children, they call it "mommy's vacation."

"I seem to be on the move all day long," Valerie says, "but as long as I get to bed by ten I don't seem to mind how much I do. And when I see our cellar shelves filled with 350 jars of vegetables and fruits that Bob has grown and I've canned, or see the family all ready for Sunday school in shirts, dresses and even coats that I've made myself, I get a feeling of real accomplishment. It means more to me, I'm sure, than any other career ever could."

The rewards of country life, for all the Valaases, are many. Some are obvious: "Up on a hilltop a good mile from the highway, we have no traffic, no neighborhood feuds to reckon with, no city temptations to battle. The children have the freedom of the whole outdoors and love it. We like the rural school and the opportunity it affords for individual participation in sports and other activities. And we love the freedom of living with no other house in sight. Our children play host to woodchucks, porcupines, pheasant, quail, rabbits—and herds of deer. They think the Seattle zoo has nothing on us!"

But the greatest rewards come in family life. "With Bob in the orchard," Valerie says, "he is close most of the time, the children know him as well as they know me, the interests of the whole family are centered here. Our home is the core of our life."

Watching Bob with his children is still something of a miracle to Valerie, whose impressions of fathers were largely created by her friends' fathers—"They always seemed like lumps behind newspapers—and definitely not wonderful the way Bob is."

For Bob helps Valerie with everything from feeding and diapering to herding the whole gang off into the orchard so she can have a free hand in the house. He is equally good at football with the boys and a "daddy kind of dolls" with the girls. While Valerie cooks dinner and cleans up afterward, he plays records or reads to the girls, gets the nightly routine of five baths well on its way, helps Johnny with his clarinet lessons.

BENJAMIN AND THE BELL

In the late 1700's Benjamin Franklin received a letter from the city fathers of a little Massachusetts community. They had, it seemed, named their town Franklin. And would Ben care to donate a sum of money to his namesake? The contribution would be used, they assured him, to purchase a bell for the church steeple.

Franklin's response was prompt: "I am very much honored and I am very glad indeed to send you a sum of money, but I do not want you to use it to buy a bell. Instead, start a public library, because I have always preferred sense to sound."

—MARY ALKUS

Millions of Expectant Mothers FIX ACID INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN with this On-the-Spot Relief

Expectant mothers tell us, "Handy TUMS are so helpful during pregnancy... so quick... so pleasant."

It's no fun—during pregnancy—to suffer heartburn and the distressed feeling caused by an acid condition of the stomach. No fun at all!

Many women first learned about wonderful little TUMS when they had these miserable acid attacks during pregnancy. They discovered, to their joy, that such "pregnancy troubles" need not be endured. Very often TUMS were suggested by their own doctors. Today, millions of expectant mothers depend on TUMS to bring them pleasant, fast, on-the-spot relief for heartburn and acid indigestion.

Join the happy throngs of mothers-to-be who fix acid indigestion and heartburn with TUMS. Economical 3-roll package 25¢.

TUMS for the Tummy

Walking Ease for Troubled FEET!

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

Combine Style Distinction with Real Foot Freedom

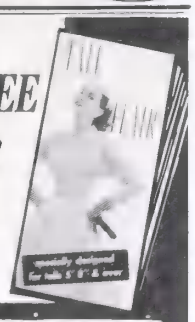
You'll quickly discover what real walking ease is like when you step out in your first pair of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's scientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, foot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind to your feet. No "breaking-in" discomfort.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet — Women's, some styles 2½ to 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Department Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable locally, write for catalog, Dept. J4, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

CAT'S PAW

Rubber HEELS & Soles

at all fine shoe repairers



Fine leathers deserve mel-O-wax

Mel-O-Wax is so different from all other leather polishes. It penetrates, cleans and polishes leather to a rich lustre, preserves it for years! Non-greasy, neutral in color for any kind or color smooth leather. Use on handbags, shoes, luggage, leather & plastic upholstery, all novelty leathers. For free Leather Care folder and nearest dealer, write MEL-O-WAX PRODUCTS, WYNNEWOOD, PA.

TALLS! FREE Fashion Folder!

Your shopping problems are over! Now you can have high fashion and perfect fit without alterations. Specially designed for Talls 5' 8" and over.

TALL FLAIR, General Post Office, Box #1005, New York 1, N. Y.
☐ Free Fashion Folder Dept. L
Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

Do a Tall friend a favor, send us her name and address, too.

"At a time of day when most parents find things tend to become a little thick with the children," Valerie says, "Bob maintains order with a calm and patient hand. It's just a lifesaver for me."

Another big plus in raising their family, Valerie and Bob both believe, is the fact that they agree absolutely on how to handle the children: "We make it clear what we expect of them, we try to be consistent—and we talk things out in a sane manner with them when problems do arise. Each child differs too. With Johnny and Joan, scoldings run right off their backs. With Andy and Lisa, you have to be more careful. We've worn out twelve pairs of kid gloves handling them. We spank if necessary—but probably not more than two or three times a year."

A big tribute to this type of training was Johnny and Andy's trip alone from Topeka to Denver two years ago when Valerie's mother was very ill. They were eight and six. Asked to stay in their seats, they left them only once—for a necessary trip—and were escorted off the train in Denver by a beaming porter who said he "never saw such good boys!"

Everyday rules for the children vary from traffic regulations (the tricycle going toward the house has to go around the tricycle coming from the house) to definite chores about the house—Johnny and Andy make their own beds (in a manner of speaking), take turns washing the bathtub. Johnny mows the lawn in the summer, Andy waters the evergreens. Joan is the garbage crew.

Because the house is so often a "mob scene—children and toys everywhere you look," Bob and Valerie also make a definite effort to give each child a chance to talk without competing, to feel like an individual to his parents. Bob often takes just one child to town with him, or gives just one child a chance to ride in the front seat—and lets all the children decide whose turn it is. He visits with the boys before they go to bed, answers at length their favorite question, "What did you do when you were a boy, daddy?"

Valerie has time to be with Joan while Lisa naps, time to be with Lisa while Joan, who's "all energy," plays football with her brothers. Redheaded Peter, who's just sixteen months old, receives "too much attention from everyone—and laps it up."

"Looking back," Valerie says, "it seems as if Bob and I just slid into all this happiness. Our personalities seem to fit in so well, despite our different backgrounds, that no matter where we are or what we're doing, just being together is wonderful. One reason there are no spats: it's completely impossible to argue with Bob. The same does not hold true for me, I hasten to add. I've seen Bob lose his temper only once—when two big boys beat up our two smaller ones. He's calm, easygoing, sincere, affectionate and good. Also just plain wonderful to live with."

Bob adds, "If your wife wants something you can't afford, like a new freezer, just be gay and tell little stories. Keep her diverted."

Valerie's comment: "I must be a nitwit."

Six years ago when the Valaases' did have a real difference of opinion—whether to sell their first apple farm and buy the one they now own—they talked it over thoroughly. Finally Valerie came over to Bob's side—and they never discussed the matter again.

"We've tried not to make an issue of anything," Valerie says. "We're ready to give and take, and after we've found a common meeting ground, we drop the matter. Moods and tempers are things we just don't have for each other."

"Except in the fall," Bob says, "and I'm allowed a few moods then. As harvesttime grows near, I start to worry about the weather ruining my apples, about harvesting them at just the right time, and then getting the best price for them. I try not to get tense, and I am better than I used to be, but it's hard not to have your mind on it every minute. This is it: you either make it for the year or you have to start out all over again next year—in the red."

Bob knows from experience what it's like to be in the red. His first ranch, thirty-five miles north of Wenatchee, which he bought with a down payment of $5000 ($2500 wartime savings, $2500 borrowed from his dad), was a success and he was able to accumulate $8000 in just three years. He also had a job managing

NEXT MONTH

Four years ago they were childless—today nine foster children fill the home of George and Josephine Morris in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Carpets wore out during the children's first year, and now the fourth set of linoleum rugs shows signs of going. The sofa seat had to be nailed down. And once-fresh wallpaper is smudged with small handprints. It's a big change, but it's a promise made to a dying sister who said,

"PLEASE TAKE MY CHILDREN..."

By ROSEMARY JONES

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the May JOURNAL

Gibbs perky Paddy Panda Print

In delicate pastel colors, Paddy Panda gaily romps over baby's snowy personal wardrobe! Children just love this cute little lellah—and mothers like the way they can rely on Gibbs sturdy yet "Soft as Doeskin" interlock under-alls.

(a) Baby's comfy two-tie kimono. $1.50 and $1.69.

(b) Patented shoulders allow you to slip this sweat drawstring nitie over baby's head with ease. $1.50 and $1.69.

(c) Handsome 3-pc. crib set. White polo shirt with powder blue collar to match waterproof gripper panties Paddy Panda vest with blue back. 6.12.18 mos. $3.50. Without polo shirt $2.50.

(d) Sassy Lassie side-panel panties with double thickness front and back. 2-way stretch. 69c. Topped by pullover shirt with patented shoulder. 65c.

(e) Paddy Panda face cloth and towel sets with matching pastel edgings. 59c to $2.50. Crib sheets $1.95.

Gibbs

Soft, sturdy, shrink-resistant "under-alls"

Gibbs, Philadelphia 34, Pa.

GUARANTEED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Love that Lemonade Lift!

It's yours in seconds with FROZEN LEMONADE from Sunny California

IT'S Refreshing ANY TIME!

PERK UP family and friends with tart, tangy, pure-fruit lemonade. This all-year fun-drink is ready in seconds when you use Frozen Concentrate for Lemonade from sunny California. All you add is water, yet guests feel you're serving them something special. Costs only about 3¢ a glass. Be sure to select a brand of Frozen Lemonade with CALIFORNIA on the can!

Frozen Lemonade's the world's best mixer!

Party Punch has zip and zest when you use Frozen Lemonade as its base!

Make Lemonade sparkle! Mix with club soda instead of water for a happy drink!

Fruit Juices are tastier, more refreshing, blended with Frozen Lemonade!

LEMON PRODUCTS ADVISORY BOARD, LOS ANGELES

Look for CALIFORNIA on every can of FROZEN LEMONADE
– because California lemons make the best lemonade a warehouse which bought, sold and packed fruit.

But because he wanted to get out on his own completely, and also had a desire to move back to Wenatchee where he'd grown up, Bob sold this ranch and in 1948 bought the one he and Valerie now own. With his $8000 savings, plus $2000 borrowed from Valerie's mother, he made a down payment of $10,000 on a $23,000 farm, and inherited in July a crop ready for harvest that fall. This was still a good year for Bob. He paid off $2300 more on the property, had $2000 left for orchard improvements. Raising apples really looked like a good deal.

By the fall of 1950, just two years later, however, Bob and Valerie were beginning to change their minds. For Bob, who, like many farmers, borrows his year's expenses in advance from the Growers' Credit Corporation (in which he has invested $4600 as credit), had fallen $2200 short of his payments in 1949, and $4000 short the next year with "a beautiful crop and a terrible price." When two-month-old Lisa was rushed to the hospital with an acute throat infection, the financial bottom really fell out. Her godmothers paid for her special nurses, but Bob was reduced even so to selling the children's bonds to pay the hospital bill and to buy groceries for the family. "The whole thing was terrifying—the only dangerous thing that's ever happened to us."

In debt and seriously worried about saving the ranch, Bob tried another crop in 1951—and paid off most of his debts.

"That's farming," he says. "One year you're down, the next you may have a big profit." 1953 was a big profit year for Bob. In 1954 his total earnings were $8000.

"The figures look big in print," Valerie says, "but we actually have to watch our expenses closely because any extra money goes right back into improving and expanding the orchard. We rarely have money for fixing up the house or buying new furniture, which is one lesson every good farm wife learns early: the barn comes before the house, a new tractor before a new car. We eat off the land as much as we can—wild asparagus and wild strawberries in addition to the vegetables and fruit we plant ourselves; we're starting to raise our own chickens for eggs. We dress on a bare-minimum budget. What I don't make, our relatives send us, except for the rare suit or dress that Bob and I buy—one every three years or so if we're lucky. By the time Joan and Lisa are ready for formals, the 350 young Red Delicious trees we planted last spring should be bearing!"

Where the Valaases' budget draws the biggest blank is in money for recreation — "We just can't afford to do much. The idea is, in fact, hilarious!" Valerie's vacations from housework consist of a weekly meeting of Johnny and Andy's Cub den ("Lisa and Joan are poles for the relay race and think they're Cubs too"), a monthly meeting of the P.T.A. Preschool Committee to raise money for school projects or fight against consolidation with Wenatchee schools (Valerie helped write letters, make phone calls, go door to door, and felt a "great flush of victory" when consolidation failed), a semi-monthly bridge club ("fun because it has no worthy purpose at all"), and very occasional movies and parties with Bob when friends are available to baby-sit.

"Our mode of living is strictly simple," Valerie says. "We have lots more fun taking our children on a Sunday picnic or four-day camping trip than we ever have getting off by ourselves."

To old friends who can't understand why she doesn't miss city life more, Valerie sums up her deep satisfaction this way:

"It's mostly being able to do things I like for people I love, sharing good times as well as routine tasks. I'm far from being a humanitarian or one dedicated to good works. I'd be a washout in a settlement house or even an orphanage, but doing things for these children of ours is just about as much fulfillment as I ever hoped of life. Bob is so much a part of everything we do, and the children feel so close to him—I'm just plain lucky and I know it."

THE BLUE-EYED DAISY

By ELIZABETH McFARLAND

"O lovey with the blue blue eyes,
O little blue-eyed daisy,
You grow so sweet," the young man cries,
"You drive a young man crazy!"

Then out he rode on an April mare
And into green woods blazing,
To light the dogwood's candle flare
And set the stars to grazing.

For a daisy girl's soft eyes kiss-blue
And cheeks thin-petal-fine
Can make the world gleam eggshell new,
Rinsed clean in dewdrop shine.

HOW THE VALAAS FAMILY SPENDS ITS MONEY EACH MONTH

Bob's income varies each year according to the size of his crop, the market demand, and current prices. Though in 1953 he had a net cash income of $13,000, in 1954 his income dropped to $8000. His operating expenses likewise vary: from $15,000 in 1953 to not quite $10,000 in 1954. His low income tax results from a dependency deduction of $4200 and nonbusiness deductions of $1000. Bob figures out his probable expenses a year in advance, borrows the money from Growers' Credit Corporation, and repays it in the fall after harvesting his apples. Below are personal monthly expenses only.

Food	$130
Payments on ranch	85
Property tax	10
Clothing	20
Fuel, light, water	24
Telephone	6
Insurance (life, house, car, Blue Cross)	42
Medical and dental (including drugs)	30
Recreation (weekly picnics, annual 4-day camping trip)	10
Church	10
Furniture and appliances	55
Car and jeep expense	45
Dry cleaning, shoe repair	2
Magazines, newspapers	3
House repairs and improvements	20
Charity	5
Income tax (two-year average)	65
Total	$562

How long since you've tasted real cheese?

Real cheese is cheese that's aged naturally—for as long as a year or more! The Miss Wisconsin Cheddar you see here is real cheese. That's why it has fine texture . . . and that's why its flavor is so rich and savory. A lot of people consider Miss Wisconsin the finest naturally aged cheddar cheese in the country. And we're sure, if you try it, you'll agree.

You know it's good!
ARMOUR STAR
The Armour Star label is one of the world's finest guarantees!

See what you buy!
These generous wedges:
Sharp Aged, Medium
or Mild.

Miss Wisconsin NATURAL AGED Cheddar Cheese

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BLUE, BRICK, PROVOLONE AND ROMANO

For easy Lenten days

You can make
Seven Seas Casserole
with TUNA,
SALMON, SHRIMP,
LOBSTER
or any sea food—fresh, frozen or canned!*

Product of General Foods

SEVEN SEAS CASSEROLE

Made only with Minute Rice—ready in minutes!

1 can condensed cream of mushroom (or celery) soup
1¼ cups water or milk • ¼ teaspoon salt • 1⅓ cups (or 5-ounce package) Minute Rice
1 can (or ½ lb.) sea food* • 1 box frozen peas, thawed • Cheese slices

Mix soup, water and salt in a saucepan. Bring to a boil over medium heat; stir occasionally. Pour about half into a greased 1½-quart casserole. Then, in layers, add Minute Rice (right from box), sea food, and peas. Add remaining soup, top with cheese, sprinkle with paprika. Cover. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 20 minutes.

This Minute Rice masterpiece serves 4. (Note: For extra flavor, add ¼ cup finely chopped onion and 1 teaspoon lemon juice to soup mixture.)

Remember, for "easy days" any day, there's nothing like Minute Rice—it's perfect rice without cooking.

* Sauté fresh or frozen sea food in butter about 3 minutes.

FELICE PARAMORE

They all love swimming, but only the coach is old enough to walk.

Tiny Ann displays her own style; unorthodox . . . but effective.

Miniature mermaid, Laurie, swims down to see what's on the bottom.

Julie Ann takes a quiet breather at the water's edge, and then . . .

gets back in the swim with a fast flutter kick, which takes her to the center of the pool and a big kiss from Jen, her grandmother.

They swim before they walk

"Ten days is a bit young," but these babies, 4 to 9 months, take to water like tadpoles.

By FELICE PARAMORE

"EVEN at a comparatively helpless age, a baby can be taught the rudiments that will keep him afloat and alive if he falls into the water." Jen Loven knows exactly what she is talking about; she has taught thousands of children to swim, and conducts a regular semiweekly swimming class for infants who range in age from four months to a ripe old year.

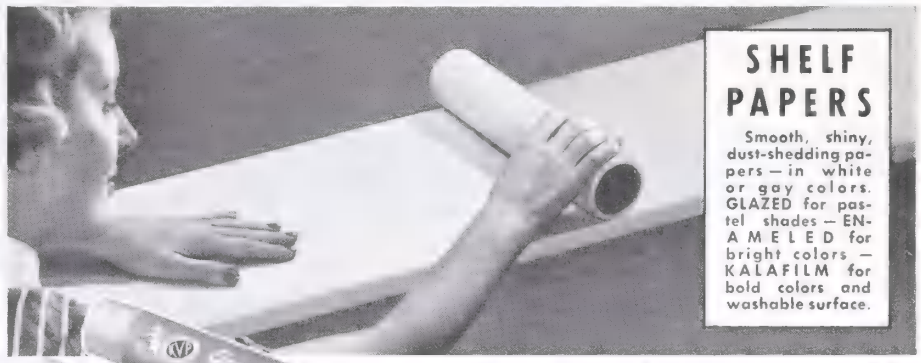
Julie Ann, Mrs. Loven's own granddaughter, started lessons when she was ten days old, but Jen thinks that's a bit young. "For most babies, from three to six months is about right. And they love it. They can't learn orthodox strokes or stylized techniques, but they can learn to relax in the water, to keep their mouths closed, and to flail with arms and legs. Those are the rudiments."

Few babies have an inherent fear of water, but they can acquire fear easily if startled or forced. Jen likes for parents to go into the pool with their babies. The water should be warm (90° F.), the instructor calm and patient, and her voice low and confident. In this happy atmosphere, the babies take to swimming like tadpoles.

Mrs. Loven puts a new "student" on his stomach, supporting him with her hands while moving him gently in the water. He gets an occasional mouthful, but soon learns to keep his mouth closed and to hold his breath and relax. Then she puts him face down and allows him to wriggle along alone, keeping her arms protectively near. The small babies are not able to hold their heads out of water, so she takes them out every few seconds to breathe. She never leaves a baby unguarded for an instant, no matter how proficient he becomes. As breath control increases, the distances they can swim increase also. Some of Jen's water babies, who still can't stand alone, can swim twenty feet under water. Her biggest difficulty comes when it's time to take the swimmers from the pool. They howl.

Glorify everyday foods with

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM



For a hearty, thrifty main dish add tasty Underwood Deviled Ham to creamed vegetables and spoon over rice. Underwood's special spicing adds zest to foods — its whole ham goodness adds nutrition, too!

Wm. Underwood Co., Watertown, Mass.

KVP Helpful Household Papers

WHITE AND COLORS

Your guarantee of quality always is the KVP trademark. You'll find KVP Freezer Paper in locker plants, and with the other KVP papers in housewares and paper sections of leading stores.

Paper Maids SAVE TIME—SAVE WORK

Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Cookery Parchment • Gift Wrapping

KALAMAZOO VEGETABLE PARCHMENT CO. • KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

In Canada Buy KVP — APPLEFORD Paper Products

BORN TO BE QUEEN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 67

A footman ushered them into a suite at the rear of the first floor which Juliana at once remarked had been her nursery rooms as a child. There were a sitting room, a small bedroom and a big one, a dressing room and bath.

"You may sleep in the smaller room," the princess told Sophia. "And I believe there's another bathroom above us on the second floor. Come, I'll show you."

Juliana led the way up a flight of carpeted wooden stairs to the floor above. Through the staircase windows Miss Feith could see the rear view of office buildings close by.

"This is where I went to school," the princess was saying, throwing open the door of a large square front bedroom. They could hear from below the street noises of the organ grinder and the clatter of bottles from the milk vender peddling his pints of milk. "Mother invited three friends to study here with me. She was tutored all alone, by university professors, starting at the age of six."

Miss Feith had heard friends say that Queen Wilhelmina had appeared unexpectedly one day at the most progressive elementary school in The Hague, run by a farmer's son named Jan Ligthart. The queen sat watching and listening from the back of a classroom for several hours, then announced to the school's founder that she was putting him in sole charge of Juliana's education. The Feiths had considered this a radical departure for royalty at the time.

"Mother had four desks moved in here, and a blackboard," Juliana told Miss Feith. "We learned our three R's and tons of colonial history.

"Once in a while my grandmother wou pay us a surprise visit. She lived right up t street from here. I remember once we we conjugating verbs, bored to pieces, when t door opened and in came grandmother. S always looked like a picture-book queen any hour of the day, with her black silk gow and high neck stocks, her white hair perfect arranged.

"Well, that day she had brought along servant with a huge tray of marvelously ric cookies and lemonade. It seemed to me it w the best and sweetest lemonade I had ev tasted, much better than here at Noordeind

"And now we had better dress for dinner remarked Princess Juliana, laughing.

Miss Feith had scarcely returned to th small dressing room when someone knocke on the door. There stood a servant in a whi apron and high chef's hat.

"Good day, Freule," he bowed. "H Majesty has put me in charge of preparing th meals for Princess Beatrix."

With difficulty Miss Feith repressed a smil

The chef produced a small pad and penc and asked, "If you would be so good as t inform me what the princess eats?"

"Why yes," replied the nurse. "At ten A.M she gets five tablespoons of strained porridg and for six-o'clock supper two ounces c puréed soup."

The chef gravely wrote down the instruc tions.

The next morning, the day of the christer ing, Miss Feith arose early. It was a beautifu bright May day, and in the gardens belo masses of tulips and daffodils made splashe of color in their tiny formal plots. Miss Feit bathed the princess much earlier than usua and carefully shampooed and brushed he spun-gold hair. Over in a corner of the dress ing room lay a mound of shimmering cream white satin and lace nested in yards of blu tissue paper, the christening gown of bot Juliana and Wilhelmina. Next to it was a gold and-crystal dressing-table set, a gift from th Belgian king to his new royal godchild.

A few minutes before ten a footman arrive bearing a massive silver tray with a domed cover. Inside was a gleaming silver porringe with a few spoonfuls of hot strained oatmeal The monogram on the dish, a crowned J, con firmed Miss Feith's suspicions that the infan Juliana's exclusive set of tableware had once more been pressed into service.

Princess Juliana came in to nurse the four teen-week-old infant, and then helped Sophia Feith dress her in the satin-and-Brussels-lace gown, grown creamy with age over the decades. There was a bonnet to match, too and a veil and cushion. Down the front of the immensely long dress was a panel of lace in which was worked the royal arms of the House of Orange and its French motto, Je maintiendrai. (I shall maintain.) The infant Trix laughed and kicked as her mother stood tenderly smiling down at her. The princess' cheeks were flushed pink with excitement.

THEN the room was empty, the pile of tissue paper strewn on the floor, when the nurse, hastily finishing her own toilet, heard a great commotion from the front of the palace. She hurried down the corridor to a window overlooking the front terrace and poked out her head. Directly below stood a caravan of shining black royal coaches along with Holland's great golden coach, drawn by eight matching black horses, each held by a footman in plush knee breeches and Nassau-blue jacket and scarlet waistcoat embroidered with gold braid. About the coaches surged a crowd of excited laughing people, waving orange flags and the red-white-and-blue flag of The Netherlands and shouting, "Long live Princess Beatrix!"

The turquoise-blue cloudless sky, the scent of spring, the magnificent cavalcade waiting below with horses prancing and snorting and impatiently pawing the red brick street gripped the nurse in a wave of emotion. Beatrix, she who brings happiness—how aptly you were named! she thought.

Down below she could see Queen Wilhelmina appear and step unassisted into the first black coach, followed by the King of Belgium, Leopold III, in resplendent uniform. Amid a surge of cheers from the moving ocean of heads and flags, the other godparents entered

FOR PRACTICAL LADIES WITH AN EYE FOR A BUY...THERE'S a Pepperell Snug Fit Sheet for every taste

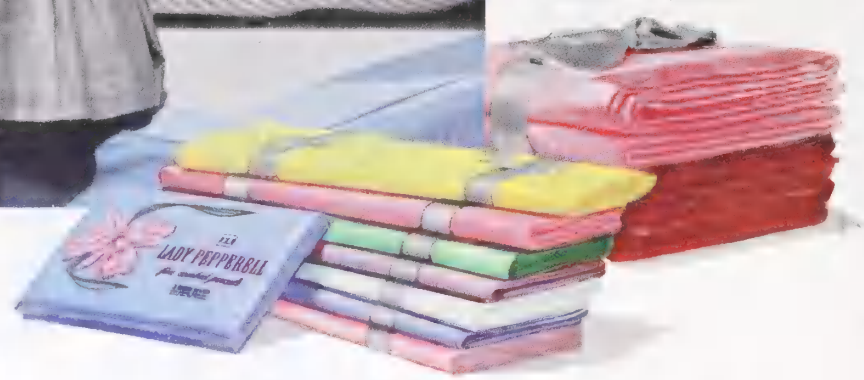
NEW LUXURY, NEW ECONOMY– FABULOUS NYLON SNUG FIT SHEETS

Sleep in pure luxury between Pepperell's new nylon Snug Fit Sheets. They wash and dry in a twinkling, need no ironing. So economical—they wear as only nylon can and you "save" by doing them at home like undies.



6 EXQUISITE COLORS THAT BRING SPRING TO YOUR BEDROOM

Loveliest Springtime colors—all colorfast—that cost only pennies more than white! Snug Fit corners hug your mattress, give you "just made" smoothness all night, every night! And a Pepperell Snug Fit Sheet is reversible . . . with neat unique seaming that makes corners ⅓ stronger to wear far longer. Sanforized, of course!

TOP OFF WITH A PENNY-WISE PEPPERELL BLANKET

There just aren't better blankets for the money. Choose a beautiful Pepperell Caress, a fabulous new Pepperell Acrilan,* or any other —they're all so deep-napped, fleecy-warm, Pepperell-perfect! Colors mix or match with your Pepperell Sheets.

*®Chemstrand Acrylic Fiber

Lady Pepperell SHEETS AND BLANKETS

PEPPERELL FABRICS®

REGULAR • SNUG FIT® • WHITE • COLORS • NYLON

waiting carriages—the prince's mother, cess Armgard; the Duke of Mecklenburg, e of Juliana; the Countess Athlone, her ; and Countess Kotzebue, aunt of Prince nhard. Next came Princess Juliana carry- a pillow of frothy white lace and satin from ch emerged two clenched little fists. Then ce Bernhard, in military dress and wearing vord, followed his wife and daughter into golden coach, debonair and smiling.

n a black palace limousine Miss Feith fol- ed the procession to the Groote Kerk, a ch Reformed Church, where Juliana and nhard had been married the year before. he minister intoned, "Beatrix Wilhelmina ngard, I baptize thee in the name of the ner, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Then aised his hand over the child. "May the d bless you and protect you."

he sun streaming through the centuries-old ned-glass windows fell on the small bundle hite. Trix cried throughout the ceremony. he great formality of the occasion, the hing crowds which spilled off the side- ks into the way of the royal procession and ned to go berserk at the sight of the tiny ds waving from the coach window, left the se quite exhausted. The prince and the ncess were busy with guests in the afternoon le Miss Feith pushed the newly christened ncess along the narrow garden paths behind Hague palace. Dozens of people stopped oint and stare, pushing their noses through black iron fence which separated the ace garden from the rear yards of offices cafés.

Poor Juliana, thought Sophia. How she st have loathed this goldfish-bowl existence!

Later that day as Miss Feith was walking wn a palace corridor she almost bumped o Prince Bernhard, who stood with his nds in his pockets gazing up at a picture on wall. "My predecessor," he remarked, ila's father."

Miss Feith paused to look at the wedding rtrait of Queen Wilhelmina and the Duke nry of Mecklenburg. The queen was then enty, an arrestingly beautiful young man with an aristocratic profile and a wil- vy figure. Her waist appeared as though it uld be spanned by two hands. The duke oked very handsome with his cropped blond r and square powerful shoulders. In formal rtraits such as these there was not much to licate his habitual good humor and ability laugh at himself which endeared him almost mediately to the Dutch people.

As the first prince consort in Dutch history, doubt Prince Henry found a sense of humor lispensable. When he became engaged to the tch queen, he was a subaltern in the Prus- n Jägers. A special act of Parliament made n a Dutch citizen and at the same time a neral in the Dutch army and a vice-admiral the Dutch fleet. As for the financial ar- ngements necessary for a prince consort, rely he must have been amused when the o houses of government, hurriedly called gether, came to one of those cautious settle- nts so typical of Hollanders where money concerned.

PRINCE HENRY of the Netherlands was to get allowance unless his wife died first. In this ent, he was to get one provided he remained Dutch soil.

He never collected his allowance, thought e nurse, recalling the blinding-hot July day 1934 when his funeral procession crawled st the sorrowing multitudes lining the ague streets. Even in death, the jovial prince emed to be gay. At his request, his funeral rtege was all white. According to his wishes, s widow and daughter mourned him in hite as well.

"Prince Henry was chairman of the Red ross here in Holland, as Juliana is now," the rince told Miss Feith. "He was very much rapped up in his work, and spent a good deal time in the Red Cross building. That's where had his first heart attack. Of course a Red ross ambulance was summoned right away nd some of the volunteer workers carried rince Henry out on a stretcher. They say that lifted his head and smiled and said, 'Splen- d! Now I am myself an example of the fine ork of the Red Cross!'"

Sophia smiled. "Jula was away visiting at London, wasn't she?"

"Yes. At first the attack was not considered too serious. When she was finally summoned home he had had a second attack and it was too late. Everyone said it was a terrible shock for her. She adored her father," Prince Bernhard said.

Miss Feith remembered a story about the time Prince Henry visited Leiden University when Juliana was a student there.

One of the professors told him that his daughter was highly intelligent.

"That she gets from her mother," commented the prince.

Another professor told him that Juliana had a most agreeable and cheerful personality.

"That she gets from me," exclaimed the prince.

Miss Feith told the story to Bernhard. He laughed and said with a shrug, "It's a good story. It also shows how royalty hears nothing but flattery."

With this, he left her and ambled off down the hall. The next day they all returned to Soestdijk.

It was a relief to get back to the quiet and peace of a country house where it was always possible to go into the woods and pick wild flowers or simply lie in the sun, safe from all prying eyes.

When Trix reached the age of six months, Princess Juliana stopped nursing her. No longer tied down to a feeding schedule, she was able to take more trips with her husband, but whenever she was in Soestdijk she appeared for the morning bath and frequently escaped from her desk to push the baby's pram.

One evening when the nurse arrived in the library for evening cocktails, she found Prince Bernhard laughing uproariously on the sofa

A Comfortable baby likes his new world

Remember, his skin really is thinner than yours

His happiness so often depends on how thoughtfully you see to all his little baby needs.

One important daily comfort you can bring him is a truly soft bathroom tissue.

Your baby will like the new Scot-Tissue. Its touch is so soft on his thinner skin, yet it has the strength and absorbency you need for quick, tidy cleansing.

Next time you shop, be sure to pick up several rolls. The big 1,000-sheet roll is your best choice not only for baby but for the whole family. Another great Scott value. "ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

All through babyhood his sensitive skin needs your wise and loving care

You use a special soft brush that won't hurt his baby skin. Be sure to choose his bathroom tissue for "tender-skin" comfort, too. The new Scot-Tissue is even gentler than before. And you will like the way it cleanses, neatly and thoroughly, without tearing or shredding.

1,000 sheets—over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues with a small, slender, chic-looking woman in black velvet with jade earrings.

"Mother," said Juliana, "you met Freule Feith at Trix's christening. Mother just motored in from Germany, Sophia."

"How do you do?" said Princess Armgard in a very deep, throaty voice. Like Juliana, she spoke in English. "Did you know," she remarked, turning her head to speak to her daughter-in-law, "Bernhard's first nurse was Chinese? At least her mother was Chinese and her father British. She spoke no German, but she had Bernhard prattling away in English by the age of three."

Miss Feith looked over at the prince, who was watching his mother with a fond expression.

"The Chinese amah adored Bernhard," went on the German princess. "She said he was fearless as a lion and stuffed him with red meat. Whenever he flew into one of his temper tantrums she'd hold him at arm's length while he kicked and yelled and clawed. When I asked her why she didn't spank the rascal, she explained, 'Chastisement does not convince.'"

Bernhard joined in the general laughter. "I got enough beatings elsewhere," he said.

"Not until you were twelve," his mother corrected. She took a cigarette out of a small white clay pipe and lit a new one from the stub. She had trouble igniting the cigarette and Bernhard instantly leaned over with his lighter. She puffed for a moment, then thanked him smilingly. When she looked her son, her expression changed one of radiant tenderness.

"Bernhard was tutored at ho until he was twelve," she told group, "when we decided—my h band and I—to send him to school Zuellichau. What a change for hi He slept with twenty-four boys in room and if one of them misbeha he was beaten."

"I could count on at least th beatings a week," Bernhard admitt "Some of which I deserved."

"He used to visit us weekends Reckenwalde—that's our home, n the Polish border," the princess plained to the nurse. "One Sund his father and I noticed a great rel tance on Bernhard's part to return school. Finally he confessed to that an upperclassman beat him re larly every Sunday afternoon with belt buckle."

She paused and puffed at her lit English pipe, her gray eyes so like H son's crinkled with some humoro recollection. The Dutch princess a the nurse waited silently for her go on.

"Bernhard was not very strong very big," she admitted finally. "H father could see no way to handle t bully. 'Kick him in the stomach!' said."

The nurse noted that although s laughed politely, Juliana did not lo too amused. She had a strong disli of physical violence, and had oft told Miss Feith that under no circu stances was Trix to be spanked. "Y must reason with her," she explain frequently.

"How is Aschwin?" inquired Ber hard.

"Still the ragged scholar," H mother announced in her deep voi "My two sons are so different," s informed Miss Feith. "I remember newspaper reporter once called the homespun and ermine. When th were both studying at the universi in Berlin, I often visited them fro Reckenwalde. They had precisely t same allowance from home, but was always the same story.

"ASCHWIN lived in the same lod ings but his clothes always looked though he slept in them. When asked him if he had enough mon he never had any idea. He would g out his checkbook and invariably fi that he was penniless. Bernhard, the other hand"—she smiled at h older son and her eyes lighted up h face in a striking resemblance "Bernhard as a student always h pleasant quarters, excellent clothe and took me to the best restaurant When I asked if he needed mo money he always said he had enou to manage until his next allowan check from home."

"Bernhard is an excellent ma ager," agreed Juliana.

"But he drives himself far t hard," frowned his mother. "H school friends thought twice befo coming to Reckenwalde for the wee end, I can tell you. Bernhard h every split second planned. Two hou for duck shooting, an hour for spee boating, perhaps some horseba riding after lunch or a trip to t airfield for some flying, a swim b fore dinner and then dancing un three in the morning. Two hou later he was ready for more du shooting."

"Come now, mother, that's enou about me!"

Miss Feith wished she would co tinue. She was fascinated by th glimpse of the plucky, highly ene getic boy who had such a temper a such drive. But the conversati changed to horses and horse sho

Teen-ager proves herself an expert cook

Crowned Queen of Pennsylvania Cooking Contest

Delores Jean Smith is more than pretty—she's one of Pennsylvania's best cooks! In fact, she was awarded that crown when she placed first in a state-wide cooking competition last year. And like so many good cooks, this Landisburg girl always uses Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. "It rises fast every time," she says. "And it's easy to use."

Use Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast when you bake at home—most good cooks do! This dry yeast is so dependable—and so convenient. It keeps for months on your cupboard shelf. Make sure you get Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast.

Get the New "Thrifty Three"

REAL FRUIT JUICE REFRESHMENT...

REAL GOLD

Just mix with water... Ready-to-Drink, Instantly. Each economical 6 oz. can makes a big family quart of ... Wonderful refreshment plus... Energy Rebound.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Trudy Star says: my Tri-State
TWIN BREAD BOX
Keeps Bread Fresh for a Full Week!

Clean, Crystal-Clear RIGID PLASTIC

$2.69

At leading hardware and dept. stores or write... Trudy Star, c/o Tri-State, Henderson, Ky.

and then to the present state of affairs in Germany.

"You were a lucky one to be offered a job in Paris," Princess Armgard informed her son. "Thank heaven you didn't go into the diplomatic corps as you once intended."

"What do your friends tell you about Austria?" asked Bernhard.

The princess' voice shook with feeling. "Unbelievable. Far worse than Hitler's early purges. They say the day the Storm Troopers marched in, whole families of Jews plugged up the doors and windows and turned on the gas. What is the feeling here about Hitler?"

The prince told her that the Dutch, while shocked and horrified, seemed to ignore the situation. "They will do nothing which might offend the Führer; they prefer to leave all action up to France and England, and bury their heads in the sand. With Belgium and Luxembourg it is the same."

"How do the German people feel about all this?" put in Juliana.

"Many are shocked," responded Princess Armgard, "but it is how Hitler feels that matters. You know, don't you, that I ran into trouble when we flew your standard, the last time you visited at Reckenwalde? It was not up half an hour before a Nazi came flying in on his motorcycle and said that the flag was not on the Führer's approved list."

"But you didn't take it down," remarked Juliana.

"Naturally not," replied Armgard haughtily. "I told him that the House of Orange-Nassau is not a country, it's a family."

"And you convinced him?" laughed her son.

"We reached a compromise," admitted his mother. "He said I could fly my daughter-in-law's standard provided I flew the swastika at the same time. He brought me back a Nazi flag and a flagpole and waited until my servants installed them on the roof.

"Of course, the moment you and Juliana left, I ordered both flags taken down."

After a few days' visit, Princess Armgard returned to Germany. Not long afterward, at the Munich Conference in September, 1938, Czechoslovakia surrendered its western lands to Hitler and the prince was once more plunged into a state of gloom.

But Miss Feith had other things to worry about besides the burgeoning Third Reich. There were many personal disadvantages to her new job. As the prince and princess accepted her more and more into their gezin, or intimate family group (and the three of them were all on a first-name basis now), the nurse felt it wise to keep herself aloof from the rest of the palace staff and their gossip. This frequently made for loneliness, especially when the prince and princess were off on a motor or airplane trip, or a cruise in the royal yacht Piet Hein. Then she ate her meals alone in the palace dining room or on a tray in her room. Her time off the job was practically nil—she was lucky if she could manage even half a day at her parents' home every other week. Her beaux had long since become discouraged, and one by one ceased trying to see her. On her twenty-seventh birthday she awoke filled with a deep sense of depression—was she doomed the rest of her life to lonely spinsterhood? More than anything else in the world she longed for a husband and children of her own.

On the other hand, she hated to think of leaving the warm family circle at Soestdijk. She felt needed, not only as a fixed and unmoving center of Trix's existence, but also as a much-needed confidante of Princess Juliana.

The baby Trix she quite adored. At the age of one, she could say eleven words. Her mother counted them herself. She was a plump, merry little child with a snub nose and blue eyes that turned into little half-moons when she laughed. And such an affectionate little thing! "Zussie, Zussie!" she would call after the nurse if she left her for a moment with a chambermaid. This was the closest Trix could come to pronouncing Zuster, meaning "sister," the universal name of all Dutch baby nurses. When Miss Feith returned, the princess would wrap her small arms around her nurse's knees, chortling with joy.

Princess Juliana had occasionally mentioned that she intended to hire a governess for Trix when the child was old enough to start her study of foreign languages. As the weeks slipped into months and almost a year had passed since she first came to Soestdijk, Miss Feith wondered when a governess would arrive to take her place.

Then one winter morning early in 1939, Princess Juliana summoned Miss Feith to her downstairs study.

The Groningen girl felt that of all the rooms in the palace which reflected the tastes of the royal couple, this room most clearly revealed the personality of the future queen. Done in the coppery colors of white, yellow and burnt sienna which Juliana loved so well, it was a small, sunny, intensely feminine room with a big French window opening on a stone terrace where the princess and her husband often dined in the summertime. Now thick snow blanketed the terrace and the sloping lawns beyond. In front of the fireplace was a tiny wooden footstool for Trix, and pillows of native hand-woven fabrics were heaped invitingly on a brown plush sofa pushed against the wall. As usual, the flowers about the room were of the simple field variety and not elaborately arranged.

An oil portrait of Bernhard as a lad of about ten in colorful Tyrolean costume hung

What makes a design like Fostoria's "American" so ageless?

To put it one way—because good design doesn't go "out of style". You see patterns similar to American in collections of antique glassware; American, itself, is the pride of thousands of tables across the country. We've been making it for three generations now, and today the "line" has grown to 180 different shapes — all crafted by hand. Yet American is surprisingly inexpensive. (The pieces shown here range in price from $1.25* to $5.50*.) You'll find it in better stores everywhere — for a charming gift, or for your own pleasure. In open stock because it's made by the Fostoria Glass Company in Moundsville, West Virginia.

slightly higher in the West*

FOSTORIA

near the fireplace; other, smaller oils, most of them Dutch landscapes, were signed by Wilhelmina. On the narrow fruit-wood desk was a pleasant clutter of friends' wedding pictures, family photos, menus for the princess to check and a small pot of pink begonias.

The princess was sitting in a chair by the French windows with her knitting. The morning sun made an aureole of her dark blond hair; she looked particularly relaxed and happy.

"Zussie," she said, for both she and the prince had begun calling the nurse by her new nickname, "have we discussed how long you would be staying here?"

Miss Feith shook her head. "No, Jula, never." Here, then, was the end. She was about to be dismissed. She was conscious of a sinking feeling in the pit of her stomach and felt close to tears. She could not love Trix more if she had borne her, she felt sure. But Trix's education must be perfect in every respect. Who was she—a mere hospital nurse—to instruct a future queen?

The princess unwound another length of red wool from the knitting basket on the floor. She remained quiet for a moment and then she said, "Bernhard and I hope you will feel like staying a bit longer. You see, we're expecting another baby."

Zussie felt overcome with joy and relief. "How wonderful for Trix!" was all she could say.

"Then you will stay?" asked the princess anxiously. "I was afraid you might want to leave, and hoped that this news might lure you into remaining."

"Of course I'll stay!" exclaimed Zussie. "I'll be very happy to stay."

"I'm so glad Trix won't be an only child," Juliana went on. "I always said I wanted to have twelve children when I grew up!" she concluded, laughing.

Zussie was thinking that if the princess bore a son he would become king according to the Dutch laws of succession and Trix would remain a princess.

The last male to ascend the Dutch throne was King William III, son of the Russian beauty Anna Paulowna. That was, as Zussie realized, almost a century ago.

The days sped swiftly by and in the summer Trix was considered old enough to go wading in the big 150-foot outdoor swimming pool. It was really like a small lake. Although only a year and a half old, she showed absolutely no fear of the water and splashed happily by the hour in the shallow end, which was only a foot or two deep. Now she was allowed to join her parents at mealtime, sitting with her nurse at a separate table in the family dining room.

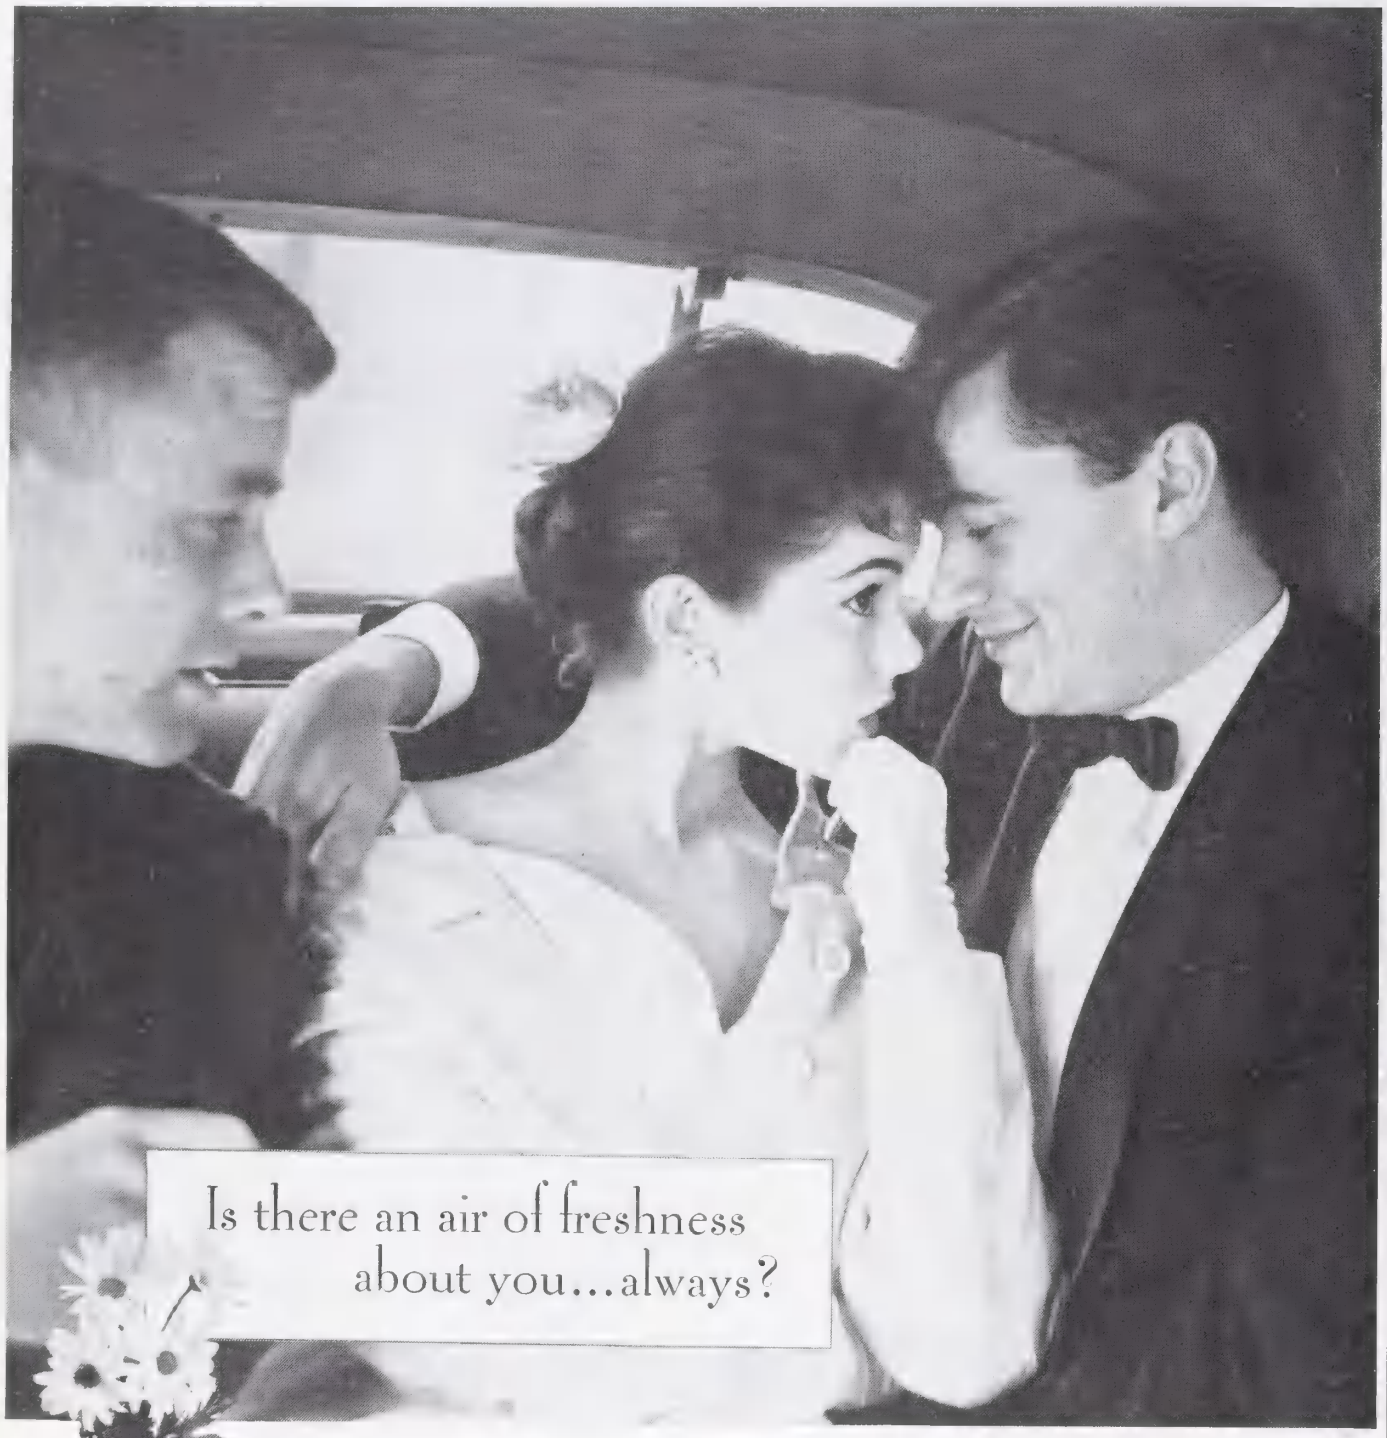
Trix displayed definite likes and dislikes about food, and spinach came under her list of abominations. One day she hurled a plateful of the hated vegetable on the dining-room carpet.

Her father was furious and wanted her spanked at once.

Juliana intervened in her soft voice. "No, no," she protested. "Chastisement does not convince," she reminded her husband. "Scolding is quite enough."

But when on a later occasion his daughter deliberately wet her pants (so Bernhard thought) he administered a sound spanking on the place where he said it would do the most good. At any rate, she never committed that particular faux pas again.

The new baby was due in August. Zussie was accustomed to hospital deliveries, which were, however, definitely the exception among most of her acquaintances. Usually the doctor arranged hospital deliveries only if they expected birth complications. The princess' personal physician, whom Miss Feith had known at the Utrecht hospital, informed the nurse that she could provide all the nursing assistance he needed. With this plan the princess concurred wholeheartedly.



About a week before the baby was due, the princess' obstetrician moved into one of the guest suites at Soestdijk. Now once again the crowds began to gather by the black front gates and the newspaper reporters pounced upon every member of the palace staff who entered or left to ply them with questions. Even the couriers who flew in and out on their bicycles, and the postman who arrived every hour, were not immune from the curiosity of the reporters.

On the evening of August fourth, the princess' labor pains began. Zussie hastily moved into the nursery, where Juliana was going to have the baby, a small amount of emergency equipment borrowed from a nearby hospital. The doctor downstairs was notified, as well as Queen Wilhelmina, who at once left by motor from The Hague. Bernhard, barred from his wife's bedroom, paced up and down the long upstairs corridor, looking up expectantly each time Zussie came out.

AT one o'clock in the morning the child was born—a girl. As soon as she could, Zussie hurried out to inform the others. If Bernhard was disappointed, he did not show it. He raced into the room to embrace his wife, followed by Queen Wilhelmina and the prince's mother who had been hurriedly awakened.

Then every light in the great west wing flashed on and the servants and members of the palace staff went about slapping one another on the back and shaking hands. Prince Bernhard mixed highballs in the library. As he pressed one into Zussie's hand, she saw over in one corner of the room Her Majesty busy dictating to a lady in waiting. "Send that telegram to Leopold of Belgium, King George VI of England, the Emperor of Japan, the Presidents of France and the United States and all other heads of state," she instructed, sweeping out of the room and headed once more for the bedside of her daughter.

At seven Zussie was startled out of sleep by the deep-throated roar of cannon broadcasting the news throughout all the Dutch provinces. She could imagine her father, with one shoe off and one shoe on, counting the shots. Fifty-one meant a princess of Orange, one hundred and one shots would mean a prince. At the same time, church bells began to toll wildly.

are you really lovely to love?

An appealing air of freshness is yours, always . . . when you use Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh protects against underarm odor and stains. Your underarms are dry. For Fresh contains the most highly effective perspiration-checking ingredient known to science.

When you open the Fresh jar you will discover . . . its delicate fragrance . . . its whiteness . . . its whipped cream smoothness. Not a trace of stickiness. Not a trace of greasiness. Gentle to skin, too.

For an air of freshness, use Fresh Cream Deodorant every day—be sure you are lovely to love always.

FRESH is a registered trademark of Pharma-Craft Corp. Also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

a "FRESH" girl is always lovely to love the fifty-first shot trembled away into ce, she thought, Ah, Trix, you must still be n.

e wondered what the new princess would lled and if she would bear a traditional ge name like Juliana or Wilhelmina.

e following day, a Sunday, Prince Bern- carried the new blond-haired princess on k pillow into the Leuven Room with its wine velvet hangings and great scenes of e in baroque gold frames. Zussie noticed several of the gold tassels on an antique were missing—pulled off by Trix on an r occasion. A great many people were to witness the birth registration of the princess, including the mayor of the tiny boring town of Baarn. About his neck ore a heavy silver chain of office, the same , he explained, that his predecessor had on a similar occasion when Queen Anna owna's son was born.

My daughter will be called Irene Emma beth," the prince announced. A startled ran around the room. Irene? Zussie d not even imagine how such a name was ed. She had never heard of it before.

he name Irene was chosen because of the al world situation," explained the prince, ully holding the cushion on which the lay sleeping. "It is derived from the k word meaning peace. This is the wish rmost in our hearts at this time. The e must be pronounced I-rein and is spelled -n-e, without an accent. I need not ex- the name Emma, our much-beloved n mother. Elisabeth is the third name. It osen because a great-aunt of the princess, rand Duchess of Oldenburg, bears that e."

the burgomaster slowly and painstak- inscribed the three names Irene Emma beth on the birth certificate and then ed his fountain pen to the witnesses of oyal birth, the baby opened her eyes for a ion of a second.

h, they are blue! Her eyes are blue!" unced one of the black-coated dignitaries tone of pleased discovery.

ssie caught the prince's eye and detected inkle. As if everybody didn't know that all s' eyes are blue, she thought.

e door opened and in flew the eighteen- th-old Trix with her thick straight blond tied to one side with a blue ribbon and ing a white smocked frock and white e pumps. The prince handed the sleeping t to Zussie as footmen began to serve of hot caudle and plates of buttered rusk sugared caraway seeds. Then he took s hand and introduced her to his guests. toddler shook hands politely, Zussie was to see, but just as she slipped from the n she saw Trix busily unraveling more tassels from Queen Anna's Russian sofa.

w Zussie had two small children to care as the princess did not seem to feel that additional help in the nursery was neces- Juliana often kept Irene's crib in her , and sometimes turned the Waterloo m across the hall into a playroom for Trix. e was another playroom upstairs, but this was within earshot of Juliana's desk. The e intendant was dismayed to find the im- g room with its frayed battle standards glittering crossed swords becoming a tri- arena.

metimes the princess would be busy with al visitors in her downstairs study when loor would burst open and a small child in to have her hair ribbon tied. Juliana r reprimanded Trix for these interrup- , but dutifully tied the ribbon and sent out again with a gentle pat. "Of course air ribbon is more important to her than we are doing!" she told the smiling als.

ix listened solemnly as Zussie told that there was now a new baby in the palace was not to run shouting through the airs corridors or slam doors. But her ls had little effect upon the child's exuber- energies. She treated Irene with the same like affection she bestowed upon her be- d rag dolls.

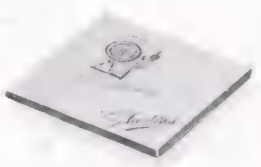
hen Irene was not yet three weeks old, many and Russia announced their non- ession pact. Juliana was stunned by the news; Bernhard announced that all his worst fears had been realized. His magnificent jumpers stood idle in their gold-and-black stalls, his tennis racket and hunting rifles gathered dust as he hastened from one meeting to another. He began to lose his habitual tan and his face looked white and drawn. Often the royal couple sat up late, listening to the foreign news reports.

A month after Irene was born—she who was named for peace—the Second World War began with Germany's invasion of Poland.

Zussie believed, as he had so often remarked, that the prince now thought of himself as a Dutchman. But as he had been a citizen of the country for only a little over two and a half years, some of Zussie's friends regarded his conversion with skepticism.

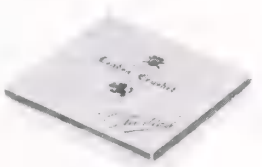
"Wasn't his father an officer in the Wehrmacht?" they asked Zussie. "Yes, but Bernhard's father hated the army and always wanted to be a doctor," Miss Feith defended the prince. "Long ago, in 1904, he resigned his commission and became a gentleman farmer. It was he who urged Bernhard to leave Germany for good, because of Hitler. If you could hear how Prince Bernhard speaks of the Führer you would realize how he despises him and his Third Reich."

She did not feel that her words had much effect. Many of the Dutch people, she felt, continued to have their suspicions about the prince's loyalties to his new country if war should break out between Holland and his former Vaterland. The matter came to a head one day soon after the war began when a Dutch scientist who was well known for his pro-German views, and perhaps anxious to curry favor with the prince, remarked, "If England should occupy this country, we would, of course, fight back, but if Germany should attack us, our close blood ties with that country would, of course, make resistance impossible."



The first time in a lifetime!
Stationery sized for what you want to say... more than a note... less than a long letter.
Montag's Shorties
Socially correct wherever they go ... and they're going everywhere!

REGENCY—
satin-smooth vellum—white, blue, pink.



paper and matching envelopes only $1.00

SHORTIES — the new writing paper sized for today's quickening pace — with matching, fashion lined, continental styled envelopes. Available in a rainbow array of delicately lovely pastel colors in four famous name open stock brands.

INNERWEAVE—fabric texture — hand torn deckledges — white, blue, yellow.

LONDON CRUSHED BOND — Light Weight — the feel of old parchment, feather light — white, blue, green.

SHEERLITE—air-light, distinctive herringweave pattern —white, green, grey.

your letters say more on Montag's fashionable writing papers
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Never put make-up over a "bare" skin

FIRST—this satinizing base!

Sheer, greaseless—
it protects, conceals—beautifully!

Heavy make-up just will catch in the flaws of a "bare" skin! It cakes in little lines, deepens them into seams . . . It collects in pores . . . Often it streaks and discolors around nose and chin. Then, almost surely, your skin appears coarsened, older.

But just see the difference when you smooth on an invisible base of Pond's Vanishing Cream before making-up. This fragrant, filmy cream is greaseless . . .

Immediately protects and smooths your just-washed skin

Gives a silky, fine-textured finish

Helps powder cling—without caking or clumping

Keeps skin soft . . . no more worries that make-up will look streaked or "stage-y"

Make it your beauty secret—this sheer base of Pond's Vanishing Cream. You'll have the delightful assurance that your make-up always looks flawless, always stays satiny-smooth . . . And that your skin has the sweet freshness, the young freshness you want for it!

Nancy du Pont Bruns

Lovely young member of the well-known Wilmington family, Mrs. Henry D. Bruns II finds that a light smoothing-over with Pond's Vanishing Cream before making-up is invaluable. "It never looks artificial, and holds powder beautifully. What's more, Pond's Vanishing Cream is wonderful in protecting my skin against wind and sun."

In just 60 seconds—a fresh, sweet, cared-for look

Tonight—give your skin this glamorizing 1-Minute Mask: Smooth a snowy-thick coat of Pond's Vanishing Cream over your face. The Cream's keratolytic action dissolves away dead flakiness that dulls your skin's freshness. After one minute, tissue off the Cream. Now—shadows seem brightened away. Your skin looks smoother, clearer—sparkles with a new radiance!

Bernhard leaped to his feet. "If Germany attacks," he cried, "we will fight to the last Dutchman." It was obvious to all that he included himself.

Plans to christen Irene that month in the Nieuwe Kerk in Amsterdam were canceled because of the crisis. The Dutch army, numbering no more than 200,000 men, was fully mobilized, facing across its borders an army of six and a half million Germans.

"The Minister of War talks of mining bridges and blowing up dikes and saving the Netherlands by giving it back to the sea," remarked Bernhard, shaking his head.

"Now, Bernilo," said Juliana soothingly, "why don't you go for a ride in the woods? Worrying won't help the situation."

Zussie did not think that Juliana ever truly believed that the war would reach her peaceful kingdom until that fateful day in October, 1939, when a German military plane, lost in a fog and far off its course, crashed in Belgium. In the plane were found complete plans for the invasion of the Lowlands. Shortly after this incident, Juliana joined Zussie and the children one sunny autumn afternoon in the gardens of Soestdijk, which were aflame with late marigolds and zinnias and blazing yellow and cinnamon chrysanthemums.

I believe that if the rest of the world were acquainted with American women and their unbelievable energy, no man on earth would plan a war against the United States.

—ERNEST JAEGER

With Trix's help Zussie had raked together a pile of autumn leaves and the small princess was rolling in them in delirious delight while her two-month-old sister slept in her carriage.

"I suppose you realize," began the Dutch crown princess with a profound sigh, "that things are in rather an awful mess. The war, I mean. Bernhard says we must make definite plans."

Both of them gazed silently at the golden scene and the laughing golden-haired child.

"I can't really seem to believe ——" Juliana began, and broke off. "I mean, after the horrors of the last war, it seems impossible to believe that someone would launch another. But we must face the facts. If Holland is attacked, you must realize, Zussie, that our arm air force are far too inconsequential in stop them, no matter how well or how b they fight.

"Well, then," continued the princess b "we have to think of all the possibilitie Germans, naturally, will try and captu family. There is no spot in this small cou so flat and open—where we could hide for any length of time. Bernhard, partic has been so outspoken against Hitle if ——"

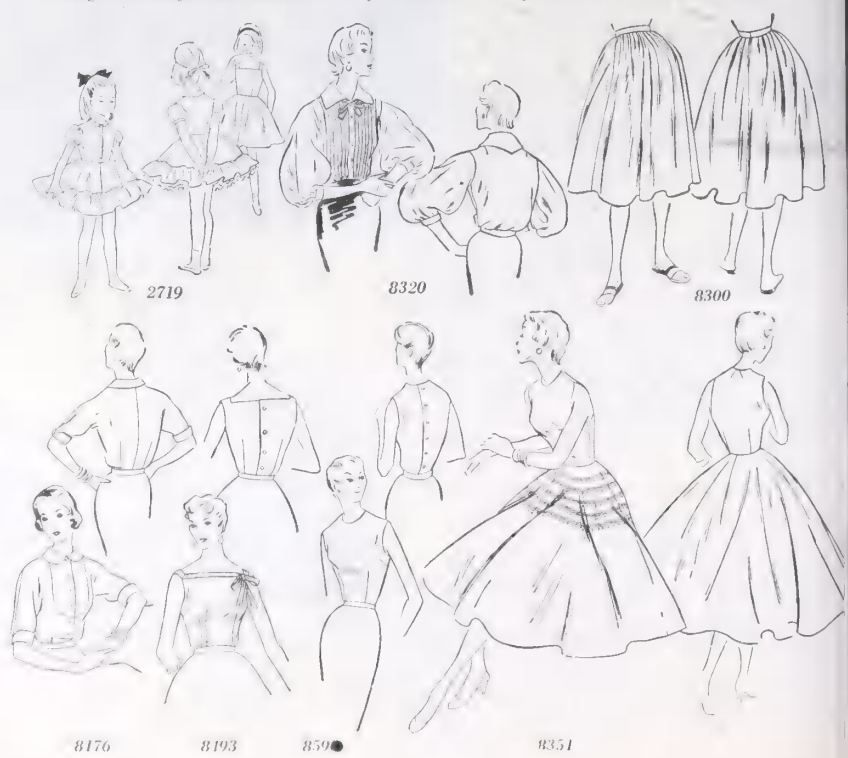
Trix, diving through the leaves, gave den cry of pain and rushed over to her m with a bright drop of blood on her knee.

The nurse wonde perhaps the princes going to suggest goin the palace for some fectant. But Juliana's words proved that her had been far removed the incident.

"Zussie," she cont as Trix ran happily ba her game, a clean handkerchief bound her knee, "I think yo understand what will pen if our country is run. We must seek refuge in another land.

The nurse accepted the stunning ne silence. "War refugees" were those pitifu cowed creatures clogging up the railwa tions and ship piers at Rotterdam, w hour after hour clutching their rucksack battered suitcases and piles of blankets finally they disappeared into the dark ho ships headed for America or Austral Canada. The princesses of the proud Ho Orange refugees? Torn from their be surroundings and adoring subjects and dled off to some strange wilderness? I unbelievable.

"Where would you go?" she asked.



"It all depends, but probably abroad can't stay in Europe," the princess answ "Tell me, Zussie, would you be willing with us?"

The nurse felt no hesitation, only a relief. "Of course I will."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 195

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTER ON PAGE 176

Vogue Design No. 2719. One-piece dress and pinafore, 4 to 12. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 8320. Blouse, 12 to 20. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8300. "Very Easy to Make" skirt and shorts; 24 to 30. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8176. "Easy to Make" blouse, 12 to 20. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8193. "Very Easy to Make" blouse and cummerbund, 10 to 18. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8590. "Easy to Make" blouses, 10 to 20. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8351. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress, 12 to 20. 75c.

URLINGTON'S SLIKALENE IN A SKIRT AND BLOUSE BY KORET OF CALIFORNIA

BUR-MIL Cameo SHAPE-2-U

SHEER NYLON STRETCH STOCKINGS

They look better and feel more comfortable than any stockings you've ever worn ew, Bur-Mil Cameo SHAPE-2-U stockings stretch from top-to-toe to fit you erfectly... to hug every part of your leg. No more wrinkles, no crooked ams! Long-wearing SHAPE-2-U are the most comfortable stockings you've er worn. And they're sheer—beautifully, breathlessly sheer.

ou'll love the flattering "Skin Tone" colors, the glamour of misty-dull "Face Powder Finish," too. Bur-Mil Cameo SHAPE-2-U in three personally proportioned sizes—one perfect for you. At the nicest stores. $1.95.

Also at your favorite stocking counter: Bur-Mil Cameo Regular Nylon Stockings in seamless and full-fashioned styles for every occasion. In exclusive complexion-right "Skin Tone" colors and soft, dull, permanent "Face Powder Finish"... $1.15 to $1.65.

IN CANADA: BURLINGTON MILLS CORP. OF CANADA, LTD. • "BUR-MIL"® "CAMEO"® "FACE POWDER"® "SKIN TONES" "SHAPE-2-U" AND "SLIKALENE" ARE TRADEMARKS OF THE BURLINGTON MILLS CORPORATION
COPYRIGHT 1955 BURLINGTON MILLS CORP. • PATENT APPLICATIONS FOR THIS PRODUCT AND ITS METHODS OF MANUFACTURE HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE U.S. PATENT OFFICE AND THE PATENT OFFICES OF THE PRINCIPAL FOREIGN COUNTRIES

DOLE HAWAIIAN HOUSE PARTY

Look for the big DOLE Hawaiian House Party Sale! At your grocer's now! Luscious DOLE Pineapple adds taste appeal to every meal — makes ordinary dishes look pretty as a party. And it goes with everything! Your choice of many can sizes, many styles. Slices, tidbits, chunks, crushed, spears, juice, fresh-frozen chunks and juice. And fruit cocktail, too. All ready to serve. And all extra-delicious because all DOLE Pineapple is Hawaiian — brighter, tenderer, tastier. Enjoy DOLE Pineapple today.

serve DOLE each day a different way!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 192

For the first time some of the worry left the princess' blue-gray eyes. But, "Zussie, you must consider," she admonished the nurse. "You must think what you are doing. Staying with the girls might put you in a position of great danger. You might even be captured."

The nurse had a sudden mental picture of a Gestapo torture chamber. She considered this uncomfortably for a moment. But she knew her conscience gave her no choice.

"It will be hard enough on Trix and Irene to be in perfectly strange surroundings without some familiar faces around them," she told the princess.

Juliana put both arms about Zussie and hugged her hard. "Let's hope it will never be necessary. In the meantime, don't breathe a word of this conversation to anyone, including your father and mother."

Shortly after this talk, Zussie began making little piles of the children's clothing on top of bureaus so that she could pack them quickly in case of emergency. Whenever she returned to Soestdijk Palace after a free day, she would find the piles of clothing gone. The elderly chambermaid Cornelia had neatly put each piece back in its proper drawer. Zussie could never explain to the disapproving servant the reason for the piles. She could just painstakingly lay them all out again. The next time she had some free time the clothing would again have disappeared.

The treasurer of Soestdijk at this time was a broad-shouldered young man with dark hair and a wide, infectious grin, the young Jonkheer William Roell. He was a former aide-de-camp and close friend of the prince, and his wife Martine was an intimate friend of Juliana's. The Roells had a young daughter named Renée, as dark in coloring as Trix was blond. The two baby girls were inseparable companions.

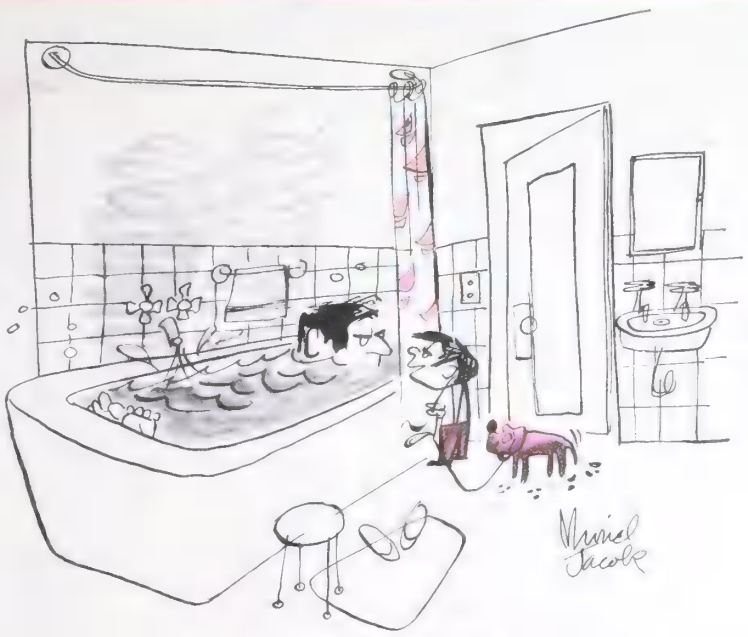
One day while Martine Roell and Juliana and Zussie were sitting out in the gardens with the children, Zussie heard the two other women discussing whether Mme. Roell and Renée should accompany the royal family out of the country if invasion made the flight necessary. Martine was torn between staying with her husband, who being a reserve officer had announced he would not leave, or taking her only child to a safe place. Her husband kept urging her to accept Juliana's invitation, she said. Juliana told her that the decision was up to her and that she would not try to influence her in any way. That afternoon Martine decided to go with the royal family. Then, like Zussie, she was sworn to complete secrecy.

In the winter months of the Sitzkrieg, or Sitting War, as it was called, it became necessary for the royal couple to spend large portions of time at The Hague, where Parliament met, in order to keep in closest possible touch with Queen Wilhelmina and her ministers. They finally decided to move the whole family down to Noordeinde Palace. Once more they moved into the cold suite of rooms on the first floor which had been Juliana's as a child.

The princesses were accustomed to spending out-of-doors two hours in the morning and another two in the afternoon. In this way they became accustomed to Holland's harsh climate and seldom took cold. Their little cheeks glowed with constant color. At Noordeinde, however, there was absolutely nothing for them to do except walk round and round the garden paths. In the wintertime, even the small sand pile which Queen Wilhelmina installed near the rear of the garden wall helped little.

One thing distracted them for a time. An air-raid shelter was being constructed under some trees in one corner of the rose garden. Made of thick reinforced concrete, it had a high peaked roof, razor thin at the top, which was supposed to make any bomb except a direct hit glance off. Trix rode her tricycle all around it and plied the workmen with questions, but no one would tell her what the queer little house was for.

Bernhard told the nurse that such shelters were being constructed in great numbers underground in England. But of course since Holland lay below sea level, all underground shelters would require water pumps. Most Dutchmen considered these too expensive to install and too wasteful of electricity. So aside from a few shelters dug into the sand dunes along the North Sea, not many underground shelters were built—and in fact, few of any kind.



As spring approached, and the sun dried the spring rains and melted the snow from the mountain passes of Europe, everyone speculated where Hitler would strike next. The answer came in April with the invasion of Norway.

Almost immediately, gas masks were distributed to the palace staff. Zussie recoiled in horror at first sight of the grimacing things. She tried one quickly on Trix and then let her look at herself in the mirror, making a joke of it. Since Irene was too small to wear a mask, a special gastight portable crib was designed for her. It looked like a puppy's basket.

At the same time Zussie was given a first-aid kit and a list of air-raid precautions called Wat te Doen (What to Do). She learned that she should stay away from windows if an air raid came, and to stay off the streets. Cover windows with heavy black paper and use blue lamp bulbs inside, the instructions said. Be orderly.

Sand buckets and spades with long handles began to appear in the corridors of Noordeinde, and water buckets. Scores of impassive-faced footmen began removing the more valuable pieces of furniture and oil paintings, which were carted off to some unknown destination in great lorries. Zussie heard that Rembrandt's famous Night Watch was removed from Amsterdam's Rijks-Museum and hidden in the bottom of a coal mine.

"Got room for a small, muddy dog?"

If it weren't for brand names

You'd have to be a home economist to choose the food you want

You do 70% of your grocery shopping "sight unseen." The products you buy are in packages, with only the label outside to guide you.

How is it that you don't have to look inside each package? What makes you so sure you're getting the quality and flavor you pay for? In fact, what makes you sure about anything you buy?

Isn't the answer simply that you've learned the basic rule of safe and sound buying:

A good brand is your best guarantee

No matter what you want to buy, you know manufacturers stand back of good brands because they have so much at stake. You know you can depend on a good brand. And so, when you pick one you know you're right.

The more good brands you know, the surer you are. Get to know them in the pages of this magazine. They can help you cut down on buying mistakes, get more for your shopping money.

BRAND NAMES FOUNDATION
Incorporated
A Non-Profit Educational Foundation
37 West 57th St., New York 19, N. Y.

A GOOD BRAND IS YOUR BEST GUARANTEE

Tulip-Red Cranberry Ideas for Easter!

For Easter Turkey or Chicken . . .

Tulip-Red Cranberry Relish

Put through food chopper 1 orange (rind and pulp). Mix with 1 can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce, Jellied or Whole. Refrigerate to blend flavors. Delicious with turkey, chicken, or any meat.

Tulip-Red Cranberry Glaze for Easter Ham

Mix together: 2 cans Ocean Spray Jellied Cranberry Sauce
1 cup brown sugar

Spread half of this mixture over ham last half hour of baking to glaze it. Heat the rest to serve as a sauce with ham. Delicious!

Ready to Serve

Half the recipe is basted over ham during last 30 minutes of baking . . .

. . . and the rest is heated and served at the table as sauce over the baked ham. Delicious!

Ocean Spray QUALITY

This is the original canned cranberry sauce, packed by cranberry growers in their own canning plants since 1912. Always dependable . . . always finest quality. Carries Good Housekeeping and Parents' Magazine quality seals.

Each day more and more Dutch soldiers in their gray-green uniforms thronged the streets, and at night scores of planes patrolled the skies over The Hague. Princess Juliana's face became more and more strained until finally she announced that she intended to spend some weeks at Soestdijk.

The very next day the prince and princess, the children and Zussie, the gas masks and gastight crib were piled into one of the prince's sport cars. With the prince at the wheel they sped up the great highway toward Soestdijk, about an hour's drive away. Queen Wilhelmina promised to follow them in time for her daughter's birthday on April thirtieth.

Bernhard drove expertly and fast—too fast for his wife, who kept cautioning him to slow down. The wide cement highway seemed to undulate like the fluid earth beneath it as they sped along. The flat fields stretching as far as the eye could see were a patchwork of lush green, aquamarine, heliotrope and pink, with yellow buttercups along the edges of the sky-reflecting canals. Zussie could hear the frogs announcing the spring. Trix squealed with delight at the sight of so many cows and sheep and pigs on their unfenced pastures, separated from one another by a trelliswork of ditches.

IRENE slept in her basket as Trix chattered happily. Juliana's face began to lose some of its tenseness as she chatted with her husband in the front seat.

"What do you want for your birthday?" he asked her, smiling.

"To be back at Soestdijk for good, with everything calm and peaceful, as it was before!" the princess wished fervently.

Usually, on the princess' birthday, a national holiday was declared. Children stayed home from school and church bells tolled. Even in the remotest fishing villages the best Sunday clothes were brought out, the gold watch chains and starched white lace caps, the painted wooden shoes. Near Soestdijk the villagers picked great armfuls of tulips and daffodils and forsythia from their gardens and trooped over to the palace, where they were allowed to pass through the gates and lay their bouquets on the great front stone steps where the royal family waited to receive their congratulations. Juliana never left until the last well-wisher had straggled through the gates with his hand-picked bouquet.

This particular April thirtieth, however, Juliana, back in The Hague because of a new war scare, begged to have no special notice taken of her birthday. The blitzkrieg attack on Norway, Holland's close neighbor to the north, and Russia's war with Finland made any festivities in the Netherlands seem in bad taste.

On Juliana's thirty-first birthday, the family had a buffet luncheon outdoors on the back patio of Huis ten Bosch (House in the Woods), a royal summer residence near The Hague. The queen brought along a box camera and took many snapshots of the children as they played happily underfoot in the pale spring sunshine. She snapped Juliana in her cotton frock gazing apprehensively over her shoulder at the camera. Her face looked pale and Zussie thought it mirrored the unspoken fear of all of them—would this be one of the last times they would all be together?

A few days later, Queen Wilhelmina handed Zussie copies of all the snapshots she had taken.

"Thank you very much, Your Majesty," said Zussie. And then, as she leafed through them, "Does Your Majesty realize that you have given me two copies of each picture?"

The doughty queen looked at her with grave eyes. "One set is for your mother and father. They will be glad to have them."

With a swish of her long full skirts she walked on.

Zussie's heart swelled as she looked after that proud, strong back. By this simple kind gesture the Queen of the Netherlands had shown that she knew of Zussie's decision to stay with the royal family, and also that she felt Holland's crisis to be close at hand.

Next month: The war years in Canada, where Trix learns about chewing gum and American slang.

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! NEW LOW-CALORIE RECIPES AND MENU PLANS

Orange Whip
Raspberry Charlotte
Lemon Fluff
Slim-Trim Salad
Tuna Casserole
Beefburgers Deluxe
Puffy Bread Crumb Omelet

Want to lose weight the pleasant way? Follow my two easy rules. Limit your calories to 1400 a day (with your doctor's approval). Plan your diet around delicious Meadow Gold dairy foods. They give you important proteins, minerals and vitamins your body requires. And a controlled amount of butter fat to satisfy your appetite and protect your vitality. My current free offer includes 7 tempting low-calorie recipes —like the delectable Orange Whip below— plus suggested menus (with calorie counts) for 21 meals. Why not send for yours today?

Recipe for Orange Whip

3 Meadow Gold Egg Yolks
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1½ cups Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk
1½ tablespoons unflavored gelatine
1 6-ounce can frozen concentrated orange juice, undiluted and thawed
3 Meadow Gold Egg Whites, stiffly beaten

Beat egg yolks until thick and lemon colored; beat in sugar and salt. Stir in 1 cup milk. Cook over boiling water until the custard mixture coats a spoon. Soften gelatine in remaining ½ cup milk; dissolve in hot custard mixture. Cool. Add orange juice. Fold custard into beaten egg whites. Pour into either a 1½-quart mold or individual molds. Chill until firm. Unmold and garnish with fresh orange slices. Makes 8 servings.

CALORIES: 165 a serving.

HOW TO SEND IN
Recipes and menus printed on 3 x 5" file cards. Write to: Beatrice Foods Co., Dept. LHJ-45, 120 South LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois.

© 1955, BEATRICE FOODS CO.

After School Smorgasbord

By BETTY GILLARD

ERNEST E. RESHOVSKY

How do you get Junior and Jane to fall for all this vitamin-and-mineral routine of the smörgåsbord and drink bar? Just applied psychology!

Here's a happy, easy way to get down the often-struggled-over salads and vegetables, and to make the children love it!

WHEN the front door is hit with a shattering force and the door pops open like a cork from a bottle of champagne, it's not an earthquake or an atomic explosion; it happens every weekday at 3:10. The boys are home from school.

This is the hour when that great void below their esophagi becomes acute. I'm ready for them. They'll eat anything at this point, proximity being the only problem.

Ready on a big chop plate are carrot and celery sticks, still crisply wet from their bath in ice cubes, apples cored and quartered, a few of dates and prunes, little nosegays of colorful parsley, strips of cheese. Grapes, peaches or pears in season, dried fruit at other times. I often add whole-wheat toast sticks to these repasts. Just cutting the bread into strips and oven toasting make it more inviting. I try to avoid sweets, as they kill the appetite for essentials that come at mealtime.

How long have I slaved over this delectable and nutritious repast? Less than five minutes before the onslaught of the homecoming.

Here's a happy, easy way to get down the often-struggled-over salads and vegetables. Now, when dinner is served, the younger children enjoy their meat and potatoes without the accompaniment of that constantly repeated "Eat your salad, too, dear," or "No more baked potato till all the spinach is gone."

There's actually more thought behind that than aesthetics or peace-at-the-table motivation. There's good sound scientific reasoning and facts. Did you know a sprig of parsley is rich in vitamin A, that a carrot strip contributes a supply of vitamin B_2 (riboflavin) besides the A that it's famous for, and an apple can supply a valuable load of several minerals and vitamins? Further than that, apples, raw carrots and other foods that require considerable chewing help develop the strong bony structure of the jaw and promote healthy gums, my dentist said. He had observed in his practice that there are many less irregular teeth and narrow thin dental arches among children who were vigorous chewers.

If the day is hot, and as often as I can get by with it if the day isn't, I set up a fancy-drink bar. My crowd will drink most anything if there are enough straws to supply interest. I shake up an egg in orange juice (I have a flexible plastic shaker that's a snap to use; a Mason jar will do as well), add ice cubes and fortify my brood with an impressive plus of protein, fat, calcium, phosphorus, iron, vitamin B_2, vitamin C and vitamin D. Is your head whirling at all this? It's true, nonetheless.

And here's a cooler that beats the frozen colored-sugar-water sticks by thousands of units, grams and micrograms of nutrition. Pour equal parts of orange juice, pineapple juice and water into your freezing tray and put in the cube divider. When frozen, hand them out by the dozen—securely anchored in paper napkins—and reap the approval in the eyes of your own and your neighbors' children.

Keep your ideas young, your aim in mind, and sit back and listen to the children's confidences while you treat yourself at their smorgåsbord. END

What makes 'em PERFECT _in a hurry?

More new-sized cubes from the

INLAND "Magic Touch" ICE CUBE TRAY

JUST FLIP the "Magic Touch" lever on this colorful Inland Tray and you have three full rows of sparkling ice cubes—in the new, faster-cooling size . . . designed to fit any glass. For the latest in ice cube convenience with your present refrigerator, replace those old, worn out trays with smart, new Inland "Magic Touch" Ice Cube Trays. They come in 4 gay colors, bronze, natural aluminum, gold and blue—one just right for you . . . at your dealer's.

INLAND MANUFACTURING

Be sure your new refrigerator is equipped with Inland "Magic Touch" Ice Cube Trays. Ask your dealer for them.

INLAND MANUFACTURING DIVISION
General Motors Corporation • Dayton, Ohio

MEMORIES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 79

a Greenwich friend of his, asked him what train he took and Russell said, "I usually miss the ten-thirty-seven."

Lionel and Doris came back from Paris that summer and stayed with us at Greenwich for a while. It was great to be with Lionel, one of the very few times that it happened after we were small children. He seemed to know about everything in the world, just like Uncle Jack.

In the fall we moved into New York where I took the August Belmont, Jr., house on 34th Street. One Sunday morning Russell and I had arranged to go to Garden City to spend the day with Peter and Margaret Dunne. Russell was going to play golf with Benjie Guinness and Peter, and I was to sit on the porch and rock with Margaret Dunne till the men came back to lunch. But just before I got up to dress, the nurse Aunt Dodo had found for me stopped in. She asked me what I was going to do that morning, and I said I was going down to Garden City.

"How do you feel?" she asked.

"I feel all right now, but in the night I had a sort of pain and took some Jamaica ginger."

"Jamaica ginger?" she said. "I don't think you'd better go. I am going to call Doctor Danforth."

She did and he came down. He said, "You're not going to Garden City today. You're going to have your baby today."

I said, "I can't. I can't have him till January."

But Sammy was born that night, November twenty-eighth, an eight-month baby. He weighed only 3½ pounds. Doctors take seven-month babies in their stride, but for some reason eight-month babies are alarming.

Doctor Danforth didn't believe in incub tors so we had an electric pad under the ma tress of Sammy's crib. Mrs. Frings, the nur stayed with me for a year and it was probab she more than anybody else who saved Sa my's life. From the moment of his arrival, s took me and the household in hand and ma aged us with a rod of iron.

It was her idea that a photograph should taken of the baby and me immediately, so photographer was summoned and I w propped up in bed with pillows, a lace cap p on my head and I, I suppose, registered mat nity under the stern orders of Mrs. Frings, a the small son was placed in my arms. Th picture went all over the world; I received co ies of it from China, Japan and India.

My father-in-law asked if I would name t baby after his Uncle Samuel, the inventor the Colt revolver, because nobody had y been named after him. (Colonel Colt w named Samuel Pomeroy Colt, but he was ways called Pomeroy.) I said I would be d lighted, and two months later there was a wo derful baptism in the cathedral. The two go fathers were Peter Dunne and Jack Barrymo and when during the ceremony the priest to them to say the Apostles' Creed, Jack beg confidently, "I believe in God, the Father A mighty, Creator of heaven and earth," a then he said, "That lets me out."

Peter Dunne knew it all, of course. He h three brothers who were priests. His face g purple trying not to laugh at Jack.

They all came back to the house, where left them celebrating and went to play "Mid-Channel" in which I had been reheat ing three weeks after Sammy's birth.

"Mid-Channel," a problem play by Arth Pinero, was a distinct departure from the pla I had been doing. It has always been one my favorites.

I had a telephone put into my dressing roo at the Empire Theatre because I was alwa wanting to call up and find out about Samm and of course I wanted his nurse to be able reach me. It was the first time, to my know edge, that a telephone had been put into dressing room, and certainly the first time f such a reason.

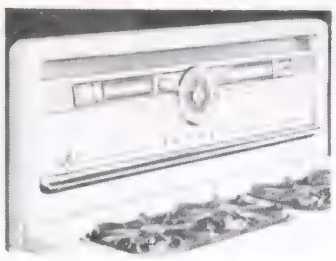
We went on living in the Belmont house, b I told Colonel Colt that I thought it would good for everybody if we could live in t country. Colonel Colt had recovered quick from the idea that he was bankrupt. He sai "You find a place and I'll give it to you."

So, all that summer, after I finished my to in "Mid-Channel," we looked at houses Long Island, in Westchester, everywhere, a at last we found the house in Mamarone that is still ours. I remember the first time went into it I said, "What a lovely hall for little boy to throw his cap in."

RUSSELL didn't like it. He thought I was cra to want it, and there was plenty of reason f him to think so. The house was painted red- barn red—with black shutters, and Russ couldn't see it, as I did, white, with gre shutters. It was dark inside, too, and althou all the other fireplaces (and there was one every room, even on the third floor) had whi marble mantelpieces, beautifully plain, t mantelpiece in the library was a horror wooden curlicues, with green silk backi them. I drew a perfectly plain Adamy one, a a local carpenter, Mr. Morton, made it, and made—and still makes—the room.

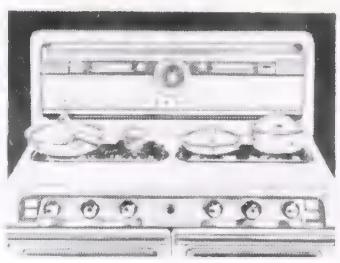
After Colonel Colt went to look the pla over he said I could have a desk in a real-esta office if I wanted one, because I had picked o a really marvelous piece of property.

The place is on Taylor's Lane, which w named after old Mr. Taylor, who built the b house for himself and the other houses alo the lane for his children. It is twenty-one mil away from New York and might just as w be a million miles away from it. There are ni or ten acres of land, and the young apple tre in the orchard that I planted are great tre now. My daughter Ethel and my son Jack were born there, and Ethel lives there no My chauffeur, David Britt, who came to m when he was nineteen and has been with m for forty years, looks after the place. Carve on a cornerstone of an old building in the v lage is the inscription "Britt 1682." That w when his family came from England to M



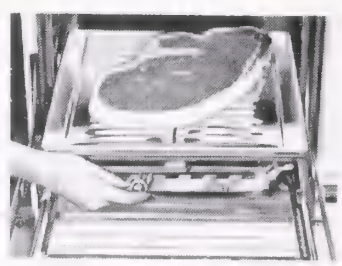
For you who want every modern feature in one magnificent gas range... the dramatic new

TAPPAN GREENBRIER



Marking Tappan's Diamond Jubilee

If you want the best and most automatic cooking a range has ever given . . . if you want convenience unapproached by any other range . . . then you are the woman TAPPAN had in mind when the new Greenbrier was designed. And for the deep pride of ownership that comes from having the finest range money can buy, nothing but the TAPPAN Greenbrier will do for you. The Tappan Stove Company, Dep't L-45, Mansfield, Ohio. Also—Canadian Tappan Stove, Ltd., Montreal.



Cooking Helps—All in One Panel

A handsome raised backguard protects the wall, has a full-width fluorescent light that floods the whole range top, provides every other device to make your cooking automatic and convenient.

4-in-Line Burners . . . New!

Directly illuminated, placed to give room for large utensils safely out of children's reach. And you never need reach over a lighted burner. Full width working space up front where it's most convenient.

Custom-broiling . . . As You Like It

Tappan's new high broiler adjusts in height, without removing the rack, to give exact broiling results. Char-Krome radiants intensify heat penetration, seal in meat juices. Smokeless—easy to clean.

Big, Automatic, Feature-Full Oven

Mouth watering meals every time because the beautiful chrome lining reflects heat evenly throughout the oven. Interior light, glass window let you easily see in without opening the oven door.

aroneck. Britt has four grandchildren now. He has been of inestimable service to me and am ever grateful for his faithfulness.

In January I played a short engagement in Trelawney of the Wells" and followed it with Barrie's one-act play, "The Twelve Pound Look," preceded by a revival of "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire."

Although I loved "The Twelve Pound Look" nd it was a great success, I had no idea that it as to serve as a lifesaver for the next twenty-ve years.

Jack was with me in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire." He had recently married Katherine Torri Harris, a lovely young girl, who was al-ays my favorite sister-in-law. She had just ome home from France, where she had been n school, and at the first dance she went to she et Jack, and that was the end of her as Katherine Harris. I was at their wedding in the Church of St. Francis Xavier, and I remember ow beautifully radiant they both looked with he sun shining on them through a stained-lass window. They came to live with us for a hile at Mamaroneck and then took an apart-ent in Gramercy Square.

We spent that summer at Mamaroneck, a arvelous summer for me with my year-and-a-alf-old son.

Colonel Colt made us an unbirthday present f a De Dion-Bouton car, with a hood that tretched out half a block in front of me as Britt taught me to drive on the country roads. t was a terrific car, but I was always panicky or fear children would run out in front of it.

In the fall I began rehearsing in "The Wit-ess for the Defense" in which, before opening n New York, I went on tour. Mr. Frohman rranged this so that I might open in New York n the Empire, in which invariably Uncle Jack pened on Labor Day, to be followed after ight or ten weeks by Maude Adams, and she n turn to be followed by me, as the third of Mr. Frohman's stars.

When we went on tour Sister was on the way and in South Bend I very nearly lost her. The doctor whom the hotel called for me was stonished to find that I wanted to keep my hild. He seemed to think that because I was n actress I wouldn't want to. I was almost ngry enough to kill him, but I didn't lose my emper or my baby. I came back to New York nd opened at the Empire in "The Witness for he Defense" and then played in a revival of 'Cousin Kate," followed by "A Slice of Life," y Barrie.

THIS was a sort of burlesque of domestic drama and Jack came back to me for this play. It was funny, and the audience loved it. We played it for four weeks at the Empire Theatre. At the end of March we stopped and went to Mamaroneck to wait for Sister.

I was at the stage of just sitting on the porch, not moving around much, when suddenly our English butler, a very good one, came out of the dining room, stood in front of me and fixed his eyes on me. I thought he was going to tell me that dinner was served but instead he said:

"Madam, do you know Lillian Russell?"

I said, "Yes, I do."

He said, "She must be a very beautiful woman."

I was frightened to death of him. I saw that he was staring at me, not really seeing me, I thought.

"Yes," I said. "She is, and I think I'll go in now."

We had to let him go. Afterward we had a man who had been Winston Churchill's butler. I remembered seeing him when Winston had a small house in Half Moon Street and I dined there. But one night when dinner seemed to be awfully late, I opened the dining-room door and found that nothing had been started. Russell went up to the man's room and found him lying on his bed fully dressed and fully drunk with "Tatlers" and "Sketches" scattered all over him.

That was the end of male servants in the house.

Sister was born on April thirtieth, much to the indignation of Mary, my dresser, who wanted her to be a May baby.

It was Doctor Danforth who named Sister. I was still unconscious when the reporters called and the doctor answered the telephone. He said, "It's a little girl."

They said, "What are they going to name her?"

And he said, "Ethel, of course."

I was horrified when I heard about it, but I couldn't bear to hurt Doctor Danforth's feelings.

I didn't like any of the plays that Mr. Frohman gave me to read that summer and at last I went to him and suggested that I play "The Twelve Pound Look" in vaudeville. He threw up his hands in horror.

I said, "Why not? Irene Vanbrugh, who originally played the part in London, is playing it in the halls there. Bernhardt has played in vaudeville. Why all this snobbishness?"

He had no suitable play for me and I, as usual, had no suitable income so he finally agreed to let me play it on the Orpheum Circuit because that was out West. He sent for Charlie Dillingham and said, "Ethel thinks she wants to play 'The Twelve Pound Look' in vaudeville. Take her to see Martin Beck."

So Charlie Dillingham took me to see Martin Beck, who wrote something on a little piece of paper and handed it to me. He said, "Would this be all right?"

I said, "Fine."

The paper read $3000 a week. It was a very exciting envelope to open every Saturday. I wonder where it has all gone.

I played the Orpheum Circuit all over the West. Then I wrote to Mr. Frohman and asked why I couldn't play all over the East, and I did for a whole year.

In "The Twelve Pound Look" I twice broke the Palace Theatre record. Monday-afternoon openings at the Palace were really spectacular. Dana Gibson was only one of the many, many famous people who never failed to be there.

It was demanding but very rewarding. I learned so much watching the other artists. I found out that you have to be awfully good in vaudeville. It is a real taskmaster because there are so many acts in it, like slack-wire artists, for instance, that require absolute per-

The Best Cooks way to QUICK MEALS

2 QUICK-TO-MAKE DISHES made more delicious with

Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

Van Camp's Pork and Beans . . .
with secret, savory tomato sauce
. . . and spare-ribs

Stokely-Van Camp

Van Camp's Pork and Beans . . .
ready to heat . . . eat . . . enjoy
. . . with grilled Canadian bacon

VAN CAMP'S • THE LARGEST SELLING BEANS IN ALL THE WORLD

33⅓% ARE WISER NOW!

One person in every three* who bought some other sheets besides Pequot says next time she'll buy Pequot.

Trial and error keeps making luxurious, long-wearing Pequot sheets and pillowcases ever more popular—the nation sleeps on Pequot Sheets.

*No other brand of sheets and pillowcases equals this record of increased preference.

PEQUOT MILLS

"All About Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic With Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets for every woman. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to Dept. L-B — Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

"The Nation Sleeps on PEQUOT SHEETS"

FISHER PRICE'S TOY HEN

"Cluck, Cluck, Cluck, SQUA-AWK" it's "Katy Kackler"...the Little Red Hen!

The amazingly realistic sound, bright colors, flapping wings and moving feet make this safe wood pull toy a source of never-ending joy to its little owner! Stirs the imagination . . . Stimulates interest in farm life. Aids in sound recognition . . . for ages 1–5. $2.50 East, $2.69 South and West . . . AT ALL TOY COUNTERS or direct . . . Send for folder #44 of 23 push-pull toys for healthful active play.

FISHER-PRICE TOYS, INC., East Aurora, Erie County, N.Y.

OSTERMOOR

America's Quality Mattress since 1853

The "Ultra" in mattress quality... built for quality sleep

Over a hundred years of quality have attained for Ostermoor mattresses a degree of perfection unmatched by any other. In 1955, as in 1853, you sleep best on the best!

Write for Ostermoor's free booklet that explains nine big reasons why Ostermoor is the leader in comfort, durability, and quality.

OSTERMOOR & COMPANY, Inc. • Chicago 16, Ill. • Bridgeport 4, Conn.

IT COSTS NO MORE FOR AN OSTERMOOR

fection. I loved everybody I met—all the people on the bill with me—and I was never tired of standing in the wings watching the different "turns."

Once when Lionel was playing in vaudeville, he was in the wings to watch Bert Williams's technique, as he did at every performance. One of the stage hands said, "Like him, huh?"

Lionel said, "Yes. He's terrific."

And the stage hand said, just as Williams came off stage and passed him, "Yeah, he's a good nigger, knows his place."

And Williams mumbled, "Yes. A good nigger. Knows his place. Going there now. Dressing Room One!"

After those two years any time I didn't have a play that I could bear to do I went back to vaudeville with "The Twelve Pound Look," and every time it was good for me. Those exacting audiences loved the play, and I played it for years and years.

When I was playing "The Twelve Pound Look" at Keith's in Washington, I came back to the hotel at ten o'clock and found that the door of my sitting room was unlocked. Just as I opened it, I heard a cry from Mary, my dresser, who had gone in through the bedroom door. My big trunk was open and its contents scattered all over the room. On the floor, empty, was the box in which I had kept my jewelry—two rings of my mother's, the only things I had of hers, and the lovely diamond watch, pearl bracelet, and big diamond pin and other things that Colonel Colt had given me. The robbery must have been done by someone who had a key to the room and knew that I kept the jewelry box in the bottom of my trunk.

The hotel people were awfully rude, practically suggesting that it was just one of those publicity schemes, and I was very angry with them. I called up Nick Longworth, who was then representative from Ohio, and as soon as he came over the hotel people were apologetic, and I disliked them more than ever.

The jewels were never recovered. They were about the only ones I ever had and I was very depressed about losing them.

Colonel Colt was always generous and kind to me and to the children. When Sammy was a year old, the colonel gave him a toy fort with soldiers from every regiment in the world in it, and of course all that Sammy could do with it at that age was to kick it to pieces. Later the colonel gave him a cart with two live goats to pull it, so well trained that Sammy could drive it himself with a nurse hovering nearby.

Ida, my Swedish nurse, came to us when Sister was about a year old. She was a superb baby nurse. She paid very little attention to Sammy, but she adored Sister until Jackie was born, when Sister ceased to exist for her.

WHEN Sister was about two, she was being treated for what was thought to be croup, but Ida didn't like the sound of her breathing and I didn't either. So I tried to get Dr. Emmett Holt, the great baby specialist. He couldn't come but promised to send his assistant, Doctor Bartlett, who, he said, was better than he was. So Doctor Bartlett came and in a matter of seconds he had diagnosed the case as diphtheria, the baby was wrapped up, and we were on our way in the car to Minton Hospital, the only place in New York that would take contagious diseases. It was a private wing of the Willard Parker Hospital, and, thank God, Doctor Bartlett knew about it.

I stayed in the room next to Sister's. Both of us were getting many units of antitoxin. It was a miracle that Sister didn't die. Once when I was standing beside her bed with Doctor Bartlett and Doctor Danforth, I saw them look at each other and thought they were going to tell me that this was it. Suddenly Sister opened her eyes, looked up and said, "Hello, mummie." And there was the miracle.

THAT was in July and in September Jackie was born. I remember calling Mr. Frohman on the telephone about two hours afterward and telling him that I would be ready for rehearsals very soon and that I had an awfully nice little boy.

He exclaimed, "It is impossible for you to be talking!"

"No," I said, "I am quite all right and will be ready soon." That was all I was allowed to say to him but I remember it gave me great amusement to do it.

So, ten days after Jackie came into the world, I was on the Empire stage rehearsing in "Tante," a play Haddon Chambers had written from the book by Anne Sedgwick.

CULVER SERVICE

"When I played in A Scrap of Paper with Uncle Jack [John Drew] he insisted that I take the No. 1 dressing room—his by right. I protested, and he said, 'Nonsense, it's where you belong.'"

The furnished house in 61st Street that I had rented for three years so as to have the children with me when I was playing in New York was no longer big enough. It had been all right for two children, but there wasn't room enough in it for three, and I took rooms for Sammy and his mademoiselle in the Netherlands, just around the corner, near enough to let me have all three children with me almost as much as if we all had been under one roof.

I always spent every possible minute with them, but I also always had the most perfectly competent nurses, because I never did presume to know all about children and I wanted everything to be right for mine. They were simply heaven, the most important thing in my life. They are the reason why I know it was written that I was to marry Russell Colt and nobody else. If anybody else had been their father, they wouldn't have been the same children; they couldn't possibly have been nicer children, or as nice.

They were so completely different from each other I always felt, as they grew up, that I might have picked them up from different orphan asylums—but believe me I didn't!

More and more as things began to go wrong, or not so well, with my marriage, they were my happiness. And more and more, as things kept on going not so well, there was blessed sanctuary, every night, in those two and a half hours in the theater.

When people ask me if it is possible to combine marriage with a career I have always replied, "I was born and so, I've always understood, was my mother." We all had careers and marriage and children. My own career, instead of interfering with my marriage, helped to make it possible and helped me to keep on trying, as long and determinedly as I did, to save it. I had waited so long to be sure it was the right one that I couldn't let it fail. I wanted desperately to save it, and for a long time, largely because of that career of mine, I did save it.

There are plenty of happy memories of those years to set off against the unhappy ones. The memory, for instance, of winter nights when the children slept on the open sleeping porch at Mamaroneck, and I would come home from the theater and go out to see them, and CUTS SOLIDLY FROZEN FOOD in Seconds!

CASE FREEZ-Cut New!

PAT. NO. 2685131

LETS YOU SELECT THE EXACT AMOUNT NEEDED —without Thawing!

In just seconds, the Case Freez-Cut cuts through any solidly frozen food—including rib bones. It eliminates waste because it lets you select the exact amount of frozen meat, vegetable or fruit needed for your next meal without thawing. You don't even have to remove the wrapper. The Freez-Cut cuts cleanly through the paper package. "Gullets" in the 10" blade collect food particles.

NEVER REQUIRES RE-SHARPENING

CASE FREEZ-Cut

AT LEADING HARDWARE AND DEPARTMENT STORES $3.95

W. R. CASE & SONS CUTLERY CO.
Bradford, Penna.

Flocked-lined for hand comfort . . . curved fingers . . . no clammy feel . . . Long Wearing Velva-Tex has got you covered!

Protect your hands from every household chore with these QUALITY gloves at a pin-money price.

At your drugstore.

Velva-Tex COMMENDED BY PARENTS

The Faultless Rubber Co. • Ashland, Ohio

Genuine "SIFT-CHINE" With Triple Screen

The Standard of Flour Sifter Perfection For More Than a Quarter of a Century

Insist upon a GENUINE "SIFT-CHINE" for guaranteed satisfaction

"SIFT-CHINE" is the truly sensational SIFT-ing maCHINE which foremost cooking authorities have used and so highly recommended for years. One hand holds and operates. "Just squeeze the handle"—stir as you sift. A "must" for better baking. No more scattered flour. No more lumpy cakes or biscuits. Super quality—designed and built for years of service. Highly polished finish with two encircling bands of yellow, red or green. TRIPLE screen, one operation sifts flour 3 times, $1.65. DOUBLE screen, sifts twice, $1.35. SINGLE screen, sifts once, $1.10. At representative retailers throughout the United States and Canada. MEETS-A-NEED MFG. CO., Seattle 4, Washington.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR SPOTLESS Baggies

their cheeks would be like red apples from the cold, but when I put my hand down under the covers they were warm as toast.

. . . And the memory of the time I read Sammy the Mother Goose rhyme:

Little Miss Muffett sat on a tuffet
Eating of curds and whey;
There came a great spider and sat down beside her
And frightened Miss Muffett away.

and Sammy, thinking for a minute, and then saying, "Where was her mother?"—an observation that to my knowledge no other child ever made.

. . . And I remember the sign at the end of our lane that said, "Taylor's Lane. Go slow." And Ida, the big Swedish nurse, always reading it aloud as she drove by, and Sammy and Sister saying it with her—and the great day when we were driving past it and Jackie, who so far in his two years of life had alarmingly never uttered, suddenly said, with a strong Swedish accent, "Taylor's Lane. Go slow." And how delighted we all were!

. . . And the club at Manursing Island and Sister as a little girl winning all the cups for diving—and winning them again as a young lady.

. . . And the time I called for my children at a party given by Dorothy Caruso for her brother's children and some of their little friends. I was early, and the children were still sitting around the table with their paper caps on, eating ice cream. Dorothy murmured, "Go in the next room. Enrico is in there."

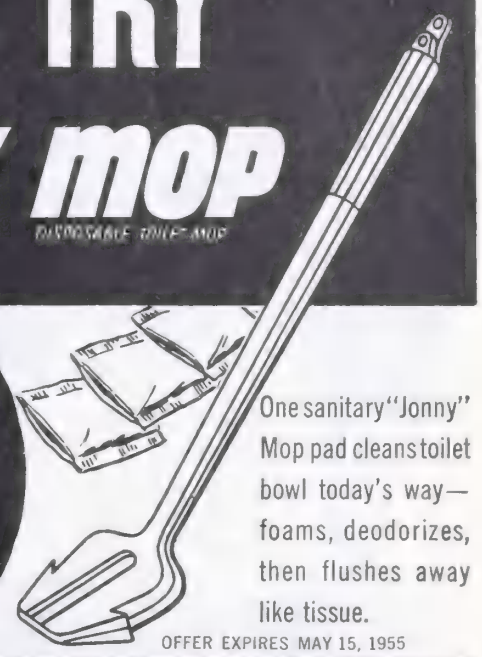
So I went in. Caruso was walking up and down with the baby, Gloria, in his arms, humming her to sleep. It was a high moment.

. . . And the time I yielded to Sammy's and Sister's beseechings and had Britt drive us to Coney Island. And what a long walk it was to Luna Park from where we left the car, with Ida carrying Jackie, and me leading Sammy and Sister by the hand. And how every few steps we'd pass a hot-dog stand. I had known that we would and that as always the smell of hot dogs would make me deathly sick, but I felt I must do my duty by my children and had brought along three handkerchiefs saturated with Atkinson's White Rose and breathed through them. (Atkinson's White Rose was the only perfume I ever loved. I used to get it from London, but during the Second World War they stopped making it and afterward they were never able to get one of the vital ingredients.) I let the children ride on the merry-go-round but not on the roller coaster. At Rye there was a park with a roller coaster and I made Sammy and Jackie promise never to ride on it, but of course they did.

. . . And the Fourth of July visits to Colonel Colt's house at Bristol, Rhode Island—going up on the Fall River boat with the three children and two nurses and being met by two Rolls-Royces and by Wheeler, Colonel Colt's very English butler, who would be standing at the very edge of the dock, swaying slightly, so that I was always alarmed lest he fall between the boat and the dock. But though he always swayed, he never swayed too far and always maintained his impeccable dignity.

(Years later I went to dinner in Boston with Governor and Mrs. Fuller. One reason I was asked was that Augustus John was staying with them. He had stayed with them all summer in New Hampshire, painting the family, and he was finishing them up in Boston. I knew it was a teetotal house and I wondered how Augustus John, a convivial soul, was taking it. And when I rang the bell who do you think opened the door of the magnificent house on Beacon Street? Wheeler, still swaying. I knew then that Augustus John would be all right and he was. I sat next to him at dinner and he was feeling no pain whatever.)

Colonel Colt's house was lovely, with a wonderfully beautiful staircase. It was built by one of Russell's De Wolfe ancestors. There were always a host of De Wolfes at those Fourth of July celebrations and hosts of Colts and Senator Green, who is still flourishing, and all the Herreshoffs, the yacht builders, whose boats, especially those designed by the blind one, were never beaten. The children loved the parade, in which Colonel Colt drove



WE'LL PAY YOU 50¢ TO TRY* Jonny mop

TRADE MARK — PATENT APPLIED FOR

DISPOSABLE TOILET MOP

Pay 98¢ Now, get 50¢ back. Here's how...

Cut demonstration picture numbered "1" from back of "Jonny" Mop handle package. Mail with your name and address to Personal Products Corp., Dept. LH45, Milltown, N. J. We'll mail you 50¢.

One sanitary "Jonny" Mop pad cleans toilet bowl today's way—foams, deodorizes, then flushes away like tissue.

OFFER EXPIRES MAY 15, 1955

P.S. You'll throw away that germy, drippy toilet brush forever.*

PERSONAL PRODUCTS CORPORATION, MILLTOWN, N. J.

"WHERE'LL I GET THE CASH?"

HOW many times have you asked yourself that question when you are faced with household expenses that have to be met? We would like to suggest an answer that can mean increased income for you.

By selling magazine subscriptions, you can earn generous commissions. Many of our representatives earn more than $1.50 an hour in their spare time—and you can do the same! Just send us your name and address on a postal, and you will receive our offer and easy-to-follow instructions.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
889 Independence Square
Philadelphia 5 Pennsylvania

QUICK RELIEF for TIRED, SORE, ACHING MUSCLES

due to unusual exposure or over exercise . . . STANBACK reduces fever and relieves discomforts that accompany common colds.

Snap Back with

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Save up to 1/2 on RUGS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Your Choice of:

44 lovely, up-to-date, solid and two-tone colors, casual new texture blends and embossed effects, leaf and floral designs, colorful Early American and Oriental patterns,—regardless of colors in your old materials.

ANY SIZE up to 18 ft. seamless, any length—sizes you can't get elsewhere.

No-Risk, Trial Offer.
Monthly Payments

FREE TO EVERY READER

MAIL this coupon or a postcard for fascinating, new, money-saving Olson book . . 40 pages of Rugs and model rooms in actual colors. Tells how to get lovely, deep-textured, Reversible Broadloom Rugs at a big saving by sending your Old Rugs, Clothing to Olson Factory.

In Full Color

Your Name .....

Address ..... ©ORC

Town ..... State .....

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. T-53 Chicago 41, Ill.

in the big family coach, which was always brought out for the day, almost as imposing as the royal coach except for not being gilded.

Those were good years, when the children were little and I could have them with me nearly all the time. Russell had discovered bronchitis and decided to spend the winters at Palm Beach where, luckily, Horton and Company had an office, but he was at Mamaroneck much of the rest of the time, and I still hoped—and sometimes I believed—that I could save my marriage.

At the end of the season of the "Tante" year I played in the Players Club production of "A Scrap of Paper" with Uncle Jack at the Empire Theatre. This was always done for one week. It was charming to be playing with my uncle again after so long—and not carrying a tray. This is a good place, perhaps, for me to stop and talk about him.

Although I had seen him at Mummum's house and at North Long Branch in summer when I was very young, my first real memories of Uncle Jack begin when I came back from Canada and went to live with Mummum, who was staying in his apartment at the Sherman Square Hotel. But I didn't see very much of him there; he was either rehearsing or playing, and I was looking for a job. I took his charm, his urbanity, his sophistication as matters of course: he was Mummum's son, my mother's brother; what could he be but perfect? (I wasn't in awe of him, though. I was never in awe of anyone except Mummum, and that was devotion, rather than awe, the feeling that I couldn't have borne to disappoint her in any way.)

I didn't really begin to know Uncle Jack until I went on tour with him. His acting was so perfectly effortless that it didn't seem to be acting. Some people used to say, without realizing what a tribute they were paying him, that he only played himself, that "he didn't act but just behaved."

The perfection of his acting made it possib and easy for him to play jokes while he was o the stage without the audience suspecting th he was doing it.

He had a little humorous demon that alwa prompted him to try to "break up" the oth person on the stage with him. I remember h doing it to me in "Rosemary." When we ha spent the summer at North Long Branch t train had stopped at a little station called Lo Moor, and when I was on the stage with him i "Rosemary" he would keep saying, under h breath, as I talked, "The next station will b Low Moor. The next station will be Lo Moor," which of course meant that he wa amused by my voice, rising out of the depth

He finally managed to make me giggle and newspaper critic said I wasn't taking my wor seriously.

While I was on tour with him, he and A thur Byron often used to do such things t each other. One night on a one-night stan Uncle Jack's valet, Albert, whom we alway called Albert the Good, produced a dress shi that had come back from the laundry shiny bright as a mirror. Uncle Jack made a terribl row about it, but it was the only one there was and he had to wear it. Arthur Byron, as soo as they were on the stage, pretended to use th shirt as a mirror, twirling his mustache in fron of it, and adjusting his tie. And once whe Arthur had on a shiny shirt, Uncle Jack did th same thing to him.

They were so skillful that they could d such things to each other without the audienc knowing what was going on. The only perso from whom he never elicited even a smile wa Maude Adams.

One of my years with him was in a pla called "That Imprudent Young Couple" abou two Englishmen in a Middle East country, ir which Arthur was the villain. At the end of one scene Uncle Jack was supposed to say t Arthur, "You say there are 12,982 pounds ir the coffers. All I can find is 6000."

One night he said, instead, "You say there are 6892 pounds in the coffers. All I can find is 12,000." He said it with great authority and sternness. And there was absolutely nothing for Arthur to say in answer, and the curtain had to come down.

"Break up" stories aren't nearly as funny to anybody else as they are for actors on the stage. They must touch some special nervous cord that only actors know about. These jokes of Uncle Jack's seemed very, very funny to me then and they seem just as funny to me now.

Uncle Jack's house was in East Hampton, one of the most beautiful villages in America, with magnificent old trees and a village green the like of which isn't to be found anywhere else. Uncle Jack was greatly beloved there—they called him "The Squire." Everybody was always so delighted to see him when he went, every morning, to the post office, sometimes riding, sometimes driving a horse and cart, later driving a car. He loved to ride. There were stables and a big paddock behind his house.

ALMOST from the beginning of his long career he stood at the very top of his profession, as high in the affectionate regard of his fellow actors as in that of the people who knew him only as a person—the person—of the play. To all of these, all over the country, in large cities and little ones, his coming was always an event and his name on the billboards was of itself enough to make a success of any play.

He was always wonderfully considerate of others. When I played with him in "A Scrap of Paper" he insisted that I should take the No. 1 dressing room at the Empire. This had always been his as Mr. Frohman's leading star. In his absence Maude Adams and I had used it, but the idea of occupying it when he was in the play would never have entered my head. When I protested, he said, "Nonsense, it's where you belong."

I like to remember his last tour. It was an all-star production of "Trelawney of the Wells," and all the way across the country Uncle Jack, who was well past seventy, and Mrs. Whiffin, who was well over eighty, were the only two members of the company who never once made any complaint, although some of the younger stars made a great many.

Antibiotics in Your Daily Life

by William I. Fishbein, M.D.

The world hears a great deal of "miracle drugs" and most of them represent years of patient and diligent study in the laboratories and clinics.

For example, in 1931, Rene J. Dubos, then associated with the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research, discovered tyrothricin. Tyrothricin is one of the most powerful of the antibiotics—stated simply, it is effective because it aids the defenses of the body in combatting harmful bacteria. The general use of tyrothricin has been delayed until research has definitely shown that it would cause no harmful effects or reactions. In the forefront of this research have been the pharmaceutical companies, and no company has been more zealous than McKesson & Robbins.

Tyrothricin is effective in preventing perspiration odor by inhibiting the growth of skin bacteria responsible for this condition—and this "magic" antibiotic is equally effective in skin infections, in sinus infections, for wounds, abscesses and burns, and for hemorrhoids or piles. Research also indicated the amount which may be used without causing sensitivity reactions, yet produce the maximum benefits.

Laboratory and clinical research has enabled McKesson and Robbins to announce a series of preparations for the specific uses outlined above. It is to their credit that they have not introduced them until they were convinced that excellent results would be obtained and that there would be no reactions. Tyrothricin used externally is not absorbed into the blood stream as are certain other antibiotics.

That is one reason why it is particularly suited for direct application to a localized spot of irritation or inflammation on the skin, nose or throat. McKesson and Robbins have developed special products for use on these portions of the body.

Look for these McKesson Antibiotic Products at Your Drug Store

NEO-AQUA-DRIN LOZENGES—for the relief of minor throat irritations.

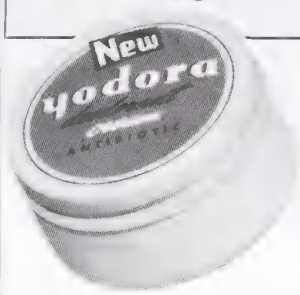
NEO-AQUA-DRIN NOSE DROPS—for the relief of congestion due to head colds, sinus, etc.

UTOL—for relief of pimples and minor burns and skin abrasions.

POSITOS—ointment and suppositories for the relief of discomfort due to hemorrhoids.

BORIC ACID OINTMENT
ICTHAMOL OINTMENT
AMMONIATED MERCURY OINTMENT
ZINC OXIDE OINTMENT

To Every Woman Who Has Suffered Underarm Burn, Rash...or Worse...



NOW, FOR THE FIRST TIME... THE PROTECTION OF A MIRACLE ANTIBIOTIC IN A DEODORANT!

Revolutionary antibiotic New Yodora stops perspiration odor—gives safer, longer-lasting protection. Its light, creamy base keeps sensitive underarm area softer, smoother, lovelier. And New Yodora never cakes—always stays fresh—delicately fragrant. No other deodorant ever promised better, safer, surer protection from perspiration odor.

New Yodora is unconditionally guaranteed by McKesson & Robbins.

Large Size 43¢ plus tax Economy Size 69¢ plus tax

The First... the Only Deodorant with Miracle Antibiotic Pertexol* for Sensitive Skin!

A McKESSON PRODUCT

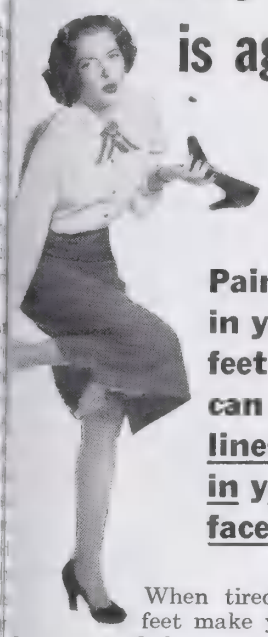
NEW YODORA

Scientific Facts About Harsh, Irritating Chemicals for Underarm Use

Laboratory tests show that these dangerous chemicals often invite trouble to sensitive underarm area. This is why you may have noticed redness, roughness of underarm skin.

Scientific Facts About Revolutionary New ANTIBIOTIC Yodora

Only New Yodora contains Pertexol*, the miracle antibiotic that combats bacteria responsible for skin irritations. New Yodora gives longer-lasting protection from perspiration odor because its exclusive antibiotic destroys odor-causing bacteria on contact. New Yodora is guaranteed not to contain harsh chemicals that irritate skin and chemically ruin your clothes.



Imagine a Deodorant Recommended for Shaving!

New Yodora with antibiotic Pertexol* is so mild and gentle we can even recommend shaving with it. No other deodorant would dare suggest this!

1. Apply soft, antibiotic New Yodora—rub gently into skin.
2. Shave underarms with slow downward strokes.
3. Remove excess with tissue—smooth remainder well into skin.

That's all you need do to stop perspiration odor. Whether you shave or not, one application daily of New Yodora is the new, sure answer to your deodorant problem. A brand of tyrothricin*

"Oh, my feet! Every step is agony!"

Pain in your feet can put lines in your face!

When tired, aching feet make your face ok tense and drawn, those pain-es may soon become old-looking inkles—there to stay!

At the first sign of throbbing foot-igue, be sure to massage your feet th Absorbine Jr.

Quickly and gently, Absorbine Jr. othes and cools. It makes your t feel better, makes you feel better . and your face shows it! Get a ttle of Absorbine Jr. wherever ugs are sold.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

BSORBINE JR.

hey cling closer...make our legs more beautiful... ecause there's Magic Motion... xtra "give" and spring-back n the knit!

1954 MOJUD CO., INC., N.Y.C.

It was characteristic of him that all through that tour when he was suffering from arthritis so that every motion caused him intense pain, he somehow managed to make his acting seem as effortless as ever. Out of consideration for the rest of the company, to some of whom closing the play might have involved hardship, he kept on acting until it was physically impossible for him to go on.

I like to remember, too, his last words, spoken to his daughter Bee just before he died: "Take care of the nurses."

After "The Scrap of Paper" I went to Mamaroneck for the summer. It is hard to believe now that it could have begun so well; that, until almost half of it was spent, most of us were happy people, living in a happy world.

The summer into which that first world war exploded seems now to have been so utterly unlike any later summer that the world has known or can ever know again! A summer of peace and leisure and decency, while life still moved afoot, unhurrying, when tomorrow or the next day or the next was soon enough for news, when the sky was clear and still and clean, when we could still hold to our faith that men had risen forever above the beastliness of beasts, when we had yet to learn how far below that beastliness men could still descend.

For me, with all my ties to England, the war began, not three years later but on that midsummer day when the Germans struck. It was the beginning, for me, of four years of dreading to hear news, of slowly learning to face the fact that men who had once seemed as human as the men I knew could do unspeakable things not only in anger to other men but in cold blood to helpless children, and to women, even to such a woman as Edith Cavell.

A merry heart goes all the day, a sad tires in a mile.

—SHAKESPEARE

Dick Davis went as a war correspondent to Brussels, and there, from a window in the U.S. Embassy, watched the Germans entering the city and wrote his famous report: "We saw it first in the warm summer sunshine, later under the glare of electric lamps, hours later in the gray of the morning. . . . For three days and three nights through Brussels it roared and rumbled, a cataract of molten lead. The infantry marched singing, with their iron-shod boots beating out the time. In each regiment there were 2000 men and at the same instant, in perfect unison, 2000 iron brogans struck the granite street. The Uhlans followed. . . . For three days and three nights the column of gray, with 50,000 bayonets and 50,000 lances, with gray transport wagons, gray ammunition carts, gray ambulances, gray cannon, like a river of steel cut Brussels in two."

Dick was dead in April of 1916. Another correspondent, Herbert Bayard Swope, from Berlin sent to the New York World and St. Louis Post-Dispatch exclusive dispatches about the sinking of battleships by the German U-boats and, in a year of much brilliant news writing, was awarded a Pulitzer prize for the best reporting of 1917.

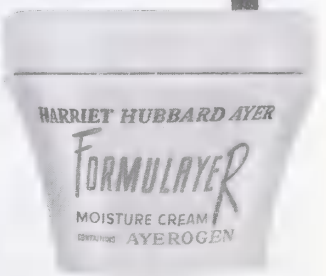
Uncle Sidney's son, Sidney Rankin Drew, joined the Lafayette Escadrille before we went into the First World War and was shot down in flames. Uncle Sidney never got over his death. After the war Uncle Sidney's second wife, Lucille McVey, went to France to look for Sidney's grave. She found a little garden with a picket fence around it covered with flowers, and a cross saying:

Sidney Rankin Drew, Hero.

He had fallen behind the lines, and it was the Germans who had paid him that tribute. She felt she could do no better, so left it there.

Russell went, almost at once, to drive an ambulance in France. I stayed at home until, leaving the children in the care of the nurses and their governess, Miss Jackson, I went on tour in "The Shadow" before opening at the Empire in January.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 205



Like Nature's own precious rain...

FORMULAYER Moisture Cream

helps beauty bloom

Dermatologists agree, nothing alive or vital can survive without moisture, including your skin. Time, climate, illness . . . many factors may rob you of this essential . . . but Formulayer reaches deep, helps conserve the priceless natural moisture of your skin, keeping loveliness alive as years slip by, preserving the dewy-fresh look and smooth texture that suggest flower petals after rain. It is unique in its formula, amazing in its results, and rewards the consistent user with visible improvement in a remarkably short time.

At better cosmetic counters everywhere. $3.50 plus tax • Contains no hormones

HARRIET HUBBARD AYER · NEW YORK · PARIS · LONDON · TORONTO

GIRLS!

HERE'S A FAMILY VACATION PLAN!

My husband is in the living room, totally absorbed in the beautiful, fully illustrated vacation package I had mailed to him. Any moment now he's going to suggest we vacation in Ontario this year—which is exactly what I want him to do.

Just across the Great Lakes, Ontario has everything for a perfect family vacation—boating, swimming, golf, sightseeing, fishing, and shopping for those wonderful Canadian and British goods.

So, why don't you fill in this coupon with your husband's name and address and mail it today. Then just wait until he sees that colourful vacation package they'll send him from Ontario.

TRAVEL TIPS

- Good food and accommodation at reasonable rates.
- Warm days—cool nights—bracing air.
- Liberal U.S. customs exemption on your Canadian purchases.

EVERYONE FINDS FUN IN ONTARIO

Canada's Vacation Playground

Denise McDonald, Ontario Travel Hostess,
Room 225, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto 2, Ont.

Please send me free literature about Ontario vacations.

NAME.....

STREET.....

CITY.....STATE.....

PLEASE PRINT

Whatever happens in the world . . . wherever in the world it happens . . . the news speeds to Room 404 in Radio City, New York, radio nerve-center of NBC News. NBC's world-wide radio and television news organization gets and brings you the news first.

Without exception, NBC newsmen are crack reporters — which means their sense of news is combined with a sense of history. While NBC Radio is dedicated to reporting the hard news of the day-to-day present — first, fast, factually — it is also busy building a permanent record-in-sound for the future. Out of this painstakingly accumulated material comes NBC's distinctive kind of reporting in depth. And out of it also come the special full-hour portraits of the great figures of our time — the recent, widely acclaimed Biographies-in-Sound.

It takes teamwork — alert, precise, timed to the split second — to bring every NBC Radio News broadcast. It takes men who work anonymously – planners, editors, analysts. And others whose voices are familiar to milli Morgan Beatty, whose "News of the World" is radio's top-rated news progr Romney Wheeler, Henry Cassidy, Frank Bourgholtzer, Ray Henle and M Mueller. Correspondents who cross Manhattan or Los Angeles or Washin to get to work; and those who cross mountains, deserts, seas.

Everything that happens in the world comes into your home the minute it happens, when you're tuned to Room 404 on NBC radi

a service of RCA

At newsstands and book stores: The 1955 "TODAY" Pocket Almanac — official almanac of the NBC News Department. Puts useful facts and figures at your finge

NEWSMEN YOU KNOW

In Washington
Joseph C. Harsch
Earl Godwin
Leif Eid
Ray Scherer
Richard Harkness
Morgan Beatty
Ray Henle
Ned Brooks

London
Romney Wheeler
Ed Newman

Paris
Frank Bourgholtzer
Paul Archinard

Bonn
Robert McCormick

Rome
Jack Begon

Tokyo
George Thomas Folster

Cairo
Wilson Hall

Formosa
Robert Hecox

Singapore
Jim Robinson

Hong Kong
Ron Whitehead

Buenos Aires
George Natanson

Mexico City
Jack Kearney

Ottawa
Robert McKeown

New York
Merrill Mueller
W. W. Chaplin
James Fleming
Leon Pearson
Irving Levine
Henry Cassidy
William Sprague
Pauline Frederick
John Cameron Swayze
H. V. Kaltenborn
Frank Blair

Los Angeles
Elmer Peterson
Roy Neal

Chicago
Alex Dreier
Jack Angell

and correspondents throughout the u

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 203

The Shadow" was a gorgeous drama from French, written originally for Réjane, but war had stopped its production in Paris. n't know that it has ever been done there. as a tremendously interesting part for me. he first act I was a paralytic and sat moless in a chair for thirty-five minutes. I ught it would be very difficult to do but, ously enough, I never even had to practice moving. As soon as I got into that chair the cover was laid over my knees and ds, the curtain went up and the play began; on't think I could have moved if I had nted to. Bruce McRae came back to me for play, which pleased me very much, as I ays entertained great affection for him.

he next piece was a decided contrast to t I had done before—an American play n the stories of Edna Ferber, called "Our s. McChesney," a comedy with a "mother e" in it.

During rehearsals and the run of "Mrs. Chesney" I got to know Edna Ferber and d and admired her tremendously. She gave pper party one night at which I sat next to liam Allen White. I found Mr. White to one of the most delightful persons I had r met. He amused us all by telling of his eriences on a recent trip to England.

remember that he told us his sense of contion had been shocked at a weekend party he country by the fact that he and his wife e put in separate rooms. He also received ther shock in the morning when the maid eremoniously entered room with a cup of tea opened his curtains. talked of many interestand absorbing things. I d him very much and ays wanted to see him in.

n April when I was playin Boston I heard that . Frohman had decided go to London, much inst everybody's wishes. as about to go to Chigo and knew that I uldn't have a chance to good-by to him unless I went to New rk. So I went down on Sunday night and ly on Monday morning I went in to see n.

He said, "What are you doing here, Ethel?" He called me Ethel, but I always called him r. Frohman.)

said, "I thought I would come to say od-by."

He said, "They don't want me to go on this at. I had a funny message from von Papen d Captain Boy-Ed, telling me not to go on Lusitania."

said, "Why go, then?"

He said, "Nonsense, of course I'll go."

When he said good-by, he leaned over and sed me on the cheek. He had never done t before. All the way back to Boston on the in I was worried, but I knew that nothing uld happen to Mr. Frohman.

I went to Chicago. During the run of "Mrs. Chesney" there a friend gave a luncheon at house for Elsie Ferguson, who was playing town at the same time. I was called to the phone by a friend, Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis, o said she had heard the most terrible news t it had not been confirmed, yet everybody s afraid it was true. I asked her what it was, d she said that the Lusitania had been sunk th all on board.

WHEN I went back to the table, they all nted to know what it was that made me ok so utterly downcast and I told them.

I remember Elsie Ferguson and myself just oking at each other and saying, "Mr. Frohan . . . Mr. Frohman . . ."

It was not long before Joe Patterson teleoned me and we had to accept the terrible t that Mr. Frohman had gone. For many ars he had been my very best friend. He had ken the place of parents and I had gone to m with not only my theater troubles, but all y troubles. He had always been understandg and wonderful.

Nothing was ever quite the same after that r me.

I shall always remember him with love. A wonderful, golden man.

Russell came back from France because he did not care to be called an embusqué by men who were facing no more danger than ambulance drivers, and by some who were facing far less. He went to Plattsburg, in the summer, for a month of military training, and the children and I stayed at Mamaroneck.

It was at such periods that my children and I would have uninterrupted good times—almost happy in spite of the darkening shadow of the war. The children all loved the theater, taking a perfectly natural interest in it, but I tried never to influence them for or against going on the stage. When Sister played in a school production of "Ivanhoe" I didn't help her or know anything about it until the performance, in which she was delightful, natural and at home with and aloof from the audience. Sammy played in school theatricals too.

ONCE when Jackie, about six, was home for an Easter vacation a friend asked him one day, "Well, Jackie, are you going to be an actor?"

He said, "Oh, I don't know. Maybe I might be a comedy."

They grew up just like other children—fighting like the dickens sometimes, then making up, very happy and loving each other very much.

When Russell went to Palm Beach for the winter, I brought the children in to be with me at the Netherlands, while I made my first motion picture at the studio just across the park. Metro Corporation had offered me very enticing terms to do eight pictures. I thought it was a wise thing for me to do, as things were at the time, and it was pleasant dough and no traveling.

"How," said one to Sir Walter Raleigh—of whom it was said he "could toil terribly"—"how do you accomplish so much, and in so short a time?" . . . "When I have anything to do, I go and do it," was the reply.
—MONTESQUIEU

Sammy went to St. Bernard's School and Sister to kindergarten and with Jackie old enough now to sit solidly in a saddle, they all went riding in the park on every sunny day. The great black admiral of the fleet who was the doorman at the Netherlands used to see them safely across the street and onto the path.

I spent all that season in pictures. I didn't like them very much, and was very glad when the year was over.

In one of these pictures I was a Russian princess and there was a scene in which my sleigh broke down in the snow. A lot of extras had been hired, nearly all Russians who wore funny fur caps and beards, real beards, to stand around in this scene. No one talked to them because they seemed to speak only Russian.

Years later when I was going through some photographs at Mamaroneck I came across one of the stills from this picture. As I looked at the group of peasants, one face was unmistakable.

I said, "That's Trotsky!"

And there he was. It was long after the Russian revolution, Trotsky was dead—murdered—but it was known that he had spent several years in New York, working at various things including an occasional day on the movie lot, earning a capitalistic $5—and glad to get it.

The last scenes of my last picture were photographed at Jacksonville. Afterward I went to Palm Beach, where I spent the two most miserable weeks of my life.

I came north just as, at last, America entered the war. Russell got his commission and was in France till the war was over.

The Stage Women's War Relief was instrumental in getting Mr. Al Hayman to let them have the Empire Theatre so as to produce three Barrie plays, "The New Word," "Old Friends" and "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals." "Old Friends" was not successful but, of course, "The New Word" and "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals" were enormously so.

In spite of the beauty of these performances the houses were not very good, and one night

CONTINUED ON PAGE 207

DIET Delightfully WITH

Diet Delight BRAND

DIETETIC FOODS

Low-Calorie, Low-Sodium

Fruits • Vegetables • Dressings • Juices

What a difference in feeling, in appearance, when you diet right! And the "right" comes in selecting dietetic foods that give you the most flavor and variety; yet stay within your diet schedule. Diet Delight Sucaryl (R) sweetened fruits, low-calorie dressings, low-sodium vegetables, do all of these . . . show you the way to diet delightfully!

Calorie and carbohydrate content clearly marked on each label.

FREE!

Delicious menus and recipes that fit your diet needs. Write Dept. L.

RICHMOND-CHASE COMPANY • Pioneer Packers of Dietetic Foods • San Jose, California

Now Delsey- the 2-ply toilet tissue with Kleenex softness

Only Delsey is clean cut to tear evenly

There's no shredding, no waste with this new, finer toilet tissue.

Buy Delsey in your favorite towel colors

Now, in addition to white, Delsey comes in lovely light shades of pink, yellow, blue and green to contrast, match or blend with your bath towels or tile. Delsey, too, is the only toilet tissue that gives you that wonderful Kleenex* tissue quality. With Delsey* you get Kleenex softness and absorbent double-ply strength.

Be thrifty—buy quality—buy Delsey

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 205

Mamaroneck it occurred to me that they ght like to put "The Twelve Pound Look" the bill instead of the unsuccessful one-act ce. So I went to the telephone and called up r. Hayman and suggested the plan to him. didn't seem to understand at first that I nted to play for nothing, but when he did was delighted. We got four or five good eks out of that and made some money for arity. That was the beginning of my war rk. I was never able to do very much, but I all that I could, as we all did.

Later in the fall I played "The Twelve und Look" in vaudeville. Mr. Hayman had omised that I could have a repertory season the Empire, a thing that I had always longed have, and on the day before Christmas I ened at the Empire in "The Lady of the melias." Ned Sheldon had written a new d lovely version of the story, taking it di- tly from the book. I have always thought it st beautiful. We did it in the costumes of e period in which it was written, as I have ways felt it should be done.

The play begins after Marguerite's death, th all the great ladies of France buying her longings at an auction in her apartment. hen the sale is over, rmand bribes the ncierge to let him end the night in the artment. He cries t, "Marguerite, my ve, come back to e," the scene blacks t and the story is ld as a dream in Ar- and's mind.

At the end, after I ed and the scene acked out again, erybody in the audi- ce was blowing his se. Mary Louise anamaker and Mary own Warburton, her usin, used to come every matinee and y and cry. They ould bring men's ndkerchiefs and pin em to backs of the ats in front of them dry. Sometimes hen they were at the ollies with young en, they would say ddenly, "Oh, let's go d see her die!" And they'd fly over to the mpire Theatre, dragging the unwilling young en with them.

I don't think I have ever played a part that really loved so much. I did it about three onths and then a light modern comedy by . C. Carton called "The Off Chance." It was great contrast and a most amusing play. Eva e Gallienne was very young and gave the most autiful performance.

During this repertory season there were any benefits and pageants given for various ar charities. The first one was the big pageant f all the Allies at Madison Square Garden in hich I was devastated Belgium, with suffi- ent effect to make me go on being devastated elgium more or less indefinitely until the end f the war.

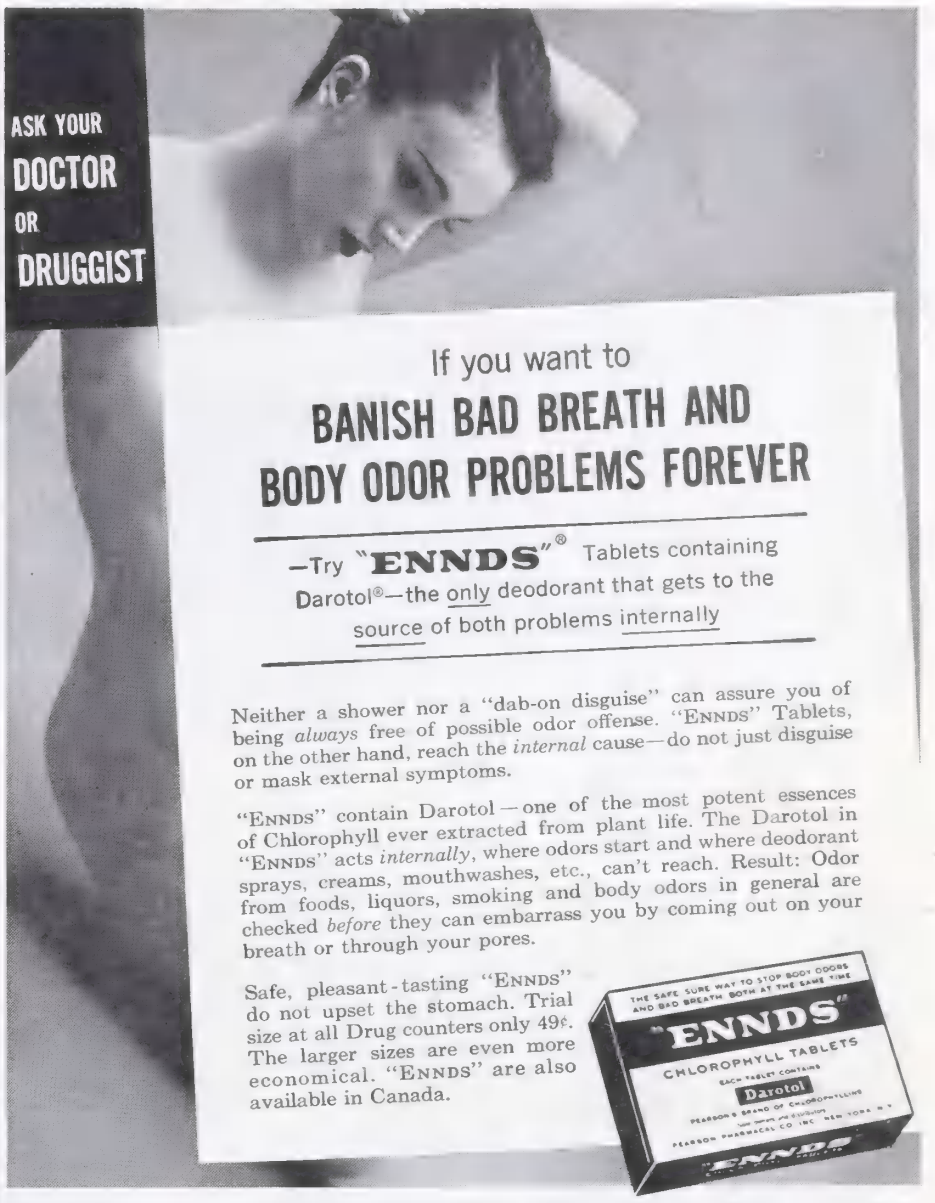
was called on constantly. It was very diffi- lt for me to know what to do, as I had lways had a horror of recitations and was rmly convinced no power under heaven ould make me recite. For any charitable vent, I always had appeared in one-act plays r in single scenes from long plays. Now that was faced with my war work, I had to learn recite.

It is impossible to convey the abject terror I as in the first time I stepped upon the stage lone, as myself, to utter. It was on the occa- ion of a benefit for the Red Cross at the Metropolitan Opera House. It was almost ntirely a musical program, orchestral and horuses, and above all, Caruso. I was the nly other soloist, which naturally intensified ny panic. The poem was "The Battle Hymn f the Republic." I had always known it aguely; in fact, that was the only way I did know it—very vaguely! I had studied it, but I had little confidence in my memory under the terrifying circumstances, so I asked my brother Lionel to go into the prompter's box, which is immediately in front of where I was to stand during the ordeal.

My feelings when coming through the famous golden curtains of the Metropolitan and facing a mammoth audience are indescribable. I began with quite a dash, a little like going over the top, but keeping firmly in my mind at the time that if I should forget, there at my very feet was my brother Lionel with the poem in his hand, ready for the worst.

JUST before the last verse, the worst happened; my mind suddenly became a hideous blank. There was a pause; I suppose it was really only an instant, but it seemed to me a million years. Suddenly a sound came to me from the prompter's box; it was Lionel trying to give me the lines. I heard nothing but what sounded like the muffled roar of a lion. He repeated it several times, but it never meant anything to me except the strange cry of some jungle beast. Finally, just as the words had gone, they came back to me and I finished the poem amid thunderous applause.

CULVER SERVICE



"I had the double delight of playing with Uncle Jack again in The School for Scandal—always one of my favorite plays."

After the performance John McCormack came back to congratulate me. He spoke about how wonderful my voice had sounded and how particularly marvelous was the great pause I made just before the last verse. He had thought that only a singer could produce such an amazing effect. Thus is bravery rewarded!

The next thing I did in this line was at the stadium of the New York City College, a place holding 40,000 people. I was to recite Zoë Akins' "Ode to the Allies." A glorious thing but it was very long and this time I had it largely and blackly inscribed on a scroll of parchment, which I held firmly grasped in my two hands. I was, of course, as nervous as ever, but got a certain amount of confidence holding tightly to the parchment before going onto the platform. It was at night but the platform was well lighted, so I knew I could see to read. But what I didn't know or expect was that I was flooded with enormous spotlights into which I had to look while bowing. As they kindly applauded my entrance, it was a little like looking at the noonday sun. I was completely blinded; when I looked at the parchment I saw nothing whatsoever for what seemed a space of eternity. I have always hoped that the largeness of the place and the vast numbers of people made that time seem shorter. At any rate, it was all right, and I had again done a little of my "bit."

During that summer, after the frightening weeks in the spring when the Germans had seemed to be breaking through our line, it was possible at least to begin believing that the war was going to be won and even that the winning might be worth the dreadful price that the casualty lists told us it was costing. It was possible to hold to that faith through the first months that followed the hysteria of triumph. It seems incredible now that we should actually have believed that there would never be another war, but it was good, blessedly good, to believe it, and for me it is good to remember now that once I could and did believe it.

At the Algonquin one night when I was having supper with Uncle Jack and Aunt Dodo after the theater, Jobyna Howland came to our table and spoke to us. There was a girl with her whom I didn't know. As they passed the table, the other girl said to me, in a curious accent, "I've written a play for you."

The Clothes You Wear

No starching necessary when you buy fabrics marked Tebilized for tested crease-resistance. And because they're regularly tested and check-tested by experts in an independent testing laboratory you can be sure that their superfine crease-resistance will last the fabric's lifetime. This means through endless washings and dry cleanings.

Children's clothes are fun to make. Little girls and boys look so charming all dressed up in mother's spanking new creations. But this dressed-up look doesn't last long. The clothes soon go into the washing machine. A good thing to remember when buying fabrics for children's clothes is to ask if they're marked Tebilized. This means less work for mother. For fabrics marked Tebilized need little ironing, even when they're fresh from the tub. They stay clean longer, too.

Good news in rayon . . . the luxury and beauty of the rayon fabrics now on the market. You will see rayon in everything from hardy sports clothes for men and women to the most fabulously delicate evening fashions. Look for look-of-linen rayons in wonderful colors and exciting prints. See the suave new rayon crepes. Watch for the exciting blends of rayon with dacron, nylon, acetate, cotton and other fibers. Whenever you're buying these fabrics, make sure that the Tebilized mark is on the hangtag. Your clothes will have the delightful freshness that adds so much to an attractive appearance. And this superb resistance to creases will last and last. This is also true of linens and cottons with this famous mark. Tebilized-marked fabrics are also sold in Canada.

Blouses are more important than ever. Whether they're mantailored shirts or spun-sugar confections, freshness is their greatest asset. That's why you'll see "Tebilized" on the tags of the blouses by so many of the country's most famous manufacturers. They know that Tebilized means that these blouses will have superfine crease-resistance all through their long and pretty lives.

FREE . . . for samples of fabrics marked Tebilized, snippets of the latest colors and prints in these fabrics, and stores near you that carry them, write to:

T. B. Lee Company, Inc., Testing
Dept. LH-3, 101 W. 31st St., N. Y. C. 1

NAME . . . . . .
ADDRESS . . . . . .
CITY . . . . . ZONE . . . . .
STATE . . . . . .

The Tebilized mark is applied only by permission of the owners of the mark to those fabrics which conform to specified standards of crease-resistance and quality established by them.

fabrics marked
TEBILIZED®
for tested crease-resistance

After they had gone I turned to Uncle Jack and said, "Who was the Polish girl with Joby?"

Uncle Jack said, "I think her name is Zoë Akins."

Not long afterward Alf Hayman gave me two acts of a play and said, "Read this."

I got in my car to drive out to Mamaroneck and began reading it. By the time I reached New Rochelle I had finished the two acts. I tapped on the glass and said, "Britt, go right back to the Empire Theatre," which we did.

I said to Hayman, "Where is the third act? Get it quickly. I've got to do this play."

It was "Déclassée," the play that the "Polish" girl had spoken to me about. It turned out that she came from St. Louis and that her accent, though completely natural, was a peculiar thing of her own.

In August, as I had been doing since I had stopped going to England for the summer, I went down to White Sulphur Springs for two weeks of taking the baths and playing golf. Zoë Akins had finished the third act of "Déclassée" and I knew that I had a wonderful play for the fall. I expected to begin rehearsals as soon as I came back to New York.

But when I came back and went to see my cousin, Georgie, who was living on 45th Street, there was such a mass of people in the street that the car couldn't get through, and I had to get out and walk to Georgie's apartment. I asked what all those people were doing, and she said, "Don't you know? It's the actors' strike."

"Strike," I said, "what for?"

I hadn't been reading the papers and didn't know that nearly all the theaters were closed, that nearly all actors, including all but a few of the leading ones, were on strike.

I, who had had only the most wonderful treatment from Mr. Frohman and his successor, Alf Hayman, had no grievances of my own. It was something of a shock when Georgie explained the grievances that had brought about the strike, to find out that the members of the Actors' Equity were asking for so very, very little. It seemed a shameful thing that people should have to go on strike to gain assurance that they would be brought back to New York when a play closed on tour instead of being left penniless in Texas, that they should be offering to rehearse without pay for four weeks—six weeks for musicals—and after that to go on rehearsing for half pay!

I suddenly knew that I had to do something about it. "I ought to belong to Equity," I said.

Georgie stared at me, "You damn fool," she said, "you're a life member."

I suppose someone sometime had told me about something I ought to belong to, put a card in front of me, and I must have signed it and paid my $100. I didn't remember doing it, but I was very, very glad to find that I had done it. (Luckily for me it was in that happier era that I stopped signing things without looking at them!)

Georgie said, "You should go and show yourself at headquarters and be there, as everyone else is."

She spent a long time trying to convince me that my presence at headquarters would be of importance. I started with her eventually because I thought it would please her and because she seemed so anxious for it.

We got out of Georgie's apartment and the crowd sort of gathered me up and swept me along. It was a little terrifying; I kept thinking that things like this must have happened during the French Revolution. By the time we reached the brownstone house that was headquarters the crowd had caught sight of me and suddenly a sound went up—a great shout. It left me trembling from head to foot with a feeling of exaltation and happiness. The thought that they felt I could be of some use to them made me prouder than words can tell.

I was practically carried along up the steps and into the house. I found myself up on a table. People were crying and kissing my hands and even the hem of my dress and saying, "It's all right. We've won. We've won."

I had a moment's feeling of being a Joan of Arc. It was all terribly moving and exciting. All I said was, "I'm with you, whatever it is," and suddenly everything seemed to become organized as if all that had been needed was somebody to lead.

UNCLE JACK, who of course was with the actors, was in East Hampton, and after talking with him I wrote a letter for him to read at a meeting of Equity. It said:

While my entire theatrical career has been associated with but one management from whom I have received only fairness and consideration, I feel that the traditions of my family and my personal predilections ally me, logically and irremediably, with the members of my profession in the Actors' Equity Association.

Uncle Jack also announced that both Lionel and Jack, who were out of town, had asked him to notify the meeting that they were with the strikers.

I received various messages from Mr. Hayman during this time, commanding me and begging me to come to rehearsals, which, of course, was absurd because we were right in the midst of the strike and if I had gone to rehearsals it would have been the same thing as playing. It was simply impossible. He must have realized it, but he pretended not to.

One day when I went to see him to explain the reasons why I could not go to rehearsals, he said he could not hold them up any longer and had cabled for Mrs. Patrick Campbell to come over and play my part. I said I was sure she would be very good.

If your quest be beauty...

With the year at the Spring—new gladness for your writing and gift-giving, new blossom-hued stylings by Eaton at your favorite store.

Les Roses, flower-trellised, $1.50
Four Eaton pastels with Self-Seal envelopes, $1.50
Dulcet, flower-framed sheer, $1

EATON'S
FINE LETTER PAPERS

EATON PAPER CORPORATION PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

The best is always a
PRO

Protect your family's teeth with new PRO Tufted Tooth Brushes. There's a size for each member of the family. The famous PRO end tuft reaches teeth other brushes often miss. Nylon bristles polish teeth brighter, wear longer. Remember—

for the best—go PRO

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH CO.
Division of The Lambert Company, Florence, Mass.

Corns
Sore Toes
Tender Spots

NERVE-DEEP RELIEF!

Pain Stops in SECONDS!

No waiting! Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads stop pain at its source almost instantly . . . remove corns on of the fastest ways known to medical scienc . . . stop corns before they can develop . . . eas new or tight shoes . . . prevent sore toes, blisters. No other method does all this! For FREE sample, write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

Super-soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

SAFE!
Non-Caustic!
No Dangerous Fumes!

Acts Instantly in Hard Water!

BONNIE JONNIE
TOILET BOWL CLEANER

course he had not cabled, but I didn't it, and I just took it for granted that I ost it.

and the other managers called us con- breakers and everything else they could of. Some of them sued us for fantastic nts and got injunctions against us, but and more theaters kept closing until st none were open.

hen the strikers began to get hungry— being actors a lot of them already were— rganized three weeks of benefit perform- at the Lexington Avenue Opera House. had closed all the theaters in New York the exception of this one and so, natu- the public flocked to it.

e first week I did the second act of "The of the Camellias" with my brother Lionel superb Père Duval and Conway Tearle as nd. When I made my entrance the open- ight the audience gave me a reception asted for three minutes. Alexander Woollcott wrote:

e rip-roaring and delightful entertainment d lavishly by the rebel players before huge nces over Lexington Avenue way reveals Barrymore, playing beautifully as Marguerite ier in "The Lady of the Camellias." She can step into a program of Eddie Foys and Eddie and bestow on all the evening a certain gettable radiance. . . . And Miss Barry-

BARRYMORE COLLECTION

"With Russell in military training at Plattsburg, the children and I had uninterrupted good times at Mamaroneck."

's voice! But then how can a humdrum day- ay reviewer of dramatic entertainment hope escribe that enchantment?

quote those extravagances about my voice use they reminded me, when I read them, he time when I decided that something t be done about it. Although I was being nicked everywhere on land and sea, I was ys worried about my voice because it was very low and had that sort of breathless ity. I heard of a singing teacher named . Morris and thought that she might help So, for some time, I stopped almost every on my way to the theater and had a sing- lesson from her. Curiously enough it ed out that my singing voice was a high ano. I learned several dramatic-soprano s, and there is no doubt that it helped me ch ways as voice production and breath rol. But I am afraid that God meant me ave this voice and that I'm stuck with it.)

MOST every great figure of the contempo- stage was on those Equity benefit pro- ms. I remember that Ed Wynn had to sit he audience because the Shuberts had got- an injunction forbidding him to appear on stage. Suddenly a spotlight was turned on , and he stood up and without moving a was at his humorous best, with the whole ience cheering him.

he second week Conway Tearle and I ed the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet" and the list of names on the program even more impressive than that of the k before. We also gave a ball at the Astor re Uncle Jack and I led the grand march. uglas Fairbanks and many other motion- ure stars purchased boxes to make it clear they were on our side in the strike. The ball netted $7000 for the strike fund and those of the strikers who could afford to contribute added $20,000 more.

It was evident that the public was on our side and the opposition began to crumble. Early in September the managers gave in on all points, even agreeing—think of it—to pay full salary after four weeks of free rehearsals, instead of the half pay we had originally asked for.

I BEGAN rehearsing for "Déclassée," and nothing was said about Mrs. Campbell or about the strike. It wasn't to be expected, though, that after such a bitter quarrel nobody should harbor any ill feelings, especially those who were on the losing side. All the time we were rehearsing "Déclassée" Alf Hayman made it clear that he hadn't forgiven me. He sulked and grumbled, but I always pretended I didn't notice any of his ill humor.

We had nothing new for the play—repainted scenery and furniture from the storehouse. In the first act we required a large sofa but Mr. Hayman, in his mood, did not feel that he wanted to get one. I insisted that we must have a sofa instead of the cane bench that went with the set of furniture wished upon us from the storehouse.

At that time "Charles Frohman, Incorporated" had become affiliated with the Famous Players and I found it very hard to talk to Mr. Hayman about anything. He was very "strikey." So I went to Mr. Lasky, or one of those at the head of the moving-picture office, to speak about the sofa, and I was told to go ahead and get it. The thought of those great magnates sitting there and saying, "Go ahead and get your sofa—you must have it" always amused me, for I paid for it, and neither Mr. Hayman nor Mr. Lasky ever paid me back. In the old days Mr. Hayman would have bought eight sofas for me, and Mr. Frohman, of course, never would have thought much about the matter—if I had asked him. Nevertheless- I got the sofa and it made the scene because it was new and very beautiful.

The first-night audience in New York went enthusiastically insane, but all Mr. Hayman would say, after the curtain, was, "Well, it may be all right—if that audience is on the level."

In the morning, though, all the critics were even more enthusiastic than the audience had been. We played it for nine months before going on tour with it; every seat for every performance was bought up and people stood at every performance.

But, ironically, while that success was at its height, I had at last to face the realization that there was no hope of making a success of my marriage.

After eleven years of trying my best to save it, I went to see Cardinal Hayes and told him that I was going to get a divorce. He said, "Oh, no, you can't do that." But after a long discussion, he said, "All right, but you mustn't marry again."

I remember that I found no difficulty in reassuring him. It never entered my head to marry again. My divorce is merely legal. It

A new high in travel luxury

GREYHOUND SCENICRUISER – sensational new luxury coach with raised observation deck, perfected air conditioning . . . complete washroom!

A new adventure in relaxation

AIR SUSPENSION (on both Scenicruiser and Highway Traveler coaches) gives you amazing, vibrationless travel . . . it's world's smoothest ride!

...and all at the same low fares by

GREYHOUND

Now you can experience the most luxurious, scenic travel in highway history . . . with none of the cares, and only a fraction the cost of driving! You ride behind one of America's safest drivers . . . completely relaxed in a reclining easychair . . . free from driving strain and parking problems. Hundreds of these coaches are now in service—to bring you this marvelous new kind of luxury travel—by Greyhound!

Highway Traveler – smart new coach with Air Suspension Ride, big picture windows, reclining easychairs, complete air conditioning.

FREE! TOUR-PLANNING MAP OF AMERICA—Mail to Greyhound Tour Dept., 71 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill. for your full-color copy, with details on Expense-Paid Tours.

Name _____

Address _____

City & State _____

Send me special information on a tour to _____ LH 4 55 was granted in Rhode Island, quietly and without opposition, on the grounds of desertion and nonsupport.

I think that both my brothers and I were born under a dark star so that there was to be no such thing for us as enduring happiness in life. Perhaps it is an inheritance; I think now that the time when my mother and father were saying good-by to each other on the boat and I heard her begging him not to forget her was, perhaps, the beginning, although I did not know it then, of my awareness of the dark star.

I do not want to blame anybody for the failure of my marriage except, perhaps, that star.

Although I didn't succeed in saving the marriage itself, I did manage to save some of the pieces. Under the terms of the divorce, Russell had the right to see the children and I thought it was better for us to see them together. When he was not in Palm Beach, he came to dinner once a week at our house or took us out to a restaurant. He always came to dinner on Thanksgiving Day and on Christmas whenever I was playing somewhere nearby and had the children with me for their holidays. Our relations have remained on this amicable footing, so much so that years later, before their marriage, Russell asked me to dinner at the Metropolitan Club to meet his present wife, whom I thought perfectly charming. She had a small son and afterward Russell asked me if I had ever known an eleven-year-old boy.

I said, "Yes. Two."

He said, "Who?"

I said, "Sammy and Jackie Colt."

He was scarlet. He had forgotten all about them.

I think Colonel Colt, who was always kind and generous to me and the children, felt very unhappy about the divorce. To this day, whenever I am anywhere near Providence, all Colts and De Wolfes make a point of telephoning "Cousin Ethel."

"Déclassée" ran on and on, all through that season and the next and, except when it was interrupted by the only serious illness I ever had, through the next.

I was playing it in Cincinnati. One night when I was sitting on the sofa in the last act, just before the time for me to go out and get run over, I suddenly couldn't move. Something like a bolt of lightning had struck my back. As I was saying my lines, I kept thinking that I would not be able to get up to get off the stage; I don't know how, but I did get off. The pain was now in my knee. It was fortunate that the play called for me to be carried back onto the stage by a strong young footman and placed on a sofa where I proceeded, gracefully, to die.

After the curtain they called a cab, took me to the hotel and sent for a doctor. By the time he got there the pain had gone to my hand and I was making the most terrible sounds from the agony. The doctor said it sounded like fugitive arthritis. The next thing I knew I was in an ambulance on my way to Christ's Hospital, where I spent the next four months.

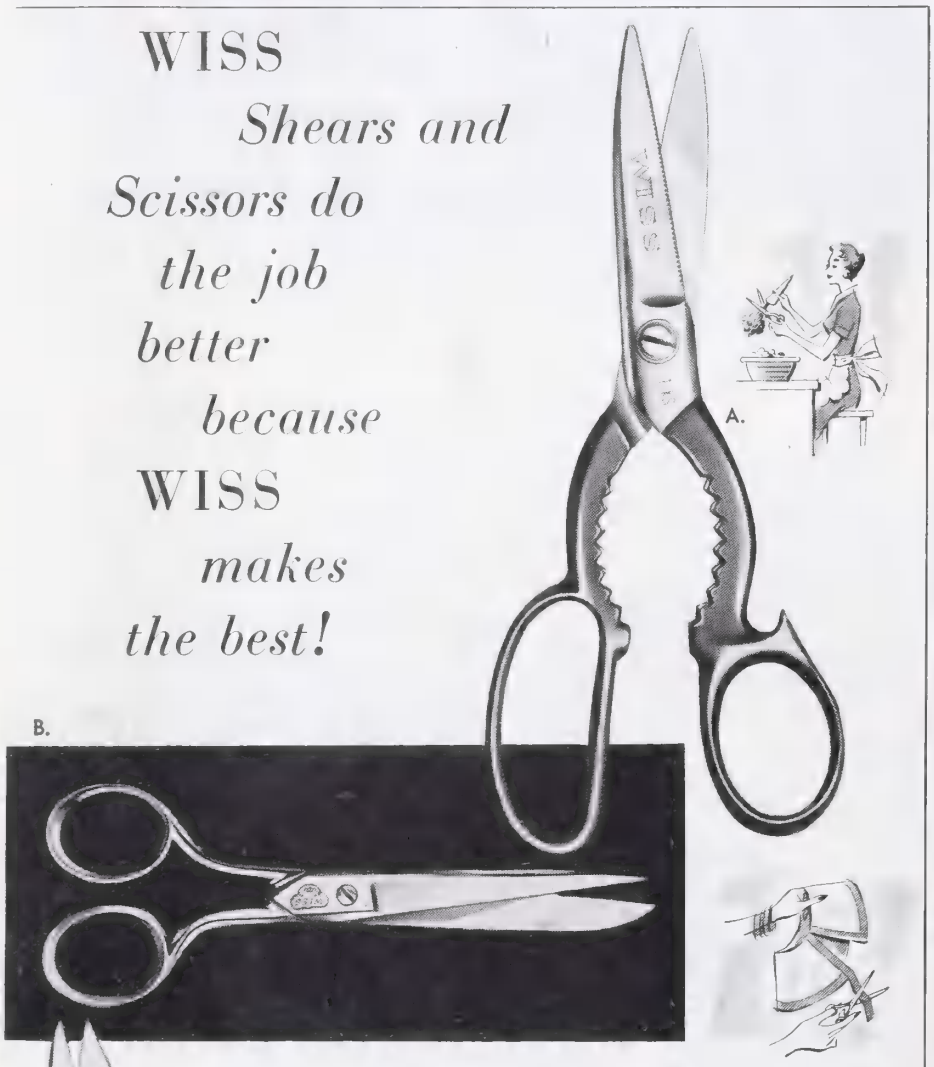
I sent for the children and their nurse and put them in the Sinton Hotel and they were brought to see me for a few minutes whenever I was well enough.

When I got back to New York I was met by Doctor Danforth and Uncle Jack and Jack and taken straight from the train to the Flower Hospital where they found the cause of all the anguish: a streptococcic infection lodged in my tonsils; they had to come out. The operation was postponed and postponed until I was strong enough to stand it. It was a major operation; it took an hour and a quarter.

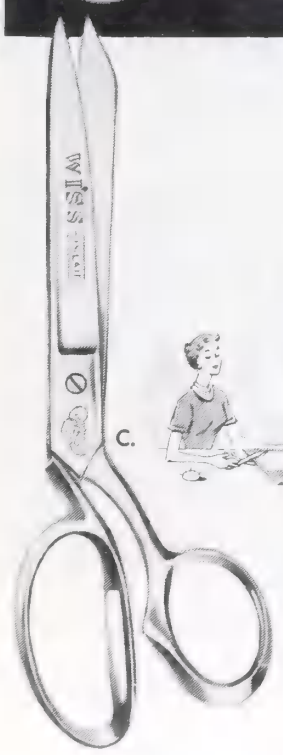
The arthritis left me with a bad finger. When they took me down to the operating room I asked them if I could ever play the piano again, and they said it would be impossible. This made me feel dreadfully—but I can!

WHILE I was in the Flower Hospital my brother Jack came to see me and to show me a new play called "Clair de Lune" written by Michael Strange, Jack's second wife. He wanted me to play the Queen in it. He had gone to Mr. Hayman about it and he was much interested in the idea of the two Barrymores appearing in a play by Jack's wife.

After such an illness as I had gone through it was naturally impossible for me to go back to such a heavy role as that in "Déclassée"—nor could I have traveled. The part in "Clair de Lune" was short and I told Jack that if I didn't die, I would play it. There was at one time great doubt as to whether I would get better.



During the last few weeks that I was in the hospital Jack came to me with plates for costumes, scenery, and so on. I had never seen him so interested in anything connected with the theater. As soon as I got out of the hospital we began rehearsals and shortly afterward produced the play.



The critics castigated it so severely that Jack was infuriated. He came to my dressing room after the second night's performance and announced that he was going out in front of the curtain and make a speech in answer. I did everything I could to dissuade him, and at last I called up Lionel in Port Jefferson—the telephone that I had installed when Sammy was born was very useful—and between us, we persuaded Jack not to make the speech. But we did not succeed in preventing him from sending it in letter form to the Times and the Tribune.

When "Clair de Lune" closed, I was well enough to go back to "Déclassée," in which I kept on playing for another year.

WISS

Shears and Scissors do the job better because WISS makes the best!

Whether it's cutting a pattern, snipping string, clipping fingernails—there are Wiss shears or scissors to do the job for you. And to do it best! Wiss makes shears and scissors for every purpose, crafts each and every one with the precision, the skill, born of over a century of fine tool making. That's why Wiss gives you the best edge for every cutting job!

A. WISS KITCHEN SHEARS . . . the most versatile shears you can own. Use them to prepare fruits and vegetables; trim meat or fish; open jars and bottles. Red, green, yellow handles. 1KS, $2.50

B. WISS SEWING SCISSORS . . . For all light sewing projects, for trimming, ripping, snipping and gift wrapping. No. 815, $3.00

C. WISS DRESSMAKERS' SHEARS . . . with bent professional-type handles for easier, faster, more accurate cutting. No. 127, $4.00

Prices except Pinking Shears slightly higher Denver and West.

Pinking Shears	Embroidery Scissors	Barbers' Shears	Manicure Scissors	Household Shears
$4.25 to $8.95	$2.50 to $3.00	$3.95	$2.25 to $3.50	$3.00 to $4.40

J. WISS & SONS CO., NEWARK 7, N. J.

Manufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Shears, Metal Cutting Snips & Garden Shears.

Cleaning you do in the spring, tra la
Can be a much easier thing, tra la!
A Du Pont Sponge'll clean with speed
Nice and neat—just what you need

So handy for cleaning . . .

LONG-WEARING

DU PONT SPONGES

DU PONT
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living...through Chemistry

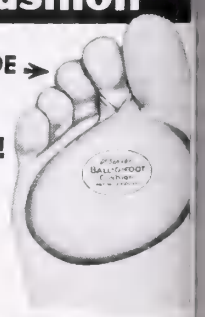
OPPORTUNITY

IF YOU want extra money, and have spare time to put to use, this is for you! You can spend your spare time taking orders for magazine subscriptions—and earning generous commissions.



Just send us your name and address on a postal. In return, we will send you our offer with starting supplies. From then on, YOU are the boss. Subscription work of this type can be carried on right from your own home. As an independent representative, you may work whenever it is most convenient for you.

Write that postal today. Information and supplies are sent at no obligation to you.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
887 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

Callouses, Tenderness, Pain Burning at Ball of Foot?

NEW! Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion

LOOPS OVER TOE

QUICK RELIEF BEYOND BELIEF!

Made of soft LATEX FOAM and NYLON

You Actually WALK ON CUSHIONS!

It's entirely NEW! Never before anything like for relieving painful callouses, tenderness, burn at ball of foot! The cushion—not you—abso shock of each step. Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FO Cushion loops over toe. No adhesive. Flesh col Washable. Worn invisibly. $1.00 pair at Drug, Sh Dept., 5-10¢ Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfo Shops. If not obtainable locally, order direct, encl ing $1.00 and state if for woman or man.

DR. SCHOLL'S, INC., Dept. 58B, Chicago 10, vas during that year that we played it in ington, and President Wilson sat in a t a matinee. This was after his stroke, and ke it as easy as possible for him to leave heater, his car had been parked in the in front of the stage door. To reach it he o go right past the door of my dressing . He was leaning on a little colored man. d been crying and his eyes were shining. id, "It was beautiful, my dear. It was iful."

t was the last time I ever spoke with Wilson but not the last time that I saw A year or so later, when I was playing Twelve Pound Look" at Keith's in ington, he was in the audience. As I did ve to go on the stage until about 9:30, I one to dinner at the Longworths' before g for the theater and had promised to back after the performance. But when I out there was a solid mass of people for s around the theater, all waiting to see Wilson although he had been out of office me time. I was deeply moved and natu- waited until he had left. Then it was so nat I hesitated to go back to the Long- s', but I did. Alice asked me where I'd I said, "I couldn't get out of the theater ooner because there was such a terrific around it waiting to see Mr. Wilson " said, "Who?"

en I told her, she wouldn't believe me. ated Wilson so bitterly that she simply n't believe a great crowd had waited just him pass.

the time "Déclassée" ended its three- un all the children were in school. Sammy one from St. Bernard's, in New York, to ver, but after going to see him when I laying in Boston I could not feel right leaving him there. He seemed too young ch a big school. So next year I sent him nterbury, in New Milford, Connecticut, had been established by rich Catholics e Ryans, Bradys and Mackeys, an excel- chool run by laymen and probably the xpensive school on earth.

kie went first to Fay School, in Massa- tts, and then to Portsmouth Priory at ort, run by the Benedictines.

er had gone to the Lenox School in New but I dreaded sending her to one of the nable schools there, and when I was go- a long tour I suddenly thought of the ight place in the world for her—the con- my convent.

R adored the convent and got the most ng marks, so high that I asked the sister or how it was possible. "My dear," she we have to give them what they make." as a great relief to me, knowing every of the day that she was doing exactly I had done before her. When I went to after she was settled at the convent I it just the same as it was in the days I was her age, many of the same sisters there yet. It didn't seem as if a chair had oved since I left: the same gong ringing our, the same little choir and organ— was still "Little Ethel" to the sisters. It very delightful experience.

ing the third year of "Déclassée" Alf an died and I decided that next season I like to join Arthur Hopkins, who had ced "The Jest" with Jack and Lionel and was interested, as I was, in starting a ory company in New York.

nt to see Mr. Hopkins at his office and ed if I had ever read a play by Gerhart mann called "Rose Bernd." I had not. it to me and I read it. I thought it was ficent, and when it was produced it made ound impression.

d been planned that the next play I was would be "As You Like It" and I had most of the summer and a good deal of uring the "Rose Bernd" run in studying nd. But, for some reason, after my r's great success in "Hamlet," Mr. Hop- hought it was more important to do eo and Juliet" which we had planned following season.

and out after we were rehearsing it that owl was going to do it and told Arthur Hopkins that I didn't want to do it but he insisted on going on with it, partly because Robert Edmond Jones had already made sketches for the sets. His obstinacy was the immovable object tenfold and quite impossible to overcome.

I made no impression whatever on him, but I should never have consented to do the play. It was sheer misery for me all the time we were doing it and when at last it was over, I felt as if a great burden had been lifted from me.

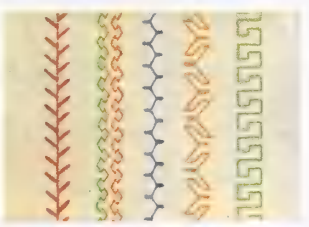
This was not a successful venture. The public didn't like the scenery—they didn't like the company—they didn't like me.

A curious thing happened while I was playing Juliet. When I was lying in the tomb, supposedly dead, in the last act, the fact that I had to remain so still seemed to have a hypnotic influence on me and it was with the greatest difficulty and will power that I kept myself from literally becoming unconscious. One night I did for an instant lose consciousness.

"Romeo and Juliet" was a failure but there were a lot of people who liked it. The principal one to me was Jack. This is what he wrote me about it:

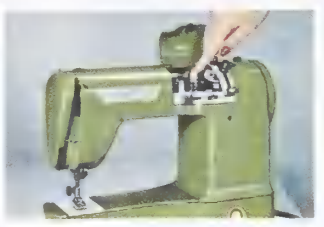
Dearest Ethel: I couldn't tell you half of what I really thought of your performance, dear. It really really is great. It is truly magnificent, the finest thing you've ever done. I think I was wrong about the balcony scene not being passionate enough. It would make it too objective and the whole thing is just the other way.

Really Ethel, it is beautiful and you ought to be terribly proud about it.



Much love,

The next piece we did was "The Laughing Lady," so different in every way. It was the sort of play I had done before, like "Lady Frederick" and "Cousin Kate," and was much harder for me to do than the big roles. A light comedy is the most tiring of all to play, the most difficult to keep up. You are taking the



...it's the world's greatest home-maker!

No matter what others claim, the new 1955 Elna does more sewing jobs automatically...than any other make!

Unlimited glamour stitches no other machine can make... because only Elna moves the fabric back and forth while the needle goes from side to side!

Amazing new pop-up discs make fancy sewing easy as playing a record. Just drop a magic disc in the "Magic Brain"! To change discs, just press button!

A "free" darning arm! And no other leading machine has it. Elna sews unbreakable seams (stretchable) on jersey!

Only portable with a full-size work table. Carrying case becomes a table! World's only full-size, light-weight portable. Sturdy, yet weighs only 17 pounds. Even sews on nylon. Does 2-color, 2-needle embroidery, too.

Does everything any sewing machine can do, and so much more! Without attachments, levers or dials! Yet it costs no more! Makes buttonholes; sews on buttons. Smocks, embroiders, monograms. Only Elna has a straight stitch machine that can be turned into a fully automatic anytime; never gets out-dated!

Free Sewing Lessons! Straight stitch model only $179

NECCHI ELNA

ELNA AUTOMATIC

WORLD'S ONLY 100% AUTOMATIC!

Send for Exciting Free Color Booklet. Dept. EA542. Elna Sewing Machine Sales Co., 164 W. 25 St., N. Y.
America's largest group of Sewing Circles; see phone book. Nationwide service. Parts always available.

Put Yourself– and Your Telephone– in These Pictures

Telephoned Tom to look out for dinner guests, Jan and Joe, on his train tonight so he can drive them from the station.

Canceled date with the hairdresser because baby was ill. Without that call, I'd have been a "no-show" in Antoine's black book!

Called several places for estimates on making my new slip covers. Found I can save considerable time and money!

Cheered a sick friend with a "voice visit"... it took just a few minutes from a busy day, yet it meant so much to her!

Made a dentist appointment for Jack—dentist found time to see him between other patients. Saved all of us suffering!

Invited friends over for Saturday evening—party planning's so easy when you know right off just who can and who can't come!

Hours of time saved—miles of steps—and precious energy, too! Thanks to the telephone. No wonder more and more busy homemakers say, "My telephone is worth more to me than it costs!"

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Reminding you that someone, somewhere, would enjoy hearing your voice today part of a person who is just like everyone in the audience. And because you have to be natural it is much harder than doing emotional parts. People don't realize this. It is much more difficult to be convincing in a modern comedy when every woman in the audience thinks she is more or less like the woman you are playing.

After that tour for a week I had the double delight of playing with Uncle Jack in the Players' production of "The School for Scandal" which has always been one of my favorite plays. I was Lady Teazle. She, in a way, is a laughing lady, too, but you have to approach her and play her in an entirely different way. Artificiality of manner, speech and gesture makes it easier to be good as Lady Teazle than as "The Laughing Lady." The very fact that one has a wig on and is in a different costume helps to make it easier.

The production had a notable cast. Walter Hampden played the part of a servant. So did Francis Wilson and Grant Mitchell, while Robert Mantell did the small part of Snake—exactly in the spirit of the repertory theater. William Seymour directed us for the first few days and gave us the traditional stage "business"—things he had in his old prompt books. We used Sheridan's original text, not Augustin Daly's version. The whole spirit was splendid, and it was a great pleasure to be in it. I did it as a labor of love and out of it came rich rewards.

After "Déclassée" had closed Jack had come to stay with me at Mamaroneck. He was very unhappy and at a loose end, his wife having gone off to Europe. So I literally took him by the hand to French Lick Springs, Indiana, with a little red Temple "Hamlet" in my pocket. At French Lick, I gave him the little red "Hamlet" and told him to learn one of the soliloquies and he did. When he read it to me, neither of us was quite happy about it, but I still knew that the spark was there.

One day after he had come back to Mamaroneck with me, we went to lunch at the Carringtons' and a little later Jack asked if Britt could take him over to see Margaret Carrington again. I said yes, and that was the last I saw of Jack until he emerged three months later. Margaret had a wonderful method of voice production and breath control which, added to Jack's native genius, gave him the supreme confidence that resulted in the "Hamlet" that the world will not forget.

Of course I saw him in it many times, but the most thrilling performance of all was a dress rehearsal just before the opening night. Jack didn't dress for it. He was just in his ordinary street clothes, and I suppose it was the greatest experience I ever had in a theater. He was superb, magnificent, unforgettable, and had in some mysterious way acquired that magical ease, as if he really were Ham was for me the fulfillment of all I had hoped for him and more.

Once while Jack was playing "Ham was playing in Washington and went to with Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge at the House. Mr. Coolidge had different food us, just a sort of pap. There were several dogs sitting about and he would throw bits of food to them. He said, "Saw brother the other night in 'Hamlet.' Very He made a speech between the acts, a funny speech. Told some stories abo Negro valet, right in the middle of 'Ha That's a good way to make speeches, stories. I know some funny stories, but I the American public likes to think of President as being a sort of solemn ass think I'll just go on being a solemn ass

I came out of the White House lau Reporters were all over me wanting to why. I said, "Just at something the Pre said," and they all fell flat on the grass

Once when I was staying with Alec V cott on his island in Vermont, he dro over to see the little town where Coo father had a store and post office. I had den terrific feeling about the night wh old gentleman answered the telephone voice asked him if the President of the U States was there.

"No, but the Vice-President is."

"No," the voice said, "Mr. Harding h died. Will you get the President to the ph

The old man called, "Cal."

"Have you got a Bible?" the voice sa

"Of course I've got a Bible."

"Then I guess you'd better swear hi

And all at once the little town in the Vermont hills was famous and telephon telegraph lines were built up to that little try store. I always thought it made a m ously American story. William Allen wrote it beautifully.

Alec and I also went to see the little yard where Coolidge is buried. His tom was small and simple just like his father only thing about it that was different w seal of the President of the United Sta

After "The Laughing Lady," my ne was "A Royal Fandango," by Zoë There was a young man in it who pl newspaper photographer, a very smal He had one line to say, and I saw that very nervous, so I said to him, "Relax. all you have to do—just relax. It'll all same in a hundred years."

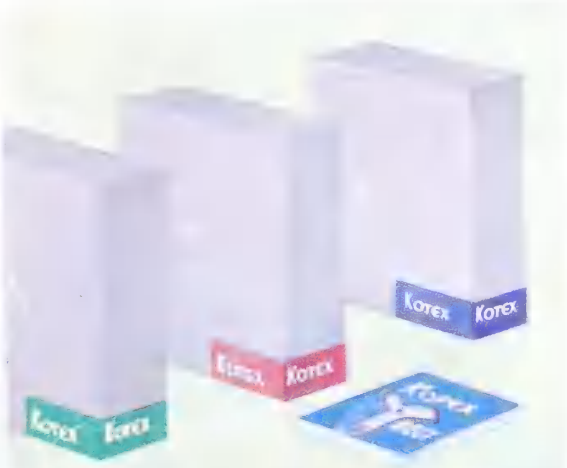
The young man's name was Spencer and he has been relaxing with notable s for twenty-five of those hundred years.

Next month: Hollywood; and "the best b of all—my seventieth."

"Buy something for yourself that'll look good on me, mom."

Printed i

NEW



Kotex now comes in this soft grey package

...ected by thousands of women as first choice of many designs—this ... Kotex package reflects the quality you've learned to trust. For ...ex* gives you the complete absorbency you need... the softness ...'re sure of. Kotex holds its shape, keeps its comfortable fit; so ...re is no roping, twisting or chafing.

Moreover, this is the only leading napkin with flat pressed ends to ...vent revealing outlines. When you shop, look for the new Kotex ...kage—soft grey, with a graceful K, symbol of highest quality.

...E WOMEN CHOOSE KOTEX THAN ALL OTHER SANITARY NAPKINS

Your choice of three sizes. Regular—blue panel: Junior—green panel; Super—rose panel. And with Kotex you'll want a new Kotex belt. They go together for perfect comfort.

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

AT LAST! A LIQUID SHAMPOO

THAT'S EXTRA RICH!

IT'S LIQUID PRELL

FOR Radiantly Alive Hair

Something new has happened to liquid shampoos—it's exciting, extra-rich Liquid Prell! No other shampoo has this unique, extra-rich new formula. It bursts instantly into luxurious, angel-mild lather . . . rinses in a flash! And the way your hair looks and feels after a luxurious Liquid Prell shampoo—so satin-soft—so brilliantly 'Radiantly Alive'—such a dream to manage! Try it today—you'll be enchanted!

JUST POUR IT . . .
and you'll see the glorious difference!

Some liquid shampoos are too thin and watery—they're so messy, so hard-to-use, and also wasteful.

Some liquid shampoos are too heavy—contain a cloudy ingredient that leaves a dulling film.

But Prell has a smooth, "just-right" consistency that won't run, and it never leaves a dulling film.

PRELL—

FOR 'RADIANTLY ALIVE' HA

now available 2 ways:

The exciting, new extra-rich liquid in the handsome, easy-grip bottle!

And the famous, handy tube that's ideal for the whole family. Won't spill, drip, or break. It's concentrated—ounce for ounce it goes further!

CREATED BY PROCTER & GAMBLE

APR 18 55
BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

JOURNAL

May 1955-35¢

The Magazine Women Believe In

PRINCESS MARGARET AND HER BEAUX

THE CLOAK
by Isak Dinesen

WHAT A WIFE DOESN'T KNOW CAN HURT HER

FIRST TRAIN TO BABYLON
by Max Ehr… …mplete in this issue

CAN TH… …RE SAVED?

"What?...You haven't tasted NEW IPANA?"

(It's the best-tasting way to fight decay)

Chances are you'll be even more surprised than the wide-eyed girl above . . . once you do try new Ipana. Especially if you think all tooth pastes are more or less alike.

Because the flavor of new Ipana is so good it beat all three other leading tooth pastes hands down—after nationwide "hidden-name" home taste tests.

Destroys decay and bad-breath bacteria with WD-9

More good news is the way wonder-ingredient WD-9 in new-formula Ipana fights tooth decay—stops bad breath all day. It destroys most mouth bacteria with every single brushing, even bacteria your tooth brush can't reach.

So enjoy new Ipana . . . and trust your family's precious teeth to it. At all drug counters in the familiar yellow and red-striped carton.

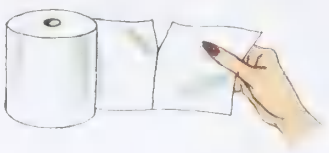
New-Formula IPANA®

WITH BACTERIA-DESTROYER WD-9

Special introductory combination

Here's how to make your own taste test of new Ipana—and save 25¢ in the bargain. Look for this special combination package . . . two giant-size tubes for only 69¢.

Products of Bristol-Myers



Ipana A/C Tooth Paste (Ammoniated Chlorophyll) also contains bacteria-destroyer WD-9 (Sodium Lauryl Sulfate).

Now Delsey- the 2-ply toilet tissue with Kleenex softness

Only Delsey is clean cut to tear even!

There's no shredding no waste with this new, finer toilet tissue.

Buy Delsey in your favorite towel colors

Now, in addition to white, Delsey comes in lovely light shades of pink, yellow, blue and green to contrast, match or blend with your bath towels or tile. Delsey, too, is the only toilet tissue that gives you that wonderful Kleenex* tissue quality. With Delsey* you get Kleenex softness and absorbent double-ply strength.

Be thrifty—buy quality—buy Delsey

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Journal

Contents

May, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 5

Journalities

Though Rungstedlund, Rungsted Kyst, Denmark, may be no more romantic than Glenside, Pennsylvania, it always seems so when we see it on the note paper of Baroness Blixen (Isak Dinesen). But the message was down-to-earth: "I had just arranged to have a photo taken by our best photographer, and had sent in various clothes so as to have a first-class assortment to offer you, when I fell down a stair and had a concussion of the brain. I broke no bones—my doctor told me I had got a highly elastic skeleton—but half my face was blue and black for a month, and I was too ill to go to Copenhagen." Illustrator for The Cloak, Isak Dinesen's haunting and perplexing story on page 52, is Gladys Rockmore Davis, a fine artist whose paintings hang in twenty-five museums and in many private collections. Married to an artist, Floyd Davis, she reports they have two grown children, who are also artists, and two grandchildren, who may be artists someday.

Gladys Davis

"Born in Springfield, Massachusetts; now live in Oceanside, New York, with two children, Amy and Jane, and my wife, Doris, whom I met at the University of Michigan. Graduated from there. Studied chemical engineering, but my scientific reports tended to be fiction. Decided to be an author instead. Professors heartily concurred. Since then, have written some 700 produced radio and television shows for the national networks. I guess I'm the only person in the world who is trying to get out of television, and into something else. And the novel is more fun than anything else I know. First Train to Babylon (page 58) is my third."—Max Ehrlich.

When, and under what circumstances, is a girl Young Enough to Know Better? That is the title of a story by Joseph Laurance Marx on page 54, and it seems—well, you'll see. The author studied engineering, of all things, at Columbia University and was a businessman for many years. "I started writing by accident, literally, when I was laid up with a broken leg, and I have devoted full time to it ever since." So he says—but others tell us many people break a leg and never write a line.

Joseph Marx

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

First Train to Babylon, Max Ehrlich . 58

Stories

The Cloak, Isak Dinesen . 52
Young Enough to Know Better, Joseph Laurance Marx . 54
Up Home (Second part of five), Ardyth Kennelly . 64

Special Features

Why Don't We Take More Time to Live?, Dorothy Thompson . 11
Disturbed Children Find Loving Care . 35
Never Enough Homes, Margaret Hickey . 35
Tell Me Doctor, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 45
Princess Margaret and Her Beaux, Noyes Thomas . 50
Born to be Queen (Third part of six), Betty Hoffman and A. N. P. . 60
Can This Child be Saved?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 77
Memories (Conclusion), Ethel Barrymore . 80
The Barrel is Back, Sue Jenkins . 117
Dr. Spock Talks With Mothers, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 118
Conquering a New Disease, Peter Briggs . 133
Quiz for a Mother-in-Law Who Knows the Score, Helen Everitt . 134
How America Lives: "Please Take My Children," Rosemary Jones . 171

General Features

Our Readers Write Us . 4
Diary of Domesticity, Gladys Taber . 19
Under-Cover Stuff, Bernardine Kielty . 21
Making Marriage Work, Clifford R. Adams . 30
What Do You Mean No? (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 32
Fifty Years Ago • Journal About Town . 49
There's a Man in the House, Harlan Miller . 76
Ask Any Woman, Marcelene Cox . 147
This is a Car Clown, Munro Leaf . 188

Fashion and Beauty

Figures Made to Order, Dawn Crowell Norman . 66
Bright Young Stars, Wilhela Cushman . 68
Fashions for Two, Wilhela Cushman . 70
Summer Time is Fun Time, Ruth Mary Packard . 72
Lovable, Tubbable Synthetics, Nora O'Leary . 74

Food and Homemaking

Some Sunday in May, Ann Batchelder . 78
Line a Day, Ann Batchelder . 82
What's for Dinner?, Marian Tracy . 106
Kitchens Make News, Margaret Davidson . 130

Architecture, Gardening and Interior Decoration

A Guest House and Patio in the Back Yard for $2000, Richard Pratt . 56
Breezeway into Living Room, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland . 182
Small Bouquets All Over the House, Louella G. Shouer . 190
Finders Keepers, Henrietta Murdock . 204
Up-to-Date Traditional, Carol L. Mercado . 214

Poems

Peonies, John Robert Quinn . 14
Dusk of May, Charles G. Bell . 86
Let No Tree Wither, Marion Lineaweaver . 102
Aubade, Mary Wright Lamb . 108
Dream's End, Barbara Shook Conklin . 112
Lines With a High Moral Tone, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 129
Sonnet, Edlyn Cantwell . 136
Mary Tudor's Song, Elizabeth Coatsworth . 158
Legacy in Brass, Jessie Farnham . 166
A Curious Song, Elizabeth Graham . 180

Cover Photograph by Louella Shouer and Donald Stuart

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Trayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

EVEN IF YOU BRUSH YOUR TEETH ONLY ONCE A DAY

Colgate Dental Cream Gives The Surest Protection All Day Long!

Brushing For Brushing, It's The Surest Protection Ever Offered By Any Toothpaste! Because Only Colgate's—Of All Leading Toothpastes—Contains Gardol*
To Stop Bad Breath Instantly—Guard Against Tooth Decay Longer!

YOUR DENTIST WILL TELL YOU HOW OFTEN YOU SHOULD BRUSH YOUR TEETH! But remember! Even if you brush only once a day, Colgate Dental Cream gives the surest protection all day long! Gardol, Colgate's wonderful new decay-fighter, forms an invisible shield around your teeth that won't rinse off or wear off all day! And Colgate's stops bad breath instantly in 7 out of 10 cases that originate in the mouth! Fights tooth decay 12 hours or more! Clinical tests showed the greatest reduction in decay in toothpaste history!

*Colgate's Trade-Mark For Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate.

Every Time You Use It... New Colgate's CLEANS YOUR BREATH While It GUARDS YOUR TEETH!

Why be just a part-time charmer?

Wear MIDNIGHT by Tussy morning, noon and night!

CHARM everyone with the matchless Midnight scent!
Dusting Powder $1.25; Cologne $1.25.

DISCOVER the magic allure of Midnight Perfume!
½ ounce, $3. Full ounce, $5.

CHOOSE color and fragrance of matching glamour!
Midnight Lipstick-Perfume Combination, $1.

SMOOTH ON pale blue Hand and Body Lotion . . .
it's scented with Midnight, too! $1.

Our readers write us

Thank You, Dr. Spock

Roslyn, New York

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: Thank you for the recent Spock article on sweets—and for the stiffening it put in my spine. For our first child's birthday, I made a "cake" out of pure applesauce and unsugared egg white; now that he's four, he is drinking chocolate milk, eating ice cream, and even, on occasion, having a short go at a stick of chewing gum. And our poor No. 3 child is right beside him—years ahead of herself in Finding Out About Sweets. Since no one else I knew made such a fuss, I had gradually come to think I was being unrealistic about the whole question—but now you and Dr. Spock have put me back on my horse.

Sincerely yours,
MARY SCOTT WELCH

Readers' Prayers Helped Her

La Mesa, California

Dear Editors: Through your wonderful magazine there has been such an outpouring of prayers for me that not only is my panic gone completely but the 1 per cent sight of my left eye has returned!

When first I wrote you, I was more or less whistling in the dark. Then slowly I came to feel it was His will and not mine if my lot was to be blindness. With complete acceptance and renunciation came relaxation. Then came your far-reaching readers and their thoughtfulness. And then—faith and healing! Miraculous!

Thank you and God bless you all.

Gratefully yours,
CAROL V. SPERRY

▶ Mrs. Sperry, the reader who wrote in December about her impending blindness, wishes to assure JOURNAL readers who wrote her and sent gifts that she will answer all personally in time, though she has been overwhelmed the last few months. ED.

He Told the World

Falmouth, Massachusetts

Dear Editors: I enclose a newspaper clipping:

ST. LOUIS (AP). "I've never enjoyed anything so much in my life," said Mrs. Charlotte Lucido about her birthday present.

It was a want ad in the Post-Dispatch placed among a list of special notices telling of broken homes and shattered dreams.

Love story.

It told a story of love:

"I am responsible for all debts and obligations of my wife," the want ad read, "both present and future, and am more than happy to be the provider for a woman who has borne me six lovely children and, with an overabundance of love and care, has made the last 21 years of loving kindness the nicest part of my life.

"On this, the eve of our 21st wedding anniversary, I wish to publicly express my gratitude. (signed) Philip C. Lucido."

Sincerely,
MRS. G. G. PASLEY

▶ It was Mr. Lucido's own idea. He deals in credit and must read the customary saddening "bed and board" notices daily. ED.

A Flower for Mother

Savannah, Georgia

Dear Editors: Her name is Judy. Often

May's child.

weeds end up as the centerpiece on the dining table.

Sincerely,
MRS. T. H. WHITFIELD, JR.

Journal Gentleman

Winnipeg, Canada

Dear Editors: I'd like to register approval of the way you now letter your covers—keeping the "Ladies' Home" small, and the word "JOURNAL" large; because I'm sure that this magazine has many male readers, and, as in our home, when it arrives, the second in command grabs it quickly when the boss isn't looking.

Yours truly,
RON TUCKWELL

Fluoridation: Pro and Con

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: The Public Health Service has endorsed water fluoridation as a safe and practical means of reducing the incidence of dental decay. This action, I can assure you, was taken only after long and painstaking scientific investigation of the safety and effectiveness of the procedure. These studies, carried out over a period of many years, may be summarized as follows:

Observation of thousands of children throughout the nation has demonstrated the dental benefits associated with ingestion of a proper concentration of fluoride. The incidence of tooth decay was markedly reduced and the number of caries-free children increased.

Annual medical evaluation and follow-up of children from fluoride and non-fluoride cities fail to reveal differences in physical-examination findings. Among adults, even after prolonged exposure to fluorides, no relationship was found between use of fluoridated water and the incidence of adverse effects or abnormal laboratory findings.

Extensive analyses indicate no difference between fluoride and nonfluoride areas with respect to general death rates or death rates from specific causes. Furthermore, careful investigations show no correlation between fluoride content of the water and fracture experience, bone density or growth and development.

Advances in engineering technology have provided precise, simple and economical methods for introducing fluo-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

At last!

A LIQUID SHAMPOO

THAT'S EXTRA RICH!

JUST POUR IT... and you'll see the glorious difference!

Some liquid shampoos are too thin and watery—they're so messy, so hard-to-use, and so wasteful.

Some liquid shampoos are too heavy—contain a cloudy ingredient that can leave hair with a dulling film.

But Prell has a smooth, "just-right" consistency that won't run, and it never leaves a film to dull hair's radiance.

IT'S LIQUID PRELL FOR Radiantly Alive Hair

Something to sing about—wonderful, emerald-clear Liquid Prell! No other shampoo has this unique, extra-rich new formula—and how you'll love it! Bursts instantly into luxurious, extra-rich lather . . . rinses in a twinkle . . . is so mild you could shampoo every day. And Liquid Prell leaves your hair caressably soft, a dream to manage—looking excitingly 'Radiantly Alive.' Try new Liquid Prell today, won't you? It's fabulous!

PRELL—for 'Radiantly Alive' Hair—now available 2 ways!

The exciting, new extra-rich liquid in the handsome, easy-grip bottle!

And the famous, handy tube that's ideal for children and the whole family. Won't spill, drip, or break. And Prell is concentrated—ounce for ounce it goes further!

CREATED BY PROCTER & GAMBLE

حَلمْت بأنني ركبْت سَجادة سِحريّة

*in my *maidenform bra®

Shades of Scheherazade! I'm soaring over the shifting sands
...higher than the minaret spires
...and the only magic word I need is Maidenform!
I'm shaped so beautifully...molded so divinely...
I'm the loveliest figure in 1001 Nights of dreaming!

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's Etude* in white nylon taffeta or broadcloth; A, B, and C cups...from 2.00, AA cups for teen figures, 1.75.
Send for free style booklet.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

rides to a water supply, and have developed safeguards for the maintenance of proper fluoride levels.

Those desiring more detail on this subject are referred to Fluoridation as a Public Health Measure, a recent publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, 1515 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., and to the report of the Water Fluoridation Committee of the St. Louis Medical Society, which appeared in the February, 1954, issue of Missouri Medicine, published by the Missouri State Medical Association, 634 North Grand Blvd., St. Louis 3, Missouri.

You may be interested to know that more than 1000 cities and towns in the United States, with a total population in excess of 20,000,000 people, are now applying this preventive method. It is important to note, however, that the decision on whether to adjust the fluoride content of a water supply rests entirely with the individual community.

Sincerely yours,
LEONARD A. SCHEELE
Surgeon General
U.S. Public Health Service

Powell, Ohio

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: As a taxpayer and citizen, I feel that the U.S. Public Health Service, an official agency of the U.S. Government, should truly serve the health of this nation. Let's apply that directly to the fluoridation issue. The USPHS has been promoting fluoridation some years now. Not only that, it has utilized highly developed public-relations techniques to build public favor. And for what? Where are the scientific reports, the research data, that prove the health values in fluoridation of water?

I, as a citizen, ask for the scientific evidence proving that fluoridation of public water contributes to public health.

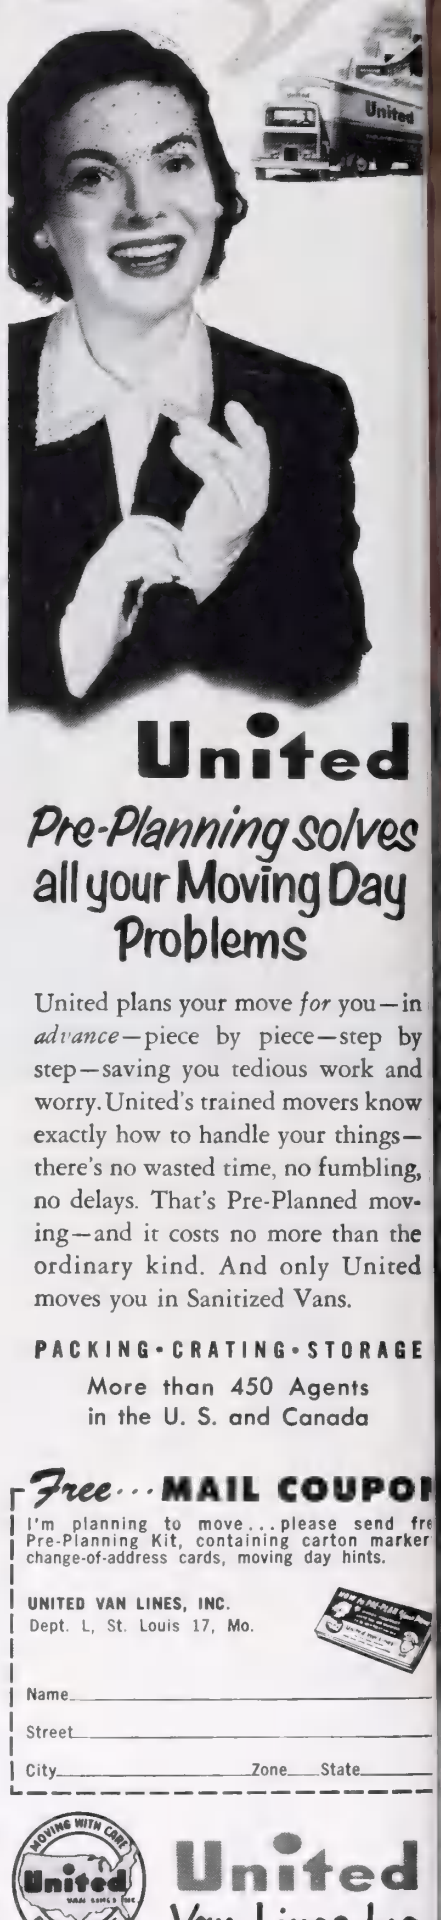
It is the scientists—the biochemists, the clinical researchers and chemists—who say, in effect: "Go slowly—we need to know more about this." Some of them have turned up some rather disturbing evidence of inherent dangers. Surely an official government agency ill serves its citizens when it uses public funds to support a program not scientifically demonstrated to be desirable, beneficial or acceptable.

I feel that the first order of business is to examine the evidence of recognized biochemists and clinical researchers. With the help of these scientific data, citizens can inform themselves more adequately about fluoridation—and thus be better equipped to deal with the issue in their own communities.

Not opinions, but facts. Truly serve the public here. I do sincerely hope that not only the point above, but also adequate supporting material, can find its way to that alert and intelligent group of our nation's citizenry: your subscribers!

NANCY SEIBERLING

P.S. Quite apart from the public-health angle, I am keenly interested in the way this question has become part of the general confusion about liberty, freedom—in the jumble of so-called "controversial issues." The ability of a few to mold public opinion until it becomes an arrogant, unyielding pressure has been well demonstrated. To fly (even with facts) in the face of public opinion is not an easy thing to do these days. Yet in many places over the nation, one person with the facts has proved all that was necessary to turn the tide.



Detroit, Michigan

Dear Editors: I have conducted as much research on fluoridation as anyone in the country; I have published or in press three articles on different phases of the subject. I have collected more clinical information on chronic fluorine poisoning from drinking water than any other investigator with the exception of one clinician who is in full accord with my views.

If there were an epidemic of typhoid fever your health officials would move heaven and earth to control it. Epidemics of a new disease are now appearing throughout the country; I have the rec-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

"Imagine! MOVING DAY and nothing to do!"

United

Pre-Planning solves all your Moving Day Problems

United plans your move for you—in advance—piece by piece—step by step—saving you tedious work and worry. United's trained movers know exactly how to handle your things—there's no wasted time, no fumbling, no delays. That's Pre-Planned moving—and it costs no more than the ordinary kind. And only United moves you in Sanitized Vans.

PACKING • CRATING • STORAGE

More than 450 Agents in the U. S. and Canada

Free... MAIL COUPON

I'm planning to move...please send fre Pre-Planning Kit, containing carton marker change-of-address cards, moving day hints.

UNITED VAN LINES, INC.
Dept. L, St. Louis 17, Mo.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

MOVING WITH CARE United EVERYWHERE

United Van Lines Inc.

Look Under "Movers" in Phone Book for Nearest United Agent

Lenox "WEST WIND" lovely for a lifetime, so wise for now

It's love at first lovely sight, the first time you see the most translucent, beautiful china, Lenox! You realize why Lenox is appreciated as the truly superlative china the world over . . . why Lenox is chosen by Presidents and Kings. And do you know that your Lenox would be the same quality? Yes, it's true . . . Lenox makes one quality china . . . the finest.

How good to know, too, that treasured Lenox has the lifetime quality to last for generations! So why compromise? Lenox is easy to acquire, by piece or place setting; most stores extend budget-payment service.

Start with lovely, lovely Lenox. You'll be so glad you did . . . all your lifetime.

"WEST WIND" colorful, charming pattern. Coupe Shape. 5 pc. place setting (dinner, salad, butter plates; cup, saucer) $18.95. Do see the wide selection of distinguished Lenox in leading stores.

. . .

For pattern-price leaflets in color, the informative "Reference Book of Fine China", plus name of your dealer, send 25¢ to: Lenox Inc., Dept. E-74, Trenton, N.J.

Lenox China

WORLD'S FINEST...FOR LIFETIME ENJOYMENT

Never put make-up over a "bare" skin—

First—this satinizing base to flatter exquisitely!

Sheer, greaseless—it protects, conceals, refines!

You've surely seen how heavy make-up can work against a woman—rather than for her. Yes—instead of hiding imperfections, it actually emphasizes them!

The trouble is—greasy make-up applied over a "bare" skin just will catch, and settle in skin flaws. Then little lines look carved in. Pores seem larger. Oil around nose and chin muddy the make-up's color . . . skin looks streaked.

But just smooth on an invisible base of Pond's Vanishing Cream before making-up—and see the enchanting difference! This delicately scented cream is light, frothy, greaseless . . .

Protects just-washed skin with a satiny film

Helps powder cling smoothly—hours longer

Keeps make-up from streaking . . . looking artificial and "mask-y"

The radiant, flawless look that makes a woman truly lovely—be sure it's yours! Always—before you make-up—this greaseless under-film of Pond's Vanishing Cream. You'll be delighted with the new soft-toned look of your complexion . . . its fine-textured young freshness.

Charming member of New York society

Romaine, Marchioness of Milford Haven

The Pond's Vanishing Cream on the Marchioness' dressing table is one of her most depended-on beauty aids. She knows that no matter how harsh the weather, Pond's Vanishing Cream will protect her skin beautifully. "And as a foundation, Pond's Vanishing Cream looks completely natural," Lady Milford Haven says. "And it has a marvelous way of holding powder smooth and fresh for hours!"

Quick, at-home facial brightens, clears "drab" skin

Tonight—glamorize your skin with this 1-Minute Mask, as so many beautiful women do:

Smooth a lavish coat of snowy-white Pond's Vanishing Cream over your face. The Cream's "keratolytic" action dissolves away the dead flakiness that gives your skin a dull, older look. After one minute, tissue off the Cream. Now—shadows seem brightened away . . . your skin looks "alive"—so much finer, clearer!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6

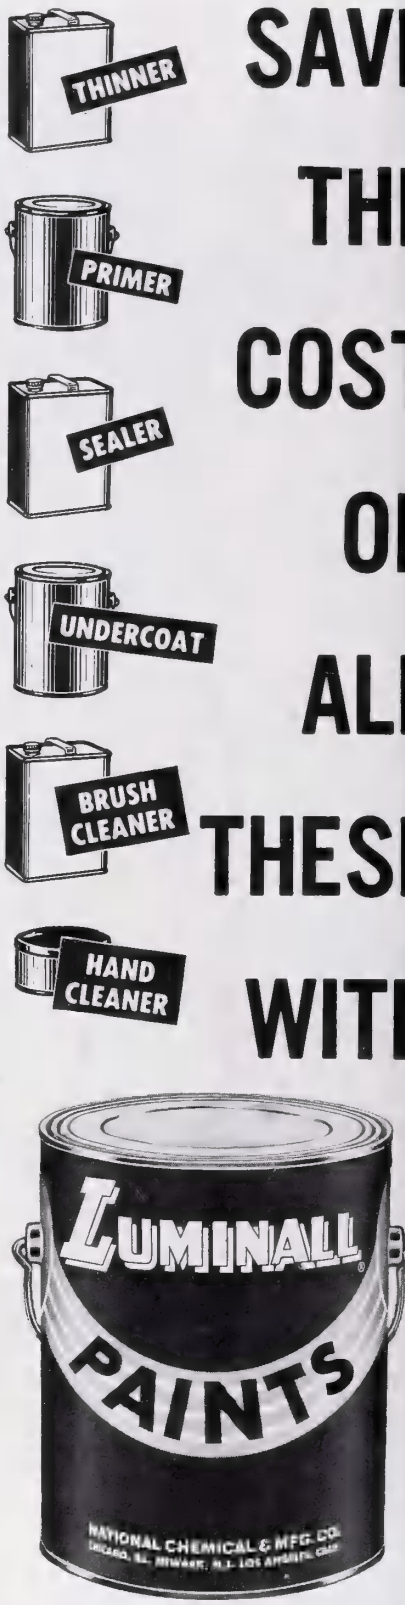
ords of 18 cases of poisoning from drinking artificially fluoridated water. This disease is characterized by severe pain and stiffness of the spine, brain damage, lack of control of arms and legs, stomach disturbances and failing eyesight. Leading specialists could find no cause for the symptoms in these patients. Yet in every case elimination of fluoridated water cured this disease completely. These symptoms are identical with what has been described in foreign medical literature as beginning fluorine poisoning.

This disease is man-made by the health officials whom you are paying to guard your health. They have been told about this disease, but they have neither investigated it nor shown any interest in these patients. Instead, they move heaven and earth to deny that it exists; they even ridicule patients who complain of these symptoms.

They continue to pound on the theme that fluorine, a powerful poison, can cause no harm in the small amount in which they are adding it to drinking water. They present graphs, charts, statistics quoting averages, but do not study individuals. They quote research chemists and dentists who call each other authorities, but have never attended a patient. Their proof that there is no harm is based upon a highly biased survey by the St. Louis Medical Society in which the underlying theme is that there is no need to investigate further because no harm is contemplated. They rely on mortality statistics which are tailored to order as analyzed in detail in the current issue of the National Fluoridation News.

When the National Research Council, which is packed with health officials, finds that in the natural fluoride town of Bartlett, Texas, 10 out of 100 people have eye cataracts, 19 out of 100 hearing defects, they don't compare these figures with the averages for these diseases in the U.S., but cover up the damage in this town by comparing it with another fluoride city where the disease rate is equally as high. When they find a high percentage of bone defects among the people in that fluoride town, they don't tell you that this is the beginning of a serious disease due to fluorine poisoning, but state that it is of no consequence.

Medical societies, which should concern themselves with this purely medical subject, are remaining completely aloof and disinterested. They have done no research on their own other than asking health officials and dentists for their opinion. These officials in turn quote each other's opinions. For political reasons information about poisoning is being kept out of medical journals and out of medical meetings. Consequently, physicians are being kept completely ignorant of this disease. The story of fluorine poisoning will, therefore, first appear in foreign medical journals, causing a further delay in the recognition of this disease here.



No two people react alike to the same drug, no matter how small the dose. At the so-called "safe" concentration, fluorine is a potential danger to every individual, especially to diabetics who drink more water, to nephritics who can't eliminate fluorine readily and to allergic people who have a low tolerance to drugs. That it is cumulative in the system even in the most minute doses has recently been shown in Berkeley, California, by radio-active tracer studies.

Numerous incidents of suppression of scientific data which might interfere with their promotional efforts have come to my attention. For example, a survey by the U. S. P. H. S. itself shows that excellent teeth were found where there was no fluorine at all in the water.

Opponents to fluoridation are as much concerned about the health of children's teeth as anyone else. However, the Grand Rapids and Newburgh studies have not proved that fluorine provides permanent benefits. It merely delays the recognition of decay by a few years. Some genuine statistics compiled by the New York State Department of Education recently slipped through the rigid censorship of health officials. They showed ⅓ more dental defects among children in fluoridated Newburgh than in the fluorine-free control city of Kingston.

Fluorides can be administered in many ways, individually and inexpensively, to those who desire them. Yours,

GEORGE L. WALDBOTT, M.D.

With Dow latex and sturdy alkyd-resin, Luminall Paints apply easier, bind tighter, go farther and look richer! Primer and sealer built-in for amazing one-coat coverage on walls, ceilings and trim. Scrubbable, satiny finish! Dries in 20 minutes! No fumes, fuss or messy clean-up problem. Nonflammable! The easiest paints to apply with brush, roller or spray!

For free color chart write Dept. 43, Luminall Paints, 3617 South May Street, Chicago 9, Illinois

LUMINALL PAINTS

Chicago 9, Newark 5, Los Angeles 1, Dallas 7

FOR NEAREST DEALER SEE PHONE BOOK YELLOW PAGES
Millions of Happy Users Know the LUMINALL LABEL is the Finest Guarantee in Paints!

New Heirloom Sterling "Six-plus-One" place setting gives you seven pieces—with the all-important extra teaspoon! Shown, Damask Rose*

New! "Six-plus-one" place setting!

Seven beautiful pieces at a money-saving price!

$29.75 FEDERAL TAX INCLUDED.

You always need more teaspoons than just one per place setting—and up until now you've had to buy your extra teaspoons separately at a regular, by-the-dozen price.

Now—the new Heirloom* Sterling "Six-plus-One" place setting gives you all six usual pieces plus an ever-useful extra teaspoon, at a place-setting price, only $29.75†! That's no more than you'd expect to pay for just six pieces alone!

In any of the distinguished Heirloom Sterling patterns—see the "Six-plus-One" place setting at a fine store near you now!

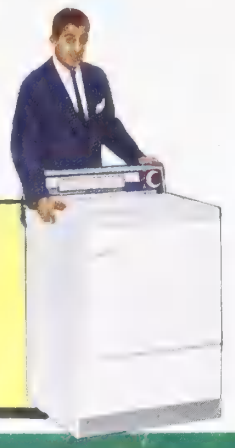
*Trade Marks. Copyright 1955, Oneida Ltd. Silversmiths, Oneida, N. Y.
†Extra-heavy Stanton Hall, slightly higher

Heirloom Sterling

"Whe-e-e! Look what came in our new Laundry Queen Automatic!"

Here's why TIDE belongs in your precious automatic!

The makers of Laundry Queen—in fact, the makers of 25 automatics—recommend Tide. Their machines are designed for full-action suds like TIDE'S!



And Tide is made to give you the best possible performance... and the cleanest possible washes in them. In these top-loading automatics, nothing else will wash as clean as Tide, yet is so mild ... no washday soap, no other detergent known, and that includes the sudsless products. In fact ...

TIDE washes cleaner than any leading sudsless product—costs only ½ as much to use!

If you—like the great majority of automatic-washer owners—have one of the top-loading automatics, don't think you need to use a costly sudsless product. Tide will get your wash cleaner than any leading sudsless product, at half the cost! Any wonder more women use Tide in automatics than any other washing product? Use Tide in yours!

The new Laundry Queen Automatic Washer with Hydro-Poise for miracle quick drying

It's at your dealer's now. Let him show you this beautiful new Laundry Queen Automatic Washer. Let him tell you about the Hydro-Poise feature for miracle quick drying and two-hundred twenty-degree Arc Agitation for greater washing efficiency.

Tide* CAME IN IT!

This wonderful new Laundry Queen Automatic comes with a free box of Tide right in it . . . just as so many other fine automatic washers do. The makers of 25 AUTOMATIC WASHERS RECOMMEND Tide!

In these automatics, no other washday product know

NOTHING ELSE

(with or without suds)

WILL WASH AS CLEAN AS TIDE

–yet is so mild!

SEE THE NEW Laundry Queen AUTOMATIC AT YOUR DEALER'S

Bruce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

Why don't we take more time to live?

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

COURTESY OF THE ART INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO

"Landscape With Flight of Geese," by an anonymous artist. Hanging scroll; ink and color on silk. Height 25½", width 15". Thirteenth–fourteenth century.

A FEW days ago I received a questionnaire in my mail from a person who is writing a book based on inquiries about how selected people "make every minute of the day count." She didn't say count for what, but by inference she obviously meant count for furthering one's career. I sat down and answered the lady, but not, I am afraid, as she anticipated. Instead I praised the value of "wasted time," especially to a writer, claiming my trouble to be that I don't "waste" enough of it.

For it is in hours of apparent idleness that thoughts form themselves; in times of apparently idle observations, recollection, meditation. One doesn't declare to oneself, "Now I will devote one hour to thought or meditation." They just creep in to occupy that hour when there is nothing else one must do—no deadline to meet, no manuscript to correct, no housework that must be done, no engagement—delicious time to waste. It is in "wasted" time that one recovers the energy and finds the ideas that give one a fresh start.

"Time," said an Arab poet, "is not measured by clock or calendar but by the intensity of experience."

The most intense experiences are not always externally stimulated, and no external experience is intense unless it is internally digested.

I agree with the lady who wrote me from beautiful Colorado regarding time and travel to the effect that the faster you travel the less you see; the farther you go the less, possibly, you may comprehend; and the best of all journeys are made for no concrete or definable purpose.

Most of my own travels (and they have encompassed a bit of the globe) have been purposeful—made with the journalist's objective of ascertaining certain facts, and planned in advance, as: On the 12th I shall arrive in Paris, and see So-and-so; on the 15th I shall spend 4 days in Berlin, then 2 in Frankfurt, and 2 in Bonn; on the 24th I shall fly to Rome; the 28th, Cairo, etc. etc., with appointments scheduled for every hour. It is useful, it is necessary, it may contribute to making me change my mind or confirm previous opinions, but it does little to re-create me.

This sort of travel gives one a delusion of sameness of people, problems and life the world over. One passenger airplane differs hardly at all from another, whether it be American, British, Italian, Dutch, Swiss or Middle Eastern, and neither do the passengers.

But a third-class railroad carriage is very different in England, Italy, Germany or Greece. All the "Ritz" hotels of the world are so much alike that one can wake up in Claridge's in London or the Semiramis in Cairo without consciousness of radical change. Externally, humanity is much alike—perhaps too much so. But internally there are deep, deep differences, and it is in the experiences of differences, and in the minutiae of observations, that the landscape of the soul is widened.

Americans travel more, and farther, than they ever have in history, but the extent to which their understanding is thereby enlarged is dubious. Travel, to serve its best purpose, requires that one ease oneself into new scenes and values; that, almost imperceptibly to oneself, one discards, bit by bit, one or another of one's own habits and prejudices. We must free ourselves of these and of normal cares in order to travel with open eyes, minds and hearts, in a condition to accept experiences. Traveling at high speed, one arrives exactly as one left home. Nothing has happened in between, as inner preparation.

My husband, who three years ago made his fourth visit to Tahiti and the South Seas, for the first time by air, to stay two months, complained, "It took me two months to become accustomed. Then I had to leave." CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Ruth Mills Teague
Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford Wood, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe
Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado
Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey, Laura Date

Recipes for Salads that go with Lamb...

LIKE ANY OTHER SALADS,

THEY'RE BEST DRESSED

BY Kraft

What kinds of salad go best with lamb? Light, bright fruit salads, say the experts . . . especially with a touch of mint. And of course asparagus is a natural.

As for the salad dressings—you've no problem there. Kraft has a whole line of favorites, ready and waiting. There's Miracle Whip, best-liked of any dressing for salads in the whole wide world. Three delightful French dressings. And the finest of mayonnaise.

So pick your salad dressings from the Kraft shelf at your store. Compliments come easy with salads dressed by Kraft!

Kraft Salad Dressings are also available in Canada

WITH LEG OF LAMB . . . MINTED PEAR SALAD

Heat together a 10-oz. glass of mint jelly and ½ cup canned pear juice. Add several drops of green food coloring. Place 8 canned pear halves in the melted jelly. Let stand, basting occasionally, until light green in color. Drain the pears. For ea serving, place 2 halves, cut side on a plate, with a spoonful of Kr Mayonnaise or Miracle Whip in ea half. Arrange Bibb lettuce on eit side and garnish with tiny leave Tastes different because it is different There's nothing else anywhere like Miracle Whip Salad Dressing. It's a unique type of dressing, combining the best qualities of good old-fashioned boiled dressing and fine mayonnaise. No other dressing has ever even approached the one and only Miracle Whip in popularity. Taste it and you'll see why!

Such rich, firm-bodied mayonnaise Kraft Kitchen Fresh Mayonnaise is made with extra egg yolks for extra richness and firm body. Even when you mix it with tart juices, it never curdles or separates. Try diluting it half-and-half with tomato juice. You'll find it's still deliciously rich and smooth.

WITH LAMB STEW . . . FRUIT SALAD BOWL

For each serving, tear curly endive and head lettuce into bite-sized pieces—enough to fill an individual salad bowl. Add orange sections, pineapple chunks and halved strawberries. Toss with Miracle French or Kraft French Dressing. If you like a touch of onion and garlic, you'll enjoy Miracle French. If you like a thick French dressing that doesn't separate, Kraft French should be your choice.

Touched with onion and garlic When you want a robustly seasoned French dressing—on seafood for instance, or tossed greens—try Kraft's famous Miracle French. Also, compliments will come your way if you brush Miracle French Dressing over lamb chops before you broil them.

Most popular French dressing Kraft French is far and away the most popular French dressing ever offered for sale. Not too sharp, not too bland, it has a just right flavor that appeals to children as well as grownups. This is a thick French dressing that doesn't separate.

WITH LAMB CHOPS . . . ITALIAN ASPARAGUS SALAD

For each serving, arrange leaf lettuce on a salad plate. Place a slice of head lettuce on it and top with several cooked asparagus spears. Sprinkle with sliced green onions. Serve with Casino. Casino is the newest of Kraft's three French Dressings, and a big hit. It's somewhat garlic-y, somewhat sweet, a perfect base for variations like Roquefort dressing as well as to serve "as is".

A little bit sweet—a little bit garlic-y New Casino has a most intriguing flavor . . . sweet, with a tang, and a touch of garlic too. It takes twelve different seasonings to get this special flavor! For easy, delightful variety in your salads, it's a good idea to keep all of Kraft's three French Dressings on hand.

For homemade French dressing, Kraft has a very special, smooth-blending Oil that mixes superbly with other ingredients. Kraft all-purpose Oil gives beautiful results in cooking, too.

KRAFT
THE NAME THAT MEANS WONDERFUL

new WEST BEND®

2 to 5 and 6 to 8 cup
Flavo-matics®

Set of two AUTOMATIC PERCOLATORS... $23.45*

... less than you'd expect to pay for one!

6 TO 8 CUP
POLISHED
ALUMINUM
$12.50*

2 TO 5 CUP
POLISHED
ALUMINUM
$10.95*

Mother's Day Gift
OR WEDDINGS, ANNIVERSARIES, BIRTHDAYS

the automatic percolators that make coffee taste better

With West Bend's new Flavo-matic Twosome you can make the right amount of coffee for any occasion—no more, no less—and save coffee every day. Beautifully matched in design, these Flavo-matics provide automatic coffee service from 2 to 13 cups or more. The set (2 to 5 and 6 to 8 cup) costs a total of only $23.45—two for less than you'd expect to pay for one! You'll trim your coffee bills, too—because the exclusive percolation method actually uses less ground coffee. And you'll brew the most delicious coffee —unequaled by any other coffee maker, regardless of price.

2-5 CUPS—BREAKFAST

6-8 CUPS—DINNER

13 CUPS OR MORE—PARTIES

* Prices include cord and excise tax

Flavo-matics also available in copper color and gleaming chrome; ask your dealer

WEST BEND ALUMINUM CO.
DEPT. 675, WEST BEND, WISCONSIN

at leading housewares, gift and appliance stores; prices slightly higher in Canada.

FRYER-ROASTER-SERVER
$24.50*

STAINLESS STEEL MIXING BOWLS
SET OF 3
$6.75

ELECTRIC BEAN POT
$7.50*

ELECTRIC TEA KETTLE
$10.95*
NON-ELECTRIC TRIG. $4.95

ELECTRIC CORN POPPER
$6.95*

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

Of all the ways to see and feel the unfamiliar, the best way is to walk. Many years ago I walked in a party of three from Innsbruck to Venice. Since then I have traveled widely in Italy, mostly by car, but never have I had such an unforgettable journey. Its memory is a treasure.

I suppose the distance, on the roads we took, avoiding where possible the main highways and zigzagging, is something over 300 miles. We started in early September and arrived in Venice six weeks later, which is no athletic record—an average of about seven miles a day. But, of course, we did not press ahead every day. In lovely or fascinating places we lingered, tempted to stay a week, or a month, or forever. The longest distance we walked in one day was twenty dull miles.

The incalculable charm about that journey was that we never knew where we would find a meal or spend the night. We walked until we began to be tired and then kept our eyes peeled for any kind of promising tavern or albergo.

I had, from the beginning, gone on strike against a knapsack. I would use my legs but not be a pack horse. I wore a tweed suit, a pull-over, and carried or wore a hooded lightweight but many-pocketed raincoat, which stored a nightgown, dressing gown and folding slippers in an eight-by-ten-inch pouch, a pair of rubbers, and a small kit with comb, tooth paste, toothbrush, soap, washcloth, powder case and lipstick. At night I washed my underthings of cotton tricot—nylon was not yet invented—and when anything wore out discarded it and bought a substitute. We all wore strong handmade shoes of the ski type and they lasted the journey.

Sinclair Lewis, who had initiated the journey—he was a great walker—was laden like a burro, chiefly with books, for the thought of spending a night with nothing to read appalled him more than the possibility of bugs. Neither appalled me. After a day from dawn to dark in the open air, I slept the moment my head touched a pillow and regardless of comfort or convenience. Nor did we encounter serious uncleanliness—although we noticed other differences!

ALL of the South Tirol belonged to Austria before World War I, and the northern part where we started out is still Austro-German, partly in population and distinctly so in civilization. There, in whatever little inn we stopped, we found if not a bath, hot water, and if not from a tap, out of a copper can, so we could have a sponge and foot bath. Bed and table linen were always clean and dry. In the tinier places, strong-legged maids or the daughter of the tavern keeper would drag a "sit-bath" into our rooms.

As we moved south into territory culturally and indubitably Italian, the sit-bath disappeared, along with the tiled stove to heat the rooms. The linen was just as clean as ever, but it was usually damp—and why this is so in Italy except in classy hotels, I never could find out.

The food changed too—from Schnitzels, and Bratens with varieties of vegetables, and the ubiquitous and delicious Austrian sweets, to pastas, bits of veal cooked in Marsala, tomatoes cooked and uncooked, cheese and fruit. No more whipped cream but blacker, stronger, sweeter, bitterer coffee. The wayside crosses changed, too, as we moved southward. The severe Gothic Christs became more ebullient, and, somehow, indescribably, more pagan.

One would think that people living cheek by jowl with each other would adopt each other's ways, but they do not. Precisely at the places where they begin to mix—at the frontiers—some stubborn pride, or fear—I don't know what—make them think of themselves as "outposts." Why is it?

AT any rate, those who have traveled slowly through the uncosmopolitan parts of Europe, staying in wayside taverns or cheap pensions, shopping in little towns, talking with unimportant people, are unlikely to share the easy optimism of those who have thought one could, at a stroke, create a United Europe. The peoples set themselves apart from each other, cherishing in their unconscious depths what is peculiar to them, guarding it even against the outwardly "superior."

Bolzano or Merano might as well be on the other side of the Brenner Pass in the North or Austrian Tirol for the look and feel of them, and they are full of German lore. Bolzano has been ruled by Bavarian counts and German bishops and then for over 500 years by the Austrian Hapsburgs. But south of Cortina d'Ampezzo, a lovely mountain resort, everything is as Italian as though no German rulers had ever set foot there, though it, too, was once part of Austria.

In Vicenza we stayed at a second-rate hotel, for we were three tramps with no clothes but those on our backs, and wandered with a guidebook but no guide, not in any hurry, not determined to absorb culture—just to see, drink in beauty, and idle over coffee on the piazza.

Verona is only 20 miles away, but we started late and didn't make it in one day, chilly as it was with drifts of rain—and to the weather I owe the memory of an unforgettable inn by the roadside, largely for cattle traders en route to the market in Verona. Few guests halted there overnight and certainly never in its history three Americans. The very idea of Americans walking so amazed the keeper and his buxom wife that they gave us two rooms—I shouldn't be surprised if they were their own—with enormous, very lumpy beds, but with clean though coarse linen, and washbasins, and big copper cans of hot water, and damp towels.

We were terribly hungry and for supper were shown into one of the most beautiful rooms I have ever seen. A true "common room," fully forty feet long, the floor paved with flagstones, and the vaulted ceiling crossed by dark oak beams. It had an open fire burning brightly under a beautifully vaulted arch and next to it, also set back under a matching arch, a tiled cookstove, with circular openings for charcoal fires, each made separately and kept blazing with a fan of turkey feathers.

There the wife of the tavern keeper was preparing the meal. Stretched through the center of the room was an oaken table four-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

PEONIES

By JOHN ROBERT QUINN

As long as peonies unfold
Their faultless plumage, white,
Plum-red and pink,
I know that I shall think
Of other peonies—
Floating along the edge
Of grassy memories,
Drowsing upon bent stems
In the transitory shade.

Old neighbors come to mind:
The Thurstons, Galloways,
Missouri Riggs, who sat
At the window, sewing the seams
Of overlapping years.

The housewives took their shears
And cut immense bouquets
Whose fragrance filled
Cool dining rooms and spilled
Upon the parlor rug.

Sometimes they filled a crock
And when their work was done,
Went to the resting place
Of some deep-rooted one
Who loved, perhaps too well,
Beauty that throbbed like a bell.

General Foods, creators of timesaving Minute Rice, Jell-O Instant Puddings and Instant Maxwell House Coffee, proudly present the...

NEW FROSTING SENSATION!

MAKES "CAN'T FAIL" FLUFFY FROSTING WITHOUT COOKING!

Even if you've never made a fluffy frosting before, you simply can't fail with Minute-man Instant Frosting Mix!

No cooking! Just add to cold water and beat. Presto! You've got all the frosting you need—and more—for two big 9-inch layers.

So smooth, so luscious, so easy-spreading—"can't-fail" Minute-man is even better than homemade! Its glossy good looks—and good taste—last as long as the cake.

Minute-man won't get sugary, won't soak into the layers. Buy a box today!

NO COOKING!
NOTHING TO BOIL. JUST ADD TO COLD WATER AND BEAT!

FOOLPROOF!
TURNS OUT PERFECT EVERY TIME —AND STAYS PERFECT!

BETTER THAN HOMEMADE!
ALWAYS SMOOTH AND FLUFFY. DOESN'T GET "SUGARY" WON'T SOAK INTO CAKE!

FRANCES BARTON
Consumer Service Department
General Foods Corporation

Smart Girl!

SHE USES CUTICURA!

Hateful blemishes are cleared up—her skin is baby-soft, alluring!

GOWN AND VEIL BY BONWIT TELLER. COMPLEXION BY CUTICURA.

He fell in love with her clear, smooth, naturally radiant complexion—that unmistakable Cuticura look!

Unlike most medicated skin preparations, Cuticura does far more than help clear up externally caused pimples. It also helps counteract blackheads, flaky dryness, oily shine. Helps repair damage from washing incorrectly or using preparations that starve and dry the skin. Wakes up your complexion tone.

It's a medically-tested fact! When you start using Cuticura Soap and Ointment regularly, your skin begins to glow again—often in just 7 days!

A two-way treatment—that's what most skin needs. And Cuticura gives you: An exquisite soap that alone of all leading soaps is superfatted and mildly medicated to help maintain the natural moisture and normal, healthy acidity of your skin. An effective ointment that contains a precious blend of softening and medicated ingredients that work while you sleep.

Cuticura is best! Hundreds of doctors say it. Clinical tests, use by certain leading hospitals, and the joy of thousands of happy brides prove it beyond question! Do get Cuticura Soap and Ointment today and see for yourself.

Available in Canada

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Cuticura

Proved Way to Lovelier Skin

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

teen feet long, its top a slab of wood four or five inches thick and scrubbed and sanded white as marble. Soon the room was full, obviously of cattlemen from the way they smelled, and we all sat together at the one table, with the tavern keeper and his sons and daughters. The meal was as simple as could be: mountains of pasta, every tendril coated with a hot and savory sauce of oil, saffron, onions, tomatoes, cheese, and a little ground meat; a huge bowl of salad greens, another huge dish of fruit—oranges, tangerines, and grapes—and bottles of north-Italian red wine.

We talked with our fellow guests in what halting Italian we commanded and they asked every sort of question and we did, too, including political questions about the Duce, already in power in Italy, and found among the guests both defenders and detractors.

We left after a wonderful breakfast of eggs poached in olive oil, and as I recall it our stay cost us less than $1.50 apiece.

We lingered in Padua, a larger city, where there was much to see and to remember. Galileo taught at its university. The little church of Madonna del'Arena has every inch of its walls covered on three levels by frescoes by Giotto. After the war I heard in Rome that our bombers had demolished this forever irreplaceable treasure, and burst into tears. But it was not so. God (I am firmly convinced) had protected it.

But this is not a travelogue, it is but to make the point that the slower one travels the more one sees, and recollections are etched upon memory for a lifetime. A part of the experience is its discomforts and, then, the ecstasy of a fire when one is cold, of a simple meal to assuage a ravenous hunger, and of a warm bed, however lumpy, when one feared one might find none at all.

We had sent trunks ahead to Venice, where we had engaged rooms in the Royal Danieli. Now what luxury: a Lucullan bath; dressing for an exquisite dinner in our finest clothes; calling up friends.

Experience is intensified by need, and contrasts. But who, today, has "time" for such experiences? Who has time to accumulate indestructible memories?

One need not go so far or take so long for such a journey. It may be around the next block or up a neglected nearby road. It is wherever one goes traveling light, divested of one's habits and prejudices, incognito, even to oneself. The open road is the road of the open mind, the open senses, the open heart.

CP

UNITED CEREBRAL PALSY

Every year in the United States, approximately 10,000 babies are struck by cerebral palsy. Without help, many of them will never stand alone, walk or speak. With proper treatment, many can go to school, receive job training and become self-supporting.

During May, UNITED CEREBRAL PALSY is holding its sixth annual campaign. The goal is $10 million—to provide more research programs, trained specialists, schools and workshops.

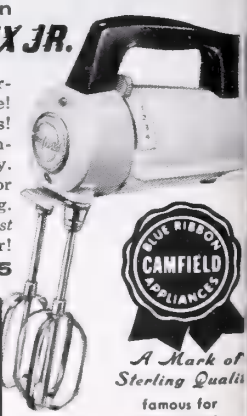
"You Are Their Hope"

SUPPORT

UNITED CEREBRAL PALSY

On Mother's Day give her a

Camfield



CAMFIELD
is for CAMFIELD (no need to say more) is for ALWAYS the gift she'll adore!
is for MOTHER you'll give her the best!
is the 10-day FREE TRIAL TEST!
INSTANT SETTING that's quick as a flash!
EASY MIXING from cookies to hash.
is for LASTING with beauty and "snazz" is the DARLING she'll think of you as!

WITH TWO LIFETIME STAINLESS STEEL BOWLS!
10-DAY FREE TRIAL!
2-YEAR WARRANTY!

CAMFIELD
Blue Ribbon
POWER-MIX
Electric Grinder! Built-in Power drive! 10-kitchen-tested speeds! Portable mixing head! Folds, blends, beats, juices, grinds—takes the work and drudgery out of meal preparation!
ONLY $42.50

CAMFIELD
Blue Ribbon
POWER-MIX JR.
Five speeds! Finger-tip beater release! Full size beaters! Lightweight, compact, stores easily. Stands on end for easy draining. America's newest portable mixer!
ONLY $19.95

BLUE RIBBON CAMFIELD APPLIANCES

A Mark of Sterling Quality famous for

FRI-COOK
KNIFE SHARPENER
AUTOMATIC TOAST MAID
STAINLESS STEEL COFFEE MAID

FREE!
With Purchase of Either Camfield Mixer.
Hi-Gloss Food Warmer
$2.00 Value

CAMFIELD
Grand Haven, Michigan
In Canada distributed through Maurice I. Ensley, Toron

Reed & Barton puts excitement into sterling

FRANCIS I

Solid silver at its most magnificent! Here is a truly remarkable pattern displaying a profusion of fifteen different fruit motifs. A 6-piece place setting, $36.50.*

SILVER SCULPTURE

Here is beauty that could come only from the gleam of silver itself. Reed & Barton's dramatic new pattern is sculptured sterling silver. A 6-piece place setting, $32.50.*

CLASSIC ROSE

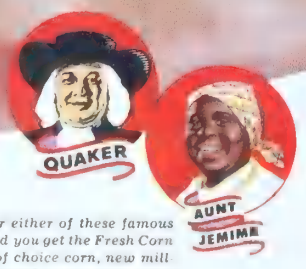
A sterling marriage! This pattern combines a functional modern shape with a deeply carved rose—symbol of chivalry and romance. A 6-piece setting, $31.00.*

*Price per 6-piece setting is for knife, fork, teaspoon, soup spoon, salad fork, and butter spreader. Federal Tax is included. At all leading silverware stores. Write Reed & Barton, Dept. J-52 for information and free booklet.

REED & BARTON

SILVERMASTERS SINCE 1824 • TAUNTON, MASSACHUSETTS

What's New? What's Wonderful? Corn Meal with



Fresh Corn Flavor

Be sure it's Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal

Put Fresh Corn Flavo
table tonight, with this Frankie 'n Johnny 1-dish d easy recipe is on the next new-day corn meal with Corn Flavor—Quaker
Jemima)—is at your groce

Quaker CORN MEAL

. . . HOMINY GRITS AND QUICK GRITS, TOO

Look for either of these famous faces and you get the Fresh Corn Flavor of choice corn, new milling methods, new packaging.

Aunt Jemim CORN MEAL

. . . HOMINY GRITS, TOO

New Corn Meal Idea!

Frankie 'n Johnny 1-Dish Dinner

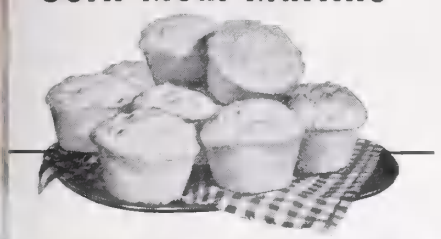
Barbecued Franks meet Corn Bread in a quick and easy dish

And such corn bread—so simple to make, so rich with Fresh Corn Flavor!

(8 servings)

Corn Bread:
1 cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal (white or yellow)
1 cup sifted flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup shortening, soft
1 egg
1 cup milk
¼ cup chopped onion
½ cup grated cheese

Topping:
8 frankfurters
¼ cup pickle relish
¼ cup chopped onion
Barbecue Sauce



For Corn Bread, sift together dry ingredients into bowl. Add shortening, egg and milk. Beat with a rotary beater until smooth. Do not overbeat. Stir in onion and cheese. Pour batter into greased 9 or 10-inch baking pan or skillet. Bake in hot oven (425°F.) 20 to 25 minutes.

While corn bread is baking, slit frankfurters diagonally almost all the way through. Combine pickle relish and chopped onion; fill slits with mixture.

Arrange frankfurters over corn bread. Spoon part of the barbecue sauce over franks; broil until franks are lightly browned. Serve immediately with additional sauce.

What do husbands order when away from home? Corn Muffins! Here's tasty new muffin variation:

New Quick Trick with Corn Meal Muffins

Hawaiian Corn Muffins Easy as 1-2-3

Use the recipe for corn bread on your box or sack of Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal, simply add ⅔ cup drained crushed pineapple. Bake in greased muffin tins.

So modern with Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal. These new-day corn meals mix so faster, cook faster, and have that wonderful Fresh Corn Flavor. Easy recipes on every package.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Holly and Sister—windows are for looking out of.

JILL

FAITH is a strange and wondrous thing. All winter the lilacs stand with bleak gray branches leaning into the icy wind. They look as dead as anything under the sun could possibly look. Sometimes as I watch the chickadees swinging on sweet doughnuts in the middle of the biggest white lilac, I wonder at the perfect knowledge I have that lilacs will bloom again.

And now, quite casually, the miracle begins again and the purple cloud of lilacs fills the air with deep rich fragrance. The white lilacs open pearl-colored clusters by the well house. One would think it had been forever spring!

Lilacs seem to me to be more the theme of New England than even the rosy ramblers that come in June. And yet they are not only in New England, for I remember in Northern Wisconsin, in Door County, how we used to drive out to gather lilacs from deserted gardens. We would find a blackened stone chimney where once a house stood, and the lilacs still faithfully blooming, giving a kind of sweet immortality, I thought, to the home that was gone.

Now Jill comes in, smudged with garden dirt after putting in more beans. When the maples are in leaf most of the planting must be done. How wise the maples are to set our calendar! From now on until the black frost, the garden is a constant excitement. The crisp pink rhubarb, the delicate green asparagus, the ruby radishes are succeeded by the lettuce, the peas and the scallions. (We always think with pleasure of the day Jill's daughter, aged ten, said she was tired of being the family scallion.)

The edible-podded peas, sometimes called snow peas, sometimes Chinese peas, make a whole supper for us as soon as they come in. Pods and all, translucent jade, they go in the pot with a few drops of water—and we are misers with water for all vegetables. Seasoned with freshly ground pepper, a dollop of butter or margarine, and salt—and if we are not dieting that day, a spoonful of sweet cream at the very last—they go in deep bowls. Crispy, crusty French bread done with garlic and paprika until it pipes with splendor goes with them. And coffee, and that is that. We take seconds and maybe thirds and then recklessly dunk the wedges of bread in the juice in the bottom of the bowl!

"Next year," Jill always says, "I'll plant more of these."

We eat in the Quiet Garden, where the Lincoln lilacs hang over the picket fence, and the narcissus and late tulips glow in the sunset light. Even if we have to wear sweaters, we eat there, it is so lovely.

The lilies of the valley are spreading, we note, and the roses budding. The lemon thyme covers half the flagstones in the center of the little plot, and when you step on it, such a sweet odor comes forth.

And then between every pair of pickets is a face, either a cocker or Irish face. For the Quiet Garden is the sole and solitary spot we inhabit that is closed to the dogs, and that is because one step mows down a whole border of bulbs and I do like a few spring flowers. They all go out with us as we carry the trays, and they help. Then they line up and watch as we eat, and before we know it, we begin to feel guilty and promise we shall be right out, just in a few minutes!

Actually they are only a hand's reach away, but there is that fence, and they all feel no fence should ever be between them and us. Jill says any day Holly will appear with a placard, done by Sister, who is the intellectual, saying "Unfair to cockers and Irish!"

The children were here for the week-end, and I am constantly amazed at how much they know, and how much they can eat. Over Saturday and Sunday, the biggest roast in the freezer was consumed to the last sliver, along with quarts of vegetables from the freezer, since there is not yet enough in the garden. One pie, a dozen frosted cupcakes, about a pound of fresh Cheddar, a batch of chocolate pudding, a round of Yorkshire pudding with the roast, two heads of lettuce in salads, and at the end I made a big spaghetti casserole of which one spoonful was left.

We simply love to see them eat. It is so tiresome to count calories week after

CONTINUED ON PAGE 105

Nothing shines aluminum like BRILLO Soap Pads

Brillo® polishes as it cleans! With these sturdy metal-fiber soap pads you can forget about scouring powders, brushes, dishrags. No soaking, no hard scrubbing . . . aluminum gleams like new! Dandy for stove-tops, burners, casseroles, too.

Brillo Soap Pads (red box) Soap-filled pads
Brillo Cleanser (green box) Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap in every BRILLO Soap Pad

THRIFTIER!
5 and 12 pad boxes

Slimming Salad Meals...

. . . with the lighter touch of your homemade Wesson French dressing

Isn't it nice to know that these hearty well-balanced salads make complete meal —low in calories? And—more good news fo weight-watchers: your light, homemad Wesson dressing helps keep salads slim ming. You can make it lower in calorie than heavy bought dressings by varyin ingredients as you choose. It goes further too, so you naturally use less. It make salad meals satisfying, dieting easier.

In all the world, there's no other oil s light and delicate and fresh as Wesson Oil That's why your Wesson dressing is freshes of all. It has the delicacy of flavor, the home made goodness that bring out the best i salads. You make French dressing in jus one minute with Wesson Oil and Hein Vinegar, season it to suit your family' taste exactly. It costs less than bough dressings, so you save on every salad!

WESSON 1-MINUTE FRENCH DRESSIN

1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ cup Heinz Vinegar
¾ cup Wesson Oil

Combine and shake well in covered ja Shake well before using. Makes 1 cup.

For a sharper dressing use ⅓ cup vinegar an ⅔ cup Wesson Oil.*

Chef's Salad Plate (447 calories)

3 ounces of chicken (about ¾ cup) and carrot, cut in Julienne strips, 1 tomato an 1 hard-cooked egg, sliced, on bed of curl endive, centered with a cauliflowerет. (Whe you are not counting calories so closely, yo may want to use lean ham strips instead chicken.) Serve with 2 tablespoons of—Ketchup Dressing: To ½ cup of 1-Minute French dressing add 2 tablespoons Heinz Ketchup and 1 tablespoon chopped chives.

Shrimp Plate (346 calories)

Tomato aspic ring (½ cup) filled with ½ cup of shrimp (such as Blue Plate or Gu Kist brand shrimp), 8 cucumber slices, 1 asparagus spears and sprigs of water cres Serve with 2 tablespoons of—

Nippy French Dressing: To ½ cup of 1-Minute French dressing add 2 tablespoons chopped green onions, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard and 1 teaspoon horseradish.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE

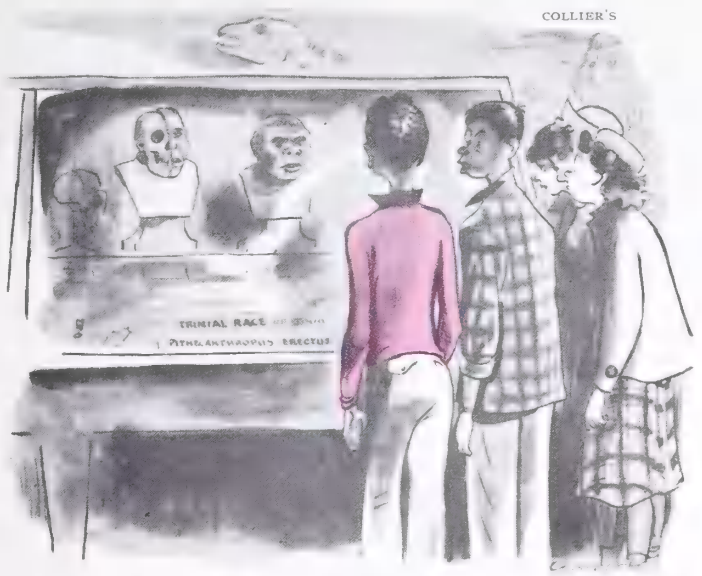
— for Salads, Frying, Chiffon Cakes, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"Maybe I should try some other line of work."



ASSIGNMENT CHILDREN is a motion picture of the most engaging children in the world, and of Danny Kaye at his most sprightly, his most gay, his most kind. It is a movie not to be missed—the record of a visit made last year by Danny Kaye to six countries in Asia where the United Nations, through UNICEF, is doing such wonders for children. Danny himself trots merrily through every scene and tells the story as he trots. He tosses a ball to one solemn-eyed youngster, he visits another in a hospital, and he brings smiles—often laughter—to all those brown-skinned broad-faced little Asiatic boys and girls who can't understand a word he says. When you've seen it you'll have the heartiest respect for the UNICEF and real affection for Danny Kaye.

●

Children are always important. Their reading is important. WHY JOHNNY CAN'T READ, and What You Can Do About It is a serious, provocative book about the way to teach children to read. It is by Rudolf Flesch, of Teachers' College, Columbia, author of The Art of Readable Writing, The Art of Plain Talk and other crystal-clear books on the use of our language. This one is a pretty severe indictment of the method of teaching reading used in most of our schools, but not all our schools, and therein lies the burden of his argument. Completely inexperienced, I naturally cannot recommend Doctor Flesch's method, which is "phonics," but I can recommend that anyone concerned with the subject should read his book.

●

In UNDERSTANDING TEEN-AGERS, Paul Landis explains to us adults how to help adolescents. Better yet, how not to hinder them. He bases his advice on a thousand autobiographies written by college students, in which they tell about the experiences that they believe helped them most during adolescence. We have to face it: the adolescents of today are more grown up than their parents. They have to make more moral decisions before they're twenty than their grandparents made in a lifetime. Their burden is as great as ours, but there are many ways by which we can lighten it. OVER

"It took thousands of years for the human race to become civilized, but you and I are supposed to do it in fifteen."

have grapefruit instead

Worth its weight in health

Overweight comes from calorie-loaded drinks as well as heavy foods. So pick your drinks with care. A chilled glass of grapefruit juice quenches your thirst, perks you up, yet lets you keep your weight down, too.

You'll get lively, refreshing, Florida flavor and lots of vitamin C—one vitamin you need every day. Florida grapefruit is strong on vitamins, low on calories.

Don't overlook the calories that come in glasses. They can make the difference. Have grapefruit juice instead. And have grapefruit sections, too—in appetizing salads and desserts. Keep in mind—Florida grapefruit is low in calories, kind to your waistline.

Florida Citrus Commission, Lakeland, Florida

FLORIDA Grapefruit

Can makes 4 big servings, less than 5¢ each. Keep pitcher chilled and filled

Ready-to-drink Florida Grapefruit juice in cans is a handy refresher Luscious! Have them as is for breakfast or dessert. Have them in salads

a NEW KIND of deodorant!

ban lotion deodorant rolls on

More effective than creams! Easier to apply than sprays!*

This is BAN—the new lotion deodorant that rolls on with a revolving marble built into the bottle top. BAN automatically applies just the right amount of pleasing lotion to check perspiration moisture . . . stop odor for a full 24 hours. Get new BAN today —98¢ wherever fine toiletries are sold.

- no drip—no waste—no messy fingers
- safe for normal skin
- protects round the clock
- keeps underarms dry for hours
- can be applied even after shaving
- won't stain clothes

Deodorant, Anti-perspirant, Pleasing lotion —all rolled into one —that's ban

A Product of Bristol-Myers

In a recent survey against the leading cream and spray deodorants, 7 out of 10 prefer BAN.*

One good way to take your mind off your troubles is the information test. NATURE ROUNDUP, by Robert E. Pinkerton, covers the field in question-and-answer form. Is there a mongoose in the United States? No. How do Siamese cats differ from the domestic variety? "A half-grown kitten will jump to the top of a six-foot post without a running start, but straight up. . . ." What is the most dangerous fish? No, it is not the shark, but the caribe of the Amazon River. Which is the oldest science? Astronomy. And did you know that because they understood the skies, the Egyptians in 3000 B.C. built the Great Pyramid so that light rays from the star Sirius-in-transit would pass down an inclined tunnel and touch the head of the dead Pharaoh? How deep is the ocean? Does altitude affect alcohol intake?

●

If you're in love—if you're a bride—if you've a home to furnish, take a look at OFF TO THE RIGHT START, by Marjorie Woods and Justine Feely. These two will tell you the difference between fine china and earthenware; how to test for "real"; the silver you can do without; where to get the lace tablecloth you dream about; why to use blanket covers.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Believe me, this is the last time I ever buy a four-poster bed."

Incidentally, beds or men must be getting longer because the new standard-size mattress is 82½ inches long.

●

The spring book list this year is bold, vigorous and dramatic. It's not a poetry-and-moonlight year, or philosophy and the ivory tower. The books are powerful.

SOMETHING OF VALUE will probably be the most talked about book of the year. This is Robert Ruark's novel about the Mau-Mau in Kenya, the terror, the outrages, the reprisals; the hard-drinking, enduring, tough British planters; the witchcraft religion, the ritual ceremonies, the cults of death and torture of the Kikuyu tribe. Specifically it is about one of those romantic White Hunters and his Kikuyu companion from childhood days on. It is a terrific book. It is violent, gory, brutal. But it tells the truth about Africa so that you can never forget it. It seizes you and hurls you out of your complacent safety.

●

Another strongly masculine novel is THE DAY THE CENTURY ENDED, by Francis Irby Gwaltney, a war novel with a monster of a captain, a soldier who fights back, and a penal battalion fighting the Japanese in the jungle.

●

A delicious lighthearted book is THE DINNER PARTY, by Gretchen Finletter, who wrote From the Top of the Stairs some years ago—about the three little Damrosches looking over the banister and watching the big Damrosches.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 26

You'll find the dress in the

Celanese

advertisement on page 88

at all these stores:

New York City	Lord & Taylor
Albany, N. Y.	M. M. Whitney
Appleton, Wisc.	H. C. Prange
Atlanta, Ga.	Davison-Paxon
Baltimore, Md.	Blum's, Inc.
Billings, Montana	Hart Albin Co.
Birmingham, Alabama	Loveman, Joseph & Loeb
Boston, Mass.	Jordan Marsh Co.
Brockton, Mass.	Fraser Dry Goods
Brownsville, Tenn.	Felsenthal's Dept. Store
Buffalo, N. Y.	L. L. Berger, Inc.
Cedar Rapids, Iowa	Newman's
Chambersburg, Pa.	Leiter Brothers
Champaign, Ill.	G. C. Willis
Charleston, W. Va.	Stone & Thomas
Charlotte, N. C.	Belk Bros.
Chattanooga, Tenn.	Loveman's
Chicago, Ill.	Charles A. Stevens & Co.
Cincinnati, Ohio	H. & S. Pogue Co.
Clinton, Iowa	J. D. Van Allen & Sons
Columbus, Ohio	Morehouse Fashion
Council Bluffs, Iowa	John Beno Co.
Dayton, Ohio	The Elder and Johnson Co.
Denver, Colorado	The Daniels & Fisher Stores Co.
Detroit, Mich.	The J. L. Hudson Co.
Dubuque, Iowa	Roshek Brothers
El Dorado, Arkansas	El Dorado House
Elgin, Ill.	Ackeman Brothers
Erie, Pa.	Erie Dry Goods
Evanston, Ill.	Lord's, Inc.
Fayetteville, N. C.	Fleishmann Style Shop
Ft. Wayne, Indiana	Earl Groth
Ft. Worth, Texas	Stripling's
Fresno, Calif.	E. Gottschalk & Co.
Galesburg, Ill.	Kellogg Drake Co.
Galveston, Texas	E. S. Levy Co.
Green Bay, Wisc.	H. C. Prange
Hagerstown, Md.	Leiter Brothers
Hartford, Conn.	Sage Allen
Harrisburg, Pa.	Bowman's, Inc.
Houston, Texas	Sakowitz Bros.
Indianapolis, Ind.	L. S. Ayres & Co.
Jacksonville, Fla.	Cohen Bros.
Kansas City, Kansas	Gormans, Inc.
Kansas City, Mo.	Harzfelds
Kokomo, Ind.	William H. Turner
Lafayette, Ind.	The Fashion, Inc.
Lexington, Ky.	Purcell Co.
Lincoln, Nebraska	Gold & Co.
Long Beach, Calif.	Buffums
Lynn, Mass.	Burrows & Sanborn, Inc.
Manistee, Mich.	A. P. Kennedy & Son
Memphis, Tenn.	Lowenstein's
Miami, Fla.	Burdine's, Inc.
Milwaukee, Wisc.	Gimbels
Minneapolis, Minn.	Dayton's
Naugatuck, Conn.	M. Freedman
Newark, N. J.	L. Bamberger & Co.
New Haven, Conn.	Ed Malley
New Orleans, La.	Maison Blanche Co.
Oakland, Calif.	Hale Bros.
Oklahoma City, Okla.	Kerr's
Omaha, Nebraska	J. L. Brandeis
Peru, Ind.	Senger Dry Goods
Philadelphia, Pa.	Bonwit Teller
Pittsburgh, Pa.	Gimbels
Plainfield, Ind.	Paul Harris Dept. Store
Portland, Oregon	Meier & Frank Co., Inc.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	Wallace Co.
Providence, R. I.	Gladdings
Racine, Wisc.	Zahn, D. G.
Roanoke, Va.	S. H. Heironimus
Rochester, N. Y.	Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co.
Sacramento, Calif.	Weinstock Lubin and Co.
Saginaw, Mich.	Seitner Bros.
Salt Lake City, Utah	Paris Co.
San Antonio, Tex.	Joske's of Texas
San Diego, Calif.	Walker Scott Co.
San Francisco, Calif.	Macy's
Santa Ana, Calif.	Buffum's Santa Ana
Schenectady, N. Y.	Wallace Co.
Seattle, Wash.	Bon Marche
Sheboygan, Wisc.	H. C. Prange
Sioux City, Iowa	Younker Davidson's
South Bend, Ind.	Robertson Brothers
St. Joseph, Mo.	Hirsch Bros.
St. Louis, Mo.	Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney
St. Paul, Minn.	Schuneman's
Stockton, Calif.	Smith & Lang
Sturgeon Bay, Wisc.	H. C. Prange
Superior, Wisc.	Roth Brothers
Syracuse, N. Y.	C. E. Chappell
Topeka, Kansas	Pelletier
Trenton, N. J.	S. P. Dunham & Co.
Tulsa, Okla.	Brown Dunkin
Van Wert, Ohio	John Earl
Vincennes, Ind.	Strashun-Hasty
Washington, D. C.	Frank R. Jelleff, Inc.
Waynesboro, Pa.	Leiter Brothers
Wheeling, W. Va.	Stone & Thomas
Williamsport, Pa.	L. L. Stearns
Wilson, N. C.	Lisabeth's
Woonsocket, R. I.	McCarthy's
Worcester, Mass.	Denholm & McKay
York, Pa.	S. Grumbacher
Youngstown, Ohio	G. M. McKelvey Co.

More vintage tobacco makes PHILIP MORRIS naturally gentle and mild

More delicate in flavor, too . . . for those with keen, young tastes

Only a perfect balance of sunshine and moisture produces vintage tobacco—with its qualities of gentleness and delicate flavor. These qualities tell why PHILIP MORRIS has made so many friends among younger smokers—with their fresher, unspoiled tastes. Follow Young America's lead. Enjoy PHILIP MORRIS in the convenient Snap-Open pack.

Philip Morris

KING SIZE or REGULAR

To celebrate our 120th Anniversary

we, the makers of WALLACE STERLING, bring you this

UNPRECEDENTED "TRADE IN to enable you to own the most beautiful sterling ever sculptured

Now you can turn in your old sterling or silverplated flatware and get an amazingly generous allowance toward a brand new and complete 52-piece set of beautiful Wallace Sterling—in any one of the eight famous "Third Dimension Beauty" patterns, shown below.

Save as much as $50 or $75 or even more. Actually the flatware you trade-in could be worth as much as $130 depending upon the value of the pieces you turn-in. See the column at the right for trade-in allowances. Visit your local Wallace dealer to select your favorite Wallace pattern.

In addition you will be given absolutely free a handsome solid mahogany drawer chest, regularly valued at $30. Never before, and probably never again, will your old outmoded flatware be worth so much.

But you must act quickly. This big anniversary trade-in offer is only good for a limited time—April 24th to June 30th! Only available through authorized Wallace dealers.

HERE'S HOW THIS UNUSUAL PLAN SAVES YOU MONEY:

- Collect the pieces of your unwanted or outmoded silver flatware. It may be old or new—all sterling or silverplate—or an assortment of both.
- Any make, any pattern, any pieces are acceptable—no matter how battered, beaten or tarnished they are.
- You may "Trade-in" any number of pieces from 1 to 52—the greater number of pieces—the greater your credit will be.
- You can arrange easy budget terms. Your turn-in silver can serve as your first payment and pennies a day afterward can take care of the balance. But you can enjoy the thrill of your new sterling right away.
- This offer is good for a limited time—April 24th to June 30th—and is good for the purchase of Wallace 52-piece Anniversary Sets only.

HERE'S HOW THE PLAN WORKS!

Suppose the silver you have has a trade-in value of $82.00 and the Wallace pattern you select is Rose Point:—

52-piece set of Rose Point in drawer-chest. Retail Value	$332.00
Your trade-in allowance	82.00
Cost after trade-in credit	$250.00
Value of Chest, FREE with each purchase	30.00
YOU PAY ONLY	$220.00

THE 52-PIECE ANNIVERSARY SET!
Contains 52 pieces, service for eight, in your choice of pattern. Set includes:

8 teaspoons	8 salad forks
8 luncheon forks	8 butter spreaders
8 luncheon knives	2 tablespoons
8 cream soup spoons	1 butter knife
	1 sugar shell

ASK YOUR WALLACE DEALER ABOUT HIS BUDGET PLAN.

OFFER

YOU RECEIVE THE FOLLOWING FOR SILVER FLATWARE:

(All sterling is stamped "Sterling" on back)

Sterling	Trade-in Value per piece teaspoon	.89
luncheon knife	.70
luncheon fork	1.38
butter spreader FH	.81
cream soup spoon	1.04
salad fork (indiv.)	1.11
dinner knife	.84
dinner fork	1.60
dessert spoon	1.38
soup spoon	1.34
bouillon spoon	.77
butter spreader HH	.55
oyster fork	.66
coffee spoon A.D.	.48
ice cream fork	.70
iced beverage spoon	.93
orange spoon	.96
salt spoon (indiv.)	.34
berry spoon	2.50
bon bon scoop	.78
butter knife	1.15
cheese server	.55
cold meat fork—large	1.94
cream ladle	1.00
gravy ladle	1.64
jelly server	1.00
lemon fork	.63
olive fork	.70
pie server	.84
salad fork serving	2.35
salad spoon serving	2.50
salad fork (wood)	.84
salad spoon (wood)	.84
sugar spoon	1.04
sugar tong	.78
vegetable spoon	1.83
table spoon	1.83
tomato server	1.75
roast knife	1.52
roast fork	1.52
steak fork	.84
steak knife	.84
child's knife HH	.55
child's fork	.81
child's spoon (teaspoon small)	.70
baby fork	.70
baby spoon	.70

Silverplated flatware
25¢ for each piece

Now... discover how good really fresh tea can be!

You'll be amazed—as tea experts were—at the difference Tender Leaf's New Seal-Tight Foil Wrap makes in freshness, fragrance and flavor!

It's a fact—only really fresh tea is full-flavored tea! We proved this in tests all over the country—compared tea in ordinary packages with Tender Leaf protected by this new seal-tight aluminum foil wrap. Frankly, even we were amazed at the difference! You can actually see Tender Leaf's brighter color, smell its finer fragrance, taste its richer, deeper flavor. Discover for yourself how good fresh tea can be . . . try Tender Leaf Brand today!

TENDER LEAF—FRESHEST, MOST FLAVORFUL TEA YOU CAN BUY!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22

Now she is picturing family life in the suburbs. The family consists of three daughters, a father who is always leaving the family group to go write his book, and usually ends up taking a nap; and mother herself, who writes the journal that is this book. It is very funny, in the Ed Streeter, Kimbrough-Skinner tradition, but special and individual. It's funny because you see yourself on every page.

●

Another charming novel is FATHER VIKENTY, by Paul Chavchavadze. In this one you do not find yourself, but a handful of people tucked away in odd corners, of whose existence you would normally be quite unaware. They are of all sorts, old Russian aristocrats, Russian-born socialists who regard the Reds and the Whites with equal animosity, even a few escaped Bolshevists. All that these people have in common is a language and Father Vikenty.

Father Vikenty is priest in the Russian Orthodox Church in uptown New York. His real vocation was wrestling, and his truest friend is a boxer dog. Yet his heart is truly with God. It's a heart-warming, glowing story, often very amusing, sometimes very touching. It may remind you in spots of Anything Can Happen, by the Papashvilys, also of Father Malachi's Miracle. It's caviar, but cozy.

●

Then there's LAURETTE, by Marguerite Courtney—the biography of Laurette Taylor told by her daughter. Like Lillian Roth (I'LL CRY TOMORROW)

Laurette Taylor.

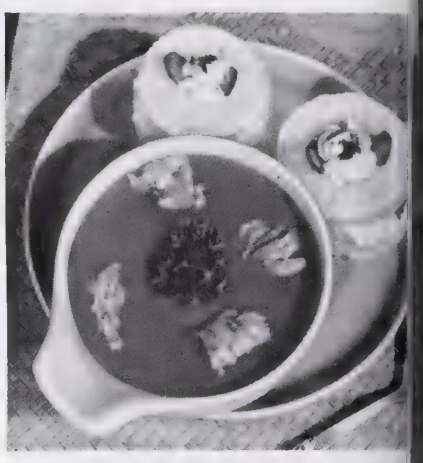
Laurette Taylor lived for many years in the dark oblivion of alcohol, made a comeback and, as many of us remember, appeared in Outward Bound and later as the star in The Glass Menagerie.

●

There's also a good spy story: THE PINNED MAN, by George Griswold. It's the Russians, the British and the Americans, pitting their Intelligences, two against the other, and all three way out ahead of the reader in guesses. A smart book.

●

If you're going to Maine this summer, or if you're a down-East old-timer who has raised coon cats and fished for cunners off the rocks, you'll enjoy CAMPING CHARACTERS ON CASCO BAY, by Katherine Berry. Perhaps you remember in the Regional Homes series in the JOURNAL a picture of "Spite House" in Maine. Miss Katherine Berry is one of the descendants of Spite House.



●

There's also MY LOVE AFFAIR WITH THE STATE OF MAINE, by Gertrude Mackenzie with Ruth Goode. I haven't read it yet, but I've fallen in love with the title. END

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! NEW SANDWICH AND SOUP RECIPES!

Piquant Egg Sandwiches
Toasted Ham Roll-Ups
Toasted Cheese Puffs
Seafood Fan Tans
Club Sandwich DeLuxe
Salmon Tomato Bi Cream of Corn Sou
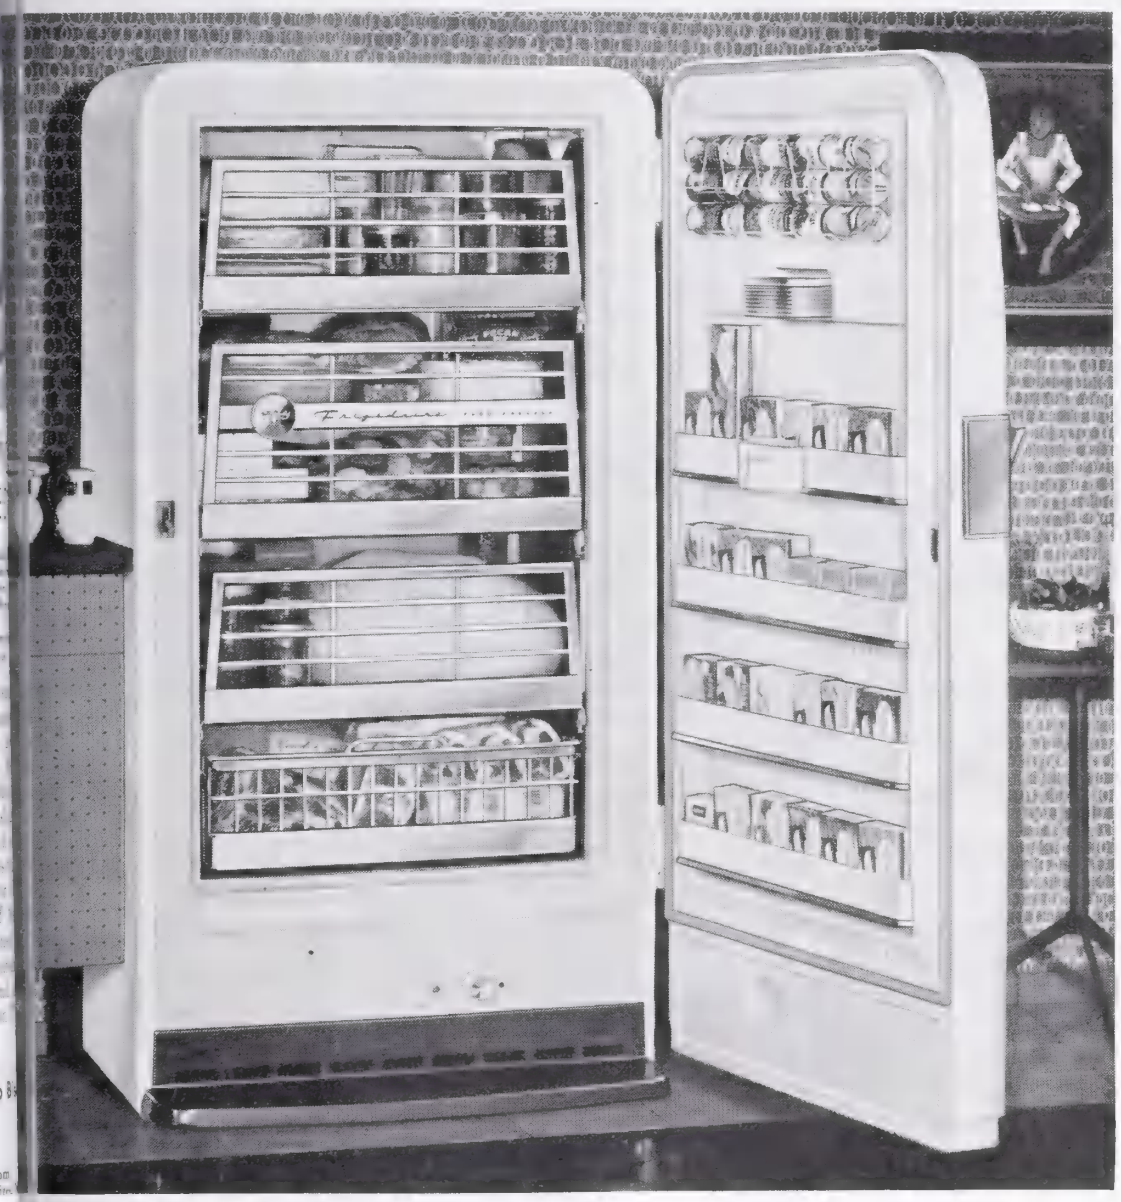
Tuna Chowder
Chicken Mushroon Soup
Cream of Tomato Cheese Soup

Looking for unusual soup-and-sand combinations? I'm sure your family enjoy these. The soups (5 in all) are cious and different—made with Mea Gold Milk as a creamy base. (Meadow G you know, is always pure and fresh as can be!) The 5 tempting sandwich re are widely varied—including types that for meat, poultry, seafood, eggs or ch Just be sure you use plenty of Mea Gold Butter in each. It's churned every day and wrapped in aluminum to protect its delicate flavor and ar Why not start with this Salmon To Bisque tonight?

Recipe for Salmon Tomato Bisq

2 tbs. Meadow Gold Butter
1 small onion, grated
1½ tbs. flour
1 cup Meadow Gold Coffee Cream
3 cups Meadow Gold Homogenized Mi
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
1 8-ounce can red salmon, drained and flaked
Salt and pepper
2 tbs. finely chopped parsley

Cook onion in butter; stir in flour. Add coffee cream and milk; cook until slightly thickened. Stir in tomato sauce, salmon and seasonings. Heat until hot. Garnish each serving with parsley. Serves 4.



© 1955, BEATRICE FOO

NOW YOU CAN RUN YOUR OWN FOOD PLAN

...and save even more money!

4.14* ER WEEK

New Frigidaire Imperial Upright Food Freezer—12.5 cu. ft. storage space holds 438 lbs. of frozen foods. Three refrigerated shelves. Drop-leaf Grille Fronts. Big Basket Drawer. Removable door shelves. Handy food file index. Left or right hand doors at no extra cost. Choice of Sherwood Green, Stratford Yellow or Snowy White exteriors in Dulux or Lifetime Porcelain finish.

See your Frigidaire Dealer. Ask him about the Upright and Chest-type Food Freezers Arthur Godfrey recommends on radio and TV. Learn how the Frigidaire way gives you a Dividend in Extra Savings year after year.

Frigidaire Food Freezers

Built and backed by General Motors

Frigidaire Food Freezers give you a dividend in extra savings!

Before you buy any food freezer or food plan, why not check with your Frigidaire Dealer. Compare what you get owning a food freezer his way and what you think you get in so many food clubs or plans.

Compare weekly payments! Check the weekly payments you see on this page with the weekly payments you have to make on almost every food plan.

Compare total cost! You don't have to invest in a freezer-load of food to enjoy the better meals and better living that a Frigidaire Food Freezer brings you.

Compare actual food savings! See how much more you save when you buy at special sales, buy foods in season, freeze lower cost fresh foods . . . take advantage of every buying economy.

Compare the quality! After the first freezer-full of food is gone you have to live with the food freezer you buy. You want the same lifetime of service you'd expect from a refrigerator—low operating cost, dependability, and quality. What better guarantee than a Food Freezer made by the makers of America's number one refrigerator—FRIGIDAIRE!

So enjoy your favorite foods often. Be ready for any meal-time emergency. Save time, energy and money. Shop less often. Save at special sales . . . buy at quantity prices . . . buy when foods are plentiful and prices are low. Be boss of your own food plan with a Frigidaire Food Freezer today!

See Frigidaire's New Chest-type Food Freezers, Too!

Styled and designed to add many cubic feet of zero zone storage space inside the freezer without increasing cabinet size outside! New 12.5 cu. ft. model holds 438 lbs. of frozen foods. New 17.5 cu. ft. model stores 612 lb. load. All-steel cabinets seal heavy all-around insulation from air and moisture. Concealed wrap-around refrigerant coils keep frozen foods "wrapped in cold."

After minimum down payment. See your dealer for exact terms.*

ALTOGETHER NEW

...a new way to make a cake

INSTANT SWANS DOWN CAKE MIXES

A product of General Foods

Look! Only one mixing step!

- Everything goes into the bowl all at once.
- Beat only once . . . and in ⅓ less time.
- Only Instant Swans Down Mixes mix in just one step . . . so simple you can't go wrong.
- The only mix with famous Swans Down Cake Flour, so you know how good every cake will taste.

It's "Swansational"

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

Happiness doesn't depend on the flawless character of husband or wife—nor on the absence of problems either.

Recognizing Faults

A TROUBLED wife seeking counsel usually believes she has explained her problem fairly and honestly. She does not intend to distort, exaggerate or suppress important facts. But, naturally, she describes the situation as she sees it, and as it affects her. The same facts might appear different if considered from her husband's point of view, or as reported by an outside observer.

One of the counselor's major roles is to help wives—and husbands—see their problems in broader perspective. As counseling progresses, most people gradually attain understanding.

Sometimes, though, even after several conferences, a woman's point of view is as limited as ever. In such cases I change my technique to help her approach the problem as though she were not involved. Then she is able to consider it without the handicap of her emotions.

Using the basic facts she reported, even some of her own words, but disguising circumstances and identities, I construct a "case history." Explaining that her opinions will be helpful, I ask her to read it and tell me her reactions. Usually she is glad to comment; her suggestions are sometimes quite constructive, and often she criticizes the wife more severely than the husband. But she never suspects that the wife we are discussing is herself, until I ask her if she sees any similarity between the situation and her own. Even then, full recognition and acceptance are often slow to come. But gradually, if she is honest and sincere, she realizes that some of the comments she has made about the "other" wife also apply to her.

Once she admits she interpreted facts one way when they related to an unknown couple, and quite differently when they concerned her husband and herself, she has taken a long step toward solving her problem and improving her marriage.

Fortunately, happiness in marriage does not depend on the absence of problems, nor on the flawless character of either husband or wife. Disappointments as well as achievements are a part of life; both faults and virtues are part of human personality. The crucial factor is the way we meet difficulties, trivial or serious, as they arise.

The wife who tries to solve problems by blaming her husband, by emphasizing his mistakes or character faults, will aggravate immediate difficulties and invite others in the future. In a very real sense, she is asking for trouble.

The constructive and realistic approach is to concentrate on correcting the traits in you which distress your husband; your example may induce him to modify his behavior, but your lectures, tears or complaints are not likely to.

But in appraising your faults, or his, remember that it is almost impossible to see ourselves as others see us. You may pride yourself on qualities which you regard as virtues, but which he considers faults. Do you boast of your thrift? To him, it may appear stinginess, or an undue concern with money. Do you complain when he picks up a check, scold when he lends money to a down-and-out friend? Perhaps you are justified, but most faults are the opposite side of a virtue. What you regard as recklessness may seem to him generosity, or just ordinary decency.

Chronic faultfinding takes the joy out of life. If you are cheerful, patient and forgiving (when necessary) your husband will want to please you, and will try to correct any weakness that seriously disturbs you. Meanwhile, accept the character flaws you can't change (his) but improve those you can (yours).

Are You a Climber?

"AFTER three years in this suburb, my husband and I are quite active socially and I'm proud of our group of friends. But Tom says they're climbers, especially the wives. He doesn't want to be like them, and he's even talking about moving away. I've never thought myself a climber, but maybe I don't understand what climbing is. Does it mean ambition? Wanting to get ahead? Liking to know the nicest people and enjoying their parties? What's wrong with any of those things? They seem natural to me."

Every normal individual wants to get ahead; ambition in itself is praiseworthy. The respect of the community and the affections of congenial friends bring satisfaction to you and enhance your worth to others. Unless they seriously disrupt routine or interfere with basic responsibilities, social activities provide wholesome recreation and needed stimulation.

No wife can be criticized for wanting her husband to succeed in business, for cultivating the friendship of people she likes and admires, or for enjoying parties. But too many wives prize these things, not for their inherent worth but because they consider them symbols of prestige and material success. The climber is revealed less by her goals than by her reasons for wanting to reach them. She may know where she wants to go, but getting there may not satisfy or make her happier.

Social prestige and material possessions enhance the enjoyment of life only so long as they do not interfere with your appreciation of other deeper values. Sometime soon, spend an hour or two thinking about what you and your husband want most out of life. What are the factors you consider really vital to family happiness? Good health? Mutual love and trust? An imposing home or expensive car?

Then ask yourself how many of the things you are now working for and worrying about are really concerned with those essentials. The meaning climbers attach to certain familiar phrases reveals their false values. Your interpretation of these expressions may be enlightening.

"A good neighborhood." To the climber, this means a fashionable address and socially prominent neighbors. Are these things as important to you as your husband's convenience, a wholesome atmosphere for the children, and an investment within your means?

"Worth-while people." The people worth while for you and your husband are those you both like, respect and enjoy for their personal qualities, with or without wealth, social distinction or fame.

"The best schools." Are you satisfied if the pupils are expensively dressed, socially at ease, and well connected? Or do you consider the quality of teaching, the attitude and morale of the pupils?

"A suitable car" for you is one you can afford, not one that equals or surpasses the neighbors'.

"Nice playmates for the children." Do you choose playmates whose parents you wish to cultivate, or those whom your children like and enjoy?

Goals worth working for impose no strain on your conscience, no tax on the budget, no burden on your husband. The pursuit is satisfying as well as attainment. Material achievements bring temporary satisfaction; spiritual values endure. If your standards are false, they can never be permanently met.

Ask Yourself: Do I Respect the Dignity of Marriage?

In marriage, a couple must preserve and respect each other's rights and privacy, otherwise the individuals and the marriage lose dignity. By answering these questions honestly and frankly, you can judge whether your relationship with your husband is one you can both be proud of.

Do You:

1. Ask him personal questions in front of others?
2. Attribute his faults to his parents?
3. Lend his things to others without consulting him?
4. Check up on his activities?
5. Joke about his faults or physical defects?
6. Accuse him of suspected but unproved indiscretions?
7. Verify cost of his gifts to you?
8. Pry into his relatives' affairs?
9. Interrupt when he is talking?
10. Intrude when he's shaving in the bathroom?
11. Trap him into answering personal questions?
12. Open his mail or search his pockets?
13. Encroach on space he considers his own?
14. Use his personal belongings without permission?

Nine or more "yes" answers suggest that your lack of respect is damaging your marriage. Average score totals six or seven, but in the happiest marriages wives have only three to five "yeses."

Do You Agree?

When my wife has a temper tantrum, she holds her breath until she is blue in the face or until I give in. Is this dangerous?

Holding her breath, no; giving in, yes.

You look wonderful

because you feel wonderful

when you use

Yardley Lavender ..... for the freshest, youngest feeling in the world

It's so much more than a delightful essence. Yardley Lavender is a feeling. There's no lift like its crisp coolness, no other fragrance that makes you feel so fresh so long. Enjoy Yardley Lavender in its many other forms. The essence, from $1.10; Dusting Powder, $1.75 (all plus tax). Created in England, made in U.S.A. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C.

What do you mean NO?*

A girl can refuse anything from a kiss to a cream puff—and not be a wet blanket, a goody-goody or a drag—if she's sure of her answer before she must make a choice.

IF a girl says no—and means maybe—she can expect an argument. But if her no really means NO, even the tone of her voice rings with decisiveness. Secret 1 of the successful no is a knowledge of the kind of person you want to be and how that person stands on crucial choices. Secret 2 is a ready answer to give before a decision must be reached. To say no without words—just a meaningful shake of the head—is difficult, but ideal. Second best is the brief and direct no. (A white lie, a sermon or a lengthy explanation only gives your "enemy" more words to argue about—and so more time to try to change your mind.)

I mean "I like you but. . . ."

to a kiss: Because you anticipate the kiss to come, you could take the boy's hand in yours, give it a little squeeze, say, "Good night," and disappear at the door; or, "Sorry, Bill, not just now. Good night." Just as every girl wants to feel that she's kissable—even when she doesn't want to be kissed—every boy wants to feel he's not repulsive—even when he's being repulsed. Your objective: to make the boy understand, by words and smiles, that it is the kiss you are refusing, not the boy.

to more than a kiss: "Why, this isn't New Year's Eve, is it?" (Or anything equally corny.) That will give you an excuse to laugh and time to straighten up and change the subject.

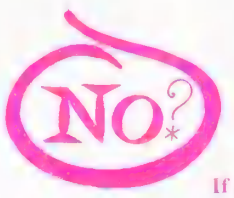
to parking: Put the key in the ignition (if necessary) and say something (more corn again, possibly) like, "Will you drive or shall I?" in a firm but sweet voice.

to an out-of-bounds place: "Sorry, that's not for me." If it makes you feel any more comfortable to add a word to your refusal, you could say, "No. . . . I'm in the mood for an ice-cream cone." Or, if you're a pixy, why not, "Let's go climb trees," or, "Kites, anyone?" (in mock desperation).

I mean "I'd like to but. . . ."

Even some very worth-while projects can be time-wasters—if you let them. No one can do everything and do it well. Can you say no to an additional school activity, even when it's an honor, if you have as many as you can handle well now? Or no to things that just don't interest you that the crowd does—like collecting pop records when your heart's with Rachmaninoff? Or no to a good movie with the girls when you want to study for a test or just plain read a book?

Everyone wants lots of friends—but do you say no to a friendship with a person who really isn't good for your best self? A girl, for instance, who always teases you because you tell your parents where you're going on a date. (She insists that it saves arguments if you tell your parents what they want to hear—instead of the truth. Why not say "drugstore," she says, if you know they'll never let you go for "a ride" with Jim? You know why and so does she—but she thinks she's acting sophisticated if she can "put something over.") Or to a girl whose favorite line is "just this once" . . . to something questionable, such as going to a boy's house if you're not sure that his parents are home. Or to characters who want you to write their themes, do their Latin translations, or pass them your answers in an exam.



I mean "Don't tempt me."

No two lists of little spur-of-the-moment temptations are the same, but many girls have trouble saying no to a piece of cake if they're overweight, to a boy's class ring just because everybody else has one, to a bright red winter coat when neutral tweed would go with everything. And every girl wrestles with the telephone even if she knows it's no (1) when you have no urgent message or an invitation to offer a boy, only chatter, (2) when the romance is over and you're just lonely, (3) when you just want to hear his voice and intend to hang up without speaking a word! (Boys do dislike the teasing they get from their families if girls call them up at home—and who can blame them?)

And name one girl who doesn't wish for the strength of character (she does if she uses it often) to say no to the impulse to make an empty promise to do something for someone or a committee that she knows she'll never get around to—or no to that impulse to tease, laugh at, or snub someone at school because other people she's with do. And there must be more than one girl who'd like to say no to laziness—who wouldn't glow with self-righteousness if she always scrubbed the tub after the bath, made her bed in the morning, returned the library books on time, hung up her coat instead of throwing it on a chair, etc., etc., etc.!

As for big spur-of-the-moment temptations. . . . If you do not want a drink, for instance, the best way is to avoid going around with people who do. But if it comes your turn to order, have your answer ready: "Make mine a root beer, please." This is not the time to hesitate, or to apologize or mention that your family disapproves. Any person who makes it horribly awkward for you to refuse is a no-person for you. No elaborate explanations are ever necessary. To an offer of a cigarette a girl has only to smile and say, "No, thank you."

THE SUB-DEB EDITED BY Ruth Imler

WHAT DO YOU

If you were giving a party, would you invite someone you didn't like very much if you knew he was giving a party next week?

No, of course not. You invite people to parties (or give them gifts) because you like them for themselves, not because you expect something in return.

If your best friend urged you to vote for someone in a club or class election, would you?

No—you'd make up your own mind about the abilities of the candidate and vote accordingly.

If you met a nice boy at a party, and saw him again later at school, would you wait until he said hello first?

No—being friendly, not forward, first is the magic in helping people to like you.

If you planned to write a certain letter one night and a friend offered you a ticket to the ballet that night, would you go?

Yes, why not? You have to learn to temper your "no's" with good sense too.

…n of Mrs. Louis Sturtevant's hands were soaked in detergents. Only the right hand was treated with Jergens Lotion. Compare the two! This photograph is unretouched.

…xciting Proof: Jergens Lotion stops "Detergent Hands"

…ational research laboratory* proves …gens Lotion more effective than … other lotion tested for stopping …ergent damage.

…our hardworking hands can be beautiful. If …re having the usual trouble with everyday …rgents (rough, red hands), listen to this!

…nder supervision, 447 women soaked both …ls in detergents. After each soaking, Jergens …on was applied to the right hand. Left hands …e untreated.

…hat a difference in 3 or 4 days! Untreated …ls were roughened and reddened. In severe …s they were even cracked and bleeding. The Jergens Lotion hands? They were soft, smooth and lovely.

Of all the lotions tested this way, not one proved as effective as Jergens Lotion. When the women saw there was real help for their hands, they were delighted. And how pleased they were to find it was never sticky or greasy!

Jergens has been steadily perfected for 50 years. You'll find it's just as good for wind and weather chapping as for "Detergent Hands," and takes just seconds to use.

Get a bottle today. Notice how much heavier and creamier it is — with a delightful new fragrance. And still only 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

*Notice to doctors and dermatologists. For a summary of this report, write to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

These new longer hair styles call for Prom...

...the easiest way in the world to get a wave that hold

3 Prom Lotions: super, very gentle, regular. Also, Children's Prom.

Prom makes it far less work to get the deep, long-lasting waves you need for the "Cascade" hair style in the ad picture, and for this "Coronet" style.

Prom really holds hair styles like "Eve". It lasts longer than a pin-curl permanent . . . even longer than other curler-type home permanents.

This is the new look in hair fashion: longer ha and deep, smooth waves. Prom, the self-neutra izing home permanent, is just made for the new hair styles.

Prom holds your wave even in the new longe fuller hair. It lasts far longer than pin-curl perm nents, even longer than rod-curler home perm nents with a separate neutralizer. That's becau Prom is the only rod-curler home permane that's self-neutralizing.

That means less work, of course. And se neutralizing also means thorough neutralizin That's why Prom lasts longer than any oth home permanent of any kind. Laboratory tes prove it. So have a Prom.

12 New Hair Style
For pictures, diagra easy directions, s 10¢ to Prom, Box 35 Chicago 54, Illinois

$1.50 plus tax

Prom

Self-neutralizing Home Permanent

Use Spin brand Curlers or any plastic home permanent curl

Disturbed children find loving care

. . . with foster parents

Never Enough Homes

By MARGARET HICKEY

"WOULD you be willing to take a strange child into your home?" Twelve Queens College students asked residents in a neighborhood of Long Island, New York, this question recently. This was not only a sociology-class survey, but much more: part of a desperate search by the New York City Department of Welfare for homes for children whose parents were unable to care for them for various reasons.

It is a question more and more public and private child-welfare agencies are asking—in newspaper ads, over radio and television and in carefully prepared brochures describing the foster-parent plan. Too many people still think of dependent and neglected children as "orphans" or "homeless waifs," not realizing that many have one parent or an interested relative willing and able to contribute to their support, though unable to provide a home.

The 1950 census estimated 175,000 children in foster-family homes. With the largest child population in our history (47,000,000 under 18), more mothers working, family breakdowns increasing, the need is greater than ever for steady, secure families who can take in a child for a few months or a few years, give him loving care and let him go when his own home is re-established or a permanent home is arranged.

There are many reasons a child needs a temporary home: physical or mental illness of one or both parents, marital discord or breakup, or mistreatment or neglect. Foster homes also may be used for emotionally disturbed children (the Baltimore, Maryland, Family and Children's Society program is described this month), handicapped children, those in detention prior to court hearing, or those requiring convalescent care.

How can we help children who need a temporary home? In Los Angeles, California, volunteers and representatives of child-placing agencies have formed a Foster Home Interpretation Committee in affiliation with the Child Welfare Division of the Welfare Planning Council. A speakers' bureau shows a film and explains to clubs, P.T.A.'s, church groups and other organizations the need for foster homes. One member of the volunteer publicity committee set a good example by welcoming twin foster children into her own home.

In Detroit, Michigan, 45 women volunteers formed a "contact committee" to tell the foster-home story of the Jewish Social Service Bureau. Several arranged neighborhood teas so that foster mothers could tell their friends about their experiences caring for children.

San Francisco, California, volunteers actively staff the office of JACKIE (Joint Agency Committee for Kiddies—an Interdenominational Effort), which represents four child-placing agencies faced with the problem of finding 60 new foster homes a month. The San Francisco Volunteer Bureau, Junior League and women's service organizations are among the groups that help out with publicity and speaking engagements and answer inquiries from prospective foster parents. END

"THIS lad," the bailiff said with a half-smile, "has been in and out of court more than the judge." With his strong hands he lifted a squirming boy onto a chair. The child, about seven, wore an old pair of men's shoes, ragged shirt, and pants, not his size, held up by a safety pin. You could tell just to look at him that he seldom, if ever, had a good home-cooked meal.

"Meet Mrs. Harris, Joey," the officer said. "She's going to find a home for you."

Mrs. Harris, a pleasant-faced woman in her middle thirties, was a caseworker with the Baltimore, Maryland, Family and Children's Society. As she reached out to take the boy's hand Joey pulled away violently, jumped down and darted across the empty courtroom. The bailiff shook his head sadly. "That's all the boy knows—running away."

With the officer's help Mrs. Harris finally got Joey into a taxicab, keeping her arms tightly around him all the while so he wouldn't jump out. When the car pulled up at 204 West Lanvale, the large white residential building that houses the Family and Children's Society, she took him upstairs to the playroom. Joey just looked at the wooden rocking horse with its tiny rein and stirrups and turned away. Then he rubbed his eyes and stared at the clock on the wall.

"I want to get to know you, Joey," Mrs. Harris said, smiling, "because I'm going to try to find a home for you where you'll be happy."

Joey was too young and confused to understand that for the first time in his young life he really mattered to somebody. The only home he had known was a small, dirty room, which he had shared with a drunken father. His mother had deserted, leaving him to spend his days playing in a filthy alley. Attendance officers had tried to keep him in school, but Joey always ran away. After a number of encounters with Joey in Juvenile Court, the judge decided to place him—not in a correctional training institution, but with the Family and Children's Society, which, within the range of its limited finances and community resources, tries to find foster families willing and able to care for emotionally disturbed children.

Mrs. Harris had a family in mind for Joey, and after consulting with her agency's psychiatrist, drove out alone to see Mr. and Mrs. Barnes. The couple lived about twenty miles outside the city in a plain, but comfortable, frame house near a beautifully wooded hillside. They had answered one of the agency's newspaper CONTINUED ON PAGE 38

BERNIE CLEFF

Eight years old and happy in the love of a family now his very own. Joey, once fearful and neglected, is growing into a normal active boy through the patience and care of foster parents and the Baltimore, Maryland, Family and Children's Society.

fresh...

bol

Thrilling new GO-TOGETHER COLOR

Always right, any way you use them!

Fresh! Go-Together Colors are brand-new. They're yours now . . . on Youngstown Kitchens only. And there's no extra cost!

Star White—a new, satiny-soft white!

Dawn Yellow—soothing, and easy to live with!

Meridian Blue—cool, refreshing . . . to give you a lift!

Sunset Copper—rich, warm, inspired!

Bold! In all the world, there are no other colors like them—no other colors that make kitchen-planning so dramatic, yet so completely foolproof!

You can use any Go-Together Color alone!
You can combine units of different color!

And you can't go wrong!

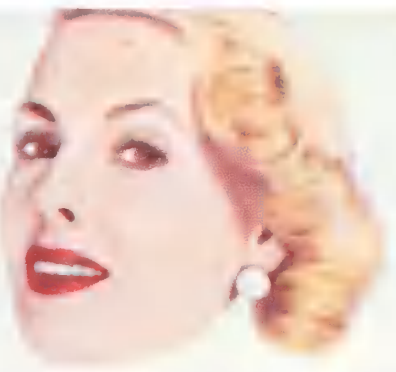
Beautiful! Go-Together Colors blend with one another—blend with kitchen decorating materials and colored appliances. However you use them, there can be only one result . . .

a fresh, bold, beautiful kitchen!

See them at your Youngstown Kitchen dealer's today!

Dawn Yellow wall cabinets and Meridian Blue base units—beautifully and imaginatively combined!

Ever-popular Star White sets off the beauty of an inspired decorating scheme!



Rich Sunset Copper—as warm and beautiful as a Western sunset, in a kitchen in typical California styling. Like all Youngstown Kitchens, this one is constructed of sturdy steel throughout. It will never absorb cooking odors—never warp, rot, swell or stick. Its beautiful finish has been baked-on to last. Whether you're building or remodeling, tell your dealer or builder you want a Youngstown Kitchen. It's your best buy!

STEEL Youngstown Kitchens®

Sold in the United States, Canada and most parts of the world

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION ▪ WARREN, OHIO

... and beautiful

at no extra cost – by Youngstown STEEL Kitchens ridian Blue holds sway in this exciting wn Kitchen.

ngstown Kitchens dealer is displaying -Together Colors now. Drop in. Learn y it is to own an all-steel dream kitchen o money down and three years to pay, on erms. You'll want to take advantage of kitchen-planning and decorating advice,

MAKE IT A ALL-STEEL KITCHEN WIFE-SAVER

OF YOUR NEAREST DEALER, consult the yellow pages of your telephone directory under uipment—Household," or "Kitchen Cabinets," or call Western Union, Operator 25.

SEND COUPON NOW

Please send idea book on kitchen planning and decorating.

I enclose 10c for mailing (no stamps, please).

- ☐ I plan to build a house
- ☐ I plan to buy a house
- ☐ I plan to modernize

Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-555, Warren, Ohio

NAME (Please print)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

© 1955 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

REVOLUTIONARY NEW STARCH DISCOVERY

Works perfectly in cold water!

NIAGARA starch eliminates all boiling, cooking, straining.

NIAGARA dissolves instantly, stays dissolved in COLD water!

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

Handy pouring spout on package

JUST SWISH Niagara in cold water—it's ready to use. It is pre-cooked...gives you perfect results, no white spots or streaks. With Niagara there are no hard lumps to stick to your iron...it stays clean, glides smoothly. Next time, Niagara instant laundry starch for you.

Niagara®

INSTANT STARCH...costs only 1¢ to make a quart medium starch solution.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

advertisements for foster families and, according to the children's division home finder, seemed happy, attended church, had raised three sons of their own, now were "lost without children to care for." But nothing had been said to them about a "disturbed" child.

"Oh, no," Mrs. Barnes told Mrs. Harris, "I don't think I'd be able to ——" Mrs. Barnes was a large woman whose face crinkled all over when she smiled. Her red flowered apron, it seemed to her visitor, made her look all the more motherly. Mrs. Harris began talking about Joey.

"Why, he acts just like Janie, a neighbor girl we took care of for almost a year," Mrs. Barnes exclaimed. "She didn't know what loving or kindness was."

"She improved after a while," her husband explained, "but it takes longer than that to make up for the years she went without."

Still Mrs. Barnes admitted she was a bit frightened. "How will I ever stop worrying about him when he runs away? How will I explain to his teacher when he's not in school? What will the neighbors think when they see the police bringing him home?" she wondered.

Mrs. Harris, certain that this couple could offer Joey a good home, assured them that she would visit at least once a week and that they could call the agency at any time for help and guidance. In the beginning, Mrs. Harris would take Joey to weekly psychiatric appointments. At the clinic, the therapist would help Joey to act out his feelings through "role playing" with dolls and by painting pictures, to learn more about his hurt and to develop new ways to help him.

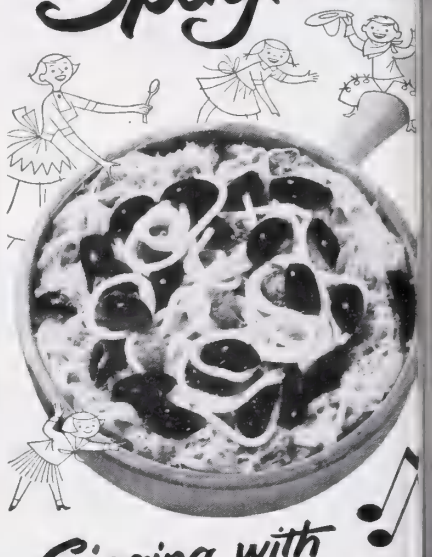
The feller that puts off marryin' till he can support a wife ain't very much in love. —KIN HUBBARD

"Let's try it," Mr. Barnes urged. "We'll write him a letter today."

In the agency playroom, Joey sat silently at first when Mrs. Harris told him about his new home, then let out a howl and raced around the room. Mrs. Harris made no effort to quiet him, simply read in a loud voice: "Dear Joey: We want very much to have you come to live with us. My husband and I want a boy, and we especially want you. We know all about you."

Joey stopped howling long enough to ask sulkily, "Do they have a dog?"

"A big collie. Chickens and ducks too," Mrs. Harris said.



And that was how Joey became the foster child of Mr. and Mrs. Barnes.

Joey is one of sixty emotionally disturbed children the Baltimore Family and Children's Society has tried to help through specialized foster-home treatment during the past four years. Temporary or long-term foster-home placement for children of parents unable to care for them has been part of the agency's service for many years. But children who had been hurt emotionally by parental rejection or neglect often had no place to go, except correctional institutions, because of Baltimore's lack of sufficient residential-treatment facilities. Juvenile Court officials, concerned about the situation, from time to time sent a "problem" child to the Family and Children's Society, which managed somehow to find a foster family willing to care for him, almost always with good results. Then in 1950, the Council of Social Agencies, having just completed a study of the community's needs, asked the Family and Children's Society to set up a special program to help more of these youngsters.

At first several of the caseworkers feared such a program couldn't succeed. Each child would require infinitely more time and attention than the children with normal problems usually placed in foster homes. It would mean more home visits, more school visits and, because of the likelihood of continuing

CONTINUED ON PAGE 42

Make it Monterey Spaghetti

Singing with California flavor!

Quick to make—that's one specia feature of this spaghetti dish. But it' the flavor that's really special—th sunny, satisfying flavor of California' own ripe olives. Try it for yoursel this easy way:

2 cups (½ lb.) uncooked spaghetti	1 tbsp. olive oil
1 cup ripe olives	1½ tsps. salt
1 lb. ground lean beef	1½ tsps. chili powde
1 minced clove garlic	2 cups tomato sauce
½ cup chopped onion	Sharp American cheese, grated

Cook spaghetti in boiling salted wate until tender. Cut olives into large pieces. Fry beef, garlic and onion in hot oil about 10 minutes, stirring frequently. Blend in salt, chili powder tomato sauce, olives and spaghetti Cook about 5 minutes. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 5 to 10 minutes or until cheese is melted. Serves 6.

Make more meals sing with Californic flavor by featuring ripe olives as "finger food" at table...while watching TV...when guests drop in. Let a bowl full of ripe olives be your friendly "welcome bowl."

Free Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet. Write today for your free copy of the beautifully illustrated 16-page booklet "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Address: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-58, 2 California Street, San Francisco 11 California.

*RIPE, GREEN-RIPE...WHOLE, PITTED, CHOPPED, SLIC

This is the story of sheets of Du Pont Nylon

(and it's a story to invite sweet dreams)!

ou know Du Pont nylon . . . know its caressg softness in slips and nightgowns . . . its veliness in stockings . . . its long. long wear blouses . . . and you certainly know its easy re! Now you can enjoy all of these advantages in sheets that invite such sweet dreams.

Once folks try these new sheets of Du Pont nylon they won't use any others. Why don't you try them? We think you. too. will say sheets of Du Pont nylon are made to dream on!

Exciting new things are happening in NYLON—one of DU PONT'S modern-living fibers.

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

eather-light sheets of Du Pont nylon are easy to ndle...a snap to wash because they never become watergged, are never heavy to lift.

Quick-drying sheets of Du Pont nylon are washed, dried and put back on the beds before lunch. Of course, they seldom need ironing!

Space-saving sheets of Du Pont nylon fold compact as an ordinary pillowcase. Look for them in regular and fitted-bottom styles when you shop.

Crisp, oven-fresh, rea uttery hot breads...

BETTY CROCKER'S NEW

Butter Dips!

Dipped and baked in real butter!

u just can't beat the real thing—l butter. Take one taste of these new tter Dips Betty Crocker has come with and you'll know it for sure.
ey're chewy on the inside. Crispy the outside. Golden-brown all over.
u just can't beat real butter, espelly on hot foods.

So do this. Get some flour. Get some l butter. Make a batch of these sp, oven-fresh Butter Dips for your nily tonight. They deserve real ter as much as your guests.

AMERICAN
IRY ASSOCIATION

Voice of the Dairy Farmer

orth Wacker Drive · Chicago 6, Illinois

nessage is iry farmers the nation
t of their n to show can live ith foods
m milk.

sneyland"
See Bob
CBS-TV

BUTTER DIPS

⅓ cup butter
2¼ cups sifted GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour
1 tbsp. sugar
3½ tsp. baking powder
1½ tsp. salt
1 cup milk

Heat oven to 450° (hot). Melt butter in oven in oblong pan, 13 x 9½ x 2". Remove pan when butter is melted. Sift together flour, sugar, baking powder, salt. Add milk. Stir slowly with fork until dough just clings together. Turn onto well-floured board. Roll over to coat with flour. Knead lightly about 10 times. Roll out ½" thick into rectangle, 12 x 8". With floured knife, cut dough in half lengthwise, then cut crosswise into 16 strips.

Pick up cut strips in both hands (see picture) and dip each strip on both sides in melted butter. Next lay them close together in two rows in the same pan in which butter is melted. Bake 15 to 20 minutes until golden brown. Serve hot. Makes 32 sticks.

Note: If you use GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour you should omit the baking powder and the salt.

Betty Crocker of GENERAL MILLS

VARIATIONS:

1. Add ½ cup grated sharp American Cheese to dry ingredients.
2. Add ½ clove of finely minced garlic to butter before melting.
3. Sprinkle paprika, celery seed or garlic salt over butter dips before baking.
4. Add ¼ cup minced chives or parsley to flour mixture.

Your family deserves real butter as much as your guests!

With cool regards to Summer, Gossard's fine cottons keep you calm and well-collected, their own sweet way.

at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

#1871 cotton uplift with embroidered cotton, has reinforced undercups. A, B, C. White. $2.50

#514 cotton leno girdle with embroidered cotton panel, is a boneless molder. Pull-on. S-M-L. White. $5. Matching pantie #614, $5.95

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H.W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38

delinquent behavior, more court visits. And would it be possible to find enough foster parents willing to handle these youngsters? Verna Waskowitz, director of the children's division, and one of the casework supervisors, Betty Gray (who now supervises the specialized foster-care project), thought so, and their confidence and concern for the children convinced the others it could be done. They began by selecting foster homes already in use—couples who had shown understanding, patience and strength in dealing with children. A recruitment campaign, using newspapers and radio and appeals to churches, brought in new volunteers. On June 1, 1951, the new program started.

Today there are about thirty-five foster homes (all licensed by the agency in accordance with standards set by the state department of welfare) in the special program. You will find the heads of the family in most occupations—fire-patrol-boat captain, construction worker, truck driver, city bus driver, retired railroad worker, several farmers. All average couples, yet amazingly *un*average in kindness and sensitivity. Every one of them has suffered through sleepless nights, the continuing hostility of the children, damage to personal property. But it's almost always worth it—not for the board money paid by the agency (never more than $15 a week), because that seldom is enough to feed an affection-starved youngster; nor for community prestige, because disturbed children are headaches to schools, police and neighbors; but because, as one buxom, middle-aged foster mother said, pointing to her heart, "It makes you feel good in here."

No woman should ever be quite accurate about her age. It looks so calculating. —OSCAR WILDE

The going is especially difficult at first. Joey, attired in a new navy-blue suit and shiny shoes, arrived at the Barnes home looking quite different from the way he did at his last courtroom appearance. As soon as he had finished the bowl of homemade chicken soup Mrs. Barnes had ready for him, however, he charged around the living room, knocking over lamps and chairs.

That was only the beginning. Joey ran away nearly every day. Sometimes he didn't go very far, and Mrs. Barnes brought him back. Occasionally the police picked him up. But usually Mrs. Harris went after him, each time assuring him that she cared what happened to him and would always find him. At night all his subconscious fears broke loose. He wet the bed, screamed during his sleep.

The first two times Mrs. Harris came to call, Mrs. Barnes wept. "Why does he hate me? I try so hard to show that I love him."

"Joey hates everybody," Mrs. Harris said kindly, "because the world has always seemed to hate him. He can't believe anybody loves him." This reassurance helped relieve Mrs. Barnes' feeling of guilt and failure.

Joey also acted out his hating on neighbor children—took away their toys, knocked them down. Sending him to school was out of the question, so Mrs. Harris made arrangements for a home teacher. At Mrs. Harris' suggestion, Mrs. Barnes began to keep Joey very close to her, watching him every minute of the day. At first he acted like a caged wild animal, tearing around the house. Mrs. Barnes would offer him an apple, later a banana, then a cooky or two. These snacks helped calm him and seemed to reassure him that Mrs. Barnes was really his friend. In the evening Mr. Barnes often brought home a new but inexpensive toy, which also attracted the boy's interest. One day Mrs. Barnes read a story aloud. To her surprise Joey sat quietly by her side for ten whole minutes. This mothering was something he had never had before, and slowly he began to respond. After that Mrs. Barnes read to him every day.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 108

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN
of HEADACHE
NEURITIS
NEURALGIA get FAST RELIEF
WITH ANACIN

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend Here's Why... Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

Worry of
FALSE TEETH
Slipping or Irritating
Don't be embarrassed by loose false teeth slipping, dropping or wobbling when you eat, talk or laugh. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH on your plates. This pleasant powder gives remarkable sense of added comfort and security by holding plates more firmly. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. It's alkaline (non-acid). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

FOR A WONDERFUL FEELING—USE
LACTOPINE
Swiss Pine Bath Oil

Refreshing, Relaxing!
Gives you new life and zest at the end of the most wearisome day. So potent, a spoonful is enough for a bath. From $1 to $6 at your favorite cosmetic counter.

Swiss Pine Importing Co., Inc. L551
381 4th Ave., N. Y. C., N. Y.
Enclosed find 25¢ for generous trial bottle.
Name_____
Address_____

'uts Dancing Highlights in Your Hair!

NEW FORMULA OUT-LATHERS, OUT-SHINES OTHER* SHAMPOOS

MAKES YOUR HAIR EXCITING TO TOUCH!

Billows of Fleecy Foam Leave Hair Shimmering, Obedient, "Lanolin-Lovely"

You'll discover an amazing difference the moment this revolutionary shampoo touches your hair. For never before has any shampoo burst into such mountains of snowy lanolin lather—lather that actually polishes hair clean. Only Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo brings you this foaming magic.

No old-fashioned "lazy-lather" shampoo can shine your hair like this—'til it shimmers like satin in the moonlight!

Try This Test

The radiance of hair lathered this new way will be instantly visible to everyone—but you, yourself, are the best judge of results. After you've dried your hair and brushed it take your hand mirror and stand in a strong light. You'll see how much more brilliance dances in your hair, thanks to Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo.

This shampoo is so good for your hair . . . because there's twice the lanolin in it! It can't dry your hair or leave it harsh, brittle and hard to handle. No indeed! Instead, it leaves your hair in superb condition—supple, soft . . . easier to manage after your shampoo than ever before.

Tangles slip away at a comb's touch . . . your waves ripple back into your hair deeper, firmer, more pliantly lovely than ever.

So let this sensational new shampoo formula bring out the thrilling beauty hidden in your hair! The vibrant, glowing tone. The natural softness. More manageability than ever before! Treat your hair to the richer lather of this amazing, gentler double-lanolin shampoo. Get Helene Curtis Lanolin Lotion Shampoo today—29¢, 59¢ and $1. On sale everywhere!

OCEANS OF LATHER EVEN IN HARD WATER!

An amazing built-in water softener in this Lanolin Lotion Shampoo gives you piles of lather that rinses quick, leaves hair bright—even in the hardest water!

oubles Its Romantic Softness With Double Lanolin air's so satiny after a rich Lanolin Lotion Shampoo it irristibly calls for a love-pat! You can't always wear a satin ncing dress for the man in your life—but now, with Lanolin tion Shampoo he'll see the satiny beauty of your hair every ay! You'll find that never in your shampoo experience has ur hair had so much shimmer and softness!

uble Lanolin Is The Reason nriches Your Hair With Beauty nstead of Drying It!

nolin Lotion was purisely formulated with ice as much lanolin as dinary shampoos. That eans double the lanolin otection against dryness . double the lanolin polish d beauty for your hair. r even problem hair—ir that's had its beauty s dried away . . . washed ay . . . bleached away . . . nefits astonishingly from is double-lanolin lather. not only feels twice as h—it actually is twice as h! Don't confuse this utrly new Helene Curtis nolin Lotion Shampoo th any so-called "lotion" "lanolin" shampoo u've ever tried before.

PROOF THAT NEW SHAMPOO OUT-LATHERS OTHER BRANDS

Rigidly scientific Cylinder Foam-Test shows Lanolin Lotion Shampoo led four other brands tested by actual volume of sudsiness.

Double-Lanolin Magic

HAIR OBEYS—NO SNARLS—NO WISPS!

"With little children, tangled hair after shampoo can be a tearful problem. But now snarls slip away . . . my five daughters and I all like Lanolin Lotion Shampoo best of all!"

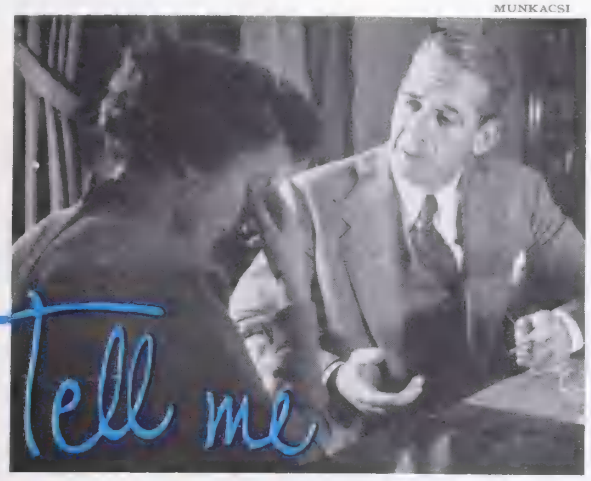
MRS. JOHN STERNIG
Glencoe, Illinois

Mrs. John Sternig, Glencoe, Illinois

"With my casual hair-do, it's important my hair falls easily into place and Lanolin Lotion Shampoo did the trick for me. I find this shampoo leaves my hair far shinier and far easier to manage right after a washing."

PATRICIA CURRAN
New York City, N.Y.

Miss Patricia Curran, New York City, New York



UNDER THESE DRESSES, A SACONY GIRDLE

How to buy these Sacony dresses (12.95 and 14.95)

Sacony makes these dresses in Ciella—an acetate jersey with really astonishing faculties. Ciella is hard to wrinkle. It never sags out of shape. It's cool but not clammy. It washes and dries rapidly. And if you dry your dress on a hanger, you can often skip the ironing.

All you need is one minute and a telephone to find out where to buy these dresses right now. Dial the number of Western Union. Ask for Operator 25. She'll tell you. (Or you can write Sacony at College Point, New York.) One more tip. Take this page shopping with you. That way you won't get into the wrong department—or the wrong dresses. Stitched dress, 14.95. Two-tone dress with elasticized Waistbander (registered U. S. Patent Office), 12.95. Both in misses or petite sizes. (Other styles in half sizes, too.)

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

"Not having children is more than disappointment — it's becoming a tragedy to my wife. Why shouldn't we try artificial insemination?"

A LITTLE late for the first appointment of the afternoon, the doctor hurriedly entered his consulting room to find a couple already sitting there, obviously ill at ease. He noted with approval that a folder containing their case records had been placed on his desk by the office nurse, and with a murmur of apology for his tardiness he hastened to greet the visitors.

"I have been expecting to see you," he continued. "I hope you have some good news for me."

The woman shook her head sadly. "I only wish we had. No, we have nothing to report."

The doctor shuffled through the sheaf of laboratory data before him. "I scarcely need to examine these records again," he said, because I remember the facts very well. About six months ago I made as complete a sterility study of you two as we can make, and found nothing amiss. So far as we have been able to determine, you are both as nearly normal for your ages—which are not youthful, of course—as any couple I have ever seen."

"Then why can't we have a baby?" the man asked. "We have followed every bit of advice that you gave us. Why do we have to be the only couple, of all the people we know, without children? Everyone else has them—some more than they want."

"You must not forget that about twelve per cent of all marriages are sterile," pointed out the doctor. "You have plenty of company in your disappointment."

"It's much more than a disappointment. For my wife it is becoming a tragedy."

"Continual brooding upon a subject can make a tragedy out of something much less important than childlessness. Granting that the maternal instinct is strong in most women, there is no reason why its frustration should cause anyone to feel that her life has been wasted."

"What do you mean, Doctor?" asked the woman.

"If you feel an overwhelming desire for children," the doctor told her gently, "it can be satisfied, to a degree, even though you have none of your own. There is the greatest need for nurses' helpers in the children's wards of some of our large hospitals. A few hours two or three times a week spent in ministering to some of these children would do much to satisfy your maternal instinct."

"But that isn't like having a child of my own."

"Of course it isn't. Nevertheless, this type of mothering has its compensations—for instance, there are countless disappointments and heartbreaks you might be able to avoid by doing your share in caring for children who are not your own flesh and blood. And there is yet another recourse."

"Yes, Doctor? What is that?"

"It seems highly probable that you two, with such an excellent home background, could find a healthy, lovable infant to adopt, to whom you would soon be completely devoted."

"We've thought of that, but we have no intention of trying it until every other means has failed."

"That is understandable. Now, to return to your problem of the moment ——"

"Doctor, we cannot understand why, if we are both normal and presumably fertile individuals, we are unable to conceive a child."

"It is an unfortunate fact, proved many times, that even though a man and a woman are both anatomically and physiologically normal in every respect, there is no assurance that they can accomplish a pregnancy."

"But why not?"

"It is unexplainable in the light of our present knowledge, and I will not harass you by theorizing. Nature has some laws that are inscrutable."

"When we last consulted you, Doctor, you gave us a set of instructions which we have carried out meticulously. Please tell me this—have you exhausted every means at your disposal to help us?"

"No. There is one which I have been holding in reserve. Before I say anything further I would like to have you tell me what you know about artificial insemination."

"Only what I have read in the papers about 'test-tube babies.'"

"Would you be willing to try that method of providing yourself with an offspring?"

"I've already told you that I would try anything. What's wrong with it, anyhow? If there is anything wrong about it, why is it permitted?"

"I haven't said that there is anything legally wrong, although there are some strange legal problems concerning pregnancies ar-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 47

Doctor Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of Women, containing several chapters which have not appeared in the Journal, has been published by Hawthorn Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Seal-Sac closet accessories. Garment bags, $2.50 to $4.95

How Koroseal ends closet clutter

PEOPLE no longer have to close closet doors before guests arrive. Closet accessories of Koroseal turn even the worst of catch-all closets into neat, smart looking storage space.

Koroseal flexible material is the stuff that always looks new. In shower curtains, Koroseal keeps bathrooms beautiful for years, won't chip, crack, peel or mildew. Baby pants of Koroseal are light, soft—washable in seconds.

But the best thing about Koroseal is that only the top manufacturers of any product can use it. The "Paratomic" garment bags with a special moth-repellent feature, are made by Seal-Sac, Inc. Joseph A. Kaplan & Sons makes the new Jakson line of Koroseal shower curtains. Baby pants are made by Warren's, raincoats by Climatic—all leading manufacturers. When you see the name Koroseal you can be sure the product is the best that can be made.

Look for the label. Look for things made of Koroseal in all kinds of stores, but look for the Koroseal label. If they don't have the label, they aren't real Koroseal. The B.F.Goodrich Company, Marietta, Ohio.

Koroseal—T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Koroseal

FLEXIBLE MATERIALS BY

B.F.Goodrich

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS DIVISION

It's what you put on first that adds the finishing touch..

Playtime...

Daytime...

Gaytime...

Anytime! Full skirt or slim skirt... jacket, blouse or sweater... shirtwaist or strapless gown... what you put on first adds the finishing touch! That's why it's so important you wear a bra and girdle keyed to every outfit. For the bra that's a success with your cashmeres can undermine your cocktail dress. And the girdle that's so wonderful with your tweeds won't have the same talent for silks! Formfit has styles to complement your entire wardrobe . . . to put you at your loveliest—daytime, playtime and gaytime. So comfortable, so glamourizing, you'll love Life wherever you go, whatever you do. Yes—it's Life by Formfit all through the day—for all your fashion needs!

Life BY Formfit

Free! "Your Figure Type—What to do About It." Send today for this informative Formfit booklet. Mailed in plain envelope. Write to The Formfit Company, Dept. F-55, 400 S. Peoria Street, Chicago, Ill.

Prices slightly higher in Canada

For Playtime .....

Life Thrill Bra No. 587 . . . cool, shape-holding cotton broadcloth. Whisper-light strips of foam rubber padding curved to the underbust for today's higher bustline. 32A to 38C. $2.50

Life "Sleek" Pantie No. 1183 . . . feather-light, freedom-giving design in sheer Dacron leno elastic. Satin elastic front and back panels for expert slimming. White, 26-34. 15" length. $13.50

For Daytime .....

Life Girdle No. 1562 . . . artfully styled to shape and slim you to lovelier lines. Nylon taffeta front and satin elastic back panel control with comfort. Formelastic top for a hand-span look waist. 27-34, 15" length. $10.00

For Gaytime .....

Life Girdle No. 1590 . . . figure-making design in luxurious nylon taffeta and french-type leno elastic. Higher waist band for a trimmer, smoother mid-riff. Pink, White or Black. 26-34, 15" length. $16.50

There are all kinds of baby sitters

...but the one you select has to have the highest character references. Is that equally true of the swabs which enter your nursery? Remember—

More doctors and mothers have used 'Q-TIPS'...

More babies have been cared for by 'Q-TIPS'...

...than all other cotton swabs combined!

Recommended by
MARY MARGARET McBRIDE
NBC Radio — Mon. and Tues.

The box for you is blue!

Look for this famous blue box. Only 'Q-Tips' has the strip-off safety-seal, handy sliding tray.

IT'S A BEAUTY OPERATOR, TOO!

Keep 'Q-Tips' on your dressing table to blend on make-up, erase smudges, touch up hair the easy way. It's a marvelous manicuring and grooming aid.

Also available in Canada ▪ Q-Tips®
Made by Q-Tips Inc., Long Island City, N. Y.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 45

rived at by this method. Wait just a moment ——"

The doctor rummaged in a desk drawer and drew out a sheaf of newspaper clippings held together by a metal clamp.

"Let me read you this from the United Press. It has a London date line:

"'The Journal of the British Medical Association said today that adopting a child obviously involves fewer risks and difficulties than artificial insemination from a man other than the husband. There are religious as well as ethical objections to artificial insemination by a donor,' the Journal said.

"'There seems little doubt that any child resulting from artificial insemination by donor is illegitimate, that registration under the husband's name is illegal, and that it is not entitled to the rights of inheritance.

"'Some authorities take the view that a court of law would regard the act as one of adultery on the part of the woman and, if donor is married, on his part too. Also, the donor might be liable for maintenance of the offspring.'

"Now, that shows how the English feel about it. I might add that the laws governing inheritance in England are different from those in the United States. The doctor who goes out of his way to lend Nature a kindly hand in this country, however, has plenty of complications to worry over. Let me point out a few.

It is good to have the things that money can buy, but it is also good to check up once in a while and be sure we have the things that money cannot buy.

—GEORGE HORACE LORIMER

"Take the birth certificate which must be filed after the birth of every infant—and I can assure you that our health departments are very insistent about the strict observance of this law, as they should be. In the case of an artificial insemination by donor, the doctor cannot honestly state that the husband is the father, can he? But if the father's name is not stated on the birth certificate, except as 'unknown,' illegitimacy of the child would be the natural assumption of anyone who might have occasion to see that certificate. Suppose that years later the child had reason—as often happens—to obtain a photostatic copy of the birth certificate. You can see that the result might be close to tragic.

"Suppose, again, that a single donor might father a large number of children with no one except the doctors having knowledge of the details. It would be quite possible that in the course of a generation or two certain of these children might mate incestuously, while being entirely ignorant of such a crime.

"In fact, the entire subject of artificial insemination appears bizarre to me. There are legal issues which have not yet been decided or even posed. There is a premise in law, however, that a child born in wedlock is presumed to be legitimate; and I imagine that in time special laws may be needed to cover various phases of insemination by donor. Recently I read a ruling by a Chicago judge that 'children conceived of sperm other than that of the mother's legal mate are illegitimate.' Now you see why I am wary about all this. The subject is too controversial to waste any more time considering, in my opinion."

"Then you won't help us further, Doctor?"

"I didn't say that. I am willing to go all the way with you, provided we use your own seed instead of that of a professional donor. While I know positively that your seed is active and abundant, it is possible that, for some reason we have not discovered, it is not reaching the right place. There are two ways to try to assist Nature. One is to deposit the husband's semen on the inside of a vaginal diaphragm which is fitted accurately

CONTINUED ON PAGE 164

Keeping cool is a matter of food and fashion.
A frosty salad bowl,
a tinkling iced drink—
and the sweet serenity of a sleeveless Ship'n Shore!

Ship'n Shore®

BLOUSES

The patterned cotton with crochet-edge, 2.98
The pleated-scoop pima broadcloth, 3.50
Both sizes 30-38
Girls' blouses, sizes 7-14 from 1.98

the sign of a good washable blouse

Ship'n Shore®

Hollywood's favorite

Lustre-Creme Shampoo...

Cream or Lotion

"Yes, I use Lustre-Creme Shampoo," says Jane Wyman. It's the favorite beauty shampoo of 4 out of 5 top Hollywood movie stars!

It never dries your hair! Lustre-Creme Shampoo is blessed with lanolin . . . foams into instant, rich lather, even in hardest water . . . leaves hair wonderfully easy to manage.

It beautifies! For star-bright, satin-soft, fragrantly clean hair—without special after-rinses—choose the shampoo of America's most glamorous women. Use the favorite of Hollywood movie stars—Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

Never Dries— it Beautifies!

Jane Wyman

co-starring in "LUCY GALLANT"

A Paramount Picture in VistaVision.
Color by Technicolor.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

FROM broad verandas one could hear the soft strumming of mandolins and the harmonizing of Glow Worm and The Shade of the Old Apple Tree in May, 1905. On the eve of May Day, New England swains left fragrant bouquets of spring flowers at their sweethearts' doors. American soprano Geraldine Farrar made her Paris debut, Edith Wharton's House of Mirth appeared, and Trilby hypnotized Broadway.

In the May, 1905, JOURNAL, ex-President Grover Cleveland characterizes many women's clubs as "harmful" and "menacing," concludes "the best and safest club for a woman is her home."

Admonishes the Lady From Philadelphia: "A woman should never accept the shelter of an umbrella from a man who is a stranger to her—even when worried about ruining her best bonnet."

Bride's budget: Cleaning woman, 50¢ a day; laundry, 75¢ a week; food for two (plus entertaining), $5 a week.

"On what income should a man marry?" the JOURNAL asked 100 bachelors, got this typical answer: "On savings of $300 and a salary of $10 to $15 a week."

On the next question, "What is the ideal size family?", most bachelors said four children, one wanted six or eight. "Like my grandmother used to say, rearing a family is like putting up preserves for the winter: the more you put up, the more enjoyment you have."

"How to Dress on $50 a Year." Fashion expert Mrs. Ralston advises, "Buy a suit and blouse to serve one year for best, one year for afternoon wear, and finally, a year in the kitchen."

This was the year of immensely wide hats, veiled faces, frothy white confections of gowns. Some of the materials popular for summer: "flowered lawns and organdies, silk muslin, dotted Swiss, Irish dimities, pale pink and pale blue voiles, white China silk, and India chiffon."

Hair styles: "The pompadour is much worn, a knot at the neck just clearing the high collar."

Just as with these Cambodian kids on the stairway to the temples, Danny Kaye needed no translator anywhere in the Far East. They all hilariously understood the language of his funmaking.

WE couldn't help thinking again the other day, over at the United Nations, how much louder actions often speak than words—especially when the actions are Danny Kaye's. We'd just been watching a little movie of his activities among the underprivileged children of the Far East; and the way these agonizingly gaunt kids and their parents responded to the universal language of Danny's pantomiming was like the sun coming out from behind a cloud. It was on a par with what Danny points out wherever he shows up in the picture—the work that's being done by the U. N. International Children's Emergency Fund with its powdered milk, its penicillin, and all its other remedies for hunger and despair. Don't miss it. You'll see the U. N. and Danny at their best.

Everywhere we go we still hear about the Queen Mother's visit as though it were yesterday; for instance, at Williamsburg recently, looking in Bruton Parish Church, we met the rector, the Rev. Francis H. Craighill, who told us about the Q. M. coming there on Armistice Day. Mr. C. related how he led her to the royal governor's chair, all canopied in gold, and how she smiled and asked, "Which was George Washington's pew? I want to sit in it." "So later," Mr. Craighill told us, "I showed her this eighteenth-century prayer book." On the title page the name King George III had been scratched out, and in its place had been written the name of the first President.

Britain's Queen Mother (in hat) at famous old Bruton Parish Church.

COLONIAL WILLIAMSBURG

One out of every two persons in this country has trouble sleeping; women are more often troubled by sleeplessness than are men. . . . Research shows that a sudden large increase in wages tends to make employees extravagant, irregular in work.

At a luncheon the plywood people gave recently, Cynthia Wheatland noticed that nearly all the men from the organization either wore strips of bandage on their hands or gave other evidence of skinned knuckles, scratched fingers. Tactfully, Cynthia asked one who was apparently unscathed if he could explain. "Oh, that," he told her—"they've all been taking part in the company's do-it-yourself campaign."

To give you an idea of how free enterprise carries on behind your backs, Mary Bass at luncheon the other day was listening to what R. K. Brodie, president of the Procter & Gamble Fund, had to say about his company's plan to establish 40 four-year scholarships at women's colleges, the first program of this kind specifically for women ever to be sponsored by a big business concern in this country. It seems that on the side his company also sponsors 200 scholarships open to both men and women, and makes other substantial aids to education. Anyway, when Mary said how wonderful it was of them to weight the scales in women's favor, Mr. Brodie pointed out it was the least they could do. For after 118 years of such intimate association with women in the washtub, so to speak, his firm felt it was only fair to give some thought to women's higher aspirations. Especially, he went on, when what's at stake is the welfare of the whole United States.

Studies show that 32 per cent of men and 28 per cent of women consider women more selfish than men: 47 per cent of women think men are more selfish—and nearly 40 per cent of the men agree! . . . It has been found that military training, contrary to popular opinion, does not tend to make men "war-minded." . . . Statistics show that a million and a half women over sixty-five have no regular income of their own: only 8 per cent of elderly men are without income. Although older people prefer to live independently, one out of three without regular income lives in his own household.

Had you ever heard of a courting tube? Nor had we until our Early American Homes man here turned one up in the inventory of an Indiana log cabin. It was the only way two young people could have a private conversation in a crowded one-room cabin of a winter evening—through a hollowed-out elderberry branch.

Remember the "stir-off" in Jean Ritchie's Yonder Comes My Beau in the April JOURNAL? Here is Jean herself, adeptly handling the "skimmings" at a stir-off down in the Cumberlands last fall. Nelle Perry, who knows about stir-offs from her Tennessee childhood, explained the picture for benefit of city slickers here. The sorghum cane is stripped and crushed to extract the juice, which is then boiled in the long flat pans, being carefully and frequently skimmed until it becomes pure molasses. At that moment, says Nelle, a freshly baked pan of buttermilk biscuits is a mighty handy thing to have around.

GEORGE PICKOW

Jean Ritchie, chronicler of the Cumberland Mountains, deftly handles a ladle at a stir-off.

Being President always seemed to us a fairly hazardous job, what with long hours, fateful decisions to make, and always being on your guard; yet actuarily speaking it's way above average, the average age at death, from Washington to F.D.R., being over 68. Keeping their men fit (only Buchanan was a bachelor) was a little harder on Presidents' ladies, though they, too, were a stalwart group. Their average age, over 65.

COMBINE PHOTOS

Viscount Hambleden, one of HRH Princess Margaret's four favorite escorts before his recent marriage, strolls with her at Ascot.

Margaret's Coronation robe was white satin with broderie anglaise medallions in pearl and silver. When her sister became queen, the princess stopped calling her the hated nickname, "Liz."

PAUL POPPER LTD.

The Earl of Dalke was embarrassed b mors linking his na with Margaret's ju when his engageme his present wife wa be announced.

TROPICAL

Princess Margaret and her Beaux

There is to be no royally arranged marriage for her, Britain's debutante daughter has made clear—when she marries, it will be for love, as it was with all her family.

By NOYES THOMAS

UNITED PRESS PHOTO

With Peter Townsend. After her 25th birthday in August, Margaret can marry any man she pleases, with Parliament's consent.

AS August approaches—and with it Princess Margaret's birthday—each year, speculation about a marriage for the princess always climbs to a new climax. Everyone takes it for granted that the announcement will be made from Balmoral, where Margaret goes to spend her summer holiday and her birthday.

If at the appropriate season there does not happen to be some particularly eligible bachelor on the scene to be dubbed a suitor, then one is swiftly found. Almost any well-connected young man will do, particularly if he has been seen out and about a couple of times recently with the princess.

For the alleged suitor, the publicity sometimes is distinctly unfortunate, particularly if at the time he happens to be the swain of some other fair lady. That was the plight in which the young Earl of Dalkeith, heir to the Duke of Buccleuch, found himself during the summer of 1950, when he was hoping to announce his engagement to the lovely Jane McNeill, now his wife.

Long-range matchmakers are inclined, as each new fancy comes into the headlines, to overlook the fact that there has been a different favorite in the Margaret marriage stakes each summer since the princess' seventeenth birthday. First it was Prince Michael of Rumania. At eighteen came Lord Blandford, also now happily married. At nineteen there was Lord Ogilvy. Margaret's twentieth year produced Lord Dalkeith's embarrassing experience. Then came Billy Wallace, Mark Bonham Carter, Lord Hambleden and Colin Tennant. Group Captain Peter Townsend, who was a midseason "extra" in 1953, is again rumored to be the princess' choice.

Copyright 1955, by Allan Wingate Ltd., London, England.

Second favorites at different times have been Robin McEwen, son of an old friend of the royal family, Capt. J. H. F. McEwen; Tom Egerton, a wealthy Guards officer turned gentleman farmer; Lord "Jimmy" Carnegie, son of the wealthy Earl of Southesk and a second cousin of the princess; Lord Plunket, another ex-Guards officer who took over Peter Townsend's post as equerry at the palace; Lord Porchester, who has stayed in the Margaret "set" longer than most, has been a guest at Balmoral several times and is heir to the Earl of Carnarvon; and the Hon. Peter Ward, who is the second son of the Earl of Dudley.

Many others have been named as outside chances. In fact, the popular list of potential husbands has at one time or another included almost every young man who has ever been numbered among Margaret's widening circle of friends. It has embraced several who became associated with the "set" only because their sisters were members of it.

And it has always ignored altogether the presumably vital facts that Margaret is never escorted by one young man but always by two or more; that (in spite of several racy reports) no escort yet has so much as seen the princess home after a dance; that few of the "suitors" have ever had the opportunity to spend so much as a few minutes alone with her.

Margaret, at twenty-three years of age, had never been out alone; had never been to school; had never bought a bus or subway ticket; had never had a date that another girl would recognize as such; had in fact lived a life almost as remote from that of the ordinary person as if she had been in another world.

Consider, for a moment, what happens before any young CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

COMBINE

Churchill's cousin, the Marquis of Blandford, was frequent escort of the princess before his marriage. At Epsom Downs.

...in's Eligible Bachelor ... Billy Wallace, dances ...nba with Margaret at ...ank-You-Nurse ball. ...ort has yet seen her home.

COMBINE

Scots approved Lord Ogilvy's friendship with Margaret, the first royal child born in Scotland for three hundred years.

The Cloak

By ISAK DINESEN

"What is a woman?" Angelo asked.
"She does not exist until we create her and she has no life except through us." Yet he had been unfaithful for the sake of a woman . . .
and no one could save him, for to be unfaithful is to be annihilated.

WHEN the great old master, the sculptor Leonidas Allori, whom they called the Lion of the Mountains, was arrested for rebellion and high treason and condemned to death, his pupils wept and stormed. For to them he had been spiritual father, archangel and immortal. They assembled in Pierino's hostelry outside the town, in a studio or in an attic, where they could sob, two or three, in each other's arms, or—like a big tree in a gale with its bare branches reaching upward—crowded in a cluster could shake ten pairs of clenched fists to the sky, in a cry for rescue of their beloved, and for revenge on tyranny.

Only one out of all of them in those days continued to live as if he had neither heard nor understood the terrible news. And that one was the disciple whom the master had loved above all others, whom he had called son, as the young man had called him father. Angelo Santasilia's schoolfellows took his silence to be the expression of infinite sorrow; they respected his pain and left him alone. But the real reason for Angelo's absence of mind was that his heart was filled with passion for the master's young wife, Lucrezia. The love and understanding between her and him just at this time had gone so far that she had promised him her total surrender.

In vindication of the faithless wife it must be pleaded that for a long time, and in deep agitation and alarm, she had resisted the divine and merciless power which held her in its hands. With the most sacred names she had sealed—and had made her lover seal—an oath: that never again should word or glance at which the master himself could not have rejoiced pass between the two. As she felt that neither of them could keep the oath, she entreated Angelo to go to Paris to study. Everything was prepared for his journey. It was only when she realized that this resolve could not be carried out, either, that she gave herself up to her destiny.

The faithless disciple, too, might have pleaded extenuating circumstances, even if these might not have been accepted by every judge or juryman. Angelo in his young life had had many love affairs, and in every single case had surrendered himself utterly to his passion, but none of these adventures had ever for any length of time left a deep impression on his being. It was inevitable that, someday, one of them must become the most important of all. And it was reasonable, it was perhaps inevitable, that the chosen mistress should be the wife of his teacher. He had loved no human being as he had loved Leonidas Allori; no other human being had he at any time wholeheartedly admired. He felt that he had been created by the hands of his master, as Adam by the hands of the Lord; from these same hands he was to accept his mate. The Duke of CONTINUED ON PAGE 206

"Lucrezia," said Leonidas,
"has been to me all the glorious works of art of the world,
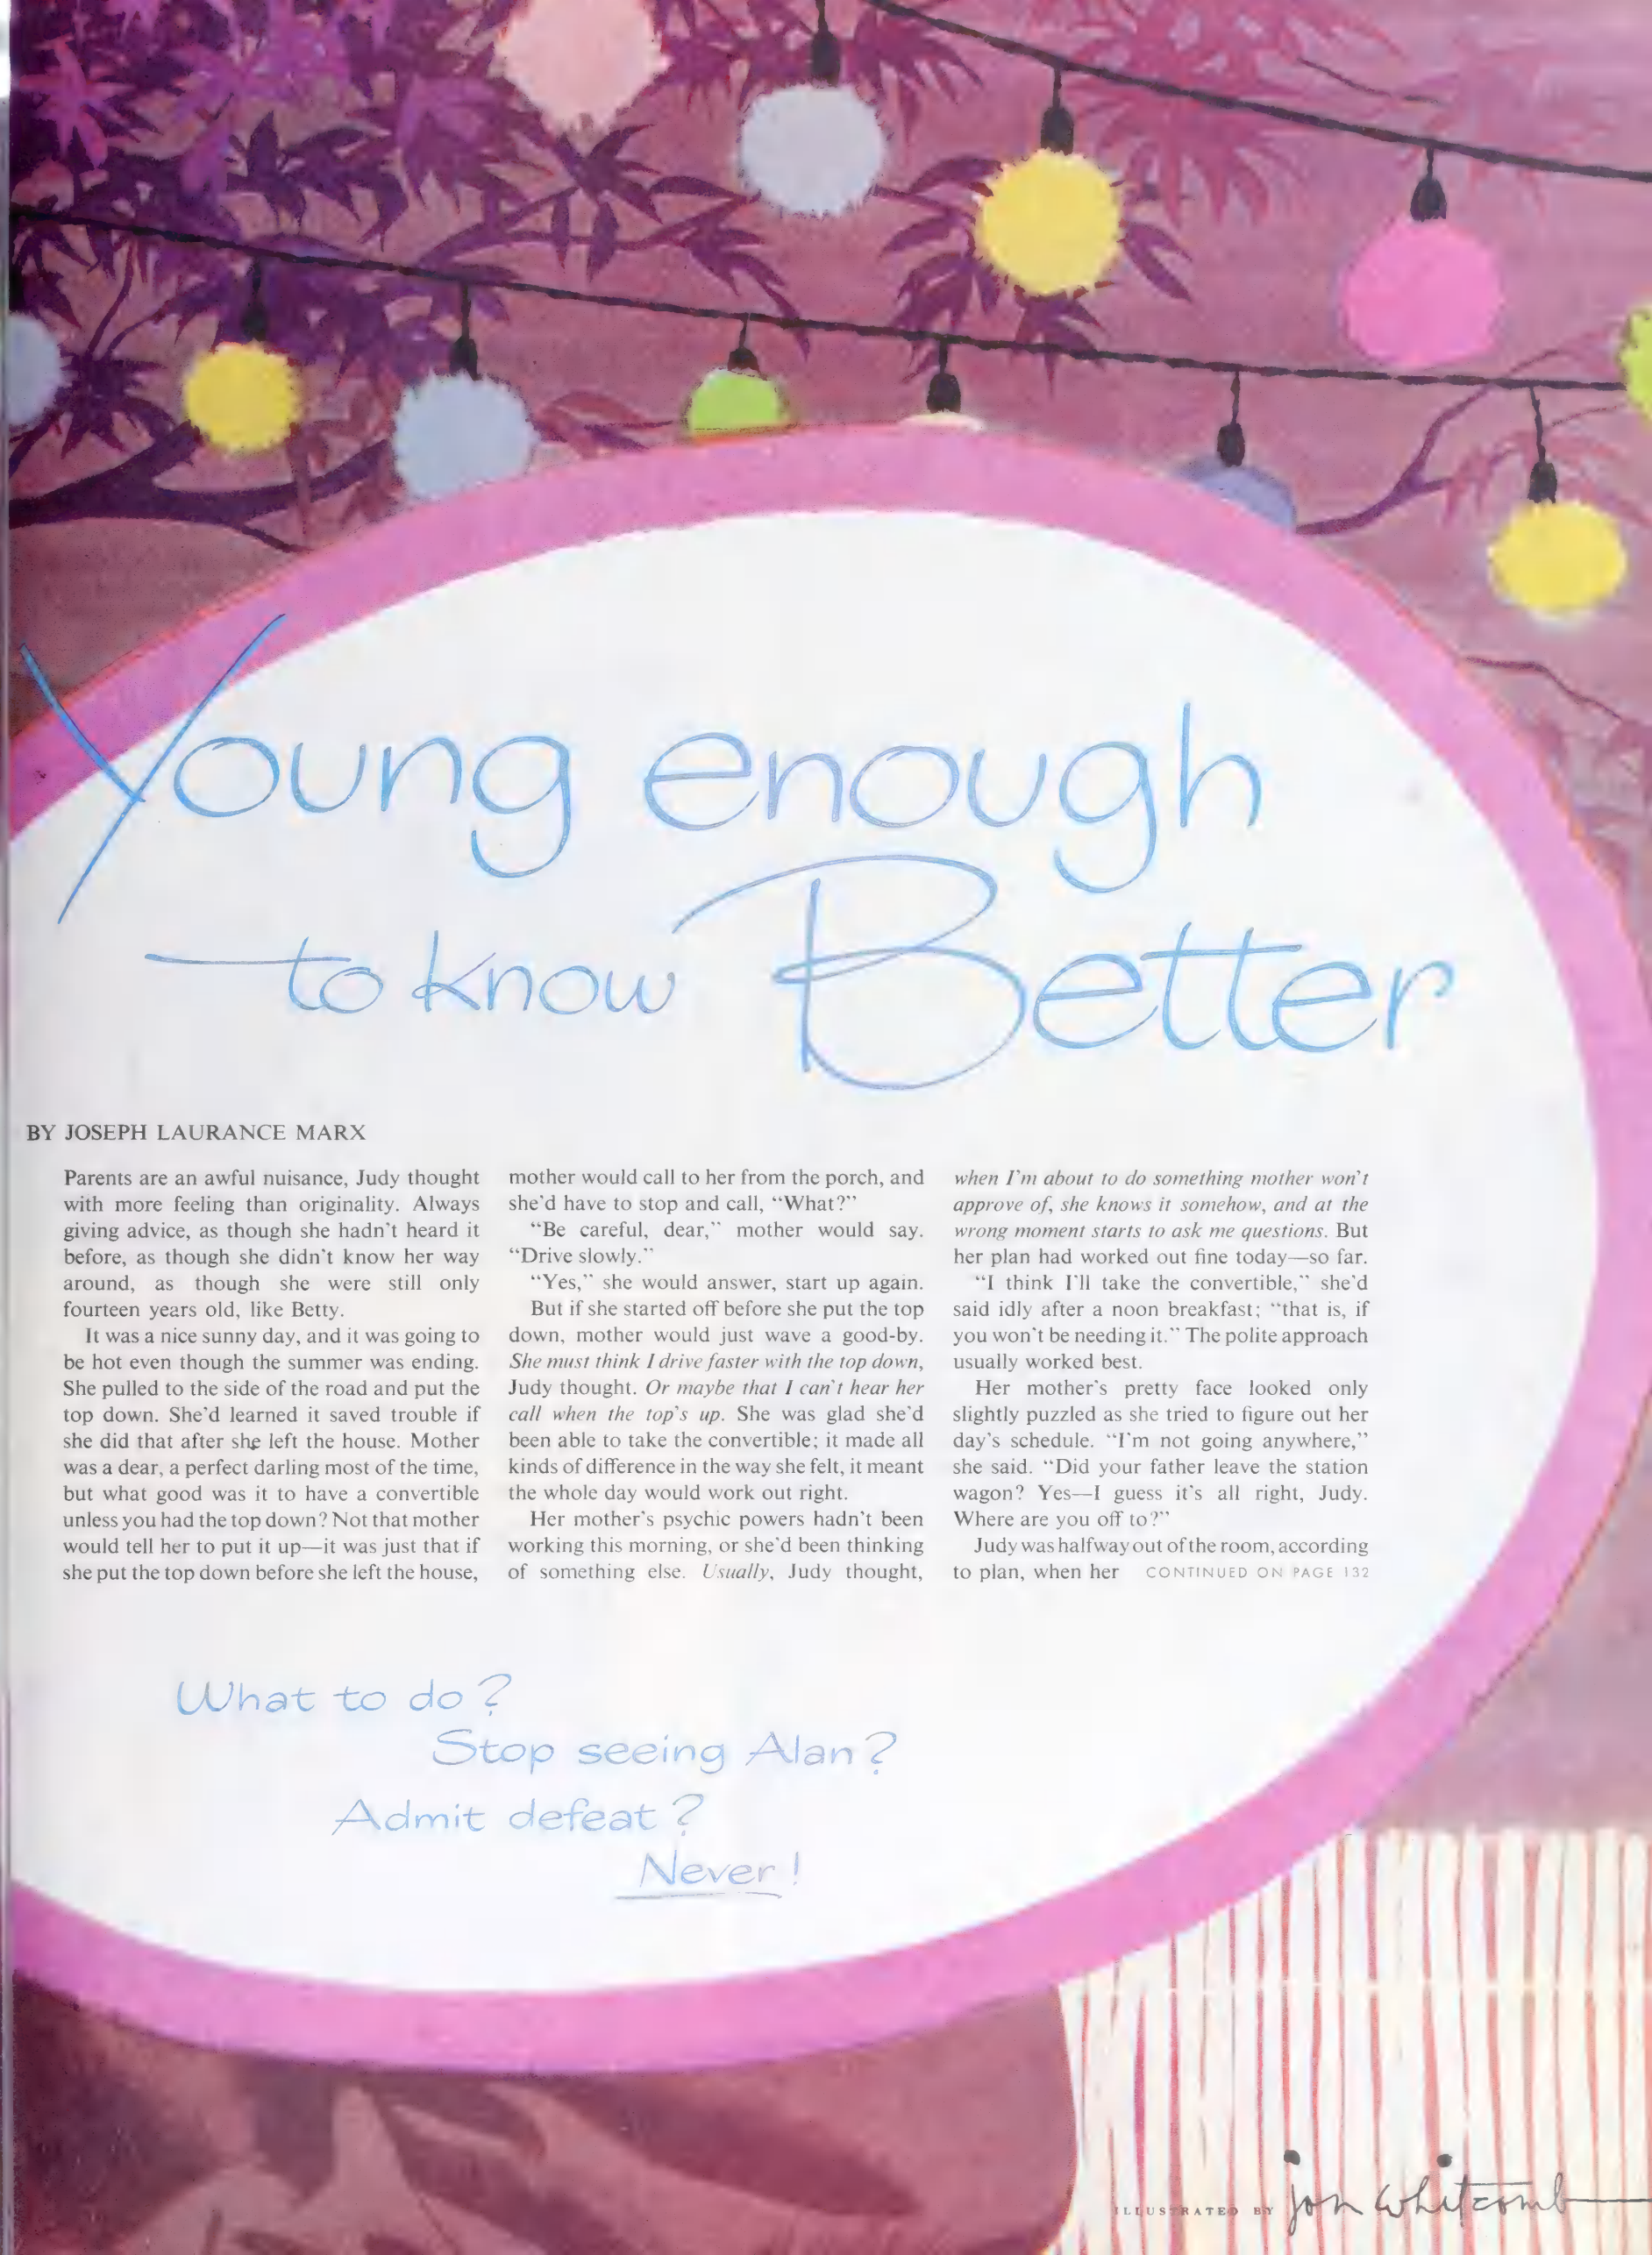
all of them in one single woman's body."

ILLUSTRATED BY GLADYS ROCKMORE DA



"Now I've hurt him,"

she thought. "He won't ask me out again now."

Young enough to know Better

BY JOSEPH LAURANCE MARX

Parents are an awful nuisance, Judy thought with more feeling than originality. Always giving advice, as though she hadn't heard it before, as though she didn't know her way around, as though she were still only fourteen years old, like Betty.

It was a nice sunny day, and it was going to be hot even though the summer was ending. She pulled to the side of the road and put the top down. She'd learned it saved trouble if she did that after she left the house. Mother was a dear, a perfect darling most of the time, but what good was it to have a convertible unless you had the top down? Not that mother would tell her to put it up—it was just that if she put the top down before she left the house, mother would call to her from the porch, and she'd have to stop and call, "What?"

"Be careful, dear," mother would say. "Drive slowly."

"Yes," she would answer, start up again.

But if she started off before she put the top down, mother would just wave a good-by. She must think I drive faster with the top down, Judy thought. Or maybe that I can't hear her call when the top's up. She was glad she'd been able to take the convertible; it made all kinds of difference in the way she felt, it meant the whole day would work out right.

Her mother's psychic powers hadn't been working this morning, or she'd been thinking of something else. Usually, Judy thought, when I'm about to do something mother won't approve of, she knows it somehow, and at the wrong moment starts to ask me questions. But her plan had worked out fine today—so far.

"I think I'll take the convertible," she'd said idly after a noon breakfast; "that is, if you won't be needing it." The polite approach usually worked best.

Her mother's pretty face looked only slightly puzzled as she tried to figure out her day's schedule. "I'm not going anywhere," she said. "Did your father leave the station wagon? Yes—I guess it's all right, Judy. Where are you off to?"

Judy was halfway out of the room, according to plan, when her CONTINUED ON PAGE 132

What to do?
Stop seeing Alan?
Admit defeat?
Never!

ILLUSTRATED BY Jon Whitcomb

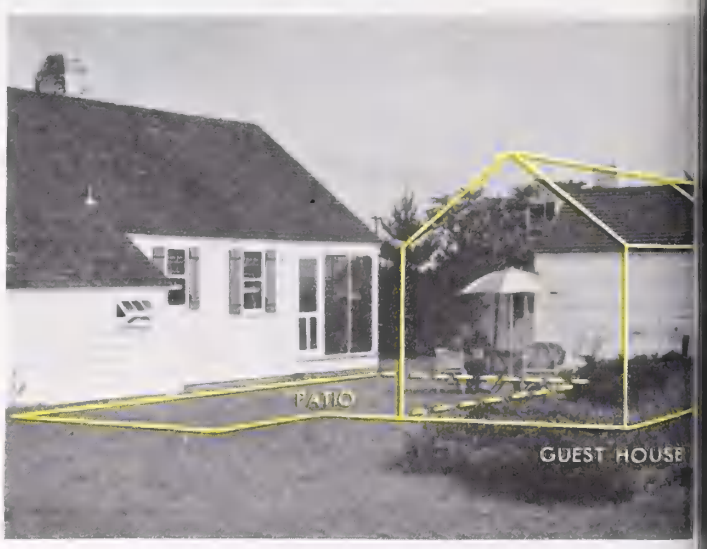
a Guest House and Patio IN THE BACK YARD for $2000

By RICHARD PRATT

FROM spring to fall a guest house and garden layout like this can be as good as a long vacation. It is a thing you can create all in a few short weeks, or take it step by step to spread out the cost and effort over several seasons. Either way, the money goes right into raising the value of the property. And as maintenance is nearly nil, running expenses are likewise.

You buy guest house prefabricated for simple assembly on the site. The two-bedroom, bath and breezeway shell in summer construction cost $1200, erected. That could be step Number 1. The partitioning and plumbing ($260) and permanent planting of evergreens and vines ($80), step Number 2. The paving laid ($176), fences built ($124) and reflecting pools ($36), step Number 3. Window boxes, plant benches, pots and tubs, plus a few flats of assorted annuals, take what's left out of $2000, and there you are.

COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ



For the floral effect, every spring you buy a few flats of assorted annuals, set them out in the various beds, boxes, pots and tubs. Or raise them yourself from seed, and save.

Any local sheet-metal shop can make these shallow pans to set in the paving as reflecting pools. Paint them inside with a good waterproof blue and keep them filled with the garden hose.

The before-and-after pictures below tell the story in a double-take: how an empty open back yard was transforme

Superimposed on the existing Cape Cod cottage and garage are the lines that indicate the shape and size of the contemplated guest house and patio. The picture shows how bare and open the back yard was.

Here you see how snugly the now vine-clad guest house ties into the existing garage, and with the simple lattice fencing at either end creates a wonderfully pleasant open-air enclosure.

ide-to-order holiday spot, as carefree, pretty and private as you please.

The effect a few years later when the vines and vines were well under way is a dramatic demonstration of a property-improvement project that pays dividends of pleasure indefinitely.

Each house-and-lot will make its own adaptation of the plan. Floor plan at right places entrances to bath and one guest room in rear instead of facing patio as shown in photograph above.

C. CLOSET
S. SINK
SH. SHOWER

1. BOSTON IVY
2. FLOWER BOX
3. ANNUALS
4. BLACK PINE
5. MUGHO PINE
6. JAPANESE BLACK PINE
7. BENCH OF POT PLANTS

"You still think I killed Spindell?" asked George.

"I don't know," Martha said miserably. "I don't know."

FIRST TRAIN TO BABYLON

When a woman is told,

"Your husband is a murderer," what can she do?

Trust him? Or search for the truth, no matter what the cost?

BY MAX EHRLICH

SOME might have called it an accident. Others might have called it by a more profound word, "fate." But the fact is, the two stories appeared in the same issue of The New York Times. They were both widely separated, in terms of the pages on which they appeared, and in what they said. The first appeared on page 1:

June 14—Echoes of a sensational murder trial of ten years ago were heard today when the Parole Board flatly refused to recommend a pardon to William Lehde, convicted murderer. This was Lehde's second petition for a pardon.

Lehde, a former shipping clerk at the Atlantic Carrier Corporation, had been accused of murdering Eli Spindell, paymaster of the firm, and stealing $75,000 in cash and another $25,000 in negotiable securities. An officer of the firm, George Radcliffe, who had seen Lehde run from the building with a suitcase containing the money, was the key witness, and instrumental in the conviction. Lehde was found guilty, and sentenced to life imprisonment at Sing Sing, on December 22, 1944.

Copyright, 1955, by Max Simon Ehrlich. This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by Harper & Brothers.

Although the Parole Board issued no official statement, it was believed that there was no possibility of a pardon unless Lehde made a full confession, and then informed authorities where he had hidden the money, which has never been recovered.

The prisoner, however, refused to make any confession. He stated that he had none to make, since he was an innocent man.

"I never stole the money, nor killed the paymaster," insisted Lehde. "I am innocent, and others have crucified me. Why should I say I am guilty when I have committed no crime? I can only hope for a miracle now. I can only pray that someday, somehow, the real murderer will be found. Then the truth will be known, and the world will see what injustice I have suffered."

There were pictures of William Lehde, a haggard, haunted-looking man, and his wife, Mildred, who had fought unceasingly for his release throughout the ten years. Her address, on East 106th Street, was given, and also the fact that the Lehdes had two children, a twelve-year-old son named Thomas, and a ten-year-old daughter, Carla. CONTINUED ON PAGE 138

Born to

"We're going to visit granny," Juliana told her daughters cheerfully as they fled Soestdijk when Nazis reached the Dutch border.

ANPFOTO

be Queen

By BETTY HOFFMAN and A. N. P.* (Netherlands News Agency)

"Your mother and I must stay," said Bernhard, "but if the next generation of the House of Orange is safe in America, it will help keep Dutch hopes alive."

"It is very difficult to bring up children in a palace," Princess Juliana told Sophia Feith, the girl she had just engaged as nurse for the new Crown Princess of the Netherlands, "but our daughter will not be raised in tissue paper. While she is still small she is to be called Trix, even by the servants. We do not want her even to hear the word princess." Bernhard was a devoted visitor to the nursery, and Juliana spent there every moment she could snatch from her official duties. She liked to give Beatrix her bath, and on Miss Feith's days off Juliana took over entire care of her daughter, keeping the child's crib by her desk as she worked on official papers. Both young parents were so friendly and informal that Miss Feith had difficulty remembering that they were royalty. When Trix was eighteen months old, Juliana's second daughter, Irene, was born. One month later, World War II began when the Nazis marched into Poland. As the blitzkrieg rolled over Norway, the Dutch army mobilized on the borders. It was increasingly apparent that Holland was next.

III A WEEK later reports came through that large numbers of German troops were heading for the Dutch border from Bremen and Düsseldorf. Zussie heard the disquieting news on the radio in her room. That afternoon Princess Juliana suddenly appeared at the rear door of the palace playroom and beckoned to the children's nurse.

Trix waved to her mother from a rocking horse. Just past two years, she was a vital, outgoing child with eyes dark blue as cornflowers in a heart-shaped face. The baby Irene, now nine months, crowed at them from a pink play pen.

Juliana informed Zussie that she was taking the girls to The Hague at once. "Bernhard will be ready to drive you down in two hours," she added, speaking very softly so that the children could not overhear. "In the meantime, please pack the girls' things. Take everything we may need in an emergency, but no more than one suitcase apiece, please." Then she raised her voice and called cheerily, "Let's find our coats, children. We're going to granny's."

As soon as the princess and the children left in a high black palace limousine, Zussie ran to the nursery and with Copyright, 1955, A. N. P. (Netherlands News Agency).

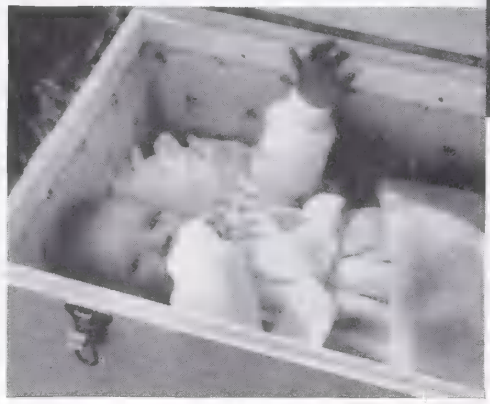
*This series was written by Mrs. Hoffman, working in collaboration with A.N.P. (Netherlands News Agency) and with full cooperation from Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard. Mrs. Hoffman, a former JOURNAL editor, spent months in Holland (where she had free access to the palace), and in Belgium and Canada.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

Queen Wilhelmina reached England with only the clothes on her back. With Bernhard (4th from left), she visited ruins of Dutch church, Austin Friars, bombed by Nazis.



BERT BUURMAN

Royal family slept, "too close to turn over," in 8'x10' air-raid shelter as Luftwaffe bombed Amsterdam. Juliana (holding Irene), nurse "Zussie," Trix.

Zussie carries infant Irene out of Holland.

BERT BUURMAN

BERT BUURMAN

Too tiny for mask, Irene had gastight crib.

UNITED PRESS PHOTO

With nurse ill, steward aboard Sumatra who "knew all about feeding babies" fed Irene. She thrived on huge portions of baked beans and pea soup.

NETHERLANDS INFORMATION SERVICE

In Ottawa Juliana had first automatic dishwasher. For household of eleven, she marketed unrecognized, Zussie did laundry, Baroness Roell cooked.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD, CANADA

Bernhard, inspecting flight training in Mississippi, visited his family when possible, delighted in his Dutch children's speaking American slang with Canadian accent. His life was saved, indirectly, because Trix caught mumps.

BLACK STAR

Queen Wilhelmina came from England for Margriet's christening at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Ottawa.

EUROPEAN

With some help from granny, whose visit lasted only a few days, Irene keeps Trix up in air.

Irene, snatched from the Nazis in a "puppy basket," had her first five birthdays in Canada. Neither she nor Trix could remember life in Holland.

BERT BUURMAN

Born to be Queen

quick fingers began packing the little piles of fresh clothing she had set aside for this day. In Trix's suitcase she had room for her tea set and rag doll, but Irene's bag, she was dismayed to find, was almost completely filled with diapers. She finally packed most of Irene's outer clothing in her own suitcase and took only a change of underclothing and some sweaters for herself. It mattered little whether they were headed for a hot or a cold climate, for days, weeks or months—the suitcase was already bulging.

Two hours later she was ready and waiting in the front hall. She wore her navy nurse's uniform and carried a light coat which she felt could also serve as a blanket for the children.

The three Roells came to say good-by to her. William, broad-shouldered and blue-eyed, was smiling and joking, as usual. The dark-haired Martine, looking pale and beautiful, said little, clinging to her husband's hand. The baby Renée kept asking for Trix.

Then Bernhard came downstairs in a tremendous hurry, followed by a palace porter with a tin foot locker. He was wearing the gray-green uniform of a captain in the Dutch army.

"So long—see you later," he told the Roells, and taking Zussie's arm, propelled her to the car waiting outside. As they raced down the drive with the prince at the wheel, the nurse turned to wave to the Roells, standing on the broad palace steps. Far above their heads the bare flagpole announced that all royalty had left Soestdijk.

The family, with the exception of Queen Wilhelmina, was reunited that day at Huis Ten Bosch just outside The Hague, a royal residence which had a very well-equipped air-raid shelter of several rooms. It was decided, however, that everyone would go to bed in the palace bedrooms, as there was no telling when the attack would come and there was no use upsetting the children.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 120

Margriet quickly became "Pietie."

Trix reveled in the freedom of America, walking to school, roller skating in the streets with her Canadian friends—and almost all the ice-cream cones she wanted!

With Trix, Pietie and Irene, Princess Juliana spent summer of 1944 on Cape Cod, Massachusetts.

OFFICIAL NETHERLANDS PHOTO

Up Home

By ARDYTH KENNELLY

Linnea Ecklund knew that her husband, Olaf, tried to divide his time, money and love honestly between her and his other wife, Sigrid; but she knew, too, that on the nights Olaf spent down home with Sigrid, he closed the tailor shop reluctantly, while he hurried to his nights up home with Linnea and the children as to an oasis of warmth and happiness. As the younger wife, Linnea had faced losing Olaf when polygamy was outlawed in Utah Territory, but amnesty was granted established families; so she counted her blessings and tried not to mind Sigrid's insinuation that baby Myra could not win the Most Beautiful Baby in Salt Lake contest. The children, Bertha, Gertrude, Stellie and Rudie, were all firm in their faith in Myra, and busy Linnea had scant time for resentment. She had given refuge to homeless old Mrs. Troon. Then, as midwife, she was part of the excitement when meek little Mrs. Lilygren had her baby in the middle of the temple dedication. And she looked on approvingly as Mrs. Lilygren found courage to rise from her bed and order her abusive husband from the house and from her life.

II "SO they picked on Temple, did they?" old Mrs. Troon said, rocking by the fire. It had turned off so warm that they wouldn't have had one, only that Linnea had bread in the oven.

"They're just calling her 'Baby,' now. Her middle name's Dedication, so I don't know what they will call her, later on," Linnea said. She reached over and pulled a green blind still lower, so that only a slit of white sunlight showed under it.

"They ain't seen hide nor hair of him, h'm?" Mrs. Troon rocked contentedly.

"Neither hide nor hair," Linnea said. "He's living in back of the carpenter shop, cooks for himself, they hear. He figured she meant what she said, I guess. For that matter, I did, too, till I shook myself. She claims now she wouldn't of prob'ly done it, but she looked capable of it."

"A worm will turn," Mrs. Troon said, "as the saying goes."

Mrs. Troon did not look better after over a week at Linnea's. She looked, in fact, a little worse, a little paler, a little more shriveled, and nothing seemed to tempt her, not even cornstarch pudding with cream poured on. She seldom moved from the Boston rocker during the whole day, but she liked it there. She said theirs was a happy place to be and she thought she was improving.

"You see this here broach?" the old woman said suddenly, reaching up to it with an unsteady hand. "I might as well tell you a little something. Not all, but a little something. You see these here two strands of hair?"

"It's beautiful. I been admiring it."

"You want to make a guess whose hair this is?"

Linnea bent closer and examined it. "Well," she said, "maybe the brown one's yours, and the black one, that would be your husband's!"

"Wrong. My hair was auburn!" Mrs. Troon said triumphantly. "I had many and many a compliment give me on my hair."

"I bet you did," Linnea said. "Then whose ——"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 84

Copyright, 1955, by Ardyth Kennelly Ullman

I could just imagine what kind of a hullabaloo there would be. Olof's eyes were on the clock of the hour in the limelight, and finally I just couldn't stand it no more.

Linnea stared at Olof— she knew she was married to a brave man, but was he as brave as that?

MORGAN KANE

Figures made to order

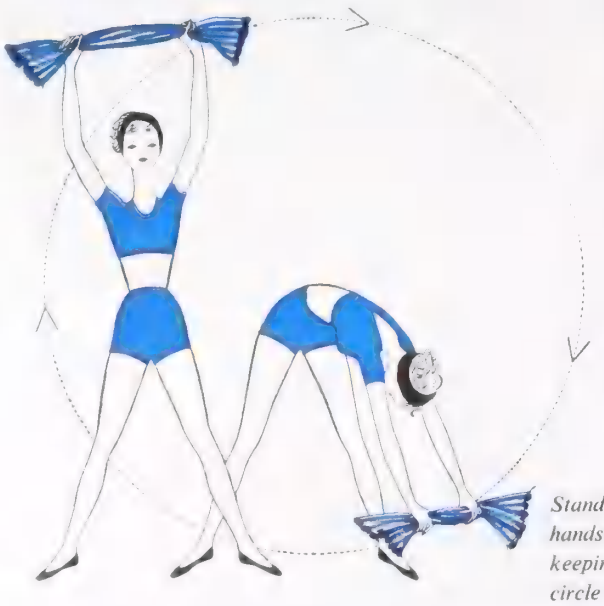
Mrs. Hugh Cullman, housewife and mother, beautifully illustrates our belief that model figures need not necessarily be confined to models! Nan exercises regularly, eats intelligently, and feels as fit as she looks.

This material is taken from work being compiled for a complete study of nutritional and physical fitness needs for today's living by W. Coda Martin, M.D., and Nicholas Kounovsky.

LILLIAN BASSMAN

Do you have a special figure problem? The first step toward overcoming it is to know your figure type. The sketches and descriptions at the top of the opposite page will enable you to pick out your particular figure frustration. When you have, follow the individual diet and exercise instructions worked out for you by two experts, Dr. W. Coda Martin, specialist in preventive geriatrics, and Nicholas Kounovsky, physical-fitness instructor.

"Keep in mind," caution the gentlemen, "that you probably are a combination of types." For instance, a true Mesomorph is overdeveloped muscularly, but has no excess fatty tissue. The "solid" woman who bemoans unwanted weight is more likely to be a combination Mesomorph-Endomorph, her problem being hard muscle topped off with too much fat! In such a case, she would follow exercise instructions for the Endomorph (soft fatty), avoiding only those exercises that might overdevelop a singularly solid area—such as calves or upper arms.



Doctor Martin and Mr. Kounovsky believe if you follow your personalized program faithfully and accurately, you will reach a peak in good health that will make you feel just as streamlined as you will look. (For reducing and building-up diets, turn to pages 186 and 187.)

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

Lie on back, knees flexed, feet together. Holding a weight in each hand (a pint-sized soft-drink bottle will do), raise arms so that hands are slightly wider apart than shoulders. Inhaling, lower arms back beyond head, almost touching floor. Exhaling, return arms.

For Prettier Posture, Firmer Bustline, Stronger Back

Stand erect, feet apart, arms up, holding towel with hands that are shoulder width apart. Bend from waist, keeping knees stiff, and describe wide clockwise circle with towel, touching floor. Alternate direction.

Stand with feet apart and bend over in relaxed po sition, back humped, arms and head hanging, weigh in each hand. Now, lift head and shoulders, arch yo back, raise arms out to sides and up as high as possibl

ENDOMORPH
(Soft, fatty)

Flabby and spare-tirish, you have poor muscle tone. A normal day's work exhausts and weakens you. You may love summer sheaths but you wouldn't be caught bulging in one for your life. Your social and emotional happiness may be limited in direct relation to the number of excess pounds and puffs you carry.

MESOMORPH
(Firm, hard flesh)

Yours are solid, seemingly unbudgeable bulges. You are "sturdy." You overexert. When you sweep, you get a strong hold on the broom and bear down. You tend to create hardy effects in clothes and manner—while secretly you yearn for a feminine look to melt men's hearts. (Who doesn't?)

ECTOMORPH
(Skinny)

Bony and angular, you'd love to be able to fill out a bathing suit. You may be finicky about food or eat like a horse, but nourishment refuses to turn into curves. Tense and high-strung, your muscles and nerves are always in action. Just "sprawling," you use more energy than the average woman on cleaning day.

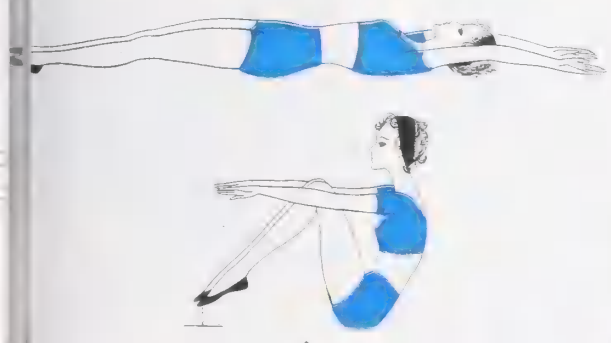
Exercise Rules for All Types. Have doctor's approval. Breathe deeply. Never force, but reach a pleasant feeling in area involved in exercise. End exercises with complete s-t-r-e-t-c-h, complete bend, deep breathing, relaxation.

Your exercise rules: Do all exercises shown below, especially those involving fattiest areas. Begin with slow rhythm, gradually increasing speed of rhythm to "fast," and repetition of exercises to "often." Work up to twenty times, each exercise. Repeat if not tired.

Your exercise rules: Strive for easy grace. Try posture, breathing, back exercises (page 66). Do small quantity. Make motions fluent, rhythmical, r-e-l-a-x-e-d. Do not exceed six times each exercise. Avoid exercises which might overdevelop muscular areas.

Your exercise rules: Do exercises involving undeveloped areas, as well as abdominal exercises which will improve general health. Employ s-l-o-w rhythm, complete contractions and relaxations. Gradually reach maximum of ten times each exercise.

Diet Rules for All Types. Have doctor's approval. Ask him if vitamin and mineral supplements are necessary. Avoid fried foods, excessively rich foods. Be sure diet includes all Essential Foods (listed on page 188).



Your diet rules: Keep written records of your progress to make you proud and purposeful. Your reduced weight will increase resistance to: high blood pressure, heart trouble, hardening of the arteries, liver disease. Envision the figure you can have if you refuse to falter.

Your diet rules are the same as those outlined for Endomorphs. One exception. Because solid weight is difficult to reduce, you may have to diet longer to achieve comparable results. Don't give up. Curves—and compliments—are around the corner.

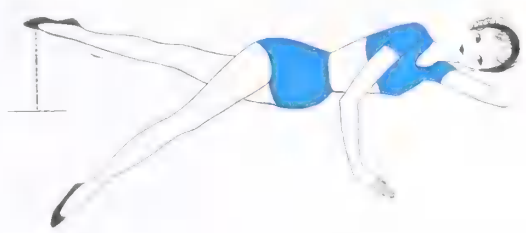
Your diet rules: Calm down! Physical and emotional tensions discourage proper digestion and assimilation of food. Eat s-l-o-w-l-y, in a pleasant atmosphere. If you want curves, make a conscious effort to r-e-l-a-x. Treat yourself to lots of rest and sleep.

For Tinier Waist, Flatter Midriff.

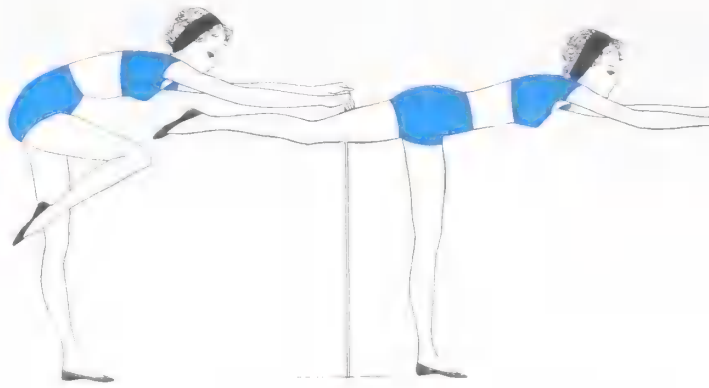
DRAWINGS BY FLORENCE KEVESON

Lie on back, feet together, arms overhead, backs of hands touching floor. Flex knees and simultaneously swing yourself forward and up to a sitting position, lifting feet and legs slightly from floor. Return. Repeat.

Lie on back, arms outstretched, left leg flat on floor, right leg perpendicular to body, knee straight. Without moving shoulders or back, lower right leg over and up toward opposite hand. Return. Repeat, other leg.



Lie on back, right leg on floor, left knee flexed, arms stretched up and forward. Swing up to sitting position, twisting toward left so that hands reach toward floor outside left foot. Return, repeat on other side.



For Flatter Hips, Firmer Thighs.

Stand erect, feet very wide apart, toes pointed to sides, hands on hips. Holding body straight, bend left knee, lowering yourself as low as possible, without bending the right knee. Return. Repeat other direction.

Lie on left side, right hand on floor in front for balance, legs outstretched in scissors position. Raise underneath leg as high as possible from floor. Return. Switch position of legs, repeat. Turn other side. Repeat Stand on left foot, body bent forward, arms outstretched, hands holding firm support (edge of desk will do), right knee flexed and forward. Unbend right knee, extending leg as high as possible in back. Hold for a moment. Repeat. Do same, with other leg.

Lois Smith, playing in East of Eden, wears a party shirtwaist dress of polka-dot organza by Rappi for afternoon, daylight dinner.

BRIGHT

Like millions of other girls in their teens and early twenties, they love "something simple," "someth comfortable," pretty skirts, gay prints. They like "anything pink," many shades of blue, apple green— and, as Debbie Reynolds says, "all happy colors." We've photographed them in gingham and organza, chintz and piqué, in clothes they would wear at brunch teatime or for small gay parties.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Anne Francis in a flowered organza for summer evening at home, by Christian Dior—New York. She stars in Blackboard Jungle.

Shirley Jones, star of her first picture, Oklahoma!, in a blue-and-white checked gingham edged with baby Val lace.

YOUNG STARS

IN FASHIONS FOR OFF-STAGE HOURS

JOHN ENGSTEAD

Pier Angeli in a black piqué dress with white organdy jacket by Sam Friedlander. Her next picture will be Romeo and Juliet.

Janice Rule, playing in The Flowering Peach, wears a knife-pleated cotton Paisley by Morgan Fauth.

Debbie Reynolds, starring in the picture version of the musical Hit the Deck, likes checked gingham with lace, by Mr. Sidney.

Julie Andrews, lovely young English star of The Boy Friend, spends an hour of leisure in a long white acetate housecoat by Robert Rosenfeld.

FASHIONS FOR TWO

She has new loves in summer fashions—the hem-length cotton-coat-and-silk-dress costume, beautiful Paisleys from daytime dresses to bathing suits, the long basque and middy silhouette, the new range of lemon and golden yellows and sharp greens. She likes HIM in plain color shirts, everyday suits in fabrics that practically won't wrinkle, dress-up suits in cool dark shades of silk-linen. Men also note: pin-striped slacks and white ducks returning to fashion, worn with simple pull-overs or denim-blue jackets. These fashions for two are right for all hours of the day.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

WILHELA CUSHMA

Poolside cafeteria lunching—note covered-up look. The blue-and-white Paisley cotton bathing suit by Clare Pot has a tunic coat: Mexican pink wool-jersey slacks have a matching boat-neck-jersey pull-over. The wide-brimmed l and cotton-top bag by Bill Hawes. Men wear printed Sanforized-cotton shorts and shirt, linen shorts and a polo sh

To market (or to town on a hot day) in a chambray basque dress with pleated skirt by Kasper, all-white accessories—nylon sweater, straw bag, shell bracelet, straw-cloth sandals. With light-weight slacks, he wears a jacket of Dacron and cotton, easy to wash and requires no ironing.

They motor in clothes that are comfortable, and right for stopovers. She wears a beige linen sheath by Ann Fogarty, with a cashmere sweater in almond green by Bernhard Altmann. His jacket is raw silk, the trousers charcoal flannel.

Afternoon on the lawn—the long Paisley skirt could be a year-round fashion, by Rachel Andres, worn with a gold Indian-cotton top. Printed cotton pajamas are a new length. Men go in for mustard shades in linens and drills, and an Irish-linen Paisley-lined jacket.

She dances in printed silk twill in fresh green and white by Rappi. He wears black silk-linen trousers, with a pink shantung jacket, black calfskin moccasins.

Her coin-dot voile by Ben Barrack is a noon-to-dinnertime town dress, accented with golden yellow Milan hat by Lilly Dache. Late in the day he wears black silk-linen, patent-leather moccasins.

City and country cotton coat and silk shantung dress by Sidney Wragge. His suit in gray Dacron and worsted.

TIME FOR FUN, country style. For a surrey (or for any pleasant afternoon) the right dress is this pink ribbon-trimmed cotton and Dacron by Joan Lewine.

TIME FOR WEEKENDS. The cover-up duster is non-crush linen, goes over anything in her wardrobe, by Kenneth Tischler. Accent in bright orange scarf and bag.

WILHELA CUSHMAN

ANY TIME—sleeveless, pale yellow Swiss cotton with a new neckline, by Nornie Lanz, is a summertime dress for morning, noon or night, for marketing or movies. The bag is a breadbasket with crocheted top. The low-heeled sandals are white kidskin.

TIME TO DANCE—in a lemon stick-candy stripe and embroidered bare-necked cotton with a jacket for les dressy occasions, by Madeleine Fauth, white jewelry, sandal

SUMMER TIME IS FUN TIME

TIME for teens to wear clothes that are gay and full of news—stick-candy cottons, suspender dresses (and shorts), an eyelet bathing suit, a dance dress with a day jacket, a new hood to hold the hair. Colors are good enough to eat—lemon, tangerine, strawberry pinks. Both teens and twenties like these fashions. The trick is—variety and common sense (hold that budget) in the same breath. For example—the white coat, white or patent-leather sandals, cotton gloves go with everything. ▪ By RUTH MARY PACKARD

FOR BOATS OR BEACHES—sailcloth jacket by Raissa Masket and corduroy shorts, tangerine and lemon shades. Cotton hood. Bill Hawes.

COOL AND SLEEVELESS in a striped piqué dress by Nornie Lanz, another of those wonderful any-time-of-day dresses worn with a red leather bucket-bag, and red calfskin sandals.

BUDGET-MINDED cotton-and-Dacron suit, by Bill Atkinson, a pink ticking bag.

TIME TO SWIM in a white eyelet batiste bathing suit lined with pink cotton satin with pink velvet ribbon at waistline, by Tina Leser.

Lovable, tubbable synthetics . . .

The prettiest clothes for summer can be the easiest to care for too. It's the PLUS in the fabric that gives them extra appeal. Each of the synthetic fabrics on these pages is outstanding for one or many reasons. Each has been tested for washability in the JOURNAL workshop. Some of the virtues of man-made fibers are: Quick drying PLUS little or no ironing. A silky hand PLUS durability. Novelty weaves PLUS crease resistance. Washability PLUS pleat retention. All of this PLUS lovely colors, gay prints, amusing stripes and many sizes of polka dots.

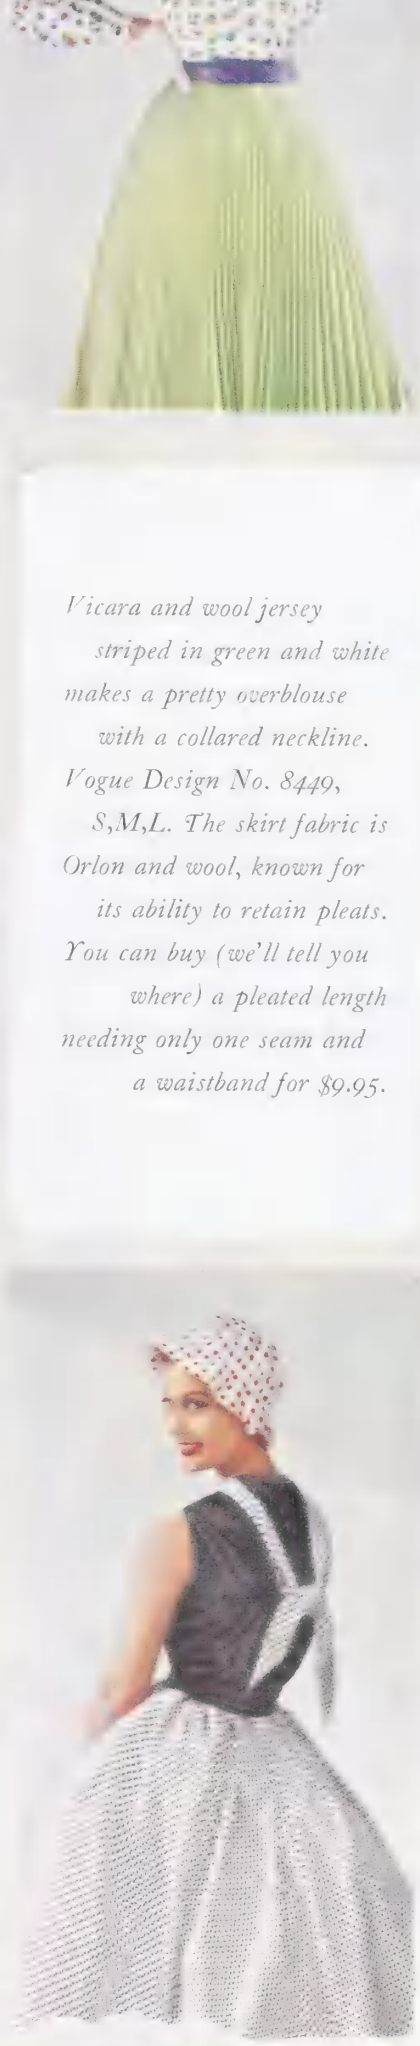
By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

This happy blend of Fortisan and cotton looks silky and cool. It may be washed by machine or by hand. The stripes come in delightful colors, many widths. Vogue Design No. 8602.

RICHARD AVEDON

Orlon and cotton broadcloth in the prettiest shade of mauve. This sleeveless shirtwaist design has an interesting slot seam detail and pockets. We have added gingham flowers, gloves and belt in the same color. This dress may be washed by hand or machine, the fabric is very easy to iron. Vogue Design No. S-4601.

One of the sweetest flowe prints of the season is on a novelty rayon. It is colorfast and crease-resistant. The "Easy to Make" blouse is Vogue Design No. 8215. The skirt, the fabric a blend of Dynel, rayon and acetat is a complete circle, has been machine-pleated (w can tell you where to have it done). Skirt, Vogue Design No. 8109.



This heavenly shade of coral is just one of the many beautiful colors this all-rayon, linenlike fabric comes in. Colorfast, it retains its crease-resistant finish after washing. The design is "Very Easy to Make" and we have used a novelty cotton lace at the neckline. Vogue Design No. 8523.

A cool summer print in blue and white on acetate crepe. The skirt has unpressed pleats. Vogue Design No. 8507, 10 to 18. The waist-length jacket in Acrilan and silk jersey is lined in the print. Vogue Design No. 8504. Add chalk-white accessories. The nylon gloves are easy to wash, quick to dry.

©VOGUE

Vicara and wool jersey striped in green and white makes a pretty overblouse with a collared neckline. Vogue Design No. 8449, S,M,L. The skirt fabric is Orlon and wool, known for its ability to retain pleats. You can buy (we'll tell you where) a pleated length needing only one seam and a waistband for $9.95.

Polka dots are always a summer favorite, especiall when they wash and are crease-resistant. Our skir in Dacron surah is Vogu Design No. 8581. The sleeveless blouse is nylon mat jersey. Design No. 8590.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on page 92. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

One of our town's more adventurous hostesses attempted to serve Italian pizza, Bombay curry and Russian blintzes all at one party. More sportsmen were laid low than when we all played touch football in our late twenties.

An Indian fishing guide once told me that dead-pan Indians laugh at redskins dressed up in Indian costumes. But we fun-loving whites don't crack a smile any more at each other in Bermuda shorts.

I told our youngest (15) that I wished I were as certain of even one thing as his high-school chums are of everything.

"Naturally, dad," he told me helpfully, "but you'll have to concentrate more."

So far my Dream Girl refuses my reasonable request to leave a fork or spoon with the icebox dishes of leftovers. She even covers 'em with an opaque rubber-rimmed doohickey so I can't tell which is spinach and which is hash.

Maybe my ardor has cooled slightly since the first summer of our marriage. I used to shoot the rabbits when my wife complained they were molesting her garden. Now I merely throw tennis balls at 'em.

This artificial masculine fashion, pink and black clothes, has gone too far. A fond young mother in our block is diapering her first-born son in pink and black, and I'll bet he resents it.

We don't hear quite so much about the fascination of foreign men. Let's see, do the Wacs and other girls in uniform marry foreigners overseas as enthusiastically as our men do?

I keep dreaming of an aluminum cruiser with two bunks and an outboard motor. But every time I look at the narrow berth I can picture my luxury-loving squaw heckling me from the shore road.

Our town's crusade to shame the gossips by a backfire of gossip about them seems to have blown up. The gossips dearly love the limelight, enjoy being gossiped about.

With the Army breathing down the back of his neck, Junior is vexed with the French. "You'd think that after we've bailed 'em out of two wars," he says, "they might try our way of preventing a third one."

We once lost a good 200-pound laundress because she stumbled across a harmless 6-ounce garter snake in our back yard. But my intrepid wife (bless her) isn't afraid of 'em even if they are harmless.

Every member of our family has had a spring cold; my own diagnosis (chiefly of myself) is that the common cold is caused more by nonfilterable self-pity than by a virus, and by a yearning for a day in bed.

"I've made no progress toward retrieving my socks, in my wife's mending box since 1946," admits Peter Comfort, stabbing a mole run with an old Jap bayonet. "Last time I mentioned it she reminded me that the Duke of Windsor likes to knit better'n she likes to darn."

My wife figures it cost us $1 a day to feed the birds during last winter's cold spells, and most of 'em were sparrows, not cardinals or blue jays. I'm trying to divert some of her enthusiasm into feeding a few edible geese and ducks, pets of my childhood.

I'm studying the American grandmother (two in our family). One fact that emerges is that grandmas know more about medicine than doctors do. Our kids are on the verge, after a burst of medical lore, of calling grandma "doc."

"He must hate us."

Alas, the tandem bike, our two-seater, is gone from the garage; it seems the end of an era. There were four bikes toppling over, and we sold it to buy a three-speed bike for the hills of Europe.

Our town is full of habitual globetrotters, and every mail brings us colorful post cards from Europe and Africa and faraway places around the world. . . . But our most determined travelers confess they hate to miss our early jonquils of May.

I have exploded in revolt against the soft, tasteless balls of dough served in our restaurants as "rolls." Bread can be edible, it can have a crisp crust; and no restaurateur can risk his customers' throwing even the softest rolls at him.

In our great state it's owners of roadside motels, hamburger stands and gas stations who oppose a new four-lane toll road; they've anted up $25 to $50 each to lobby agin it. As if traffic on their roads can vanish in this era of the three-car family!

By quizzing coeds during spring vacation I learn there are five stages in the rosy path from coed to bride: dating, exclusive dating, pinning, chaining and (happy day!) the engagement complete with ring, maybe! And a fraternity pin on a girl's chest is an engagement to become engaged.

Our youngest, eager to lose a few pounds, plunged into a study of diets. With eggs, sweetbreads and mushrooms cooked in a double boiler, and such dainties, he eats better on 1200 calories a day than I can on 3000; he's lost twenty-some pounds. (I'm putting myself in his hands.)

"My mother," muses Betty Comfort, attacking dandelions with her husband's hunting knife, "made us eat such potions as kale, rutabaga and parsnips. And I can't coax my blessed brats to nibble at minced ham and scrambled eggs."

A youthful grandmother in our block reports it's easy to amuse her grandson of two when her daughter stashes him with her. Grandma simply lets him play with the electric buttons in her convertible that raise and lower the windows.

One of the older apartment houses in our town has modernized itself by building a swimming pool at the rear. This gracious act was later clarified: The owner lives in the building, is too humane to enjoy swimming himself under the eyes of envious tenants peering from rear windows.

Under the impact of spring colds, a few of our town's cautious matrons wince when our Gallic types pucker up for the kiss of greeting. They dodge the lips of microbe and virus by deftly turning the cheek of affection.

. . . When Junior agrees that at his wedding he'll wear the shabby old checked gray necktie I wore when I was married,

. . . Or our daughter promises she'll never let her red hair turn dark or gray,

. . . And our youngest accurately dissects all the faults he claims he's inherited from me,

. . . And my favorite female draws up a schedule for long-distance phone calls when I depart on a trip,

Then I ask myself: What if we do get into each other's hair occasionally? Isn't that an occupational hazard of family life?

SOL LIBSOHN

Jimmy Robinson had never been in trouble—official trouble—until the night when he led three other boys, older and bigger, on a wild rampage of destruction. They shot out all the street lights for six blocks with BB guns, broke headlights of every car parked on the street, smashed twenty windows in the junior high school and smeared paint on the steps and walls.

Next morning Jimmy and his parents appeared before Judge George Smyth, who has created a remarkable juvenile court—bolstered by attendant social services—which follows his personal humanitarian blueprint. Judge Smyth's sympathy and warmth, his patience, most particularly his burning interest in understanding and helping every child in difficulties with the law, were put at fourteen-year-old Jimmy's command. The judge talked informally to Jimmy and his parents, he talked to Jimmy's teachers, he conferred at length with the guidance counselor at his school. Jimmy was declared a delinquent child, a ward of the court, and was placed on probation. A trained probation officer, who shared Judge Smyth's philosophy and beliefs, was assigned to advise and guide the youngster. It was Judge Smyth's hope and his intention to bring about a change in Jimmy's future conduct and in his way of thinking. Why did Jimmy lead the vandals?

"Everything was so dull," was all the boy could tell the judge, "that I just decided it was time to stir up a little excitement."

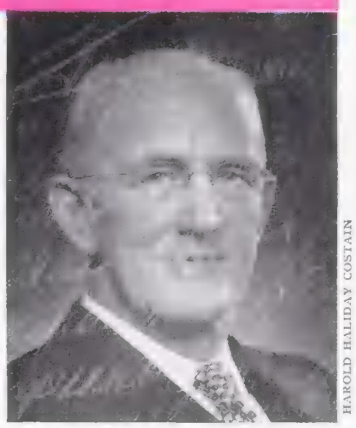
"At times it almost seems that problem youngsters must get worse before they get better."

Can this Child be Saved?

HIS MOTHER'S STORY: "The trouble started at the supper table," said Mary Robinson. "If Jimmy and his dad hadn't got in one of their arguments Jimmy might have stayed in and done his homework instead of going to the village and getting mixed up in the trouble at the junior high. Supper was late that evening—someway I didn't get started in time—and Miller, my husband, got to yelling he was hungry and calling me names. Jimmy kept still for a while—he was trying to study in the kitchen, since his little sisters were making an awful racket in the living room—but then Miller gave me a shove. Jimmy's nose got kind of white and pinched. He jumped up and spoke a few words on my side.

"Of course that infuriated his dad. Miller has a nasty disposition, a flaming temper which he blames on a bad stomach. In my opinion it's just natural meanness; he wants to make Jimmy's life and my life a misery. Anyhow, Miller was reminded that during the afternoon Jimmy had borrowed his tools without receiving permission and had not put them back where they belong. He called Jimmy a lot of names, bad names. Jimmy gave him a back answer. Whereupon Miller snatched a plate from the table and let it fly. The plate barely missed Jimmy's head.

"Jimmy took off through the closest door. As he ran by me I saw his face and it was pale with fear. Later, when Miller went in the other room, I threw a coat around my shoulders and slipped out to hunt for Jimmy. If the twins got hungry, I figured Miller could cook something for them to eat.



"I walked to the shopping and business section of the village and looked everywhere I could think of. Jimmy tells me nothing about what he does or how he spends his time when he's away from home, but I'd seen gangs of kids congregated in a downtown candy shop and at the bowling alley. Jimmy wasn't in either of those places. Or if he was, I didn't see him. Finally I had to go home. A long while later, after midnight, a policeman brought Jimmy back and told us what he'd done.

"It wasn't the first time I had walked the streets looking for our son," Mary Robinson continued. "Jimmy is just fourteen years old and yet his dad is forever driving him out of the house. He treats him like a dog. I well remember an evening two years ago when Jimmy was twelve. There was a school-band concert and Jimmy, who used to be awfully good in music, was to play a clarinet solo. All the parents were invited to attend, but my husband and I didn't go. I had no decent dress to wear and Miller dislikes music—he always complained when Jimmy practiced. Well, when Miller undressed for bed, he discovered that his best necktie was missing. Naturally he knew where the necktie had gone. It was ten o'clock when Jimmy returned. The boy's eyes were dancy and he was feeling pleased and proud of himself. The only thing his dad had eyes for was that necktie. Jimmy had spilled ice cream on it.

"Miller roared and lunged at Jimmy, who vanished into the yard. That time he was gone until nearly morning. I was half sick—I'm inclined to be delicate—and I didn't have the strength to walk to the village. I did go outside and call and call. It was midnight before I crawled in bed. Toward morning I was awakened by a kind of scratch-scratching noise on the roof, as though a mouse or squirrel was nibbling. I went and poked my head out the window.

"There atop the roof was Jimmy. He had straddled the ridgepole and

CONTINUED ON PAGE 165

HAROLD HALIDAY COSTAIN

JUDGE GEORGE SMYTH

In sharp contrast to the alarming national picture, the rate of juvenile delinquency in Westchester County, New York, has decreased by almost one third. Credit for this outstanding record belongs largely to Judge George Smyth, judge of the Children's Court, authority on preventive law, but perhaps best known as the children's champion. During his twenty-five years on the bench, Judge Smyth has dealt thoughtfully with the varied problems of some 65,000 children, yet in all this welter of troubles he has never lost sight of the individual problem, the individual child. That is one of the secrets of his success.

Menu
Shrimp Soup
Broiled Steak
Sautéed Mushrooms
Baked Stuffed Tomatoes
New Potatoes
Tossed Salad—Roquefort Dressing
Pan Rolls
Peach Angel Pie
Coffee
(Planned for 6)

STUART-FOWLER

Some Sunday in May

By Ann Batchelder

Pick a fresh bouquet from the garden and set the table with your best dishes and silver—it's Sunday.

I WILL give you a riddle. You guess it. It isn't hard nor subtle and has an answer that will make everyone cry for more, as folks clap for a third encore. It's about ten inches across, it sizzles briefly, it has tenderness and texture and is a rare delight. The benighted who demand that it be "well done" should be removed to a quiet spot under a sycamore tree, to meditate. You guessed it. What is so rare as a luscious, juicy porterhouse steak? I ask you. And what could more fittingly celebrate a golden Sunday in May? That will be our chef-d'oeuvre.

As a prelude to this main event, something delicate and not too demanding is in order. My suggestion is shrimp soup. Here's the receipt to start off your Sunday dinner on a May day.

Shrimp Soup

Place 3 unopened cans frozen condensed cream-of-shrimp soup in warm water for 2 or 3 minutes. Empty contents of cans into a saucepan. Add 3 cans water or milk (I think it's far better with milk) as desired. Heat until it is all melted. Stir and stir. Then taste and add a dash or two of Tabasco if you like it snappy. Bring the soup just to a boil and serve. Garnish with minced chives.

Now, leaping from lightness to a more substantial plane, we've come to the chief reason for all of this—and here is the how and why of it:

Broiled Steak

Pick out a 2″-thick porterhouse steak. Have your butcher grind the tail end and fasten the ground beef back in place with a skewer. Before he does this get him to trim away most of the fat or you'll be frying instead of broiling your steak. Slash what's left of the fat so it won't curl during broiling. Preheat the broiler. Place the steak on a greased rack, about 3″ away from the heat. Broil until one side is well seared. Season with salt and pepper and turn it over with a broad spatula—two are better. Finish browning on the other side. Season and serve on a heated platter with mushroom caps which have been sautéed in butter or margarine, and with sauce Robert. Better less sauces in bottles than a skimping of butter. But better still are

CONTINUED ON PAGE 169

Ethel Barrymore

MEMORIES

"Looking back I discover, rather to my astonishment and disappointment, that I have never been able to bear malice toward anybody—although there have been plenty of opportunities for it!"

CULVER

Rare picture of the Barrymores together—Mrs. Lionel Barrymore, John Drew Colt, Lionel, Ethel, Ethel Barrymore Colt, Dolores Costello Barrymore, little Ethel Dolores Barrymore, John with small son John Blythe, and Sammy Colt.

CULVER

Sammy and Ethel with mother in L'Aiglon, 1934. "Sister, the dancer, took ballet lessons in order to make her entrance on the points of her toes. Nobody ever noticed—they just took it for granted that she could walk on her toes."

CONCLUSION

AFTER another interlude of vaudeville in "The Twelve Pound Look" I had a sudden longing for England. Although I could stay for only a few days, I went over. I sent a note to Winston Churchill, asking him to send me a ticket for the ladies' gallery at the House of Commons. He sent me one by his secretary, Sir Edward March, and he and Winston and I had tea together in Winston's rooms.

Everything else in England—the place, the people, everything—seemed different to me. The only thing that didn't seem to have changed was the House of Commons.

While I was there a man on a back bench stood up and made a wonderful speech about a very dull subject. It was Lloyd George, out of power, without responsibilities. He was so funny that all the Conservatives were laughing.

When I came back to New York, I could not find a new play that I liked, and Arthur Hopkins suggested the revival of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," which was and is another of my favorite plays. I have always thought it was a great play apart from the fact that it was epoch-making—the first play written in England that can be called a problem play, the first one in which an English heroine had been a lady of the half-world.

Although it had been originally produced more than thirty years earlier, it proved to be an extraordinary success, both in New York and on tour, and I played it all through the season. I remember how deeply Amy Lowell, a very hard person to please, was moved by it. In my dressing room in Boston she said, "Only Duse has moved me like this."

I was thrilled by that. She was a wonderful person, Amy Lowell. Always when I played in Boston, I would go one day to lunch in Brookline at her house. There would always be other women there, but Miss Lowell never lunched with us, because she worked all night. She would appear about three o'clock and talk to us about everything under the sun, smoking a large, very expensive cigar.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 192

Copyright, 1955, by Ethel Barrymore; all rights reserved under the International and Pan American Conventions. The complete book is soon to be published by Harper & Brothers.

VANDAMM

"We played every city in the country in The Corn is Green, and then went straight back and played exactly the same cities over again."

TONI FRISSELL—COURTESY HARPERS BAZAAR

"The house at Mamaroneck is twenty-one miles from New York and might just as well be a million. The garden is filled with orange zinnias, snapdragons and cornflowers. Young apple trees I planted are great trees now. Ethel and Jackie were born there, and Ethel still lives there." With daughter Ethel (Mrs. Romeo Miglietta) and grandson John Drew Miglietta.

PHIL BURCHMAN

"Making Rasputin with Lionel and John was one of the very few times we were all together after our early childhood. Of course there is no truth in the stories that were published about quarrels between us. We were actors doing a job—and besides, we didn't know each other well enough to quarrel."

Line a Day

1 After all the snow they could use up in the mountains and down in the valleys, it's all over and we're back on schedule again. That means we are going a-Maying. "Oh, that we two" and all that sort of thing.

2 Ice-cream molds are back in style—but much less fancy than the elaborate flower forms of long ago. The new ones combine ice cream and sherbet, and are sold at frozen-food counters. Try them with a cloak of sweetened fresh berries.

3 Mousses and ice creams are first cousins, so I must tell you about an easy coffee mousse:

4 Dissolve 1½ teaspoons instant coffee in ½ cup heavy cream. Whip until thick but not stiff. There's a difference, Abigail. Add ½ cup marshmallow crème and continue whipping until stiff. Flavor with vanilla and freeze without stirring.

5 Before you go out into the garden, Maud, mix up a batch of pancakes for breakfast. Use one of the mixes to save time, but add buttermilk instead of milk or water. They go fast!

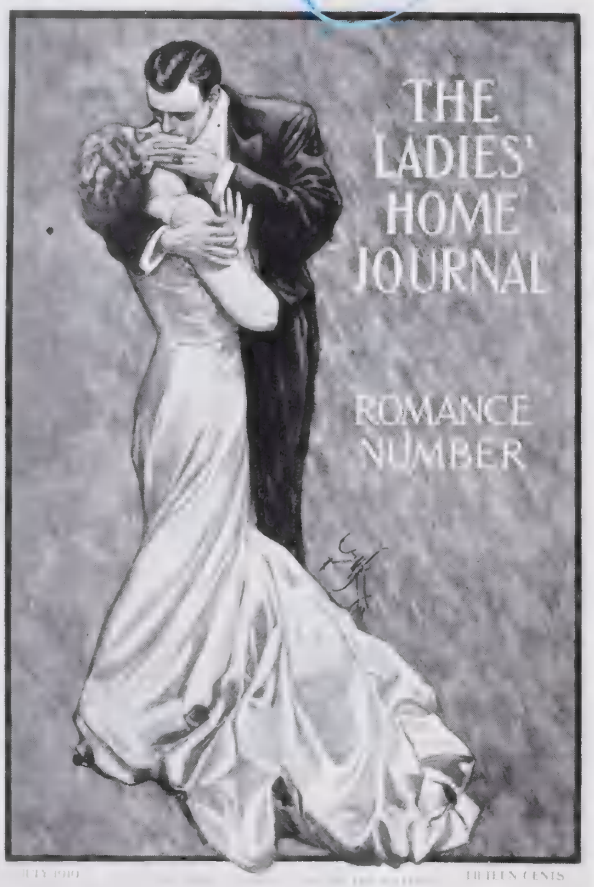
6 And, anent pancakes, here's an honor trick: Mix ½ cup pancake mix, ½ cup corn-meal-muffin mix, 2 eggs, 1 tablespoon melted shortening and ¾ cup milk. Do as you would with any pancake, and serve with hot melted butter and honey, or your favorite sirup. It's the corn-meal-muffin mix that makes the difference.

7 Mothers with small children tugging at their apron strings know that unless a fairy godmother appears, they'll still be the chefs on Mother's Day. So, make it easy, girls, with something new and festive. Like the following:

8 Combine 1½ tablespoons Worcestershire, 3 tablespoons frozen orange-juice concentrate, ½ teaspoon paprika and 1½ tablespoons honey. Mix until smooth. Season 2 split broilers with salt and pepper, brush with the sauce, broil, and baste frequently. (With the sauce, of course.)

9 Babies love pink as much as their mothers do. New for the high-chair set is a strawberry-flavored rennet dessert. And for the grownups, sprinkle it with coconut.

10 To a mixed green salad add a few broken sardines and quartered hard-cooked eggs. For luncheon—with crisp crackers.



11 The platter of cold sliced ham gets a gourmet touch when garnished with canned cling-peach halves, their centers filled with pickle relish.

12 Variation on the cranberry-orange relish theme: combine 2 parts jellied cranberry sauce with 1 part orange marmalade. Delicious with cold turkey or chicken. And, believe it or not, wonderful on the breakfast toast or muffins. Try it—and let me know.

13 Prosciutto—an Italian ham—is delicious before you settle down to a satisfactory lunch. A slice or two of the prosciutto, cut as thin as gauze—and a thin slice of honeydew melon. Why they go together so well nobody knows. But they do.

14 And here's another unusual appetizer. Take bread sticks, wrap each stick about halfway down with thin slices of prosciutto. Arrange like the spokes of a wheel on a round platter. The unwrapped part of each stick serves as a sort of handle or holder while you nibble the ham-wrapped part. Make plenty. They go fast.

15 Omelets aren't given so much to sauces outside as they are to surprises inside. But a mushroom-herb sauce is an exception. Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, add 2 tablespoons flour and make a roux. Add the liquor drained from 2 cans mushrooms, adding enough good broth to make 1 cup. Stir until smooth and bubbling. Add the mushrooms, season to taste, then add minced chives, cress and tarragon. Heat to boiling and pour over your omelet. Don't wait for the night-blooming cereus to bloom before serving.

The JOURNAL'S mail room was kept even busier than usual filling thousands of requests for pinup copies of this daring cover by highly popular Harrison Fisher, in 1910. An "interesting idea" was proposed that same year: to advance the clock one hour from May 1 to October 1. "At first glance it seems foolish and impossible," said the JOURNAL, "but tremendous advantages are apparent."

16 If you plan a no-meat omelet meal, garnish the omelet platter with grilled sugared apple slices. Serve with hot date muffins, a simple salad and coffee unlimited. And you've got a meal!

17 Tea may be the cup that cheers, but not unless it is the right tea, made right. There are almost as many kinds of tea as there are people to drink it. Tea has personality, as have people. Try to fit one to the other.

18 Tea parties are in vogue again and have been for a spell. Have the water fresh and freshly boiling. Always scald the pot before you make the tea. Real tea drinkers seldom take cream. The more experienced take it plain or with lemon.

19 For a touch of fancy, you might stud the lemon slices with cloves. And there are those who like an inch or so of stick cinnamon in their tea.

20 Speaking of bananas—as we were not, but will—baked bananas are a dish to consider. Peel 6 firm bananas and arrange in a shallow greased baking dish. Brush with melted butter or margarine and sprinkle generously with brown sugar. Bake 15–20 minutes in a 375° F. oven. Read on.

21 Serve the bananas with a sauce made from a coconut-cream pudding mix—bananas warm, sauce chilly.

22 You're having broiled chicken? For Sunday dinner? Company coming? Before you put the chicken under the broiler, sprinkle it generously with ground ginger. Baste often with melted butter or margarine. The tang and snap of the spice sets your guests to asking, "What did you do to this chicken? It's dreamy."

23 Welsh rarebit comes in jars, all ready to heat and serve. It's good to have the ready-made variety on hand, just in case. For a change, you might serve your rarebit on grilled tomato slices reposing on toast which is first spread with anchovy paste or chutney.

24 For an hors d'oeuvre to be served before or with chicken, fill largish mushroom caps with chopped cooked chicken livers moistened with cream, seasoned rather highly, then broil them.

25 There are sixty-five kinds of soup—so they tell us—and there is always a new one in the offing. A lot of soups are improved by combining with other soups. For instance, chicken soup becomes an entirely different thing if married to a clam bisque or a madrilene. And chicken soup is always popular if added to a tomato creation.

26 Just-a-thought department: Next time you make cupcakes, add a handful of raisins which you have first dusted with cinnamon, sugar and a little flour.

27 Hot buttered biscuits always make a hit. Before cutting out the biscuits, spread half the dough with soft butter, lay the other half on top, and cut out the biscuits. Bake as usual. When baked they will be found sufficiently buttered, and ready to fill with jam or marmalade, if you like.

28 Drain a can of mixed vegetables. Toss with a good French dressing. Chill thoroughly to blend the flavors. Heap on crisp greens. And there you have a wonderful—and so easy—salad.

29 Season prune juice with a dash of ground cloves and a dash of allspice. Chill to a fare-thee-well. Serve for breakfast with a wedge of lemon.

30 For Johnny's lunch box: mix together a 3-ounce package cream cheese, 3 tablespoons apricot jam and 2 tablespoons chopped nuts. It's a sandwich filling, and will appeal to his—or Mary Jane's—sweet tooth.

31 Vacations will soon be on the agenda. I guess most plans for that looked-forward-to interval of fun and leisure are already made. Got made during the long winter. They helped to take the edge off the bitter cold, lowered the drifts of snow we got so tired of. But now it's May. Fishing season. And knowing what I know, I know where I'll be going. Do you?

Your ANNIE.

By Ann Batchelder

Just your dish . . .

4 Chicken Soups

the way you like them best!

Like it light and soothing? Try Chicken with Rice—a delicate blend of fluffy rice and chicken simmered in golden broth.

Like a good old-fashioned soup? Try Chicken Noodle—delicious egg noodles and tender chicken in a nourishing broth.

Like your soup creamy-smooth? Try Cream of Chicken—tempting cubes of chicken in broth enriched with country cream.

Like one with vegetables? Try Chicken Gumbo—pieces of plump chicken mingled with tomatoes, rice, celery and okra.

Quick—nutritious—and simply delicious!

4 Great Chicken Soups by Campbell's

"I saw few die of hunger... of eating, a hundred thousand."

Benj. Franklin

POOR RICHARD'S ALMANACK—1736

Benjamin Franklin's observation that he saw more people die from eating than from starvation is certainly pertinent today when so much overweight is due to overeating.

Are you one of the 25 million Americans who are forced to loosen the belt a notch or two . . . or who are having trouble making the hooks and eyes meet?

If so, the chances are better than 9 out of 10 that your extra pounds have accumulated because you are either eating more, or you have made no changes in your food habits as you have grown older, or you have become less active.

When you store up weight, you are also likely to store up future troubles. These could include diabetes, gall bladder and kidney disorders, heart disease or high blood pressure . . . to mention a few.

In fact, studies show that the death rate from all causes is 22 percent higher for people who are from 5 to 14 percent overweight than for people of normal weight. Among people who are 25 percent overweight, mortality is about 75 percent higher.

If you are overweight, why delay the obvious advantages of reducing? Before you start to reduce, however, there are some pitfalls you will want to know about and avoid.

First are the drastic dietary fads which usually limit you to a few foods, and second is the indiscriminate use of so-called "reducing pills." Only when overweight is accompanied by a serious disease . . . such as dangerously high blood pressure . . . may quick reducing be desirable.

The safe and sane diet is the one that reduces you slowly . . . two to three pounds per week . . . and that permanently keeps you at your best weight. In fact, throughout adult life it is a good rule to keep your weight at slightly below the level that is normal for your age and body build, or bone structure.

It is always wise to let your doctor decide what you should weigh and, equally important, let him plan your reducing diet. He will see to it that your meals are properly balanced, especially in protein, vitamin and mineral content.

Do not expect too much too soon when you start dieting. It took a long time to acquire those surplus pounds . . . and it will take time to lose them. If you want to keep check on your progress, weigh yourself weekly, rather than day to day. If you stick to your diet, your weekly weighings will eventually show how much you are losing in weight.

Once your weight is down, try to avoid any return to your old ways of overeating . . . and gaining. For permanent weight control usually brings a rich reward—better health and added years in which to enjoy it.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.
Please send me a copy of your booklet, 555-J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

UP HOME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 64

"Yes, sir, auburn. So you missed it a mile there, didn't you? But the place to start is at the beginning." She began to rock softly. "We was a big family of kids, father was a brickmason, and the old home place was in Fairbury, Jefferson County, Nebraska. Well, sir, when I was fifteen years old I went to Omaha where my aunt lived, mamma's oldest sister, Aunt Ebba. Awful nice woman but hard up like everybody else. I wasn't only there three or four days when I got me a job as hired girl to a lady named Mrs. Dotterer. Widow, she was. She had gray hair slicked down tight and wore a little black lace cap with ribbons hanging down and a three-cornered shawl over her shoulders. Me being such a youngster, I thought she was as old as the hills, but she was only around fifty or so."

"Good to you, was she?" Linnea asked sympathetically.

Mrs. Troon thought about that. "Well, I'll tell you," she said. "She was built delicate, looked like you could give a good big blow and off she'd sail. Small hands and feet which she drew to your attention every once in a while so you'd notice and maybe comment. She was ladylike, and she was soft-spoken, but she had this eight-room house, and from getting up till going to bed she had me on the go. What would you think of somebody wanting the kitchen floor wiped up twice a day? What would you think of somebody that didn't only want the dusting done but made you take a little stick with a swab of cotton on it to probe into the curlicues on the furniture? What would you think of somebody that wanted the leaves of the house plants washed and dried every day like they was chinaware?"

Every man who is high up loves to think that he has done it all himself; and the wife smiles, and lets it go at that. —JAMES M. BARRIE

"I'd say she was a fanatic," Linnea said.

"That's what she was," Mrs. Troon said, "a dyed-in-the-wool fanatic. She'd make a grab at her heart and act like she was on the verge of keeling over if a chair was so much as a inch out of place. I seen her once when she found a cobweb hanging down from the ceiling in the spare bedroom. I tell you, I thought we was going to have to call in a doctor."

"Mean, was she?"

Mrs. Troon considered. "I'll tell you how she was. Her meanness was all covered up and hid under nice ladylike manners and soft-spoken ways till you didn't know what you was dealing with. She'd get her way acting like the dear good Saviour suffering on the cross. Nobody could budge her, she was stubborner'n a mule, but she'd fool you with her littleness and soft words and the easy way she'd break down and shed a few tears whenever things wasn't going just to suit her. Her poor boy!" Mrs. Troon said.

"Widow, you say she was?"

"Left with this one son. Leonard Dotterer. Eighteen years old at the time I went to work there, going on nineteen, and the palest, skinniest, nervousest boy you ever seen in your life. He took violin lessons, and he'd saw away there in the dining room hour after hour while she'd tat, sitting on the edge of a straight chair. She took special pride in never sitting in a soft chair she could lean back against and have a little comfort. Anyway, this boy of hers did all his practicing there under her eyes. I noticed right away that she never seemed to want to let him get off by himself. If he'd pick up his book and maybe start off for his room, she'd stop him. You know how a girl will kind of pout around her sweetheart? Well, that's how she'd do around him. She'd call out something and poor Leonard would stop and sigh like this"—Mrs. Troon heaved a big sigh—"and then turn around and come back and sit down again. Many a time I heard her say, 'So you don't want your old mother's company no more? Well, you'll have many a long year without her when she's buried in the ground—probably it's a good idea for you to get used to it!' and back he'd come like a pet lamb t to a rope."

"Didn't he have no friends?" Linnea ask "Didn't he have to work? Didn't he go out

"Sickly, she claimed he was," Mrs. Tro said. "Always had been, she claimed. H a teacher come and learn him lessons at ho so he wouldn't have to go to school where kids might be rough with him and it might too hot or too cold. Never had no friends age. But he had a good-sized frame on h and would of been like anybody else if h of been brought up right. The way I figur she started in on him early to keep him sic and delicate so he'd never get out of her sig and she worked it so slick he never kn what happened and she had him just wh she wanted him."

"What became of the husband?"

"Mr. Dotterer? Oh, he died. Caught sor thing and died, I forget just what, wh Leonard was only five or six. Left her house and money coming in every mo from somewhere, enough to get along Well, anyway, here she was, with only t interests in life—Leonard, and that eig room house—when I went there to work. S never let me slack off a minute, I can tell y and when I got done with one thing, she h something else lined up. I had Sundays when I'd go to Aunt Ebba's, and the we used to seem pretty long drawn out, I tell you, from one Sunday to the next. Es cially after I got me a be and started to do a li sparking on the side." M Troon smiled to hers "I didn't more'n half thi so at the time, but no guess it won't hurt non I say that I believe I m of been quite a pretty in my day."

"I can well believe i Linnea said. "I would of liked to of s you then."

"I had my picture took right about t time. Me and my Cousin Cora went and h our pictures took together, with our ar around each other's waists. You remind to get it out and show you sometime. C was Aunt Ebba's second-youngest girl, t years older'n me, which made her sevent at the time, with black hair and blue ey Her and me was awful thick when I first w to Omaha, but later on a kind of cooln sprung up betwixt us. We never was th again, though Cora didn't only die last y aged seventy-four. Just imagine, she was a maid—the only one in the whole family. reason was, she had this sweetheart— Troon, his name was. About twenty years at the time. Just as sickly and timid and girl as Leonard Dotterer was, as big and hu and manly Ed Troon was. I never seen suc man for muscles. He was a blacksmith, a rassled on the side, and took pride in heft the heaviest things he could find, a barre flour, or a big rock, or a half-grown c anything he happened to come across. I ne seen such a man for grabbing ahold of so thing heavy and giving it a lift. Well, sir, was Cora's beau! She'd been keeping co pany with him four or five months whe come to Omaha. She was awful sweet on h Cora was, and the family didn't think it going to be long till she would have a propo on her hands. But there ain't much you count on in this old life. I hadn't only s this Ed Troon five or six times when he dr poor Cora like a hot potato and the first th I know, he's down on his knees to me!"

Linnea nodded, rapt. "And you not kn ing what to do on account of your p cousin. I can just imagine," she said.

"The way it happened, it was my Sun off," Mrs. Troon said, "and I was down my aunt's, and then the girls' beaux there, Maud's and Florence's and then Ed Troon, Cora's beau. I was wearing green wool dress with the corded trimm on it and the tight jacket, and I had my co

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

Each time you wash your face...
your skin "dies" a little

There are 1- to 3-hour periods each day, skin specialists have discovered, when your skin is unable to defend itself against these dreaded complexion problems:

A shriveled look . . . cracking . . . coarseness, large pores. The danger periods begin immediately after you have washed your face. When you wash away dirt, you also remove the skin's natural protectors. Nature takes 1 to 3 hours to restore these vital protectors. During these hours of "un-balance"—your defenseless skin "dies" a little.

fter each washing—
"re-balance" your skin

om the time you are in your teens right on rough the "maturing years," your skin is open this problem of "un-balance" after washing.

The shiny, "skinned" look . . . the taut feel Flaky patches on your cheeks . . . a blotchy color

on't ignore these small warnings—for in the 1 3 hours Nature takes to re-protect your skin, uch worse problems often begin. Vital inside oisture evaporates, surface skin "shrivels." y lines deepen. Oxidized skin secretions rden in pore-openings—cause stretched res, blackheads.

Do skin doctors advise you to stop washing ur face? "No," they say, "but always 're-lance' your skin at once after washing . . "

Like so many social leaders noted for their mplexions, Mrs. Nicholas du Pont never ves her skin unprotected a single moment. A light touch of Pond's Cold Cream, as soon I wash my face, is automatic with me—simply cause this wonderful cream makes my skin ok and feel so well."

You will actually feel Pond's "at work." This ift-acting cream "re-balances" your skin in 1 nute—at least 60 times faster than Nature does. promptly restores elasticity. Combats dryness, riveling. Keeps pore-openings cleared, keeps in texture fine and smooth.

A vitalizing clearing at bedtime sides "re-balancings" after each washing, your n needs a thorough clearing at night. Pond's ld Cream dislodges water-resistant dirt from e pores. Leaves your skin immaculate.

Today begin this simple, complete beauty care th Pond's Cold Cream. You'll be amazed—and lighted—at how quickly your skin responds. almost no time, your complexion will look arer, finer-textured—and radiantly alive!

e world's most famous beauty formula . . . er duplicated, never equaled. Get a large jar of s superb cream. More women use and love Pond's d Cream than any other face cream ever made.

Mrs Nicholas R. du Pont

A recent camera study of the charming Mrs. du Pont, on the sweeping lawns of Ridgely, the du Pont country house outside Wilmington. Mrs. du Pont is known for her animated, champagne-toned beauty . . . her clear, clear complexion. Since her debutante days, she has been a devoted user of Pond's. She finds quick daytime "re-balancings" after washing and a thorough clearing with Pond's each night the simplest, yet most effective skin care. Mrs. du Pont says: "Nothing clears and smooths my skin like Pond's Cold Cream."

A playful pink . . . but it's strictly for grown-ups! There's nothing little-girl about the kiss-me-quick look it gives your lips. This bright new shade of Cashmere Bouquet Lipstick does its good work discreetly, too—Pink-A-Boo stays on you, stays off everyone else!

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢ plus tax

Conover girls pick Cashmere Bouquet

"Have a lipstick wardrobe: a blue-red, an orange-red and a definite pink. All three cost less than $2 when, like our Conover girls you choose Cashmere Bouquet".

Candy Jones

cashmere bouquet

Indelible-Type Lipstick

Super-Creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

beads on. I washed my hair the night before, with rain water, and the style then was to part it in the middle with a few long curls hanging down to each side like shavings. I must of looked pretty nice, I guess, but my, Cora looked pretty too—she was wearing her cherry-red serge—and I never any more thought Ed Troon would give her up for me —— Now, wait a minute, I'm fibbing, because I did think so. I might as well come right out and say it. Them brown eyes of his just fairly leaped out at me every time I come anywheres near him, and even when I was out in the kitchen helping with the dishes, I could feel he had me on his mind and was wishing I'd mosey on back into the parlor. You've saw one of them magnets shaped like a horseshoe. You've saw how a nail or a hairpin or anything will grab right ahold of it or know the reason why. Well, I might as well say so. The minute we seen each other, we was just like that, so pulled and drawn and stuck on each other we didn't know what to do. But I never let on and he never let on, until this particular Sunday down to my aunt's. It got along towards eight and it was time for me to get on back to Mrs. Dotterer's, so I says good-by all around and run upstairs to get my hat and coat. I put them on and tied my black net scarf under my chin and went down, and who should be standing in the front hall but this Ed Troon.

"'I'm going with you,' he says, and somehow or other neither of us looked the other in the eye, for it seemed if we had, there would of been a explosion. 'I'm going to escort you,' he says.

"'Why, you needn't do that, Mr. Troon,' I says, my heart beating like a drum and my breath so short that I couldn't hardly manage to get the words out normal.

"'The streets is dangerous for a young girl like you,' he says. 'There's footpads and one thing and another,' he says.

"Just then Cora slid back one of the parlor doors and stepped out into the hall, her face looking very funny and pale. She heard what he said, because she said, 'Oh, Stacey can walk along with her'—Stacey was her youngest brother, twelve years old—and then she called back over her shoulder, 'Stacey!' and Stacey stuck his head out the door wondering what was wanted. 'Mr. Troon here thinks it ain't safe for Rhoda to walk home alone,' she said, 'so you get your hat and go with her.'

"'Oh, I ain't afraid, I always go by myself,' I says, and I know I'm red as a beet.

"'It ain't necessary for Stacey to walk with her,' Ed Troon says then. 'I'm going anyway and I will walk with her.'

"NOT knowing what else to do, I opened the front door and was outside and down the steps before you could say 'Christ the Redeemer.' But I didn't get far, because here was Ed Troon right behind me grabbing my arm and saying for me to wait, because we was to keep company from then on and he couldn't be no sweeter on anybody than he was on me. You may imagine I was just flabbergasted. And right behind him come Cora, tearing out the front door left wide open and the light shining out.

"'You little no-account,' she says to me, 'you vixen. Don't you never come near our house again!'

"Well, them was my only relatives and me a girl of fifteen in a strange city with nobody to turn to and away from home and homesick for my folks. I started to bawl right there in the street. That was the first night it snowed that winter and the snowflakes was just starting to come down.

"Mr. Troon put his arm around me and hunted for his handkerchief. 'Don't you cry, honey!' he says. Then he says to Cora, 'That ain't no way to treat kinfolk. She can't help because I'm sweet on her instead of you.'

"'Oh, she can't, can't she?' says Cora 'Ain't I watched her do everything in he power to get you away from me?'

"'I ain't either,' I says, still bawling, and really never done nothing deliberately.

"AUNT EBBA come to the doorway then an looked out. 'What you children doing ou there in the street with the door left wid open?' she says. 'Come right back in an we'll get to the bottom of this!' Well, sir, w went in, me just ready to fall dead and bawlin like my heart would break, and Ed Troo with his arm about my shoulders and whi as a sheet, and Cora red in the face and he eyes glittering. 'I never seen the like,' say Aunt Ebba, looking from one to the other o us, 'and here ten minutes ago you was a playing button, button who's got the butto as nice as you please!'"

"If that wasn't something," Linnea sai "That's a real love story, sure." Reluctantl she went to the sink, washed the potatoes tha stood there in the pan and put them on th stove, dropping in a handful of salt and pu ting the lid on tight. "What happened next You got me on pins and needles."

"Oh, Aunt Ebba straightened us out, th three of us," Mrs. Troon said. "Ed Troo declared himself, said he couldn't hold it bac no longer. Cora run up to her room bawling-

DUSK OF MAY

By CHARLES G. BELL

Now every willow leaf
Like a new moon braids
The tender twilight
Where the new moon rides.
Let us sit in the dusk
Remembering.
All things are crescent
In the returning spring.

I was bawling, too, bu I quit after a bit—an then the first thing w knowed, here we wa in the dining room wit Maud and Florence an their beaux and Stace and Uncle Wellingto crowded around us, an the family asking us t name the day and josl ing us and all like that

"He proposed the did he?"

"Oh, yes, naturall He proposed right awa in the hall, right in fro of Aunt Ebba and Cor before she ran upstair Which was why she di I imagine."

"And you said yes?

"You might say s And then I laid my head on Aunt Ebba breast and went to work bawling again."

"And Cora never forgive you? Not whe you was married or nothing? Didn't you ha your wedding at your Aunt Ebba's?"

"Yes, we did. One year later, almost to th day. But Cora never did forgive me. Oh, she speak and like that, but we wasn't lik cousins no more but like perfect stranger She's dead now, poor Cora, died last yea going on seventy-five, a old maid till h dying day, the only one in the family." Mr Troon yawned again.

"And then you got married?" Linnea sai taking the teakettle to the sink and pumpin fresh water. When she set it down full on th stove, the stray water drops rolled like me cury across the slick, scorching surface befo they popped.

Mrs. Troon nodded. "We sparked eac other a year while he got us a two-room hou built and got it partly furnished and I got hope box together; no easy matter, with Mr Dotterer on my trail from daylight till be time—'Do this, Rhoda, do that.' But by bu ing my own coal oil so Mrs. Dotterer wouldn notice how much I was getting away with the lamp, I managed to hem my linens an do my crocheting and embroidering—and pieced a quilt too. Sometimes my right han would ache clear up to the elbow from holdin the needle or the crochet hook and going it so hard. But it wasn't so bad. I knowed was going to soon be over and I'd sit the sewing away, thinking about my weddin dress of Indian muslin and the lace veil was going to have, and my folks coming u from Fairbury, Jefferson County, to the we ding. I'd think about the wedding presen we was going to get, what they would like be, from ma and pa and Aunt Ebba an Uncle Wellington and the rest of the fami

Busy Husband

ooks his best, works
s best in comfortable
.ee "Chetopa Twills"

od fit. Neat appearance. Long wear. I 't that what he wants . . . what you u nt for him, too? Please him, then, w h a matched set of Lee Chetopa Twill Shirts and Pants in his own tai- l d size. Sanforized to stay his size, " hetopa Twills" will please you, too – ecause they wash beautifully, keep th ir fresh, new look longer. Choose fr n 5 popular fade-proof colors. At L Dealers' everywhere. The H. D. L Co., Kansas C y 8, Missouri.

R WORK
ND PLAY

Lee CLOTHES

COPYRIGHT 1955

and maybe even Mrs. Dotterer and some of our old friends. When I'd get too worked up thinking about all that, why, then I'd change over and think of the house Ed Troon was building, two nice rooms and a lean-to."

"You thought about Mr. Troon, too, I guess," Linnea ventured. She was sitting by the table now with her chin on her hands watching Mrs. Troon, not a drowsy old lady but small-bosomed Rhoda with bright red hair, sewing on her linens in her chilly little room at midnight, her lamp burning secretly and her dreams wandering all around like tourists in a castle. "I guess you thought about him sometimes."

"I did," Mrs. Troon said, staring into the open grate where flames danced over the red coals. "I thought about him. He was an awful strong fellow, Mr. Troon was. Awful handsome fellow, too, if I do say so myself. He was as straight as a string, with curly black hair. And doing fine at the blacksmith's trade. Doing fine. So I'd be took from the back-breaking long weary hours and set right down in my own house, with a good provider to see to things, and live happy ever after."

"You did, too, I'll bet, didn't you?" Linnea asked while Rhoda went like dew.

"No, I didn't," Mrs. Troon said. She blinked and then she turned her head and looked at Linnea. "Why, it all turned out so different that—it all turned out so different ——"

"Mamma!" It was Rudie, banging on the screen door. "I just seen papa turn the corner!"

"You run and meet him!" Linnea said, jumping up.

Trying not to hurry so that it was conspicuous, she went to the wall by the window and peeked into the tiny diamond-shaped looking glass that hung there, tucking up a strand of blond hair and biting her lips to make them red, like a foolish young girl.

Mrs. Troon pretended not to notice. "I'll finish the story some other time," she said. "Eventually it leads up to what I got on my conscience, and how I done what it was I done ——"

"You're sure a fine one for making a person curious," Linnea said. "Tell me ——" But there was that step! She started for the door, to unhook the screen.

"No, dearie," Mrs. Troon said. "Not now. You got more important things on your mind and there's another day tomorrow."

Mamma said if June come up with a day like this, what could you expect of August? It was that important date, the twenty-first, the day of the baby contest down at the fairgrounds, when the winner of the title of Most Beautiful Baby in Salt Lake City was to be given the illustrious gold wicker baby buggy that had been on exhibition in Dinwoodie's Furniture Store window so long, or twenty-five dollars in money instead. It was going to be hot, that was certain, but you couldn't beat it for looks, at least until it really warmed up. There was a bright blue sky without a cloud that morning, and no breeze. Gertrude and Stellie went out early, taking turns carrying Myra, for they wanted to show her off around the neighborhood before they started off for the fairgrounds and the contest.

PAPA was home the night before and Myra had had a dress rehearsal. Gertrude and Stellie, with much murmuring in the bedroom, dressed her up exactly the way she was going to appear at the contest, in her full-skirted, puff-sleeved blue-and-white zephyr-gingham dress (only just finished by mamma) with the pearl buttons upon it and the white lace around the neck and sleeves. With this she wore nice black cotton stockings pinned up tight to her diaper, little black buttoned shoes and a starched white bonnet.

Various details about the plan worried mamma, who voiced them after the chorus of admiration, which came not only from the audience but from the loving little exhibitors themselves, had somewhat died down. Mamma said that while Myra was, of course, the sweetest sight imaginable, they were not to suppose for one minute that she would win the contest. First of all, she was a pretty big baby for eleven months old, weighing twenty-

So eye-appealing . . .
your seams are always straight

So beautiful . . .
no sagging when your legs twist

So satisfying . . .
no wrinkles though your ankles bend

So smooth . . .
self-conforming heels hug yours

So comfortable . . .
there is no garter strain ever

So glamorous . . .
never lose their shape as you move

No matter how you sit or move

ADD GLAMOUR TO YOUR LEGS

New Bur-Mil Cameo SHAPE-2-U—the stockings that stretch to fit you perfectly from toe to garter! They look better and feel more comfortable than any stockings you've ever worn.

3 sizes, one perfect for you. 2 styles: Dress and Dutyfull sheers. Only $1.95 a pair.

BUR-MIL Cameo

SHAPE-2-U

sheer nylon stretch stockings . . .

they fit you better than your own skin

AVAILABLE IN CANADA THROUGH BURLINGTON MILLS CORP. OF CANADA, LTD. • PATENT APPLICATIONS FOR THIS PRODUCT AND ITS METHOD OF MANUFACTURE HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE U. S. PATENT OFFICE AND THE PATENT OFFICES OF PRINCIPAL FOREIGN COUNTRIES

America on the move with...

Celanese*

ACETATE, THE BEAUTY FIBER

ACETATE AND COTTON. An entirely new kind of clothes is showing up, geared to the bustling outdoor life Americans are leading. Fabrics match the trend: they are good to look at, easy to live in. Here, a brand new checkercloth combines the shimmer and softness of acetate with the sturdy qualities of cotton. This kind of rich cloth washes like the sturdiest cotton, will not run, is appearing everywhere tagged "America on the move in acetate and cotton."

McKETTRICK designs the full-skirted dress in Celaperm-and-cotton fabric from Fabrex. Black and white checks with pink, red, or turquoise. Sizes 10 to 20. About $15 at stores on page 22.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

CELANESE CORPORATION OF AMERICA, NEW YORK 16

six pounds and no telling how many ounces, and some of the judges might think she was no spring chicken. Anybody older than one year was out, and she could easily be a year or better. "We'll explain," Stellie said. "We'll tell her age," Gertrude said. Second, she was a nursing baby, not a bottle baby, and by the time they walked clear down to Fifth South and Sixth East—sixteen big long blocks—and stood around or sat around in that hot old grandstand for a couple of hours while the contest was on, she was liable to be a pretty cross baby and maybe start hollering her head off, which wouldn't be likely to influence the judges in her favor. Besides, she was teething again, a big old double tooth this time, and her gums were hot and swelled, and it was pretty hard for her not to fly off the handle. Besides, she was not, of course, broke yet. The two sisters looked smug. They would change her every five minutes if they had to. That was no problem. Last but not least, mamma said softly and sadly, her eckzeema was not much improved. It really wasn't, no matter how they hoped and pretended that it was. Her scalp was all broken out and the backs of her hands and wrists, and along her plump cheeks. The parts where she was covered up did not matter so much, but what showed might possibly bar her from being declared Most Beautiful. "But look at her pretty blue eyes," Gertrude said jealously. "And look at her pretty mouth." "And her pretty nose." "She's got a very nice shaped head," papa pointed out (in an altogether disinterested way) and Mrs. Troon agreed.

What worried Rudie was that her hair was, as he said, so white and far apart you could see her head through it. While nobody argued but that a head of thick curls might have been of use to Myra tomorrow, yet they could not think the judges would be so blinded by a frivolity like hair that they would fail to see the excellence beneath. They decided fondly, even mamma, who had been so full of warnings, that Myra might come home in that gold baby buggy after all and surprise the entire neighborhood and the whole Nineteenth Ward.

The best way to secure future happiness is to be as happy as is rightfully possible today.

—CHARLES W. ELIOT: The Happy Life

Papa would not, of course, be up home tomorrow night to hear how it all came out. He would be at Aunt Sigrid's, so he would have to wait till the night following to see the prize. He put his arms out when the show was over, to take the bright particular star in his arms. Gertrude did not let him keep her very long, however, as Myra had to be divested of her finery before it was drooled upon or impaired in another way before the big day tomorrow and the contest which was to start at one o'clock sharp.

"Too bad tomorrow night ain't your night, instead of tonight, Mr. Ecklund," Mrs. Troon said, rocking back and forth in front of the lukewarm stove. "You'd be here to help celebrate."

"Or help to dry a bunch of tears," mamma said, but she smiled and they knew she didn't actually mean it.

SHE was against getting Myra ready so early. Gertrude and Stellie did not intend to start down for the fairgrounds before a little after eleven. She said it would be hard enough anyway to keep the child looking her best, but her daughters begged and pleaded. They wanted to take Myra around the neighborhood and show how pretty she looked in her nice new dress and white petticoats, with her lovely bonnet tied under her chin and her stubby shoes so shiny and polished. "All right," mamma said, "but don't stay at any one lady's. Just show them the baby and go right on. Mornings ain't the time to bother when a person's getting their work done up."

Their first stop was next door at Mrs. Lilygren's, who had a piece of faded silkaleen tied over her large head of hair to keep the dust out, and a broom in her hands. She asked them into the kitchen graciously. Her own baby, little Deddy, was not much to look at, the Ecklund children felt, but then she was only two months old. Besides, she was asleep in a basket by the stove. Gertrud said generously that Mrs. Lilygren had ough to enter her in the contest also, no matte how little she was. But Mrs. Lilygren said n she thought she wouldn't. "She might hav just as good a chance of winning as Myr has got!" Gertrude said then, and Stell echoed her, for they were well drilled i courtesy, and believed social fibs were n punishable in the next world.

Mr. Lilygren had not given his family penny since he rushed out of the house tha day in April. A civil divorce was in progres and a church divorce soon to be granted, an so far the abandoned Mrs. Lilygren had mad out all right, her daughter Ivy having ob tained work in the Idaho Bakery. Nephi wa not having such an easy time as there wer a great many carpenters and cabinetmake and he, only fifteen, was not past the appren tice stage. Ivy's wages were too little to liv on and the Lilygrens, as a consequence, wer about to take in boarders.

MRS. LILYGREN was now engaged in scrub bing and cleaning every inch of her domicile both inside and out, in preparation. Throug the kind offices of Olaf Ecklund, who san bass in it when he had time, she had tw young men from the Swedish Choir, one glazier and one a shingler, Dahlquist an Ankerstrand, lined up. They were going t start boarding with her the following Monday

There was a change for the better in th Lilygren house since Mr. Lilygren rushed o and left it, just as when a stone is rolled off piece of dead white earth there will be change for the better and pretty soon the vege tation will start in to gro again. More light seeme to stream in at the window and the plants bloome more energetically. Mr Lilygren, with no hars voice to tell her to save th and hoard that and pre serve the other, felt free t put on the table her fringe red-and-white tablecloth which she had never bee allowed to use for fear wearing it out, and this, with a handful yellow roses in a green china teapot, wrough the last change that turned her once-barre kitchen into a little paradise.

Nephi, at home for the day, was engaged putting up a clock shelf by the stove. H stopped his work, however, to admire litt Myra Ecklund, in proud Gertrude's arm dressed up to go to the baby contest and w the prize. They did not stay at Mrs. Lil gren's, though she pretended she was not busy that she couldn't stop cleaning her cu boards long enough to sit down with the for a little visit. When they left, she said be sure and stop in on the way back from th contest, so she could see what Myra ha won, and Nephi said yes, do that. They d not mention her eckzeema, of course.

Gertrude and Stellie were sorry when the knocked on the back door of the Parmalee and it was opened by the older of the tw Mrs. Parmalees, a childless woman calle Aunt Myrtle by the numerous Parmalee chi dren belonging to Mr. Parmalee and h second wife, Aglia. This was a large fami indeed. Originally fourteen, there were no nine children at home, ranging in ages fro seventeen years to thirteen months.

Aunt Myrtle was a dignified woman, wit high hips that started right up under h shoulder blades, tidy gray hair and a rath blank expression. She was said to be able talk "in tongues," a rare gift, but so far n body had been able to interpret what she sai Since she could not interpret it, either, it w not known what she had been talking abou

Though she was good, kind and gentle, y she was not as others, and when she opene the door Gertrude and Stellie felt somethin cold go over them, as a cloud across the su will run a streak of shade over a field. The had seen Aunt Myrtle Parmalee only a tin or two before, though she lived almost ne door and the Ecklunds for eighteen mont had been almost daily visitors. She w "poorly," and spent the greatest part of t

CONTINUED ON PAGE 90

RED CROSS SHOES

for your dress-up days and evenings . . . openly beautiful with a feminine flattery that makes going out seem so special . . .

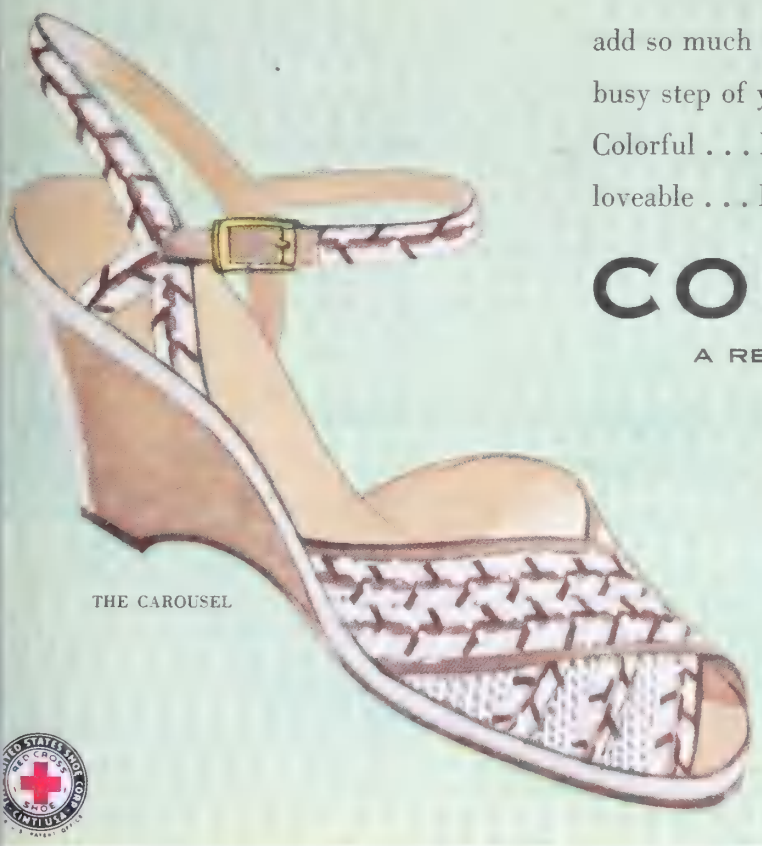
PRIMA DONNA

THE RENDEZVOUS



Because you lead TWO LIVES
you need two kinds of shoes!

Active little casuals that add so much smartness to every busy step of your modern life.
Colorful . . . liveable . . .
loveable . . . loafable

COBBIES

A RED CROSS SHOE

THE CAROUSEL

BANDS OF BEAUTY

Red Cross Shoes & Cobbies $8.95 to $12.95

This product has no connection whatever with The American National Red Cross • The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio time in her room where she made the crocheting that overran the big unpainted house from attic to cellar. The neighbors saw her seldom, as did, in fact, the members of the Parmalee household. She appeared for meals but rarely, and Aglia, the younger Mrs. Parmalee, far from complaining about the extra work, was glad to dish up an extra breakfast, dinner or supper onto the white china dishes that always stood ready on the big flat bake pan, and there was always somebody ready and willing to take Aunt Myrtle her meal. Aglia was extremely proud of and grateful for the crocheting that flowed out from this bedroom, though the objects were becoming less and less utilitarian, and more and more wonderfully wrought. Other crocheters just shook their heads when they saw some of Aunt Myrtle's recent work.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 88

People are generally frightened, at least when children, and many when grown men and women, of the singular. No matter how exemplary, if a human creature bides not as others bide, they fear him.

Thus Gertrude and Stellie were sorry when they saw Aunt Myrtle at the door. They almost wanted to run away, although the elderly lady smiled blankly down upon them and asked them what they wanted.

"Who is it, Aunt Myrtle? Who's there?" somebody called. It was Aglia. She always called the elder Mrs. Parmalee Aunt Myrtle, too, alongwith everybody else.

"Two little girls with a baby. I don't know what they want." Aunt Myrtle left the door and went back in the shadowy kitchen and almost instantly Aglia appeared, with five or six of her children. She opened the screen door and came out, for she was always glad of company, and sat down on the top step for a little chat. The Ecklund girls, invited to do so, sat down on the next-to-the-bottom step, and there Myra, still very good-natured and as pristine as when she started her rounds, was admired by all.

Mrs. Aglia Parmalee, always called the younger Mrs. Parmalee, and only forty-three, looked exactly as old as the older Mrs. Parmalee, who was about sixty. Her hair was as gray as Aunt Myrtle's, but where Aunt Myrtle's was tidy, hers hung down like seaweed. It was not that she was so large as that she was entirely unconfined. Except for her feet, which were small and well shaped and never clad in anything but the most tight-fitting shoes, Aglia Parmalee had little or no vanity, and was said to be the only woman in the Nineteenth Ward who did not wear a corset. She wore shapeless cotton dresses that scarcely touched her anywhere and a knitted morning sack, no doubt making up for the discomfort in her feet by the alleviation of these.

LINNEA did not believe that she was any smarter than the law would allow, but that may have been because she had never wanted for anything, nor been called upon to use her head to solve any of life's problems. Married at fifteen to Mr. Parmalee, then thirty-three, a steady provider with an inherited house, Aglia had always had a roof over her head and three good if monotonous meals a day. She had fourteen healthy children and only one had died. It was whispered that when house-cleaning time came, the end of March and the last week in September, she did not actually house-clean, but only pretended to, but this was not held against her, for reasons no longer valid but still current—her extreme youth and rapidly growing family.

Before they left to go on to Mrs. Ryding's, Gertrude said that it was a shame the Parmalee baby was thirteen months old. Otherwise, he no doubt would have entered in the contest and might have won the buggy! It rather surprised her and Stellie when no protestations were forthcoming, for Hyrum Parmalee was a grubby child with few if any charms. However, Aglia did say courteously that her own taste ran to girls. You could dress them cuter, she said, a principle she preached but did not practice. Her own girls, both big and little, looked very like the waifs in an illustration for a Sunday-school tract, except that they were plump and healthy instead of ready to collapse. The Parmalees wanted to see that wonderful baby buggy, they all said, having heard so much about it.

"Well, in case Myra wins," Gertrude said, "we will stop by on our way home and show it to you. Though that's not saying she will necessarily."

"No," said Stellie without conviction.

"You do that," Aglia said cordially. "My, the neighborhood will have something to be proud of."

MRS. RYDING lived across the alley on Quince Street, and they did not know whether to stop at her house with Myra or not. Mrs. Ryding was the most exclusive and the haughtiest woman in the neighborhood. She always wore stiff black silk dresses and skin-tight coats and jackets. Mrs. Ryding fixed her hair with the care and attention to fashion usually found in young and hopeful girls, not matrons of long standing, and tried the modes as they came, whether braids, bangs, curl-papered ringlets, buns, Psyche knots or chignons. She appeared in public with these coiffures, albeit somewhat self-consciously, but this was evident only by her high color. In fact her face, with its clear fine skin, was permanently mantled in a blush. self-possessed though she seemed at all times that went down to the neck of her dress and no doubt far beneath that, for she slightly panted in her haughtiness as though uncomfortably warm even in winter.

In spite of being clad always in black, she took an intense interest in style and subscribed to several magazines that pictured what was being worn in fashionable cities like Boston, London and Paris and she had at least one new frock or coat made every summer and every winter, as sure as these seasons rolled around. She was never seen off her own premises without white gloves on, and she was known to have two new hats a year whether she needed them or not. She was of uncertain age, but it was thought that she was younger rather than older, and some people presumed she might be partly Spanish as though her eyes were rather light in color. She was of middle height and neither plump nor slender.

Mrs. Ryding was one of the lucky ones of this world (or so it seemed then), for she not only had Cleora Showacy from the Third Ward to come in and help with the washing and ironing, but she had Ingeborg Jensen to come in once a week and clean house.

Mrs. Ryding also had a collection of jewelry. She had a genuine diamond ring with a high pronged setting that stood out prominently under her kid gloves, an opal ring which she seldom wore, two or three nice brooches, a pair of ruby earrings, a nice pin-on watch with her name engraved on the back ("Phoebe") and a necklace of genuine amber and one of coral. She had no children and when she celebrated her silver-wedding anniversary, M

CONTINUED ON PAGE 92

No loose powder, no pressed powder can give you this look!

PLEXION IN 'MISTY ROSE' BY REVLON. HAT BY SALLY VICTOR. JEWELS BY CASTLECLIFF. © 1955 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP

Only Revlon 'Lanolité'

'LOVE-PAT'

new all-in-one pressed powder-and-foundation gives you the look you want—glowing, youthful, alive!

Flatters with luminous color as nothing could before! 'Love-Pat' with the velvety face-powder finish does more for you than powder! It covers more evenly, never fades to a face-powder pallor, can't spill.

Clings longer! Won't dry skin like most makeups! Non-drying—because it smooths your skin with 'Lanolite', Revlon's own skin-softening discovery—3 ways better than lanolin itself. And 'Love-Pat' won't cake or streak!

You'll never go back to spilly powder, masklike makeups or old-time pressed powder—because you never looked so wonderful before. Don't wait to try 'Love-Pat'. In eight fashion-genius shades that won't change color on your skin!

New Jeweler's Compact!
How different this tawny Tortoise-Shell Tone compact is from all those ordinary pink and white plastic compacts you've been carrying! This is Revlon—take it from your bag with pride!
Only 1.35 plus tax

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 90

Ryding gave her a solid silver tea set on a large silver tray. She never used this because she and her husband, earnest converts to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints since the early days of their marriage, believed in the Word of Wisdom and followed it to the letter, but it looked impressive upon the ebony sideboard.

Mr. John Ryding, her husband, had a furniture store down on State Street, to which he drove every morning in a smart buggy behind a pair of nice horses. His line of business was thought to account for the fact that they had such nice furniture at home. At least, that was what people in the Nineteenth Ward said. Nobody knew what he got his goods for, wholesale, but it was assumed he picked them up at ridiculously low prices, so it was no wonder that the Rydings' nice little red-brick house with the ornamental iron fence all around and the stable out in back was so richly furnished. Mr. Ryding did a little undertaking on the side, since he also dealt in coffins.

If she had not been renowned for her chic, hauteur and religiosity, Mrs. Ryding would have been noted for this: she was desperately in love with her husband. Now, several of the women in the neighborhood loved their husbands a great deal—Linnea, for one, and Mrs. Flewwellen, the little bride—but none of them showed it out in public and none but what would have died before betraying in front of others signs of jealousy, which Mrs. Ryding frequently did. Hardly a person in the whole Nineteenth Ward but what had seen a flash of Mrs. Ryding's jealousy like a jab of lightning on a still summer day and heard the clap of thunder in her cultivated voice when she spoke to her husband subsequently. Usually it was some little thing he did: taking his hat off to a lady and bowing low, or reaching out to shake hands, or inquiring how she did. That was all it took to get Mrs. Ryding "going." At church parties, where there was dancing afterward and Mr. Ryding, a fine dancer, couldn't sit back but had to dance, she was well worth watching, so red did she grow (even when upon the floor herself), so short was her breath, so damaging were her eyes.

One's love for God is equal to the love one has for the man he loves least.

—JOHN J. HUGO

She had reason enough to have quite a case on Mr. Ryding, everybody admitted. How she ever got him in the first place was a mystery, some said, and others wondered if he hadn't been a poor boy and she had maybe had money. But they were the ones who did not care for her looks. Most thought her rather more attractive than the average middle-aged woman and insisted she must have been a fairly pretty girl. She was a year or two younger than Mr. Ryding and he was guessed to be not far from fifty. He did not look it, except that he was balding and graying like any lesser man. He was boyishly slender and light upon his feet and had a youthful way of laughing and talking. Mr. Ryding was, in short, a thoroughly handsome man, and a popular one, too, for he had not an enemy in the world. It was not known what he thought of his wife's ways, the green-eyed monster, or her love like an accurately thrown lasso, but since he did not rebel and only treated her with the greatest courtesy and kindness, it was supposed that he not only did not mind it but might actually have thrived on it.

Gertrude was reluctant to stop at Mrs. Ryding's, with whom she felt no affinity, but Stellie hoped to get to see the silver tea set.

"We never been there," Gertrude protested. "She won't care whether Myra is going to be in a contest or not, and besides, the gold baby buggy wouldn't mean nothing to her."

"Please," Stellie begged. "Maybe it will."

"Well, all right," Gertrude said, "but remember, if she makes us feel foolish, it will be all your fault."

They knocked at the front door and the lady was so long in coming that Myra got somewhat offended and began to cry. Gertrude jiggled her up and down, noticing that she seemed heavy. Luckily she stopped crying when Mrs. Ryding opened the door.

"Good morning," Mrs. Ryding said politely.

"Good morning," Gertrude said. "We was just taking our baby sister, Myra, around to show everybody how she looks for the contest, and we thought you might like to see her too."

"Well," Mrs. Ryding said. She looked at Myra, who was staring back at her unwinkingly and who now gave her a beaming smile. "She looks very nice. What contest is that?"

"The Dinwoodie's Furniture Company contest," Gertrude said quickly, for it came to her that Mrs. Ryding's husband was in the furniture business, too, and therefore she was repeating the name of a foe and rival. "The first prize is a gold baby buggy, for whoever is the prettiest baby in Salt Lake City."

"And you girls are going to enter your little sister," Mrs. Ryding said. "I suppose you have your hearts set on the prize."

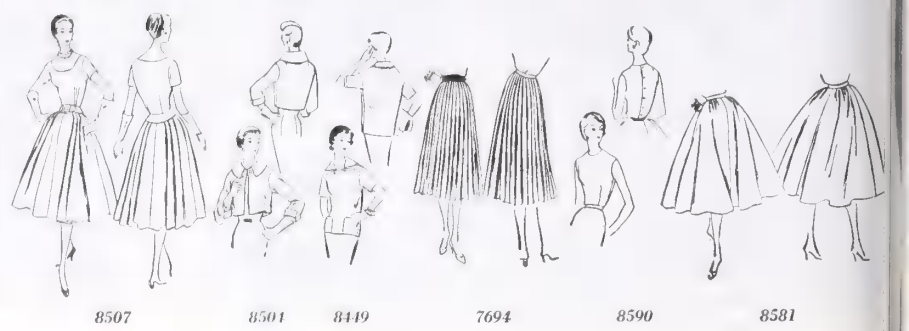
"Oh, we have," the girls said, heaving sighs. Myra heaved a sigh, too, as though she had her heart set on it, also, but all she wanted to do was to get her bonnet off, and now she began tugging on it determinedly. Gertrude

CONTINUED ON PAGE 95

THE GILBERT
VITALATOR
SOOTHES AND RELAXES YOUR TIRED BODY

Just slip the amazing Gilbert Vitalator over your hand . . . flip the switch. Like many skilled, supple fingers the Vitalator works the aching kinks out of your legs, arms, back and hips . . . eases strained nerves . . . lets you really relax. The unique "Swedish massage" rotary action sends waves of vibrations through your fingertips and into your body . . . makes you feel like new again. A.C.-D.C. model B165A, $15.95.

AT COSMETICS OR HOUSEWARES DEPTS. OF THESE AND OTHER LEADING STORES:



AKRON, OHIO — The M. O'Neil Co.
ATLANTA, GA. — Davison-Paxon; Sears Roebuck & Co.
BALTIMORE, MD. — The May Company
BOSTON, MASS. — Jordan Marsh
BUFFALO, N. Y. — The Wm. Hengerer Co.
CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Belk's Dept. Store
CHICAGO, ILL. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO — The H. S. Pogue Co.; The John Shillito Co.
CLEVELAND, OHIO — Higbee's; The May Company
COLUMBUS, OHIO — F & R Lazarus
DALLAS, TEX. — Titche-Goettinger
DAYTON, OHIO — Rike-Kumler Co.
DENVER, COLORADO — Denver Dry Goods; The May Company
DETROIT, MICH. — Crowley, Milner Co.; J. L. Hudson Co.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — Wurzburg Co.
HARTFORD, CONN. — The G. Fox Co.
HOUSTON, TEX. — Foley's; Sears Roebuck & Co.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND. — W. H. Block Co.
JACKSONVILLE, FLA. — Furchgott's
KANSAS CITY, MO. — Macy's
LOS ANGELES, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
LOUISVILLE, KY. — Stewart's Dry Goods Co.
MIAMI, FLA. — Burdine's
MILWAUKEE, WISC. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — The Dayton Co.; Donaldson's
NEWARK, N. J. — Kresge-Newark
NEW YORK, N. Y. — B. Altman's; Hammacher Schlemmer; Lewis & Conger
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA. — Gimbel's; Snellenburg's; Strawbridge & Clothier
PITTSBURGH, PENNA. — Kaufmann's
RICHMOND, VA. — Miller & Rhoads
ROCHESTER, N. Y. — Sibley Lindsay & Curr
ST. LOUIS, MO. — Sears Roebuck & Co.; Stix Baer & Fuller
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA. — Maas Bros.
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — Auerbach's; Paris Company
SAN ANTONIO, TEX. — Joske's
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SEATTLE, WASH. — Sears Roebuck & Co.
SYRACUSE, N. Y. — E. W. Edwards & Son
TAMPA, FLA. — Maas Bros.
TOLEDO, OHIO — La Salle's
WICHITA, KANSAS — Innes

A PRODUCT OF A. C. GILBERT CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN. PRICES SHOWN SLIGHTLY HIGHER DENVER & WEST

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 74 & 75.

Vogue Design No. 8603.	One-piece dress; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.
Vogue Design No. S-4601.	One-piece dress; 12 to 44, 30 to 44. $1.00.
Vogue Design No. 8215.	"Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 42, 30 to 42. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8109.	"Very Easy to Make" skirt, 22 to 34 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8523.	"Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress or jumper dress and skirt; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 8507.	One-piece dress and dickey; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 8504.	"Easy to Make" boleros; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8449.	"Very Easy to Make" blouse; Small (28–30), Medium (32–34), Large (36–38). 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7694.	Skirt, 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8590.	"Easy to Make" blouses; 10 to 20, 28 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8581.	"Very Easy to Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 92

ched up and took her hand, restraining
. "We'll let you know—how it comes out," said, feeling a need to say something but knowing quite what.
"You do that," Mrs. Ryding said. "I hope omes out fine." She paused and bit her
"Oh, say, girls, you didn't happen to see ora Showacy this morning, did you?"
Cleora Showacy helped with Mrs. Ryding's shing and ironing two days a week. She s sixteen years old and her mother was a ow. She did not look anything out of the inary except that she had a sweet smile her eyebrows met across the middle in a that would have been forbidding if they been black but, delicate brown, were not.
No," Gertrude said. "We ain't seen her."
She is usually much earlier than this,"
s. Ryding said. "I just wondered. She ps with my washing and ironing."
No," Gertrude repeated, shaking her head.
re was nothing to do then but to turn and murmuring good-by. Gertrude waited till got to the corner where she was sure Mrs.
ling couldn't hear, before she said, "I told so! I knew she wouldn't care nothing for a or the contest or ask us in. Ain't Mrs. ling red in the face, though? I wonder t makes her."
'Cause she's stuck up."
It don't look nice," Gertrude said.
I should say it don't. It makes her look the comb of a chicken," Stellie decided.
Just exactly," Gertrude said.
When I get married I am going around sed up all the time, like Mrs. Ryding, igh," Stellie said, floundering a little under baby sister's weight. "She don't never go nd in old clothes."
am too," Gertrude said. "But I'm cery not going around in black. And if ebody comes to see me, I'll say 'Come and I'll show them all my wedding ents and whatever I got."
Me too."
f any little girls comes to see me, I'll say, ne in.'"
Me too."
No matter who it is. Even if it's a gypsy!"
it Stellie demurred over this.
That is," Gertrude amended, "if I don't no children, as naturally I won't ask no
y in if I got children, especially babies.
otherwise I will."
ey were plodding up Currant on their to the Birdsey house when they saw ra Showacy on the corner talking to op Birdsey's son Vaude. Right in the hot not in the shade, though there was a big nut close by, Cleora and Vaude had their s together and were talking away for life. Cleora had taken her yellow hat off was swinging it by a streamer. Vaude his hat in his hand. The sunlight put more gold in their similar brown hair than was actually there, turned them to blondes and was in turn reflected from them. There was something odd about seeing them there together, it came as a surprise. Vaude Birdsey was really almost a "higher up." He had a fine job in the office of the Palace Laundry and was never anywhere around the neighborhood on a weekday. And then—Cleora Showacy, who washed and ironed for Mrs. Ryding! When had they got so well acquainted all of a sudden, those two? Vaude was a tall, long-necked, unblemished young man of twenty, about ripe to go on a mission, and was said to keep company with one of the wealthy Cannon girls, a young lady who played the violin. They were still talking away when the Ecklund sisters turned in on Almond Street and went to Bishop Birdsey's home, a handsome adobe with vines growing up it.

Mrs. Birdsey was around on the ivy-dark porch in a big rocking chair, shelling peas; and as they could have foretold, she went into raptures over Myra. She went into raptures over everything, Bishop Birdsey's wife did. It was her way. She handed out compliments like they were a cartload of strawberries that were going to spoil on her before she could get them preserved. It was not a bad habit. It made everybody feel wonderfully good even when they did not believe a word she was saying, or only half or three quarters believed it. Certainly the Ecklund girls—Myra too—felt better to hear that they were beautiful, bright, talented and gracefully garbed than if they had heard they were not or heard nothing.

Myra seemed enchanted the whole time Mrs. Birdsey was speaking, her eyes fixed upon her wide thin lips and square teeth. She forgot she wanted to take her bonnet off and postponed crying. "Why, no," Mrs. Birdsey ended, "it wouldn't surprise me. What would surprise me, would be if she didn't win the prize." Myra burst out laughing with pleasure. She never would have cried if their hostess had not offered them a handful of peas apiece. Myra took hers from the circle of Stellie's arms, sending down a starfish hand to grab them with, but could not hold onto them. They rolled away one by one and bounced all over the porch, except for two held by her strained little finger against her fat palm. That made her scream with rage, especially when Gertrude wiggled the cramped finger loose and the two peas went bouncing away.

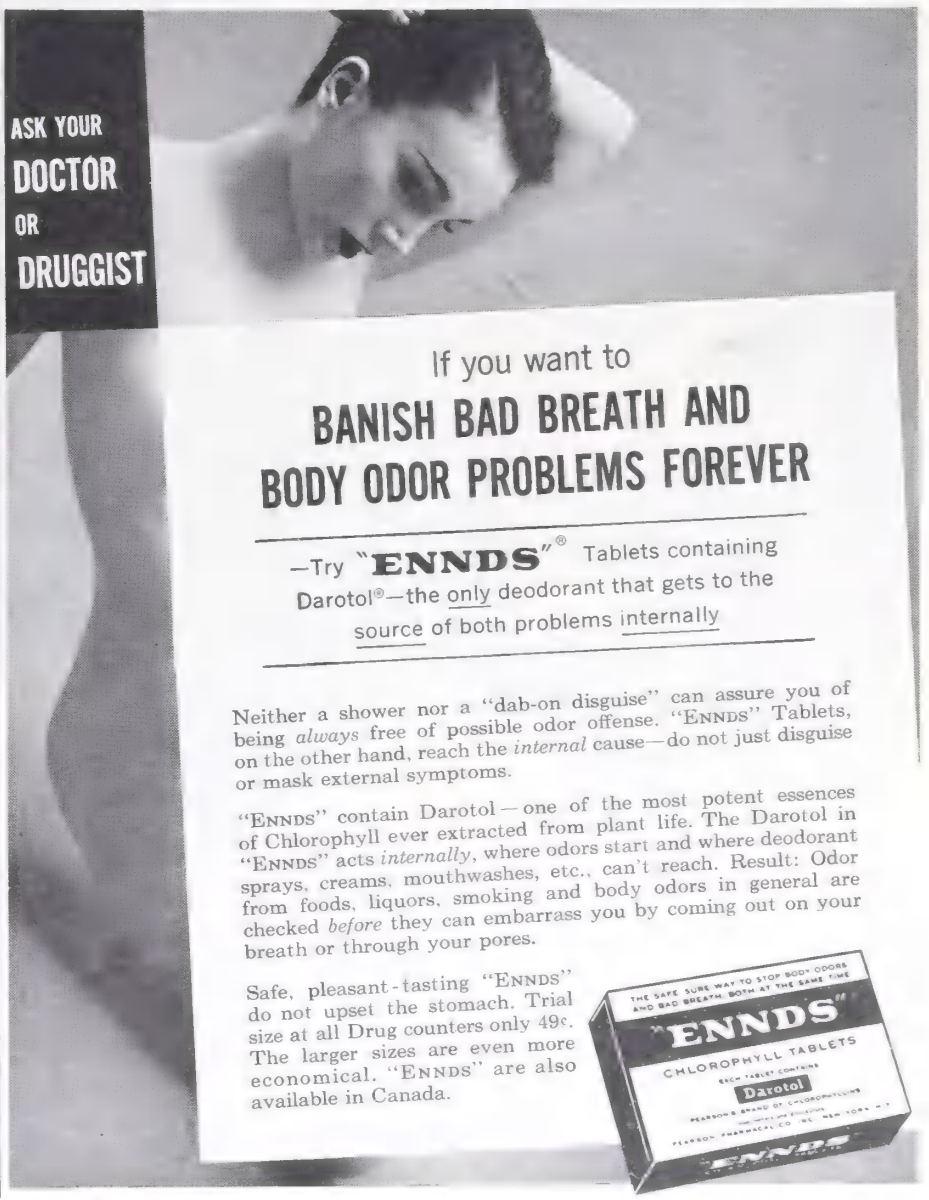
Gertrude took her then, and started the old jiggling up and down, which seemed to soothe Myra for any indignities to which her pride had been subjected. "We are going to try to keep her from bawling," Gertrude explained, "if we can, at the contest, as naturally she don't look very pretty bawling."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 97

"What a terrific girl she is, ma. She makes model airplanes."

Now break the grip of RHEUMATIC PAIN

A fine Bristol-Myers product



CONTAINS 3 PAIN-RELIEVING INGREDIENTS USED BY DOCTORS . . . PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

When nagging pain of rheumatism makes you miserable . . . get fast, deep-down relief with new, greaseless Minit-Rub!

New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with skin-soothing lanolin—in a special vanishing cream base. So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn your skin — yet its penetrating heat sensation relieves pain even deep-down.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains—as a chest rub for cold miseries, too. All drug counters, 39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

If you want to

BANISH BAD BREATH AND BODY ODOR PROBLEMS FOREVER

—Try "ENNDS"® Tablets containing Darotol®—the only deodorant that gets to the source of both problems internally

Neither a shower nor a "dab-on disguise" can assure you of being always free of possible odor offense. "ENNDS" Tablets, on the other hand, reach the internal cause—do not just disguise or mask external symptoms.

"ENNDS" contain Darotol—one of the most potent essences of Chlorophyll ever extracted from plant life. The Darotol in "ENNDS" acts internally, where odors start and where deodorant sprays, creams, mouthwashes, etc., can't reach. Result: Odor from foods, liquors, smoking and body odors in general are checked before they can embarrass you by coming out on your breath or through your pores.

Safe, pleasant-tasting "ENNDS" do not upset the stomach. Trial size at all Drug counters only 49¢. The larger sizes are even more economical. "ENNDS" are also available in Canada.

TAKE TIME OUT FOR BEAUT
AVON
CLEAR RED
AVON
AVON
Avon cosmetics
Available only through your Avon Representative who calls at your home.

vhen your Avon Representative calls

Irs. Theodore S. Chapman, distinguished president of the General ederation of Women's Clubs, takes time out to select Avon cosmetics n her home at Jerseyville, Illinois, with the help of Mrs. Pearl Johnson, er Avon Representative. You will enjoy taking time out for beauty ith your Avon Representative, who brings the world's finest cosmetics o your home, and guides you in making your selections.

vvon Color-Last Lipstick creams as it colors ... looks so glamorous. t is one of the many wonderful Avon cosmetics and toiletries for the hole family that you choose in the convenience and privacy of your wn home. The surprisingly moderate prices are another happy reason or you to take time out for beauty the Avon way.

Your Avon Representative will be calling soon . . . Welcome her!

IF YOU WISH AN AVON REPRESENTATIVE TO CALL, PLEASE CONSULT YOUR LOCAL PHONE DIRECTORY OR CALL WESTERN UNION OPERATOR 25

AVON cosmetics
RADIO CITY, NEW YORK

COPYRIGHT 1955, AVON PRODUCTS, INC.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 95

"Oh, I don't know," Mrs. Birdsey said. "Maybe she will look better crying than lots of babies will look laughing."

When they turned out onto Currant Street again Vaude Birdsey and Cleora Showacy were gone from the corner.

"Are they soft on each other?" Gertrude wondered.

"Who?" Stellie offered to take Myra back, but Gertrude thought they should wait until her mood, whether for tempest or sunshine, had jelled into the one thing or the other.

"Vaude Birdsey and Cleora Showacy."

"Huh-uh," Stellie decided, shaking her head.

Myra not being broke, and they having no diapers with them, they had to go home without stopping anywhere else, though the English family on the corner of Center Street and Fourth North had charms for Gertrude seldom met with in this life. They were the ones who were all going to be educated someday, every one of them, girls as well as boys.

Stellie felt worse about not stopping at Miss Deatherage's, but Gertrude comforted her by saying they would pay all these extra calls with the gold baby buggy when they went the rounds with that.

Miss Deatherage lived alone in a small cottage within a tangle of trees, on Fourth North. The children loved to see her, and welcomed any legitimate excuse to do so, for she was beautiful. Miss Deatherage had auburn hair, auburn eyes with long black eyelashes, and arched auburn eyebrows. Though her cheeks and lips were permanently pink, her skin was the whitest ever seen upon earth, with pale blue tracings about the wrists and at the base of the tender throat. Her waist you could have snapped in two like a flower stem. She always wore light colors, even in winter, and her clothes fluttered as though she was running or dancing even when she walked.

There was something about Miss Deatherage that discouraged idle visitors. For one thing, she never answered the door but with a book in her hands, not in her hands so exactly as pressed against her breast, wide open. If one did not disturb her at her reading, one disturbed her at her piano playing, for she practiced at her great square, almost brand-new piano an unconscionable lot of hours.

To someone, Aglia Parmalee or someone, she confessed that she had been taking lessons for only six months, and it seemed odd to the whole neighborhood that a grown woman of thirty-four or thirty-five would take piano lessons like a small girl of seven or eight and go for these lessons once a week, with a leather music roll under her arm. She "took," it was discovered, from a young man named Professor Arthur Prince, who lived and had a music studio on the fourth floor of the Constitution Building. His name was often mentioned in the papers, as he played for programs and his pupils, children and young ladies from the best families, frequently gave "recitals."

At first, when she came into the neighborhood, Miss Deatherage was spoken of and wondered about a good deal, but after what she was came out by some accident, her name was only whispered, never in front of small members of the family who were instantly forbidden to "bother" her, and the ladies called less and less. In fact, they stopped altogether. Everybody spoke to her cordially, however, upon the street, as respectfully as if she had been what they surmised at first (erroneously)—a beautiful "old maid" of independent means, and not the ladylove of Brother Downsdee, one of the Council of Twelve. It did not take many weeks to find out about him, though it might have if he had not been driven to Miss Deatherage's in his carriage with its Scottish coat of arms painted upon the door. Linnea said to Ingeborg (first shooing all the children outside) that she wondered why he didn't have the presence of mind to leave it at home and come and go in a livery-stable hack. Very likely he thought it would not be recognized at night, she said, and of course he only came at night. Ingeborg refused to discuss it, she was so gagged by the very thought of it, she said. Brother Downsdee! Seventy-two years old if he was a day, with a long gray beard clear down past his wishbone, and three wives, mind you! . . . three wives, one each in three of the biggest and nicest mansions in town! . . . and had to have another woman! . . . at seventy-two! It made a person get cold chills, Ingeborg said. Didn't they never stop? Wasn't there never no end to it? Did it just go on and on?

The children got strict instructions never to go to Miss Deatherage's. No explanation was made except that she was very "busy." Indeed, she seemed to be, when they crept there seldomly with one excuse or another: Did Miss Death'rage happen to see a small black dog? Did she want her leaves burned? No, she said to everything, but sweetly, stood there with her book pressed against her bosom and did not ask one in. So the children, too, gave up calling unless they had the best excuse in the world.

The gold baby buggy, the first prize, ought to be excuse enough, both Gertrude and Stellie thought. As they went by her place (with lace curtains and nice window boxes), they promised themselves that they would go there sure in the late afternoon with it. Stellie said that on such an occasion Miss Death'rage might even ask them in, might even play a piece for them on her piano! And in their exaltation it did not seem too much to expect.

The foolish man seeks happiness in the distance; the wise grows it under his feet. —JAMES OPPENHEIM

There was a horse and buggy out in front of their house and a strange man was sitting in it, holding the reins. Gertrude and Stellie hurried around to the back door as fast as they could. Mamma was just pinning her hat on when they rushed in. The man had come to fetch her. His wife was a "case" and was starting her pains, over on Thirteenth East.

On such an important day as the contest? Both girls looked woebegone. How could she go? They had counted on her being at home when they left and at home when they returned in triumph. Gertrude laid already weary Myra upon the kitchen table and began to change her. Mamma came and took the baby's bonnet off and felt her head. It was hot as fire and looked as red as a beet through her sparse white hair. She slipped two fingers down the neck of her dress and felt her, felt here and there.

"She's soaking with sweat," mamma said, then turned and looked at Stellie, looked at Gertrude snapping the last safety pin shut. "So are you both."

"It's hot outside," Stellie said. "That's why."

"Sit down," mamma said. "I want to tell you something. Me having to go and all, and the day turning off so warm which brings out Myra's eckzeema worse, and it being too far for you to walk in such heat and not good for Myra or for you either ——"

"We'll keep to the shady side," Gertrude wailed, knowing what was coming next.

Stellie said nothing, but her lip started to quiver and her eyes began to fill with tears.

"—— it seems to me like," mamma said, "under the circumstances the best thing for you girls to do is to stay home and keep house for me and take care of Myra till I get back. She's already tired from going all over the neighborhood, and so are you."

"Tired!"

"No smartiness," mamma said firmly. "And that way there'll be no heatstrokes or no disappointments and everything will be fine!"

"Fine!"

"Fine, I said. You heard me," mamma said. "And stop that silly mocking me. Take off baby's things and let her lay on the bed in her bare skin and cool off and be sure to keep the blinds pulled down."

The two sisters looked at each other and so identical were their expressions, the open-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 99

together—you'll be proud of your Community

Inside . . . outside . . . wherever you set your table with Community*...you enjoy beauty and quality unmatched by any other fine silverplate. If you're a new bride, or a "bride" of many years hoping for new silverware, study these fresh, timeless patterns . . . the deep-glowing pure-silver finish. See the detailing, meticulous as a diamond's facets. 52-pc. service for 8, $79.75, including anti-tarnish chest. Easy terms. Proudly made and guaranteed by Oneida Ltd. Silversmiths.

TODAY'S LOOK IN FINE SILVERWARE

*TRADEMARKS OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N.Y.
COPYRIGHT 1956, ONEIDA LTD

SOUTH SEAS* WHITE ORCHID* MORNING STAR* EVENING STAR* LADY HAMILTON* CORONATION*

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 97

guished down-turning mouth and creases ready to open and shower down a of tears, that each might have been g into a mirror at her own reflection. ou'll get over it," mamma said practi-

s. Troon was sitting for her portrait and was drawing her upon a sheet of tablet with a pencil he had only finished ening. Mrs. Troon looked at the clock, ing at it in the shadows high upon the shelf. It was hard to see beyond the of lamplight. Luckily it began to strike he read the chimes. "—— five—six——eight. Rudie! them girls had never to gone to that contest without their r's say-so! I told 'em, but they wheedled egged and got my permission and before ly had a chance to say boo. But Rudie, hould of been home long before this." ot up and steadied herself with a hand back of her chair, then hobbled to the w, cupped her hands around her eyes ooked out. The summer night had only llen and it was not entirely dark, the nd shrubs looked darker than the still rose-tinted air. Then she hobbled to cked screen door, unlocked it absently ooked out, but there was nothing to see. simply sick," Mrs. Troon said. "Your skin me alive. Her two girls and that he thinks the sun rises and sets in—gone, you. Ain't seen hide nor hair of them eleven-thirty this morning."

went to her chair and sat down heavily, deep sigh. "Where in the world could e, not coming home till pitch dark and ntest over at three this afternoon?"

lie stared at the old lady, put his head e side, squinted, kept on staring, then ed his gaze and drew busily.

old still, Mrs. Troon," Rudie said, "I'm to the nose and the nose is one of the mportantest parts."

should say it is," Mrs. Troon agreed, to comply. "But that baby—out this What are they thinking of! I tell you, , your ma is going to want to skin me and no wonder!"

old still, Mrs. Troon," Rudie begged, ad bent so far over the paper his nose early upon his knuckles and the flash eyes only now and then visible through nging front locks of his hair.

ou making me pretty or ugly?" Mrs. demanded suddenly.

lie leaned backward and carefully apd the portrait. "Why—pretty," he said ome embarrassment.

ood," she said. "Make me real pretty. e."

small boy swallowed. Then he began w a head of youthful curls, one dainty fter another heaped up high. He felt the way he felt when he was telling a ough he did not say a word.

here could they be, them kids?" Mrs. began to rock back and forth. "In the of the night? Your ma's going to boil oil."

ie dropped his pencil and was listening. 's that noise?" he said.

. Troon stopped rocking. "Noise? I hear no ——" ming round the house! Wheels. Listen, froon. Can't you hear it?"

. Troon was listening for all she was her hand hooked around her ear, but uld not seem to hear it until—why, er it was, here it seemed to be, right e, right around to the back, at the foot stairs —— ie was a brave boy or else he would been scared and wanted to run, but he where he was and stared at the screen as did Mrs. Troon, their mouths and jar, not breathing, while it came up ps—bump, bump, bump—bump!—and nd across the back porch. It could have nything!

it was was something of glittering, ng, priceless, immemorial gold that was g head-first through the door on tall -tired wheels. Through the locked door? Mrs. Troon giving a very little scream? Rudie starkly unscreaming? They would have looked and done the same if the Redeemer instead had walked in at that locked screen door in the midst of the Coming, in the middle of Millennium.

"Surprised?" papa said. "Where is everybody?" He was carrying his coat over his arm and his tie was unfastened, for it was still very hot outside. He took off his hat and hung up both it and the coat beside the door.

Papa?

Papa?

Walking in, pushing, wheeling, bringing home the famous and illustrious baby buggy?—for there could be no other, there was only one and this was it, the first prize of the baby contest, given by Dinwoodie's Wonderful Furniture Store, from the last bright spoke of the last big wheel to the last pompon on the end of the point of the tiptilting parasol hanging like a pink poppy upended over the upholstered seat!

"Mr. Ecklund," Mrs. Troon quavered, "this ain't your night ——"

"Oh, yes, it is," beautiful papa said, for he looked beautiful beside this thing, his hair taking gold from it, his eyes lit up brighter than day. "This sure is my night."

"But you was home last night, Mr. Ecklund ——"

"I don't care if I was! Where is everybody? I guess this ought to stand somebody on their head."

Mrs. Troon told him what had happened, how Linnea had changed her mind about the girls' taking Myra to the contest, how she went to the baby case with the man who lived down on Thirteenth East, how the girls begged and pleaded to go down to the fairgrounds and how she, Mrs. Troon, weakling that she was, had let them go. How, finally, they had not come back, though the doings must have been over for hours. And neither had Linnea! The old lady put the corner of her apron to her eye as she got up, irresistibly drawn, and

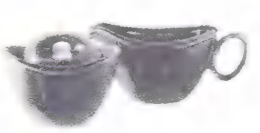
HOMER LAUGHLIN

Epicure

You've never, no, never, seen chinaware like this—unless you've seen Epicure! It is casual enough for terrace luncheons or buffet suppers—gracious enough for proud dinners.

Many pieces play double, even triple, roles. Casseroles pop into the oven for baking, move right onto the table for easy serving. Bread and butter plates are right for salads and desserts—soups are ideal for cereals and fruits. Epicure's four beautiful colors—Turquoise Blue, Charcoal Grey, Dawn Pink and Snow White—are harmonized for matching or easy mixing.

Epicure was designed with you and your modern way of life in mind! You'll love this new, amazingly sturdy chinaware! You'll use it more often, more ways than any you own. See Epicure at your favorite store—it's made by Homer Laughlin, America's largest chinaware maker. A mighty popular, multi-purpose 16-piece starter set, in matched or mixed colors, is budget-priced at $7.95, slightly higher in the Far West.



SMALL CASSEROLES are ideal for baking beans, custard, soufflé—then serve them piping-hot right at the table!

SOUPS are fine for soup, of course, but Epicure soups are large enough for salads, cereals, stews, spaghetti.

LARGE CASSEROLE holds a complete supper for the whole family—or makes an ideal covered serving dish.

SUGAR AND CREAMER are sized for generous everyday use, have handles specially planned for sure gripping.

HOMER LAUGHLIN—Smart chinaware that fits your budget.

Presto
Fiftieth Anniversary
Bonus Values

New Presto® Cooker

• For 1,000 and 1 dishes!

PRESTO FRY-PAN CASSEROLE

Plug in anywhere, cook and serve on the spot. Automatic Controlled Heat. Twin handles. Silversmith finish $21.95

Heat-Resistant Glass Cover, $2.00
Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00

• 4 automatic appliances in 1

PRESTO SKILLET

It's an automatic electric frypan, saucepan, casserole and chafing dish—all in one! Cook, serve on the spot. Silversmith finish $24.95

Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00

FREE! 50th Anniversary Bonus (for a limited time only)
$2.00 Value! Heat Resistant Glass Cover

• Beautiful... and what a cook!

PRESTO COOKER/FRYER

New 2-in-1 automatic electric appliance! Cooks, deep fries, roasts, steams, braises, bakes. Silversmith finish $28.95

Complete with cover and fry-basket.

• Perfect coffee twice as fast!

PRESTO COFFEE MAKER

It's fully automatic! Perks coffee to your favorite flavor-strength twice as fast! Silversmith finish..... $29.95

• Presto—the only tap water vapor steam iron with Scorch Preventer!

VAPOR STEAM AND DRY IRON

Scorch Preventer indicates when heat and steam are perfect for the fabric. And only Presto has it!.... $17.95

NEW AUTOMATIC AIR VENT

NEW PRESSURE-TRU INDICATOR

NEW COOKING GUIDE

*Fair Trade Price, Federal Tax included.

NEW AUTOMATIC AIR VENT
Automatically releases air . . . automatically retains pressure. No watching. No listening.

NEW PRESSURE-TRU INDICATOR
Automatically releases excess steam. Automatically shows pressure accurately. Tells when to turn down heat and when to open cooker.

NEW COOKING GUIDE
Gives correct timing for many popular dishes right on the handle.

Greatest pressure cooker advance in 15 years!

These three new Presto features make the miracle of pressure cooking easy as boiling water! Save hours of cooking time. Save precious vitamins, flavors. See the amazing new Presto Cooker today.

Presto Cookers from $11.95 Fair Trade Price

More Presto Cookers are sold than all other makes combined!

50th Anniversary BONUS OFFER!
WITH EVERY PRESTO PRODUCT
NEW PRESTO ELECTRIC TRIVET

Large, de luxe size. A table-top beauty for serving . . . warming food. Black antique finish. Complete with cord. $4.95 Value. Only $2.50. Save $2.45. Ask your dealer.
(This offer good in continental United States only.)

National Presto Products

Over 21 Million Satisfied Presto Users

Copyright N.P.I.I. 1955

NATIONAL PRESTO INDUSTRIES, INC. • EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

started for the baby buggy, like a fly to honey. "She'll want to skin me alive," she mourned, "and no wonder—if them kids ——"

There were babies enough to cry in the neighborhood—Deddy Lilygren and Hyrum Parmalee, to name two—but when the crying started they all knew it was Myra—and they knew, moreover, that she was tired enough to drop and sore enough to want to take a slap at somebody.

She was both, it turned out. Not hungry, for she had been fed at Aunt Birgitta's. She had a nice time at Aunt Birgitta's house where her two sorry sisters had slunk in ignominiously with her, to wait until it got dark before they went home without the prize. It was the only place she had been "good," alas, and on the way home after the sun went down she stopped being that and began to get cross again, crosser than she had been all afternoon, which was saying a good deal, for the girls said afterward that never did a baby cry and carry on the way she did. Not so much going down to the fairgrounds but after she got there among the other contestants. In fact, all during the contest she had never let up for one minute.

Gertrude was the one who was carrying Myra and came up the steps and in through the back door after Stellie, completely exhausted, as Stellie was, pale with fatigue, her face streaked with dust.

Stellie it was who let out the shrill scream, loud enough to wake the dead, when she saw what was in the kitchen! Gertrude did not say a word. She went over and laid on the lounge squalling Myra, who suddenly caught a glimpse of it, too, whose cry broke off in the middle, whose tear-swimming eyes you could have knocked off with a stick.

"Listen here, you young ladies," papa began severely, "Mrs. Troon was telling me how you been gone all day long. I expect a excuse from you that is a humdinger, because to leave the house at eleven-thirty o'clock in the morning and not come home till pretty near nine o'clock at night ——"

"We went to Aunt Birgitta's," Stellie whispered, her uttermost eyes on the buggy. "Some other baby won—with hardly any clothes c ı, and black hair—so we was ashamed Myra didn't—after us going all around the neighborhood and bragging—so we went to Aunt Birgitta's—so we waited till it was dark ——"

Gertrude did not say a word. She took a step toward the prize and stopped, a step toward it and stopped. Then she went without stopping and took it—as though it were a being—into her arms! Put her arms out and took that tall, slender, swaying wicker buggy, rough and glittering with gilt paint, with its pink silk lining and its tiny teetering parasol, entirely into her arms. A moisture coming into papa's eyes and a moisture coming into Mrs. Troon's eyes, too, to see her, while Myra looked like she was watching the Creation of Sunday. "My," Gertrude wet her lips and said. "My." Not letting loose, a-hold like grim death, blushing, paling.

"First prize," papa said needlessly, blowing his nose.

WHEN mamma came everything happened that they wanted to have happen. That great French actress Sarah Bernhardt couldn't have done a bit better, nor perhaps half so good a job as mamma! She said afterward that it was a good thing Olaf had thought to build a fire and put the coffeepot on, for she felt like she had been drug through a knothole.

At first, being ignorant of the whole thing, she thought Myra had won the prize! Then she remembered that she forbade the girls go to the contest, so what had happened? They explained that—all of them, all at once, papa and Mrs. Troon too. Oh, there was a lot of explaining to do! It took a great while. How it was papa who brought home the buggy, empty. Why Gertrude and Stellie and the baby didn't get home till almost o'clock, being too ashamed after all the ging done this morning to look anybe the eye till after dark—mamma looked here and they knew there was going t reckoning later on—and how, when came in with Myra —— They went o on, explaining, until mamma could no the suspense another minute and sa but how in the world had papa got h the buggy?

Papa put his coffee cup down. "We said, "here's the whole entire story fro beginning to the end."

THEY all settled down to listen, climbing up on mamma's lap and sh tending not to notice, but it was as thc little lion had come to lick her hand and her heart beat faster, for it had been n long day since he sat there, going on n he was.

"The way it all happened was this," said. "Here it come along towards q time today, and all of a sudden som comes up the stairs and I think it ma customer, but no, it's this boy Richard keeps company with Hattie and wo Dinwoodie's Furniture Store, learnin business from the ground up, as the

And say, finally, whether peace is best preserved by giving energy to the government, or information to the people. This last is the most certain, and the most legitimate engine of government. Educate and inform the whole mass of people. . . . They are the only sure reliance for the preservation of our liberty.

—THOMAS JEFFERSON

Well! Here comes D today was his birthda what should happe Sigrid—but he was i to our house for s which Hattie, it turne had baked a birthda with candles and thing. Well, he stops to walk with me. W about one thing an other and all of a suc say to him, 'Doy, about that baby c Dinwoodie's had o today?'

"'That was some test,' he says. 'Ove hundred babies there one woman was so she claimed she was going to bang one judges over the head with her lunch bas and one woman fainted from the heat.

"'Who won that gold baby buggy?' I I never let on about Myra being in the test right then.

"'Why,' he says, 'a lady down a Third West,' he says, 'Mrs. Raggiotti or kind of a name like that. Turns out the b father is a Greek or a Eyetalian.'"

"See!" Gertrude said triumphantly. "D we tell you? It had big black eyes and dark hair!"

"Some of them people can't be bea looks," mamma said, nodding.

"'My two girls was there,' I says then, the baby. Myra,' I says, 'eleven month that you didn't happen to see, I suppose

"'No,' he says, 'I didn't happen to. In he says, 'I stayed around pretty close t express wagon that I hauled the buggy in and didn't do much mixing amon crowd.'

"'So this lady wins the prize with baby?' I says. 'I guess she sure stepped pushing home her young one in that baby buggy. Why, to hear my kids tell says, 'there's nothing like it been seen Halley's Comet.'

"'She didn't take it,' Doy says. 'Wh won the prize had their choice betwee buggy or twenty-five dollars in cold cash this lady took the cash. She already h buggy so she took the cash and we still on our hands.'

"This here," papa said, pointing t buggy which they all looked at aga though for the first time. He drew a breath. "'So what's to become of the gold buggy?' I says."

They all smiled, for here it was, rig front of their noses, right here in fro them this very minute in their own kit Oh, that papa. That papa.

"'What's to become of it?' I says, and then I started to get a kind of a idea i back of my mind.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 102

Big corn roast–at your house tonight!

It's just like summer with born-to-be-better corn

* grown from special seed we developed ourselves to give u sweeter flavor and extra-tender kernels in DEL MONTE Corn

For years, DEL MONTE seed men have been crossing and ressing the finest strains of corn. Seeking higher natural sugar tent and exceptionally thin-skinned kernels. Coming up ally with corn so special, it can give you a whole new idea how good corn can be. And it's DEL MONTE's alone.

Whether you choose Whole Kernel or Cream Style, you get s same superior corn every time you buy DEL MONTE. If you en't tried it, you just can't know what you're missing!

PAN-ROASTED CORN

2 cans (12-oz. size) DEL MONTE Brand Vacuum-packed Golden Whole Kernel Corn
1 to 2 tablesp. bacon fat, butter or margarine
¼ teaspoon salt

On paper towels, quickly but thoroughly drain all liquid from DEL MONTE Corn. Melt fat in heavy skillet; add corn, salt. Place over low heat on range or grill, and after 5 min., turn corn carefully with a pancake turner. Continue cooking 10 to 15 min. longer, turning several times more. Serve at once. Delicious with hamburgers or hot dogs. Serves 4 to 5.

Del Monte® Corn

—the brand you know puts flavor first

Try all 3 styles:

GOLDEN WHOLE KERNEL
GOLDEN CREAM STYLE
WHITE CREAM STYLE

You hear a bigger whoosh
You smell a fresher aroma
You taste an extra richness

Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

Chase & Sanborn

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 100

"'Why, nothing,' says Doy. 'I took it on back to the store, it's standing there. It's been standing around the store quite a while—in fact, that's how Mr. Dinwoodie got started with the contest in the first place. He got ahold of this buggy through some kind of a mistake and we had it around quite a while. Mr. Dinwoodie just said they could have the twenty-five dollars in money instead, to make it sound good—he didn't think anybody was going to take him up on it.'

"All this time I've been thinking, see, and when he gets through I say, 'Doy, listen here a minute. What would you imagine Mr. Dinwoodie would say to a proposition like this? Suppose I was to go to Mr. Dinwoodie and say, "Mr. Dinwoodie, how about you trading me that baby buggy for a nice suit of clothes?" Which he probably needs ——'

"'He does,' says Doy."

"So that's how you worked it," mamma said, beaming. "You smart old thing."

"That's how I worked it," papa said, trying not to look like he had set the world on fire.

"You smart old thing," mamma repeated tenderly, her eyes on his face.

"And he's coming up to the shop Friday, he says, and he thinks he may pick out a serge."

"Imagine him letting you bring the buggy home with you this very night," mamma said.

"Well, what else could he do?" papa said smugly.

"You smart old thing."

It was not until past midnight when everyone was finally in bed and asleep that Linnea, still up but taking the hairpins out of her hair and piling them in a little heap on the table, said, "But you didn't explain how you happen to be here, yet!"

"Oh, being here," Olaf said, his eyes on the shine of her long tail of blond hair in the lamplight, her gentle redness and whiteness. "As far as being here. I'll tell you how it happened." He could not resist, but leaned over and lifted the tail of hair and tossed it on his palm, weighing its gold. "The first thing we did, we went back up to the tailor shop and left the buggy there. I was going to bring it up tomorrow when it would be my regular night."

"Naturally," Linnea said.

"WELL, sir, Doy and me went down home ——" It always embarrassed him to speak to Linnea of the house where he lived with Sigrid as "home," as it embarrassed him to speak to Sigrid of the house where he spent every other night with Linnea as "home," and he had taken to saying "down home" for Sigrid's place and "up home" for Linnea's. "And along about seven-thirty I got to thinking what kind of a hullaballoo there would be up home—up here—if I come walking in with this gold baby buggy. Well, sir, I could just imagine the bunch of you—and Myra, that won nothing a-tall and here she was going to have the first prize anyway. And of course you, my dearie, with them eyes of yours that lights up like I don't know what—I could see it all so plain, how it would be and how you would act, and finally I just couldn't stand it no more. So I come right out and told Sigrid about it ——"

"Told Sigrid about it," Linnea repeated, dumfounded. "Why, Olaf! She must of ——"

"I knowed she'd be told anyway, so I told her myself."

Linnea stared at him. She knew she was married to a brave man, but was he as brave as this? Or was he coming down with something? Softening of the brain, maybe, or something, though he looked just fine.

"The only place I kind of stretched the truth a little," he went on, "I kind of stretched it a little when I told her the piece of goods wasn't costing me nothing. I said all Mr. Dinwoodie's suit would cost me would be my time and I wasn't busy anyway—which I ain't, God knows, and I wish I was, so that part was the truth."

"BUT what in the world did she say, Olaf?"

He looked uneasy. She had said that he was a perfect fool over that last young one of Linnea's, and why, nobody in their right mind could tell for she was broke out with eckzeem and nearly baldheaded and the biggest baby baby in town. And Linnea was extravagant enough, heaven knows, without getting her started with something like this.

"Why, she said ——" Olaf wet his lips and swallowed.

"Was she mad, Olaf?"

It had not seemed so at first. At first, she didn't even raise her voice. But the more she thought about it and the more she said, the madder she got and pretty soon she was so mad it seemed like she was going to blow the roof right off the house. It was a good thing Doy and Hattie were for a walk. That was when they were gone when Sigrid went through the whole story of her sufferings, from the day Linnea had come into their lives, right on through up to this very minute. She cried and cried, and when he tried to explain she just got worse. Finally he offered not to go up home with the buggy—it was just a notion, he said—it could wait until tomorrow night.

"She wasn't . . . any too glad," he said.

"Honestly, you can't blame her," Linnea said, slowly pulling her hair out of his grasp. "I can imagine how I'd feel if all of a sudden while you and me was spending our evening together, you'd come out with something like that. Why, Olaf, I'd be so mad I'd have a conniption fit!" She looked at him. "Did she have a conniption fit?"

"Not exactly what you might call a conniption fit," he said haltingly. "But she wasn't any too glad."

But what was it if not a conniption fit? If he had been guilty of holding up a train or buying a diamond ring for Linnea as big as a goose egg, then there might be some excuse for the way she carried on! He felt sorry and wished he had not been so rash but had sprung the buggy on Sigrid when she was ready for it—only that might have been never, and in the meantime there was always the danger she would find out for herself.

The minute Doy and Hattie came back from their walk, Hattie made a beeline for her mother's shut bedroom door to see what ailed her, for she knew by her father's face that something did.

Olaf looked unhappily across at Doy who was sitting on the very edge of the smaller parlor chair and decided he might as well tell him what he was up against with the baby buggy proposition. Doy listened with serious brows like a bishop while Olaf told him the whole story.

"I don't know what got into me," Olaf said sadly. "I guess I must of had a screw loose or something for a minute there to imagine she wouldn't raise the roof right off the house and fly into a million pieces."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 105

LET NO TREE WITHER

By MARION LINEAWEAVER

The orchard is in flower,
Fresher than spray.
From close above
It scents my fingers
With a fleeting shower,
Tender as on that day
We spoke of love.

Time out of mind
I thought: What will befall me
Should he grow cold?
Through blighted years
The white spring, blind
With beauty, comes to gall me
As I grow old.

Let the bloom perish,
But the roots remain.
This my heart's cry:
Let no tree wither.
Here I shall cherish
Dreams though they be vain,
Until I die.

After Colonel Higbee died and the plantation was closed, Aunt Jemima sold her famous pancake recipe to a representative of a milling company. For the first time she revealed that her flavor secret was a blend of four flours.

Aunt Jemima legend

The flavor secret of Aunt Jemima's pancakes turned out to be four flours

Wheat, corn, rye and rice flours are blended in the treasured Aunt Jemima recipe to give you the tenderest, best-tasting pancakes you ever had. Pancakes that have become a tradition in our land.

After all these years that's still the flavor secret of Aunt Jemima pancakes—four flours blended in a certain way. Today, of course, Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix has the advantage of modern milling methods.

Hundreds of pancake mixes have come and gone. But the Aunt Jemima brand is still best loved. That's what it will be at your house. For you can't duplicate in a homemade batter or get in any other mix the matchless flavor of Aunt Jemima pancakes. Have 'em soon . . . you'll see!

RED-AND-WHITE PANCAKES. Bake Aunt Jemima pancakes as usual, according to the deluxe recipe on the package. Spread a hot pancake generously with cottage cheese, top with another pancake, sandwich style. Serve over fresh strawberry sauce or fresh rhubarb sauce. Top with more sauce. Delightful flavor combination for a springtime luncheon or supper!

OF COURSE, THERE'S A DIFFERENCE IN VANILLA PUDDINGS!

1. The children made their choice! They eat more Jell-O Puddings than any other kind.
2. Jell-O Pudding treats are so rich in milk nourishment, too!
3. Double-feature wonders—make delicious pie fillings grown-ups love! Be sure to try some!

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon
Coconut Cream

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORP.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 102

"We all make mistakes," Doy said many, including himself for politeness' sake. took courage, sir. We young fellows underand what you old—what you fellows went ough."

"How do you mean, went through?" Olaf ed.

"Not just one wife and . . . all that," Doy with some hesitation. "Through the rs. Polygamy. All this, fact, that the old—that r generation and the before—before the nifesto ——"

Olaf stood up. Old fel, was he? "The weaks dropped by the way-," he said boldly.

He took his hat and left. knew it was no use to o get things straightened with Sigrid now. All he could do was e her in Hattie's tender care and hope for best.

He went to the shop and got the baby buggy started pushing it up Main Street, beginto feel happy and excited in spite of him-. My gosh, couldn't a man do something on spur of the moment for once in his life? pursed his lips and began to whistle Sailing ing Over the Bounding Main, while under last street light, before he plunged in under thick shade of the moonlit linden trees, first prize glittered like the gold of Montezuma.

"Well, there's no sense in you going back n there tonight," Linnea said after several nents of silence. "It's too far, and besides n't believe she's going to expect it." Now ll hate me worse than ever, she thought. ll blame the whole thing on me. If only had of waited till tomorrow night when it would of been my natural turn instead of taking the bull by the horns like this and making all this mess. "Will she?" she said aloud. "Anyway, by now she's probably sound asleep."

"She probably is," Olaf said, very much doubting it.

"Well, I tell you what," Linnea decided. "You stay tonight. And then tomorrow night—which would be my night, by rights—you go down to Sigrid's. And then the following night, you go down there, too, and then down there again on the third night. That way, surely, you can make up for coming up here tonight and everything will be fair and square again. Won't it?" She came over and put her arms around him. "But just the same, trouble or not, it's something we ain't soon going to forget. Your big surprise." She turned her head and looked at the buggy while he gathered her into a close embrace. "No, sir. The first prize. Why, it's the most wonderful thing that ever happened and ever will happen and we're not any of us—not a one of us—going to forget it as long as we live. It beats anything I ever heard of."

A mother is not a person to lean on, but a person to make leaning unnecessary.

—DOROTHY CANFIELD FISHER: Her Son's Wife (Harcourt, Brace)

"I could just imagine you," he said, his lips against her hair.

"So that way it will all be fair and square again, won't it? With Sigrid? If you go down there the next three nights straight running?"

"Sure," he said.

He did not add that Sigrid had said with a terrible face and terrible eyes, "Don't ever come back here again as long as you live, because the door will be locked and you ain't got the key that will open it!"

(To be Continued)

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19

k, and to watch these thin sizes nine and ve latch onto good rich meals with lots mushroom gravy and such really does our ts good. Fun for me, because I love to k well, not just broil a chop.

didn't get around to Smiley Burnette's butilk pancakes because there wasn't an extra ning. I felt deprived at that. But we did e Scotch scones with raspberry jam any-he spaghetti dish, born of desperation, was ious.

cooked a whole package as directed, only to the chewy stage. Then I took a long ish baking dish, well greased, and laid a r in. I grated almost a cupful of fresh ddar from our wheel of Cheddar over this, d freshly ground pepper and salt, a dash paprika. More spaghetti. More cheese. s of butter. Then I poured over two of Italian sauce (I didn't have time to e my own sauce, so I just went to the gency shelf and picked at random—one a mushroom-base sauce, one tomato). r this sank in and blended pleasantly, I d a little more cheese, added a few butl crumbs, and baked.

s I scraped the pan afterward, I reflected this would be a fine one-dish meal if I e three of them for our family. Could add, I to Holly, who was helping me scrape, ages, partly cooked, and make a good supish. The trick was that there was so much se that the dish was crispy instead of y, a nice change from the ordinary spaand sauce. Of course one could lay little d well-browned meat balls on top too.

e have done over our herb shelf. The at the market are now laying in stocks of e best fresh herbs, and in such gay deful containers. We had a wonderful hour ing with them as we chose bay and basil orégano and sesame seeds and everything we saw.

I said some of our herbs were two years and herbs lose their savor. As she went o the dump with a load of ancient retired s, I wondered if the field mice would be rised when they got their little noses into some very old dried mint leaves! And suppose they bit into the garlic powder!

Of all the herbs, I think bay is my favorite, because of the connotations with the ancient Greeks who made wreaths of it for the conquering heroes. And because the laurel tree (bay is laurel) rooted in Keats' grave has now, I hear, grown up to support a leaning pine tree. I like to think of that laurel, planted there and even becoming the stay of a pine. For if the laurel symbolizes victory, the pine has a feeling of immortality about it. And a couple of bay leaves, pressed gently into the top of a meat loaf, make it a fine dish. I find nothing odd about connecting the laurel with a meat loaf either. It just shows that even simple things can be glorified.

Sometimes after a sapphire-blue day in May, I think the coming of twilight is then the most beautiful. The light is so exquisite and tender, the shadows are so gentle. There isn't, I reflect, a single sharp line in the portrait of May. Nor a harsh color. The flowers are white, blue, tulip pink. The greens in meadow and swamp are delicate greens, as if they were seen underwater in some magical distant sea. The garden is a study in jade and a soft gray green. And everything in the world is as pure and fresh as a pearl dropped in a cup of wine.

The sounds are the sounds of spring too. Cows in George's barn moo softly, a dog bays up the hill in a dreamy sort of way. When the cockers bark, they give halfhearted idle barks as if they were only maintaining a pretense of the whole thing.

Holly lays her cheek on her bone and dozes on the terrace in the mild blue twilight. She has had a busy day lugging that bone out of the house, into the house, around the back, and around the front. Now she will just bring it to bed with her and have a brief release from the dire responsibilities that go with the ownership of a bone.

I decide to give over my own responsibilities, too, and pop into the Middle Ages with The Cornerstone, which I am currently reading.

Or maybe a ride down the white moonlit roads of May, the flowering delectable May of New England!

END

EASY-MIX FRENCH DRESSING

Takes less than 60 seconds. Perfect for all variations of tossed green or chef salads.

1 cup MAZOLA Salad Oil
⅓ to ½ cup vinegar
1 to 3 tablespoons sugar
1½ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon dry mustard
1 clove garlic (optional)

Measure all ingredients into a jar. Cover tightly and shake well. Chill several hours, then remove garlic. Shake thoroughly before serving. Makes 1⅓ to 1½ cups.

Simply wonderful homemade flavor... blended to your taste with good golden Mazola

There's nothing like your own Mazola salad dressing to make all salads taste better. This fine oil, made from golden corn, blends easily, quickly . . . brings out the fresh, natural flavor of food. What's more . . . dressings made with Mazola Oil are always pourable—never thicken, even when kept in the refrigerator.

Golden Mazola is perfect for baking and frying, too. Recipes on label. Get Mazola Oil today . . . in pint and quart bottles.

GARLIC BREAD
½ cup butter or margarine
¼ teaspoon French's Garlic Powder
1 loaf French Bread
French's Paprika

Cream butter and garlic powder. Slash bread diagonally to within ½ inch of crust. Spread butter mixture between slices and over top. Sprinkle loaf with paprika. Place on baking pan. Heat in moderate oven (350°F.) 10-15 minutes.

A nifty-jiffy treat made with French's Garlic Powder!

FRENCH'S SEASONINGS
do something wonderful for Garlic Bread!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "Quick'n Easy Flavoring Tricks!"
The R. T. French Co.
9072 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

- ✓ French's fine seasonings bring you a garden of fresh vegetable flavor.
- ✓ Choose French's Garlic Powder or Garlic Salt . . . Onion Salt, Savor Salt, Celery Salt to flavor salads, soups, meats.
- ✓ French's Spices and Herbs are pure. You get true natural flavor.

FRENCH'S SPICES AND EXTRACTS

What's for Dinner?

by Marian Tracy

SOMETHING old, something new is a good rule for cooks as well as bride Have something old and cherished on the menu each day, but also som thing new to keep the cook happy and fascinated with her job. And often t something new becomes one of the old and cherished dishes in a fairly brief tim

Deep-fry the meat pies for a wonderful and crunchy variation on the old hamburger theme, and then follow through with a bland and altogether heavenly dessert of cottage cheese.

Fried Meat Pies
Romaine-and-Escarole Salad
Cottage-Cheese Dessert

FRIED MEAT PIES

Hard-cook 1 egg and plunge into cold water. Sauté 1 medium-sized onion, chopped fine, in 1 tablespoon shortening, preferably bacon drippings. Add ½ pound ground beef, and cook until browned. Add ¼ cup seedless raisins, ½ teaspoon orégano, ¾ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Simmer, covered, for ½ hour. Add the hard-cooked egg, peeled and chopped, and 8 stuffed olives, sliced, and let mixture cool. Make a batch of pie dough, either from a ready mix or fro your favorite 2-crust pastry recipe. R thin and cut into 6″ circles, about the size most saucers. Put about 3 tablespoons the meat mixture on one side of the circ Fold pastry over the meat and pin edges together, moistening the edg with a little water to seal. Fry tur overs in deep shortening or salad heated to 360° F., a few at a time, abo 3 minutes (1½ minutes on each side) until there are blisters on each pie. Ser hot canned gravy with pies. When feeli particularly lazy, use a tube of prepar biscuits, roll each biscuit thin and fill above and fry about 1 minute. 4 servin

COTTAGE-CHEESE DESSERT

Blend 1 cup cottage cheese with ½ c heavy cream whipped until stiff, a sugar to taste. For me this is about tablespoons of powdered sugar, for y maybe more or maybe less. Stir in h a 3-ounce can chopped citron. Tu into sherbet glasses and chill befo serving. 4 servings.

On the following menu, have the chicken on hot biscuits for the tried and true, but cook the peas with water cress and add grapefruit segments to the coleslaw to give the family a slight gastronomic jolt.

Creamed Chicken and Mushrooms
Peas Cooked with Water Cress
Hot Biscuits
Coleslaw with Grapefruit Segments

CREAMED CHICKEN WITH MUSHROOMS

Sauté ½ pound fresh mushrooms, peeled and sliced, in 1 tablespoon butter or margarine until pale yellow and tender. Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in another pan and stir in 2 tablespoons flou Cook until well blended to get rid of th floury taste. Add 1 cup milk, gradual stirring constantly. Cook until thick a smooth. Add ½ teaspoon salt, dash pepper and ½ teaspoon or more (a ge erous teaspoon suits my palate) Worc tershire sauce and, of course, m thoroughly. Add the sautéed mushroo and 1½–1¾ cups diced cooked chicke 4 servings.

COLESLAW WITH GRAPEFRUI SEGMENTS

Shred ½ small head cabbage (y should have 4–5 cups). Mix 1 cup thi commercial sour cream with 1½ tab spoons lemon juice, 1 teaspoon salt an teaspoon dry mustard until well blende Combine the cabbage and the sour-crea dressing with 1 eight-ounce can chill and drained grapefruit segments. To gently and serve. 4 servings.

STUART

A pring dinner: ham, eggplant and tomato on toasted muffins—cheese sauce.

This time, have your English muffins as t basis for your main dish. Parsley, as ost of you know, is very good to eat in ge quantities because it is vitamin- r —it's not just a pretty touch of green i he salad.

sted English Muffins with Ham, Eggplant and Tomato—Cheese Sauce

Lettuce-and-Parsley Salad with White Grapes

Raspberries with Sour Cream and Honey

OASTED ENGLISH MUFFINS WITH M, EGGPLANT AND TOMATO—CHEESE SAUCE

S t and toast English muffins. Allow one o two halves to a customer. Sauté tly floured and salted slices eggplant o both sides until brown and tender. Ke a cheese sauce by melting 2 table- s ons butter or margarine and blending v 1 2 tablespoons flour. Cook for a n ute or two until the floury taste is g e. Add slowly, over a low heat, stirring all the while, 1½ cups milk. When thick and smooth, add 1 cup grated sharp Cheddar or Swiss cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon paprika and ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Stir until all the cheese is melted and the flavors well mingled. Put 1 thin slice boiled ham, 1 slice sautéed eggplant and 1 slice fresh tomato, lightly salted, on each toasted half muffin. Top with hot cheese sauce.

LETTUCE-AND-PARSLEY SALAD WITH WHITE GRAPES

Use about 1 head lettuce to ½ bunch crisp parsley. Pull the lettuce to pieces with your fingers, but chop the parsley or cut with kitchen scissors after cutting off the stems. Toss gently with French dressing and, if desired, add ⅓ cup white grapes. When the fresh ones are not available, canned drained ones that have been chilled in a little lemon juice may be used instead.

RASPBERRIES WITH SOUR CREAM AND HONEY

Over well-chilled raspberries pour a sauce made by mixing 4 or 5 tablespoons honey with the same amount of thick commercial sour cream.

---

idney beans with spinach are fresh and s ehow lighter-tasting than the more u l versions of baked beans.

Kidney Beans with Spinach and Bacon

Tomatoes Stuffed with Coleslaw

Buttered Salty Rye Bread

Angel-Food Cake with Strawberry Sauce

DNEY BEANS WITH SPINACH AND BACON

k 1 package frozen spinach according irections on package and drain. Cook ound bacon, cut into 1" pieces, until slightly crisp. Pour off all the fat ex- about 3 or 4 tablespoons. (Just ss—don't measure.) To that fat add 2 en-ounce cans red kidney beans that been partly drained. Stir around l the beans are permeated with the on flavor. Add the drained spinach, the cooked bacon and a little salt—about ¼ teaspoon (the bacon has some). Heat and stir around until you have a nice aromatic mélange. 6 servings.

ANGEL-FOOD CAKE WITH STRAWBERRY SAUCE

Have an angel-food cake, bought or made according to your favorite recipe, or you may use one of the new ready mixes. Cut into individual slices and serve with a sauce made as follows: Mix 2 cups sliced fresh strawberries with ½ cup sugar and let stand about 30 minutes, or use 1 package frozen strawberries (with no sugar added). Drain and add enough water to the juice to make 1½ cups liquid. Mix with 2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca and a dash of salt. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture comes to a boil. Remove from the heat and add 2 teaspoons lemon juice and the strawberries. Let stand about 15 minutes for the flavors to ripen, as it were. Stir lightly and serve the sauce, slightly warm, over the slices of angel-food cake. 6 servings.

GRILLED CHEESE SANDWICHES

Spread slices of white bread with butter; top each slice with slice of American cheese. Spread cheese generously with French's Prepared Mustard. Cover with second slice of bread. Spread outside with butter. Brown in a skillet or on sandwich grill.

Quick 'n easy—a meal-in-a-sandwich!

FRENCH'S MUSTARD does something wonderful for a Sandwich!

✓ French's pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.

✓ French's rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.

✓ Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference French's makes!

FREE! 32-page COLOR RECIPE BOOKLET "Seasoning Makes the Difference!"
The R. T. French Co.
1014 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

ONLY

SARAN WRAP

will keep it so fresh,
so long . . . so easily!

IT CLINGS BY ITSELF . . . just press it in place, it stays
IT'S MOISTURE-PROOF . . . keeps odors in their place, too
IT'S CRYSTAL-CLEAR . . . you can see everything you wrap

See MEDIC

Critics call this the most dramatic television show of the year! See it Monday evenings at 9, EST . . . NBC-TV.

A product of The Dow Chemical Company, Midland, Michigan.
Also available in Canada.

DOW

DISTURBED CHILDREN FIND LOVING CARE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 42

On Joey's eighth birthday Mrs. Barnes promised to let him help bake a cake—with chocolate frosting and pink candles. "I'm glad you're big and fat, 'cause then you cook more," Joey exclaimed. Mrs. Barnes laughed. As she began assembling the ingredients, she discovered there was no baking powder. "I'll go get some," Joey volunteered. Mrs. Barnes hesitated, then went for her purse. Should she let him go? It was a big responsibility for Joey to be trusted on the street alone, but perhaps worth the risk. An anxious fifteen minutes went by. Then Joey was back, hugging her just as though nothing out of the ordinary had happened.

Joey did run away later. When the police found him, he told them he wanted to go home to his foster mother. Mrs. Harris now is convinced he has put down some roots in his foster home, which is a good beginning. He has learned he can trust his foster parents, and from now on he can begin to trust other adults. He is beginning to enjoy playing with children. By next fall, perhaps, he can enter school and find it satisfying.

Joey's story shows the real community cooperation the program has developed. The agency, Community Chest-supported, works hand in hand with the Police Department, Juvenile Court, psychiatric clinics (Harriet Lane Psychiatric Clinic and the Psychiatric Institute of the University of Maryland, both of which provide free treatment on a waiting-list basis) and foster families. The Department of Public Welfare refers many of these dependent, neglected children to the agency, paying the major part of their expenses. In other cases, parents themselves contribute financial support.

If one or both of a child's parents are living and nearby, the Family and Children's Society encourages every bit of parenthood. Even a parent who has shown nothing but hatred is important to his child. A simple greeting card at holiday time, an occasional visit in the agency office, the fact that a father contributes $15 a month toward the child's board gives the youngster a feeling he isn't completely abandoned.

AUBADE

By MARY WRIGHT LAMB

We were lucky today; the sun rose.
We have not seen our last sun set,
and we needn't have loved so hard—who knows this better than I? And yet—
we were lucky today, as I say.

Many bright ones and brave ones who stood at a window like ours watch the sky more suspiciously now than we could, who know life as a light in our eye . . .
many brave ones grow weak, as I speak.

Beyond this moment we may go ten thousand steps or twenty-nine—and which 'twill be, we cannot know;
oh, put your hand inside of mine.
(As I speak, many brave ones grow weak;
as I said, many bright ones are dead.)
We were lucky today, as I say.

It helps, too, when a parent can say to the child at the beginning of foster-care placement, "I want this for you—it's the best thing." Often the parents themselves are too mixed up to be of any real help—as in the case of Johnny, whose emotionally unstable mother was unable to control him, finally chained him to a radiator to keep him from running away. But Johnny quickly learned how to escape. In desperation the mother went to the police, asked to be locked up herself to get away from the child. The police, tired of bringing the boy home in the middle of the night, took both mother and son to Juvenile Court, where the presiding judge gave custody of the boy to the Department of Public Welfare. This agency placed him with the Family and Children's Society for foster-home care.

In the very first interview, prospective foster parents are given to understand that they won't get a youngster who will "fit" into their home, that they can't expect any real satisfaction from the relationship for a long time.

"It takes a spirit of adventure for the unknown," as Miss Gray puts it. And this is first quality the agency looks for in foster parents, she explains. There should be no young children in the family to compete for attention. If the foster parents have grown children, however, so much the better—they will have some idea of what to expect under normal circumstances at least. When the foster youngster, for example, tries to get out of doing his homework, the mother won't worry about that—her own behaved the same way.

The agency accepts children up to sixteen with normal intelligence if the staff feels they can be helped by casework and psychotherapy. Children with marked symptoms of fire-setting and established homosexuality and those diagnosed as psychotic are not accepted. Unfortunately, psychotherapy can't always start at the time the child enters the foster home. Both clinics have waiting lists, and sometimes children have had to wait more than a year before treatment could begin. Another problem is lack of funds for casework and hence care, which limits the number of youngsters the agency can place. At present, fourteen to fifteen children are awaiting specialized foster-home care.

Youngsters receiving this specialized foster care include a boy suspended from school for habitually throwing desks and chairs at striking teachers; one being arrested over and over again for breaking and entering neighborhood stores; another an unsmiling lad suffering a guilt complex because his mother blames him for the accidental death of an infant sister left in his care. One foster family took in a thirteen-year-old girl who had been living with an older man—with her mother's consent. There is no "formula" for helping these children learn to lead a normal, happy life, Betty Gray and the staff of five caseworkers will tell you. Each foster parent needs constant consultation with the agency, must find the answers the hard way.

Yet many show a sensitivity to their children's special needs that no caseworker could ever teach them. It isn't always easy for a parent to control anger when a child is meanly destructive. But this is something all foster parents know they must try to do. When eleven-year-old Bobby set fire to his foster father's barn, nearly causing an explosion, Mrs. Dill had to remind herself to think of the unhappy, confused boy first. "Afterward he felt so bad about it, I didn't have the heart even to spank him," she told the caseworker. Another mother, instead of punishing her foster son for stealing, made him kneel down with her and ask God to help break him of the habit. Mrs. Jones, whenever she spanks her little girl, has a good explanation ready: "I punish you because I love you, and I won't have my girl acting sassy." Mrs. Jones, who never had children of her own, but cared for relatives' children all her life, believes that spanking is proof of love and gives a child a feeling of security.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

Fresh cream cheese inside, too

...makes it the world's best strawberry pie!

● It'll look like the creation of a French pastry chef!

But you'll find the recipe simple—actually easier than any glazed fruit pie you ever heard of before. And more delicious! The secret is fresh, rich Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese in the filling as well as on top!

For Strawberry "Philly" Pie, blend 2 tbsps. milk into one ½-lb. package of genuine Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese—the brand that tastes richer, fresher than all the rest. Spread half of this on the bottom of a 9" baked pie shell. Cover with 1 pt. of whole, fresh strawberries, washed and stemmed.

Combine ¾ c. sugar and 2 tbsps. cornstarch. Add ⅓ c. water, stirring until well blended. Add 1 pt. of washed, stemmed strawberries and cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Mix in a few drops of red food coloring. Pour immediately over strawberries in shell. Chill. Decorate with remaining cream cheese before serving.

FREE RECIPES for 9 wonderful "PHILLY" PIES

You'll want to make all 9 of the new "Philly" Pies which include Black Bottom (with chocolate), Custard, Lemon, Pineapple. Write for recipes in a booklet. Or get some of them at your grocer's today.

Kraft "Philly" Pies
Box J-5, Dept. 748, Chicago 77, Ill.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

Eggs Underwood . . . hearty, delicious family fare! Add wonderful Underwood Deviled Ham to your regular stuffed eggs, and to cheese sauce, too. Pour sauce on eggs and bake. Underwood's adds real whole-ham goodness, deep-down flavor!

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM
glorifies all your cheese favorites!

Deviled Cheese Delight...stir tangy Underwood Deviled Ham into melted cheese or your favorite rarebit, serve on toast. It's quick, nutritious, so good, thanks to Underwood's zesty flavor!

He-Man Sandwiches . . . pile savory Underwood's on one slice of bread, Swiss cheese on the other, for satisfying eating! Easy-to-spread Underwood's adds lots of flavor for just pennies!

Glorifies everyday foods

Underwood Deviled Ham adds so much extra flavor . . . hearty eating enjoyment, too . . . to snacks, sandwiches, thrifty main dishes and salads men love! That's why it's far and away the leading brand, best for spreads, best in cooking. Buy Underwood's in the Family Size can and the Regular Size.

Wm. Underwood Co., Watertown 72, Mass.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 108

One family has three foster sons (an exception to the rule), and the understanding among these boys amazes both the parents and the caseworker. There are several instances of this. Once the newest boy refused to eat dinner with the family, raced out of the house, jumped on his bicycle and rode off. Another boy gave chase. Somehow knowing this was not a fearful, love-starved boy, but just an ornery little mischief-maker, he gave him what he needed most—a licking. Another time the youngest boy came to his foster mother with tears in his eyes to tell her that another of her boys had taken some money from a locker at school.

"I hate to tell on him," he murmured, "but I thought you ought to know—so maybe we could help."

Not all the problems come at the beginning of foster-home life. A child may improve, then a year later, perhaps, some of his old habits, such as stealing, may reappear. The caseworker tells the foster parents to expect this—it frequently happens and usually is just a phase. At the same time she encourages and praises, for parents living with a child day after day can't always notice small improvements. As youngsters grow into adolescence, the caseworker warns the foster parents not to be alarmed about sudden interest in the opposite sex. When fourteen-year-old Billy talks about nothing but girls, or fifteen-year-old Tom announces, "I think I'm going to get married soon," that's another phase, too, and the parents can help the youngsters through it by accepting it as normal and by talking over points of etiquette about the new social life.

Mothers, too, must accept the fact that no matter how close they've been to the boys, as they grow up they begin to spend more and more time with the foster father, carrying in wood, changing a tire or riding in the family truck.

Although the children never call the caseworker "mother" as they do their foster parents, still the caseworker and the agency are something of a second parent. For the child's first experiences with kindness are with the caseworker—she bears with him and stands by him. After each runaway, the child is brought to the agency office (usually to the playroom where he sees familiar things, the rocking horse, crayons and picture books) so he'll feel he "belongs." Many children, on runaway expeditions, will tell the police officer who finds them that they belong to the agency, give the address and Miss Gray's name. It's a wonderful day when a child becomes able to look objectively at himself and his behavior. "How do you think I'm doing, Miss Gray?" little Johnny, who had once been chained to a radiator, but is now happily settled in a foster home, asked recently. "I think I'm doing pretty well myself."

PRINCESS MARGARET AND HER BEAUX

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

man can hope for the company of the princess for an evening.

First of all he must be known not only to her but also to the watchful officials. If he is of the nobility, that is a help, of course, but it is not by any means sufficient in itself. He must have a particularly blameless background if he is to hear other than that "Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret regrets ——".

If he knows, or can persuade himself, that he is acceptable, the young man telephones to the lady in waiting. "I am wondering," he says, "if Her Royal Highness would care to join a small party I am giving on [he names the date] at the theater [he names the show] and afterward at supper at the [he names the restaurant or night club]. The others in the party will be [and he names several well-chosen and well-matched couples, all of whom the princess will have encountered before, except perhaps one of the girls]."

Having said his piece, the young man waits. He waits maybe for a day or two, maybe for a week or more. And then, unless he is sin-

REPUBLIC
Polly Flex
HOUSEWARE

Like all other product PLASTICS too, will vary in quality and usefulness

WHEN YOU BUY PLASTIC HOUSEWARE be sure to get

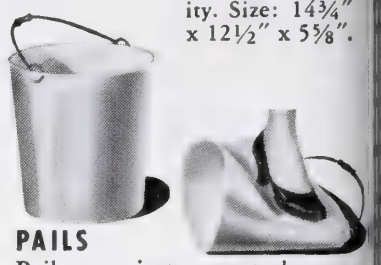
REPUBLIC

the greatest name in plastic



LOOK FOR THE LABE

COLANDER
5 Qt. Capacity
Size: 10½" dia. x 5⅝" deep.

DISH PANS
14½ Qt. Capacity. Size: 14¾" x 12½" x 5⅝".

PAILS
Pails you just cannot destroy. Will not corrode or rust—seamless. Will last a long time. 11-14-17 qt. capacity.

PIETTE
For keeping pies and pastries in freezer or fresh in pantry.

Do Not Accept a Substitut

Write for catalogue—for other interesting original all flexible housewares items.

© 1955
Republic Molding Corporation
6465 N. Avondale, Chicago 31, Ill.

y fortunate, either he hears that there hope for him at all or he will be told that rincess would like to come but not on evening, as she will be otherwise en-. Alternative dates are suggested.

en the young man gets busy. He contacts e people on his list and tries to decide on of the offered dates when all will be ible. Various young people swiftly re-ge their programs and so our young man n able to telephone again to the lady in g confirming the arrangement.

ur young man happens to be one of the few who have frequently squired the ess, he will telephone just the same to the n waiting and state his case, but after a she may say:

ould you care to speak to Her Royal ess yourself?"

hank you," the young man says. "Indeed ld."

re is a click as the house exchange makes nsfer, a pause, and there she is.

ood morning," the lilting, musical voice "How are you today?"

hank you, ma'am, very well. And you?"

re are a few exchanges of general con-ion and then, likely as not, the royal will inquire bluntly:

ave you an invitation for me?"

a'am," our young man says, "I am ng of arranging a small party for the r and for supper afterward."

names the date, the place and the guests in mind.

, not So-and-So, surely," the princess ay. "He's such a bore."

thus another young hopeful is relegated well-populated limbo of those who are eptable.

unless our young man and each of his are very, very well known to the ss and her advisers, the voice will say:

ell, I'll try to fit it in. I'll let you know." with obvious wishful sincerity it may I'd love to come."

days pass by. The officials are busy ng up. And then comes the brief or the telephone message of accept-t, with unusual disregard for the state of nk balance, he makes the necessary ements with the theater, the restaurant and, of course, the florist.

he theater the princess likes the front of the orchestra; at the cinema, the front the balcony. Whichever it is to be, the man must endeavor to persuade the ement not to make what the princess a thing" out of the visit. Perhaps a buffet a quiet room for the interval; perhaps a ake from the manager on arrival and ure. But please, please no red carpets on vement and no disruption of the usual ements inside.

PORCHESTER once had the misfortune ire Margaret on a visit to the cinema at the management decided really to go n. They stripped out all the seats from nt rows of the balcony and installed in lace deep armchairs, each with a solid n front of it bearing an ash tray and a m. Unfortunately, someone had added ngly and the amazed customers who nown nothing of the royal visit were to the spectacle—far better value for noney than the film they had paid to f the program's being delayed while a and furious Admiral Earl Mount-strutted the roped-off royal enclosure were a quarter-deck as he directed the g in of extra chairs.

ing done his utmost to ensure that g like that shall happen to mar the g, our young man and his party pro-o the cinema or theater to await the of Margaret.

comes in her own car—latterly her olls-Royce with the registration mark -accompanied in the rear seat by her waiting and in the front, next to the ur, her plain-clothes detective from nd Yard.

inside the door the young man and his with the house manager hovering very in the foreground, are waiting to re-er. At a glance the party can judge whether Margaret means to make a night of it. If she is in the mood for a party, she wears a long evening gown; if she intends to depart early after supper, a cocktail dress.

There are presentations and handshakes and curtsies—and the party is shepherded to its seats. Comfortably settled there, the host may inquire (if smoking is permitted in that particular theater):

"Ma'am, have we your permission to smoke?"

Permission is always granted. Most of the men and some of the women light up cigarettes. Margaret herself will refuse any offered to her, but will take one from her own cigarette case, place it carefully in her famous long holder, accept a proffered light and inhale with evident satisfaction.

Now the play or the film has started, and while it lasts everyone relaxes. At one time parties such as this never left their seats until the end of the show, but nowadays it is usual for all to retire to a private room where the management has laid out drinks and snacks.

The princess will eat and drink little. Perhaps she will accept a glass of champagne, but more likely than not it will still be more than half full when she leaves it to return to her seat.

At last the show is over. As the host, our young man probably is invited along with two others of the party to join Margaret and her lady in waiting in the huge royal car. The other guests follow in their own or hired cars.

At the night club—probably it is the princess' favorite, the stately Four Hundred in Leicester Square—the party is shepherded suavely to the usual table on the right-hand side of the entrance.

"What would you care for, ma'am?" asks the host.

And Margaret, almost certainly, suggests iced melon, consommé, smoked salmon and a

All The Minerals, All The Vitamins, All The Food Energy

OF THE "HIGH-PRICE" SPREAD ARE IN TODAY'S

Blue Bonnet Margarine!

PROOF

Compared to the "High-Price" Spread, Blue Bonnet gives you:

ALL THE MILK MINERALS—
ALL THE CALCIUM
ALL THE PHOSPHORUS

Four times more VITAMIN D

More dependable
VITAMIN A
each pound, the year round

VITAMIN E

AND ALL THE VALUABLE FOOD ENERGY

SO NOURISHING FOR YOUR FAMILY!

You give your children all the sustaining nourishment in BLUE BONNET Margarine that they could possibly get from the "high-price" spread. Indeed, BLUE BONNET is even more dependable in vitamins . . . and gives just as much of the milk minerals. And you can afford to use BLUE BONNET generously on the table and in cooking. It's smooth spreading—tastes sunny-sweet!

ON HOT VEGETABLES the taste of BLUE BONNET is an always-fresh treat. And on bread BLUE BONNET is smooth spreading, melts on your tongue with a burst of the sunny-sweet flavor you love!

Blue Bonnet FOR FLAVOR! NUTRITION! ECONOMY!

veal cutlet—"just one, please." Again champagne is the drink.

From the moment the princess entered the band has dropped its normal plans for the night's music and switched to one specially prepared, and revised from month to month, for the visits of the princess. It consists of all the rumbas, sambas and quicksteps she is known to love.

The first dance with Margaret goes, of course, to her host. After that she is careful to ration the dances out among all the men in the party. Each of them finds her to be light, acutely rhythmic and easy to dance with.

At last, probably at around 2:30 A.M., after which no more drinks may be served, even to the queen's sister, Margaret says, with obvious reluctance if all has gone well, that she had "better be going."

There is a scraping of chair legs on the carpeting as all clamber at once to their feet. Margaret and her lady in waiting glide away to the powder room where, as the princess never carries money with her, the lady in waiting gives the woman attendant a brand-new, crisp ten-shilling note as a tip.

On her way out the princess says "Thank you" to her host and "Good night" to the others. There are handshakes and curtsies and waves of farewell. And the party is over.

A few days later a letter is sent off by the lady in waiting: "Her Royal Highness has commanded me to thank you for a most pleasant evening."

Again the young man begins to wait—and wait. Just possibly there may come one day a telephone call from the lady in waiting:

"Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret is arranging a small party to go to the theater and would very much like you to come . . . at seven-thirty on . . ."

Our young man goes in a car or a taxi. The police have been warned of his impending arrival, so he is ushered in at once. goes up to the princess' private sitting r There are several others there—and princess.

He is presented and he bows. He is g a drink—champagne, sherry or gin- something—and a sandwich, almost cert chicken and ham. Margaret moves a among her guests, carefully spending a moments in conversation with each. The all bow and the girls curtsy as they arrive are presented to her. Everyone is ca her "ma'am."

But time is short. It seems that no so has he arrived than he is gulping dow first—and only—glassful and is away a this time in a royal Daimler.

After the theater, the procedure at the club or restaurant is slightly different time with the princess as hostess. Se days ago the management will have bee quested by telephone to reserve a table fo party. That morning, unless it is one o places the princess has visited frequently, land Yard men will have visited the estab ment, going over it from the kitchens t

DREAM'S END

By BARBARA SHOOK CONKLI

So fair, so beautiful, so young,
Yours was the song my heart had sung;
Yours the lips my lips had kissed,
Before I knew you did exist;

The hands I yearned for as a child,
The smile I sought to soothe the wild
Restless stirrings in my breast;
The haven where I longed to rest.

You were the dream I dreamed alone.
Now you are here: my hearth, my home.

powder room, checking the staff and ex ing the lists of other table reservations.

They will have arranged for a cou detectives to be eating quietly that nigh table close to that of the princess an party, one from which they will have a view of the whole room.

This time the food and the drink according to the prearranged plans waiters get no orders at the table—a tips. And the bill is presented later by but only upon request.

When it is time to leave, the night ma be young, the music and the dancing have been bewitching and a full moo be shining alluringly over slumbering, old London Town. But the chauffeu the detective are waiting. And soon whisked firmly away—at her side the present lady in waiting.

Maybe our young man, like many him, sighs a little as he turns to ent other royal limousine waiting to take h his own address. Maybe—he won Margaret is sighing a little too. But, ever starry-eyed he may be, he must re ber not to tip the driver.

That was the pattern of Princess Mar party life as Britain plunged into that e year of preparation for the coronati Elizabeth. It remains much the same.

Whether or not the conventions and tions that tie her down are as irksome as undoubtedly they are to her various is a debatable point. Several times s attempted to break loose from the After some particularly enjoyable ou

NOW MILLIONS OF AMERICANS who used to toss and turn from excess stomach acid

SLEEP LIKE A BABY

Who'd guess this mother suffered Acid Indigestion only minutes ago

Last Year nearly TWO BILLION TUMS gave instant on-the-spot Relief from excess stomach acid—a common cause of sleepless nights!

One of the common causes of restless, sleepless nights is excess stomach acid.

Millions of sensible Americans have learned this, and now fix acid stomach before they try to sleep. So they just pop a couple of TUMS in their mouths at bedtime. Almost instantly TUMS neutralize the excess stomach acid, sweeten and soothe the tummy. Then comes the natural sleep of a baby. And there's no acid rebound from TUMS to awaken you later! TUMS are the best little friend your tummy ever had. Keep TUMS with you always. And chew them like candy. They are tasty and harmless. Only 10¢ a roll and you couldn't buy safer, quicker, more wonderful relief for a ten dollar bill.

People all over the Nation carry Tums as faithfully as they carry their Keys!

TUMS for the Tummy

ngenial company she has dismissed her car d told her detective that one of her escorts l be driving her home with her lady in iting. But the policeman, acting under ict Home Office and Scotland Yard orders, s always managed to ensure that watch is ot over her every yard of the way.

Margaret was only fourteen when Peter wnsend first arrived on the scene.
Peter was a pilot in the R.A.F.—as studisly carefree, as much the gay buccaneer as y of the others who were to win undying ne as "The Few" of the Battle of Britain. was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross in 1940, and soon after that, a bar to his D.F.C. In March, 1941, he was married to Cecil Rosemary Pawle, the pretty daughter of an army brigadier. Two months after the wedding he received yet another decoration, this time the coveted Distinguished Service Order.

And then, on the first day of August, 1944, came the stunning news that he was to join the royal household under a scheme initiated by King George VI whereby outstanding young heroes of the services would be appointed "Equerries of Honor."

For Peter the move to the palace was easily the biggest ordeal of a lifetime—worse, far worse than wading into enemy fleets in the sky. This officer with no court background whatsoever suddenly had to exchange the rough-and-ready, often riotous life of the wartime R.A.F. for the discreet hush of the royal drawing rooms. As a friend of his commented at the time: "Poor Peter! He's like a bird with clipped wings—locked in a gilded cage."

BUT any sympathy for him was wasted. Instead of being overawed and subdued—as well he might have been in the circumstances—he plunged into his new tasks much as he would have done if he had still been at a fighter station. His exuberance was infectious.

The shy king saw in the gay young man many qualities which he envied—and took to him immensely, so much so that he asked to become godfather to Peter's child. The queen delighted in his attentiveness, his good conversation, his excellent canasta—and he quickly became one of her favorites. The two daughters found in him something they had never encountered before—the openness of a man without inhibitions, free of inbred prejudices. Here among them at last was an ordinary person, yet one with more straight glamour, a prouder record than anyone else in sight possessed.

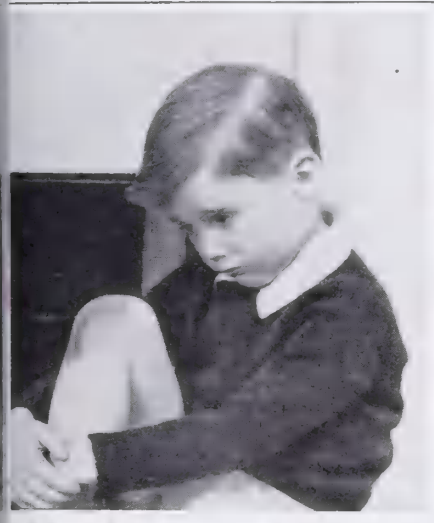
His life now was one of comparative luxury; his work interesting and pleasant but fairly exacting. Chiefly he acted as a personal assistant or supersecretary to members of the royal family. As a modern version of the ancient food tasters, he "tasted" cinema and stage shows to make certain that they were suitable for visits by royalty. He accompanied the king, the queen and the princesses on their visits and tours, serving as the link between them and the officials who organized the affairs locally. Because of his close association with the royal family, he became one of the young men most sought after by society hostesses. And he scintillated in the bright lights.

On the face of it his private life, too, was settling down happily. Whereas before he had never been able to provide his young wife with a proper home, now he was provided by the king with historic Adelaide Cottage, a "grace and favour" house close to the castle at Windsor.

But behind this scene of domestic bliss the storm clouds loomed. An equerry's wife attends many social functions with her husband, but her life is mainly one of loneliness in the background. Peter never could tell, for certain, when he would get back home. At weekends he often had to be away. Carefully planned holidays had to be abandoned, often at the last moment.

During the long annual holiday of the king and queen at Balmoral, Peter usually had to be there in attendance. In 1947 he went off on the royal tour of South Africa and in 1948 he was chosen by the king to accompany Princess Margaret as her equerry on her first important mission abroad and alone—to Holland for the coronation of Queen Juliana. There was precious little home life for the Townsends.

After only six years at Windsor came the break between the Townsends. Six days before the Christmas of 1952, Peter was granted a decree nisi of divorce on the ground of his wife's misconduct at a London hotel in August, 1951. An order for the custody of the two sons was granted to Peter Townsend but, by consent, their care and control were to remain with the mother until further order of the court. The suit was undefended.



Now the whispering began in earnest. The young equerry was seen more and more frequently in the company of the princess: at theaters, in restaurants and night clubs, out riding through the early-spring morning mists in Windsor Great Park.

He was ever at her side, attentive, sympathetic, diverting. Day after day he accompanied the young princess, and sometimes her mother, on expeditions about London in connection with their move from the palace to their new home at nearby Clarence House. He was in charge of all the arrangements and was expected to become Comptroller to the Queen Mother there.

At the same time Peter was busily tying up all the mass of details for a tour on which he was expected to accompany the Queen Mother and Margaret to Rhodesia.

And then the whole thing blew up in his face. As in the case of the Windsor romance, while Britain continued to whisper, the Americans broke the story, and the Paris Samedi Soir reported that Margaret was ready to renounce her title in order to marry Peter.

The British press could not keep silent any longer. Controversy on the Margaret-Townsend subject immediately swept across Britain and the commonwealth. The diehards moaned and groaned at the very thought of the princess marrying even the innocent party in a divorce case—and a commoner at that. The more liberal-minded pleaded, "Let the girl live her own life."

For larger cuts, burns, abrasions...

use the dressing your doctor uses...

sterile—sealed in individual envelopes

Johnson & Johnson

Summertime . . and the living is E-Z!

What fun to be so cool, comfortable, carefree! The way E-Z knit cottons make active youngsters . . thrifty moms . . feel. Special features eliminate 'tugging' on and off . . add mileage to E-Z's wear. Protective, absorbent, shrink-resistant, sensibly priced . . of course, mothers for generations have known . . the greatest show for your money is labeled for correct size by child's weight . .

E-Z

TAD's practical, pretty Topper Set in new E-Z Animal Fair wash-fast print. EZ-Waterpruf panties, Syntilon-lined, with convenient 3-gripper openings. Toddler's sizes 6 mos., 1 and 1½ yrs., 2.49.
BOB's fine E-Z Swiss rib shirt and brief shorts. Of extra soft, sturdy combed yarn. Boy's shirt, sizes 2 to 8, 49¢; 10 to 16, 59¢. Shorts, sizes 2 to 8, 55¢; 10 to 16, 65¢.
AMY's dainty bow-tied shirt with saucy Scat-print, shirred-leg panty. Both soft, sturdy combed yarn. Girl's shirt, sizes 2 to 7, 49¢; 8 to 14, 59¢. Panties, sizes 2 to 7, 69¢; 8 to 14, 85¢.
TOM likes his hay-sliding—well-protected by ankle-length pj's! Of soft combed yarn—with the famous EZ-ON neck. Gayly imprinted with summer rosebuds. Toddler's sizes 1 to 3, 1.79.
AT LEADING STORES HERE AND IN CANADA . . E-Z MILLS, INC., NEW YORK, N. Y.

At the palace there was great consternation—and great activity. After a series of hurriedly called conferences, changes in the prospects of Group Captain Peter Townsend were announced.

He would not, after all, become Comptroller to the Queen Mother at Clarence House, it was decided. He would not, after all, be accompanying the Queen Mother and the princess to Rhodesia.

Meanwhile Margaret and Peter had no say at all in the high-powered negotiations. Peter, as far as the public was concerned, disappeared from the scene altogether. In fact, he spent most of his time sitting quietly in his office at the palace. Suddenly there was nothing for him to do, nowhere for him to go.

On June thirtieth, Margaret and her mother set out for Rhodesia. Two days after the royal departure an official announcement said that Group Captain Peter Townsend was to take up a strange appointment—as air attaché at the British embassy in Brussels. He would start his new duties, it was announced, on July fifteenth—the day before Margaret's return from Rhodesia.

Peter drove down to the Channel coast and boarded the car ferry at Dover. He looked shocking—a shadow of his usually jovial self. One of his eyes was bloodshot.

"I must have been in a draft," he said.

Now the London Daily Mirror came thundering into the fray. Earlier it had instigated a public-opinion poll in which the question was:

"Group Captain Peter Townsend, thirty-eight-year-old Battle of Britain pilot, was the innocent party in a divorce. He was given custody of his two children and his former wife has recently remarried. If Princess Margaret, now twenty-two, so desires—should she be allowed to marry him?"

The votes had come pouring in and the astonishing result was:

Yes—96.81 per cent.
No— 3.19 per cent.

Within the month R. A. ("Rab") Butler, Chancellor of the Exchequer and at that time Acting Prime Minister, introduced a bill to amend the Regency Act of 1937, under the provisions of which Princess Margaret would have become regent if for any reason the queen were unable to carry out her duties while Prince Charles was still under eighteen years of age. The new arrangement was to be that the queen's consort, the Duke of Edinburgh, would in the appropriate circumstances be nominated as regent.

Even Labour leader and ex-Premier Clement Attlee added fuel to the fire when, in a House of Commons debate, he declared that Princess Margaret should be "quite independent and free to marry whom she likes."

(By law, of course, she is already free to marry whomever she wishes, provided she obtains her sister's consent. The Royal Marriage Act of 1772 requires that her choice should be approved by the sovereign and entered in the Privy Council books. If she wishes, she might even marry a Roman Catholic, but her children then would be excluded from the line of succession. There is a precedent for this—when Queen Victoria's granddaughter, now the ex-Queen of Spain, married the Catholic King Alfonso in 1906. If Margaret wished to marry a divorced man whose previous wife was still living, however, the marriage could not even be recognized by the Church of England, of which the sovereign is head. For the laws of the church simply do not countenance divorce.)

While the storm continued to rage, Peter settled down in Brussels to his new and not overimportant job as an air attaché, which carried a salary equivalent to about £3500 a year tax-free in Britain.

But here was no ordinary air attaché. His address and telephone number were kept secret. Even embassy officials could not get through to him direct. All inquiries were handled by a secretary, who would ring back with Peter's reply to any query. Guest lists at any functions he was to attend were carefully examined and officials had instructions not to discuss him with anyone.

Several times he has paid brief visits to London, always traveling in a manner very unlikely for a mere air attaché. Usually he journeys under a pseudonym—Mr. Carter—a procedure normally requiring permission from the Foreign Office or Buckingham Palace.

That such a privilege should be granted him—whatever the reason—must have been some consolation to him in his exile. And so must the knowledge that the Queen Mother still has a soft spot for him. She appointed him Extra Equerry—an honorary rank usually bestowed on equerries when they retire from office.

ALTHOUGH many people like to interpret Margaret's zest for life as a sign that she has inherited a streak of waywardness, the fact is that she has seldom kicked hard against stern royal discipline as such. She has found it easier to get her own way by subtler means.

Today her inbred sense of propriety—the attitude of mind which, for instance, leads her to insist on good friends' addressing her as "ma'am"—makes it easier than one might think for her to accept the formalities and restrictions with which she is bound about.

At Court functions she accepts, unquestioning, her role as simply the queen's sister: as the woman who is close to the sovereign always, but a little in the background. It is her duty to be there. And so there she is.

Certain of her public engagements which are not the results of requests for her presence made direct to her are allotted ("recommended" is the word used) to her by the Lord Chamberlain's office. She never complains about them, although she has been known jokingly to comment, "I get all the leftovers from Elizabeth," and one of her favorite mimes is a caricature of herself planting a tree.

Grandma Queen Mary it was who instilled into the young princesses the importance of being royalty. Her attitude is exemplified by her reproach administered to one member of her family who had complained of being tired

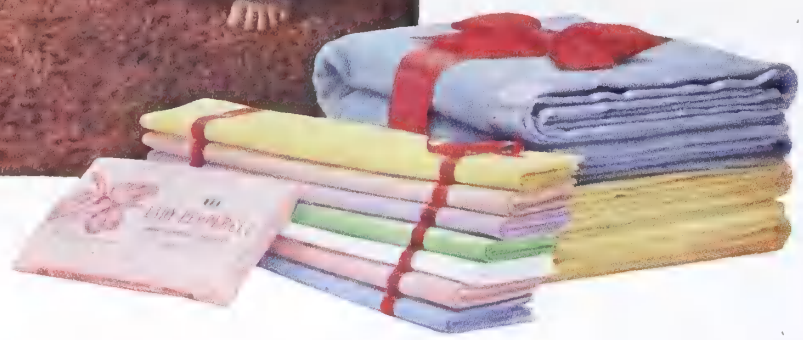
CONTINUED ON PAGE 116

EVEN LITTLE HANDS CAN MAKE A PERFECT BED WITH WONDERFUL

Pepperell Snug Fit Sheets

FOR NEW LUXURY, NEW ECONOMY—NYLON SNUG FIT SHEETS

These exquisite petal-smooth Pepperell nylon SNUG FIT SHEETS pamper your love of luxury, yet they're practical, too! They wear as only nylon can, wash and dry in a jiffy. Think what you'll save when you wash them at home—like nylon undies! In white and four colors.



EASIEST BEDMAKING... SWEETEST SLEEPING EVER!

Wonderful, work-saving PEPPERELL SNUG FIT SHEETS have four preshaped corners that anchor them firmly to your mattress, so once your bed's made, it stays made. Like all Lady Pepperells, famous SNUG FIT SHEETS come in six lovely colors for only pennies more than white sheets. And PEPPERELL SNUG FIT SHEETS have the unique seaming‡ that makes corners ⅓ stronger to wear far longer!

PEPPERELL'S NEW BEST-SELLER... THE ACRILAN* WONDER BLANKET

No wonder women love this luxury blanket! It won't shrink, stays fluffy no matter how often it's washed. It's wonderfully warm. In 9 colors to mix or match with Lady Pepperell Sheets.

‡ Patent applied for
*® Chemstrand Acrylic Fiber

Lady Pepperell SHEETS AND BLANKETS

PEPPERELL FABRICS®

WHITE • COLORS • REGULAR • SNUG FIT® • NYLON

Something new!

A SHAMPOO THAT MAKES YOUR HAIR SHINY-CLEAN BUT NEVER, NEVER DRIES IT! RICHER LATHER! INSTANT RINSING!

New Woodbury Shampoo

FOR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

You have every right to expect a good shampoo to clean your hair and scalp. Woodbury Shampoo does this—thoroughly and easily. But new Woodbury does much more. It washes your hair shiny and pretty without drying out a single strand. There's a marvelous ingredient in Woodbury that protects your hair's own natural oils. So your hair is manageable. You can fix it any way you want right after shampooing! New Woodbury gives lots of lather—even in hardest water. Rinses out in no time, too. No special rinse is needed. So many people like new Woodbury and use so much of it, that it actually costs less than other quality shampoos. Get some today. There's nothing like a good shampoo to make you feel and look better!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 114

of visiting hospitals. "You are a member of the British royal family," she snapped. "We are never tired and we all love hospitals."

On certain matters—such as engagement, marriage, and journeys abroad—Margaret is constitutionally bound to seek the permission of her sister, the queen. But that is not to say that she has not a mind of her own. When she finds some obviously archaic and unnecessary obstacle in her path, then she proceeds to find ways over or around it—if not to have it removed altogether.

One of her outstanding achievements in this direction lately has been the demolition of the unwritten rule that members of the royal family shall not walk unescorted outside the grounds of their homes. Margaret persuaded the queen that the restriction was out of date and now, accompanied only by her lady in waiting or her maid, she often exercises her Sealyham dog Johnny in St. James's Park.

"If Margaret had been born a nobody, she would still have been acclaimed a beauty." That comment, made by a renowned portrait photographer, is more significant than it may seem at first sight.

Britons have at times seemed to be collectively afflicted with astigmatism where members of the royal family are concerned, finding and enthusing over qualities in them which, in the commoner, would not cause a head to be turned in a London street. But without a doubt Margaret's delicacy of features, the unique semitransparent texture of her skin, the regal carriage of her small head, her generous mouth and, above all, her huge, shining blue eyes would cause quite a stir anywhere, even among people with no idea of her identity.

In spite of all this, however, it is only fair to Margaret to point out that her beauty certainly is not flawless.

For one thing, she has a pronounced pallor. To some, of course, this may be attractive, but to most people it seems slightly discordant in one so young and so vivacious. Then again the effect of those lovely blue eyes is often marred by a trace of weariness. When she is seen close up, dark shadows add several years to her age. Finally her facial features: at certain angles they appear to be a little too sharp for perfection.

Margaret's hourglass silhouette, however, is very close to the petite ideal with these measurements:

Height	5′ 1″
Bust	33½″
Waist	21½″
Hips	33″
Weight	100 pounds

Margaret and fashion today are synonymous. But her undoubted flair for clothes also should be judged in the light of certain restrictive customs by which she is bound.

Hats, for instance. Royal ladies with public duties to perform never wear anything that tends to conceal the face.

Hair styles must always be simple enough to remain tidy for a long time in the worst weather conditions. Shoes must be comfortable enough for the wearer to walk considerable distances in them or to stand for hours. Make-up must be of a type that does not require frequent touching up.

Until recently, royal ladies never wore black except when they were in mourning. Margaret disposed of that custom. Although her favorite colors are ruby red, shell pink, leaf green and sapphire blue, she considers black to be very smart. She wears it often.

As soon as Margaret strikes a new fashion note, photographs are rushed to the mass-production factories and within a day or two imitations flood into the shops.

Platform shoes, feather caps, handbag initials, white woolen monkey jackets all have sold in huge quantities in Britain simply because the princess was pictured with them. There is hardly a woman in the land who, consciously or unconsciously, does not follow the royal lead.

Whether she is being dressed by French Dior and Desses or British Norman Hartnell; whether she is choosing hats in Paris or at the London salon of milliner Simone Mirman, the princess always knows just what she wants and sees that she gets it.

Sometimes her ideas cause the experts to raise their hands in horror. Once at a garden party given by the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough she appeared in a large picture hat, a flared mink cape, a full and flimsy picture gown with a near-ankle-length skirt and open-toed strap and sling-back shoes.

THE French milliners groaned that no one under 5′4″ should wear a wide-brimmed hat. The couturiers gasped that the flared cape with that full dress only served to shorten the figure. The shoe stylists complained that she should have worn the plainest, trimmest court shoes.

Yet Margaret looked lovely. And manufacturers produced the ensemble by the vanload—for small women.

"Never mix glitter and tweeds," say the conventionalists. Yet Margaret delights to adorn a tweed suit with two sparkling jeweled clips and two rows of pearls.

"A Frenchwoman puts on her gloves in the boudoir, an American in the hall and an Englishwoman in the street," so the saying goes. But Margaret often appears without any gloves at all.

One of the fashion difficulties she has to face as a princess and sister of the queen is that she can seldom make full use of make-up. She allow herself the luxury of vivid lipstick, she uses only very light eye shadow and nail varnish. In the daytime she never rouge.

Her smooth, naturally wavy hair is us brushed and dressed by her own maid r sleekly and high above the ears, but sinc was given a mink coat by Queen Mary sh often added sophistication by means cluster of thick curls at the nape.

Margaret never wears earrings—she likes them intensely—and seldom a ring. favorite adornment is a five-row neckla perfect pearls.

Actually prevents diaper rash!

Hospital-proven.
Stops diaper odor!
Gives baby
"kissin' skin" all over!

The wonder lotion that does what mothers, nurses, doctors always hoped for! Pink, fragrant Baby Magic actually prevents diaper rash, when used at every diaper change and after every bath.

HEALS DIAPER RASH; prevents its return. In hospital tests, even severe cases cleared fast! Stops diaper odor; keeps baby fragrant as a rose. Clears chapping, chafing, cradle cap, prickles; gives baby "kissin' skin" all over. In refillable squeeze bottle, 59¢. Giant economy size, 98¢. NO TAX. slightly higher in Canada

Mennen . . . Baby Specialist since 1880

Check "Wet Diaper" Chapping!
Use this fragrant, wet-resistant powder! 29¢, 53¢. NO TAX.

For over 25 years, Spencer's has made only baby undies . . . today's Spencer layette features 43 cellophane packed styles . . . everything for baby, and so economically priced you can buy a dozen at a time.

SOFT SPUN Spencer's BABY UNDIES

Guaranteed Good Housek

WHERE TO BUY SPENCER'S

F. W. Woolworth Co.	W. W. Mac Co.	Eagle Stores
S. S. Kresge Co.	Neisner Brothers	Efird's
W. T. Grant Co.	C. M. S. Stores	Gorin's
H. L. Green Co.	Kobacker Stores	Coronet Stores
S. H. Kress Co.	Rose's 5-10-25 Stores	A. L. Duckwall S
M. H. Fishman Co.	V. J. Elmore Co.	Sprouse-Reitz
McLellan Stores	Belk Stores	T. G. Y. Stores
J. J. Newberry Co.	Perry Bros.	Raylass Stores
G. C. Murphy Co.	Morgan & Lindsey	Mack's 5 & 10 S
McCrory Stores	M. H. Lamston Co.	G. F. Wacker Sto
Charles Stores	Emery Stores	Hested Stores
S. E. Nichols Co.	Danner Bros.	Dodd's 5-10-25 S

MOUNT AIRY KNITTING
Mount Airy • North Carol

It hasn't always been easy for the princess to ılfill her ambitions as a leader of fashion—not :arly as simple as it might be supposed to be ›r a girl who not only has the necessary looks, ıir and money, but also is the sister of the ueen of England.

From time to time she has had to face conderable opposition from members of her wn family, who have pointed out to her that aditionally the role of Britain's royal ladies far as clothing is concerned has been to eate an atmosphere of regal distinction ther than to show the way for the bright young ings.

Back in 1951 it was suggested to Margaret at it would be advisable for her to soft-pedal e leader-of-fashion business and to keep out the limelight for a while. Immediately afterard she turned up at the Goodwood races in e same yellow dress on three consecutive ys. And she tucked herself so far away at the ck of the royal box that many racegoers dn't realize she was there.

It couldn't last, of course. The pint-sized incess whose young life thus far has been rgely devoted to ensuring that she is never ıtshone by anyone, anywhere—with the sole ception of Court functions—has got to be ıt there in front, scintillating.

Apart from her position as sister of the ueen of England—and a very lonely sister at that—Princess Margaret possesses considerable wealth of her own. From the state she draws at present an allowance of only £6000 a year, on which (with a fairly liberal expense allowance) she has to pay income tax like anyone else; the grant to be increased at her marriage to £15,000. Besides this, she inherited very large (but undisclosed) sums both from her father and from her grandmother, Queen Mary. And £20,000 tax free was left to her by the late Mrs. Ronald Greville, a close friend of her parents. The more reliable estimates of the princess' fortune do not put her in the pound-millionaire class—but comfortably close to it.

When Margaret's birthday comes around this summer there is sure to be even greater interest in it than usual. For as soon as she is twenty-five she will be able, if she wishes, to invoke a clause in the Royal Marriage Act which has never been used since it was established in 1772.

The act lays down that any descendant of George III must ask the sovereign's permission to marry—up to the age of twenty-five. After that, if the sovereign's permission is withheld, the descendant may give twelve months' notice of the marriage. Then only the two Houses of Parliament can stop it.

But as to the man whom Margaret will marry, the princess herself has provided one clue: "I will never marry a man who cannot laugh easily."

The Barrel is Back

By SUE JENKINS

ARE you a perpetual picker-upper? I am! Each morning, when I start tidying up he place, I'm a regular jumping jack. Down or pajamas, up for the hanger, down for rucks, dolls and dishes (I have a girl and oy, both!), up again to dust, down for horts, magazines, up again to dust; down, ıp. And I'm tired of it. This morning, I deided to do something drastic. I would revert o mamma's barrel.

As a child, I realize now, I didn't get the ull significance of the barrel. Mamma had rought it into our household one evening, fter she had had another one of her cricks. Mamma was always getting cricks in her ack from picking things up off the floor. So his particular evening, after school, mamma ounded us up in the dining room. Daddy, ack (my preschool-age brother), Mary (my een-age sister) and I all knew by the look on namma's face that something important was oming.

"From now on," mamma began, "there vill be a barrel on the back porch. Any time find anything on the floor—no matter what t is—it goes into the barrel!" That was all he said.

We looked at one another and back to namma. We even snickered. It didn't make ense. Why would mamma pick up our hings, go clear out to the back porch, and lump them into a barrel? Daddy, too, hought it was a big joke.

"That's a good one," he laughed. "I can ust see Susie standing on her head trying to ind her geography lesson."

Mamma just smiled a secret little smile, nd went on about her work. And we went n living as usual. At first it was funny. Every time we wanted something, we would ace to the back porch and fish around in the barrel until we found it.

The barrel ceased to be funny to Mary, owever, about a week after it was instituted. She was upstairs that night, dressing for her date, when we heard her yell, "Mamma, have you seen my new yellow sweater? I've never even worn it," she wailed, "and I simply can't find it anywhere."

"Have you tried the barrel?" mamma replied softly.

"The barrel? Mamma! You wouldn't!" But nevertheless, Mary came down the steps, two at a time, and tried the barrel. Tearfully, she brought out a crumpled yellow thing from beneath a pair of my smelly tennis shoes, Jack's dirty slingshot and several of daddy's golf sticks.

The next catastrophe happened about two days later.

Daddy was in a hurry to get to the office, and couldn't find his hat. After a thorough search, mamma remarked casually, "Have you tried the barrel?" Daddy ran to the back porch, and we could hear him muttering as he threw out schoolbooks, toys, bedroom slippers and papers. Then we distinctly heard him swear as he reached his hat, jammed the shapeless piece of felt on his head, and slammed the back door.

You may think these unsatisfactory reactions would have caused mamma to become softhearted and abandon her plan, but you do not know mamma. When she starts something, she finishes it. She kept right on with the barrel until there was nothing to put in it. And that didn't take as long as you might think. But even after we had each learned our lesson—the hard way—she kept the barrel on the porch to remind us. . . .

Why did this all come back to me so vividly this morning? I stooped to pick up a dump truck, when bang! A sharp, excruciating pain hit me square in the back. I had the first of mamma's cricks. Then and there I decided to do something drastic. . . .

Who is that at the door? "Oh, yes, sir! Bring it right in."

The barrel is back! Do you think it will work? I'll bet on it! END Longer . . . over 6 feet! Wider . . . almost 3 feet! Tot-N-Teen is a strong, sturdy adult bed, low enough for little folks . . . long enough for today's taller teen agers. That means 7 to 8 years longer service than a youth bed! More than this, Posturized Tot-N-Teen gives lasting level support for growing bones, to let your child sleep correctly.

- Box spring instead of flat link spring gives firm, level support, won't sag.
- Hardwood frame with 6 hardwood legs
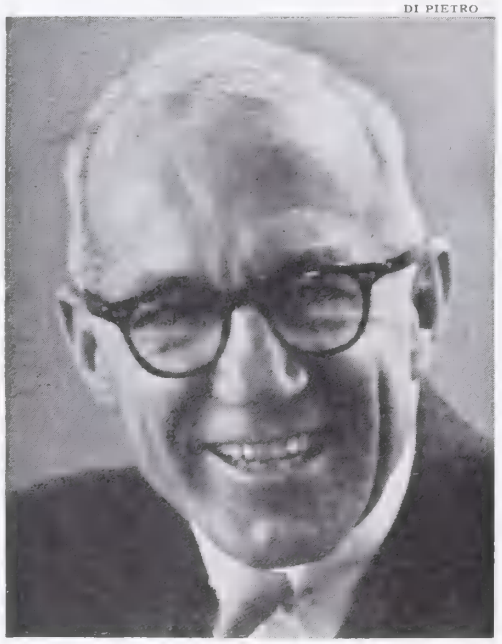
- Adult mattress construction with pre-built border, extra heavy edgerod reinforcement.
- Upholstered headboard and easily removable side arms eliminate drafts, give bumper guard protection.



FREE Write for illustrated descriptive folder, "For Today's Taller, Faster-growing Generation"

ROSE-DERRY CO. Dept. T-7, 9[illegible]

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

Is the breast-fed baby more secure than the bottle-fed? Not necessarily, it depends on the mother.

Dr. Spock says: The baby must connect his tremendous enjoyment of feeding to his mother, and this helps him learn to love.

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

THIS page is mainly in response to letters about three bottle topics: (1) Bottle holders; (2) Going to bed with a bottle; (3) When should a baby give up or be deprived of his last bottle?

In recent years there has been a lot of advice to mothers, from individual doctors and public-health nurses, from pamphlets and books (including mine) urging them to hold their babies in their arms while giving the bottle. This advice hasn't come as a result of any research work that I know of, proving that this method is of definite value. The advice has been given on general principle.

Doctors have known for a number of years, from the studies of scientists such as Harry Bakwin, René Spitz and Katherine Wolf, that babies must have a reasonable amount of affection, cuddling, doting, in order to grow up happy and human. They came to the conclusion from observing babies who lived in institutions in which they received no friendly attention at all and who, as a result, became listless, apathetic and malnourished.

Of course breast feeding is a very natural and ideal way in which a baby receives a lot of physical affection and loving attention. The mother can't very well do anything else during nursing, so she turns her thoughts and feelings toward him, for a full twenty minutes or so, four to six times a day. Her lovingness is intensified during nursing by her baby's closeness, his visible trust in her, her realization that it is her very own milk which is nourishing and satisfying him, her own physical and spiritual pleasure. The baby, as he develops, must connect his tremendous enjoyment of feeding and his closeness to his mother at these times and this must help him learn to love and trust her as the most important person in the world. By the time he is old enough to be able to spare a second from nursing, he pauses to give her a delighted or adoring smile.

It is easy to see why the doctors and nurses who have been somewhat uneasy about the decreasing frequency of breast feeding in America have tried to encourage it by stressing its emotional value. But then they realized, thinking about the actual families they knew well, that apparently as large a proportion of bottle-fed babies have turned out to be affectionate and well adjusted as the proportion of breast-fed babies. So there must be other important ways in which a mother's love gets through to her baby. Obviously when a mother gives a bottle to her baby cuddled in her arms she can give him her full attention, fondle him, smile at him, and he will feel almost as close to her as if he were nursing at the breast.

I think you can understand why doctors and nurses, from these steps of reasoning, have recommended that the bottle-fed baby be held in his mother's arms.

The Rochester (Minnesota) Child Health Institute was established by the Mayo Association ten years ago to study ways to help parents bring up their children. Its director, Dr. C. Anderson Aldrich, and the rest of the staff, of which I was a member for four years, always recommended that mothers hold babies for bottle feedings. And we, like most doctors and nurses, assumed that our advice was being followed. But later a group of pediatricians on the staff made many home visits to ask mothers in great detail what methods they were actually using and what worked. It rather surprised these doctors to find that many mothers, including some of the most affectionate ones with very happy babies, were propping bottles at times, by means of bottle holders or folded diapers.

Many mothers of twins have written me good letters loaded with helpful suggestions (which I'll report on another time) and most of them have found that propping the bottle part of the time was necessary.

So it's easy to answer the mothers who have asked about bottle holders: They are very handy at times. Used with moderation, they will not deprive a baby seriously because there are many other ways in which a mother can show her love for and enjoyment of her baby.

Am I saying that cuddling a baby for bottle feedings is unimportant? (It sounds like a silly question, but some people will quote a writer like that.) I should say not.

I should add—what most mothers with older babies have found out already—that many babies reach a stage when they want to hold their own bottles and some of them, soon afterward, show their impatience at being in their mothers' arms at such times. Such a baby, of course, won't love you more if you insist on holding on to him when he doesn't want to be held.

The next question is whether, when a baby of perhaps 7 to 10 months gets to the stage where he prefers to feed himself his own bottle, you should let him drink his nighttime and naptime bottles out of bed—sitting or lying—or whether you should put him to bed and let him drink himself to sleep with it. There's no doubt about it—the good old bottle in bed usually works like a strong sedative and he's fast asleep by the time he's finished. Then what's the harm? No real harm except that such a baby gets to associate bottle and sleep so closely that he can't go to sleep without a bottle. If the mother tries to withhold the bottle, he's not just sleepless, he's miserable. The need for the nighttime bottle (and perhaps for a nap bottle) may go on to 1½, 2, 2½ years, occasionally longer still. I myself don't remember any child who was still clinging to the bottle at 3, except those who wanted it back again through envy of a new baby.

I've never seen any harm come from a bedtime bottle to the age of 2 or even beyond, except for the clucking sounds that relatives or friends may make if they find out. I myself don't think there is anything to be gained in trying to get any bottle—bedtime or daytime—away from a baby who is clinging to it desperately. Humans, generally speaking, don't grow up best by having things taken away from them, but rather by outgrowing them.

Of course there is such a thing as holding a child back a little by encouraging him to remain a baby, and this doesn't help him either. The best you can do is make it easy and fun for him to grow up by watching for his readiness, making changes gradually, and in a friendly, admiring spirit.

Most babies want to hold and try to drink from a small, easily grasped cup or glass at 5 to 7 months. You can help them to like this way of drinking by putting a couple of drops of formula in the cup and increasing the amount as they gain skill. A few are becoming bored with the bottle by 8 or 9 months and I'm all for letting them wean themselves gradually. There's a larger number who cling to three bottles a day and act suspicious about the cup until 15 months or so, and then relent gradually. Practically all of them want to hang on to one bottle, usually the nighttime one, longer than the rest.

Some mothers (and grandmothers too!) have strong feelings about weaning and are quite disgusted when they see a child big enough to walk still guzzling from a bottle. They should certainly take their feelings into account (for their baby's sake as well as their own), put the cup within reach by 5 months, take advantage of each stage of the baby's boredom with his bottles, and not get him in the habit of going to bed with a bottle.

Another word about pacifiers. (I know the subject is boring to some of you.) Many mothers have suggested that the best way to solve the problem of lost pacifiers—in bed or out—is to keep half a dozen on hand. Several mothers have warned that babies can choke on old, tired pacifiers, either by pulling the nipple off the plastic base or by chewing them to pieces. Either get new ones that can't easily be pulled or chewed apart or, if the child mainly uses them for chewing rather than sucking, take this as a sign he doesn't need them any more.

It shouldn't be necessary to boil a pacifier or toy that has fallen on the floor—washing with soap should be enough.

Fluoridation of the water supply has spread rapidly in recent years but it still has a long way to go. When it is being considered for the first time in any city, the people want to be assured that it is safe, and this takes some time and discussion. Of course fluoridation was thoroughly experimented with and proved safe to the satisfaction of medical, dental and health authorities before it was ever recommended. In fact fluoride has always occurred naturally in some water supplies—that's how its value was first discovered. I am glad to live in a city that has added fluoride to its water.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

Pretty Please-Carter Posies

Prized cotton knits from Toddlertown

'tention Ladies and Gentle Ones . . . here come Carter's little winners . . . softest summer show-offs on Carefree Street. Tied for first place: cool, cool comfort . . . long, long wear . . . size-right fit. Judges! Note gift-pretty look, no-chafe Nevabind sleeves, extra grow room. Mother's prize . . . Carter's knits whiz-wash, say "pooh" to irons. Carter-Set®. . . . won't shrink out of fit.

Starting clockwise with snoozer

JIFFON-NEVABIND® SHIRT. Diapenda® tapes. White, birth-3 yrs. Pastels, to 1½ yrs. About 79¢.

BOY'S SUNSUIT. Blue, mint, red, yellow, toast. 6 mos.-4 yrs. $1.50.

GIRL'S SUNSUIT. New knit piqué. Pink, yellow with white; white with red. 6 mos.-3 yrs. $2.25.

"SUNDOWNS" SUMMER SLEEPER. Two-piece, snap-fastened. Blue, pink, or yellow rose-buds. 1-6 yrs. $2.00.

TYKES SHIRT and TYKES NO-DROOP PANT. Both white. 2-8 yrs. 69¢-85¢.

POLO SHIRT (on bunny). Snap-fastened shoulder. White with pastel stripes. S.M.L. Ex. L. $1.29.

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

Psst Carter's makes fine underwear for the entire family

No more tears

from "soap in the eyes"

WON'T BURN
or IRRITATE eyes!

- Leaves hair shining, easy to comb
- Pure, gentle, safe
- Wonderful for all the family — 59¢

BORN TO BE QUEEN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62

unnecessarily. Martine Roell and her baby daughter arrived a few days later. On May ninth, a Thursday, the royal party was advised to spend the night in the shelter.

At three o'clock in the morning Zussie awoke to the scream of air-raid sirens. Someone rapped sharply on the door and Prince Bernhard called, "The attack has started!" Then he added in a pleased tone of voice, "I just saw my first Stuka shot down."

Within the thick concrete shelter walls, the babies slept peacefully. Their mothers and the nurse sipped scalding-hot coffee and, conversing in whispers, waited for Bernhard to bring them reports from the outside.

Toward morning Zussie was awakened by the sound of a radio. The announcer's voice was hoarse with excitement. Bombing was continuing in The Hague, at Schipol Airport near Amsterdam, at Haarlem, Maastricht, Arnhem, Hook of Holland, Delft and Rotterdam. Belgium and Luxembourg were also invaded. German troops had crossed the Maas River in the southeast. Parachutists were coming down everywhere.

Zussie took a deep breath to steady her pounding heart and looked across at Juliana. The princess was pale but composed. She was checking over the contents of the suitcases the nurse had packed for the children. When she opened Irene's and found it stuffed with clean diapers, she gave a queer little forced laugh.

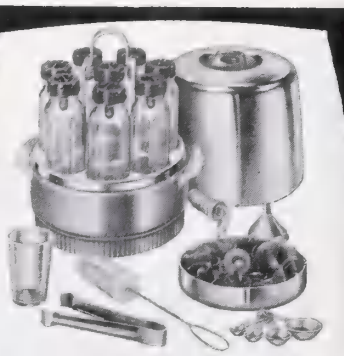
Now a statement from Queen Wilhelmina was read over the radio. She said that the

The sun, the moon and the stars would have disappeared long ago, had they happened to be within reach of predatory human hands.

—HAVELOCK ELLIS:
The Dance of Life
(Houghton Mifflin Company)

Germans were committing a heinous crime, coming into a peaceful country, but that they would be driven out again with God's help. She told everyone not to get excited. "My government and I will do our duty," the message ended. Zussie suddenly felt much better.

Juliana's eyes were bright with unshed tears. "How like Mother!" she breathed.



Bernhard came hastily into the shelter. It seemed odd to see the usually meticulous prince unshaven and in a rumpled uniform. He told the women the Germans evidently knew they were hiding at Huis Ten Bosch, for parachutists were dropping all about them in the woods. "As soon as we can we'll leave for Noordeinde," he told them. "It's too bad, for this is a much more comfortable shelter, but you'll be more protected in the center of the city."

During a lull in the battle an inconspicuous cavalcade of cars sped from the House in the Woods to Wilhelmina's residence. Zussie saw whole families digging up their front lawns and was told that they were making escape trenches from their cellars in case their homes were bombed. Others were shoveling the dirt and sand into bags and piling them against the house walls. Some families were taking no defensive measures whatsoever, but running back and forth piling their belongings into cars.

One or two homes were totally demolished. Mothers and fathers and children walked around the ruins, with sad and bewildered faces. In the rubble Zussie saw a perfectly intact pot of scarlet geraniums.

On their way to the center of the city, Zussie noticed a large green object hanging limply in the top branches of a tree. As the car drew nearer she could see it was a dead German paratrooper. She quickly pointed out the other window to a treed cat to distract Trix's attention.

That night everyone crowded into the small air-raid shelter in the garden of Noordeinde, which was hidden from the sight of planes by several immense trees. When Zussie stepped

HANKSCRAFT Automatic STERILIZER SET
For regular sterilization or terminal method — bottles, nipples, caps and formula in one operation. 8-bottle capacity. Includes everything needed to prepare formula. MODEL 201 — $12.95
Model 200 (Sterilizer only) — $10.95

Best for Baby!

BOTTLE WARMER and VAPORIZER
Heats formula quickly, shuts off automatically. Vaporizer brings quick relief from colds. Pastel colors.
MODEL 1013-C $2.50

At drug, department, appliance, and baby shops everywhere.

Hankscraft
BABY HELPS

HANKSCRAFT CO., Kranksburg, Wisconsin

CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO

also Calluses. Quick easy, and economical Just rub on. Jars, 35 and 60¢. Buy Moss at your druggist.

Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

Turknit®
Baby Goods

Bibs
Towels
Wash Cloths
Bath Robes
Bath Blankets

Shower Gifts

PUTNAM KNITTING CO., BOX G, COHOES, N.Y.

For Quick Relief of HEADACHE
NEURALGIA

Remarkably Effective

STANBACK, the medically approved formula, contains several fast acting ingredients—In combination they work faster than any one alone to bring soothing relief from pains of HEADACHE—NEURALGIA

Snap Back with

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

hrough the thick oak door into the narrow oncrete passageway she felt as though she ere burrowing into some ancient Egyptian's mb. Within was a single cell no bigger than ight by ten feet. Hanging from hooks on the alls were seven hideous gas masks.

The two baby girls, Trix and Renée, slept on enches while Irene lay in her gastight basket, ith the lid off. In case of a gas attack, the asket had a hand pump and oxygen tank ttached.

The adults slept on two single-bed mattresses hich almost completely covered the hard tone floor. Her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina, Martine Roell and Zussie shared one mattress, hile Bernhard and Juliana shared the other. he nurse found the sleeping quarters so rowded that it was impossible to turn over, ut she got little sleep anyway as the prince ad a telephone right by his ear and it rang ncessantly.

Saturday morning the air was filled with noke, and the sirens of ambulances and fire ngines went continually. Between the alerts verybody escaped the damp, cold shelter and t in the spring sunshine near the door. Trix nd Renée carried out the tea set and held a parties for their dolls.

The children considered living in the shelter wonderful new game. What fun to race inde when the air-raid siren sounded! How elightful to have granny and mamma and apa and Zussie all sleeping together and eating their meals picnic-style on the floor! Papa ked with them even more than usual, and amma held Trix on her lap and talked to her bout the long trip which they would soon be king.

Every few hours brought word of new disters. German Panzer divisions had penetated the Dutch lines at three different points nd were hurtling across the flat countryside, eaded toward Amsterdam, Rotterdam and he Hague.

From South Holland came reports that erman paratroopers were descending from e skies dressed in the black robes and flat ts of Dutch priests. "Dat is gek" (crazy), orted Mr. Sesink. "Don't believe it." He as right, as it turned out later. Then the ory spread to the palace gates that the Gerin paratroopers were the grown-up German ar babies who had been nursed back to health Dutch homes directly after the First World ar.

"This is the way they repay us for our kindss!" an old soldier exploded to Zussie. hey are walking around wearing Dutch iforms and speaking perfect Dutch. It's possible to tell friend from enemy."

o panic gripped the city. One of the queen's nadiers brought to the shelter a leaflet opped by the Luftwaffe. It said in Dutch at the Germans came as friends and were ry for what they were doing, but they had protect the Dutch from the French and the glish. It was foolish to go on fighting, the per said, when the country was almost mpletely beaten. Bernhard was the last to d the leaflet. He tore it up savagely, his e a thundercloud.

The radio announced before supper Satday night that most of the West of Holland d been deliberately flooded by Dutch troops t that the Germans were using rubber boats d still coming. The Germans had captured veral airports in Holland and were ferrying troops just as fast as their planes could land. e plane was shot down with a horse inside, ought, the radio said, by a German comnder for his victory parade. Snipers were oting from private homes, so it was wise stay off the streets. The snipers were beed to be Dutch Nazis and should be reted at once to the police, the radio warned.

As Zussie listened to the high sweet voices the children while she went about her usual ies of attending to their clothes and food, had moments of believing that the war, icipated with such dread for so long, was y a nightmare from which she would soon aken. It was ludicrous, for instance, to tch people in the streets wearing pots and ns for helmets. She burst out laughing at sight of a very stout and dignified gentlen passing the palace fence with a large iron w kettle on his head.

The palace gardens had never looked more lovely, with their masses of tulips and daffodils. The tall spreading chestnuts were in full bloom. For days before the start of the attack, rain had fallen steadily and it was oppressively warm; now each day brought clear skies and brilliant sunshine. Only the fire from the antiaircraft batteries made lazy puffs of white in the cloudless blue sky.

Trix pointed at the small specks of planes diving at one another in the heavens. "Big birds, big birds," she cried delightedly as Zussie hustled her into the shelter.

Once a day Zussie took the girls over to the palace for a hot bath. She worried that an air-raid alert would catch them naked in the tub, but fortunately this never happened. Other times, when it was necessary to fetch food or fresh water from the palace kitchen, she walked the hundred-yard distance between palace and shelter alone.

Close by the palace gardens was the rear of a café which before the war was known to be a headquarters for Dutch Nazis. Once when Zussie was walking over to Noordeinde, a bullet suddenly whizzed by her ear and then another, smashing a windowpane a few inches above her head. She looked back over her shoulder and found that she was gazing directly into the rear windows of the café. Snipers! Her own countrymen were shooting at her! She continued her slow and dignified pace, determined to show her contempt for such traitors.

When she reached the safety of the palace, a liveried footman asked in tones of awe, "Weren't you frightened, Freule?"

"Naturally not," she replied with what she hoped was convincing sang-froid.

Bernhard, who had been sitting in front of the shelter with a submachine gun across his knees, observed the incident. He sprang to his feet and with security officer Sesink at his heels ran to the palace. A few moments later, as the nurse was returning to the shelter she

Everything that touches his thinner baby skin must be soft and gentle

All through Babyhood he needs your wisest care

You see to it that his little playthings are soft and safe for him to use. And you can further protect his skin comfort with the New ScotTissue. It is gentle to his skin, yet strong to prevent tearing and shredding.

One daily comfort you can bring him is this softer tissue

A comfortable baby feels "at home" in his new world. So you keep him warm and dry.

You choose the softest little shirts and blankets, the gentlest towels. Another comfort you can assure him is a soft bathroom tissue.

More mothers every day are choosing the New ScotTissue. Unfailingly gentle to baby's thinner skin. Yet its strength and absorbency make "clean-ups" neat and thorough.

Get the New ScotTissue. It is comfy for baby and the big 1,000-sheet roll is your most economical buy for the whole family. Another great Scott value.

"ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

1,000 sheets—over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues

Koroseal BY B.F.Goodrich

Raincoats
$3.95 to $8.95

Bowl covers, food bags
40c to $2.25

Garden hose
50 ft.. $9.80

Thermo-Keep° Picnic Bags
$2.98 to $9.98

Shower curtains
$2.95 to $9.50

Koroseal makes any man a style expert on ladies' clothes

All he does is select for his lady a smart sports outfit or a dinner dress like that in the picture—and she's all set and safe for hours . . . (it has built-in baby pants made of Koroseal flexible material). And the dress is so "high-style" that all he does is buy-it-by-name—Alexis—and his young lady is as perfectly dressed as his wife or favorite movie star.

Or, for other kinds of costumes he's ready with Warren's baby pants. They're Koroseal, too and permanently waterproof—like his own golf jacket and shower curtain and a score of other things he and his wife use—of Koroseal flexible material.

Wash Koroseal? Just slosh it in warm soapy water. It will never mildew, rot, chip, crack, peel or stain in normal household use. And in heavier forms, like upholstery, Koroseal is almost scuff-proof, almost impossible to wear out.

But Koroseal's best feature is that only top manufacturers of any product can use it. Alexis "Handi-panti and Topper sets", baby pants and baby bibs by Warren's, Pearl-Wick hampers (shown at the right in the picture above), Jakson shower curtains by Joseph A. Kaplan & Sons, raincoats by Climatic are only a few of the fine things made of it.

Look for the label. Look for things made of Koroseal in all kinds of stores, but look for the Koroseal label. If they don't have the label, they aren't real Koroseal. The B. F. Goodrich Company, Marietta, Ohio.

Koroseal—Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Koroseal
FLEXIBLE MATERIALS BY
B.F.Goodrich
INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS DIVISION

heard machine-gun fire from the roof of the palace and the crash of glass from the café.

The prince continued to pump bullets into the upper stories of the restaurant until all answering fire was silenced. Later, during an air-raid alert, he did not go to the shelter. Instead, he went to the palace roof, to fire round after round of machine-gun fire at the German Heinkels and Stukas and Messerschmidts that filled the sky. Mr. Sesink bellicosely went out to fetch him, his angry face expressing his concern for the prince.

Well, the nurse exulted, so the prince is a Nazi, is he?

So far, there had not been a sufficient lull in the bombing and strafing by the Luftwaffe to allow an escape. That night exploding bombs made a continual thunder.

Zussie, wide awake and weary, wondered groggily why the white stone palace nearby, such an obvious target from the air, had not yet been bombed. The Germans must know the royal family is here and want to take them alive, she decided.

Juliana, who had not been out of her clothes for three days, looked shattered with fatigue, with great deep circles beneath her eyes. But she continued cheerful and composed. Never by a word or sign did she betray a trace of panic, although Zussie knew that she, too, must be doubting whether they could make their dash to freedom in time.

Queen Wilhelmina's majestic manner remained unchanged. She is like a rock, thought Zussie. The Dutch monarch never once lost heart. God would see to the punishment of such barbarians. As she sat on the floor of the damp and moldy shelter, her broad back was still ramrod straight. Candlelight illuminated a face of classic calm and determination. So Socrates might have looked before he sipped the fatal hemlock.

Toward evening the skies cleared of planes, and Mr. Sesink conferred intently at one end of the garden with the queen. They would try to escape that night to IJmuiden Harbor. There an English destroyer waited in uneasy anchorage.

"Perhaps we will meet in London," Wilhelmina told her daughter, embracing her quickly in front of the shelter. "Perhaps we will meet again here."

Juliana's eyes misted as the fifty-nine-year-old queen gravely kissed her two grandchildren good-by and shook Bernhard's hand.

"I'll be back just as soon as I see Jula and the children safely in England," he informed her.

The queen raised her hand. "God bless you," she told the group in a voice trembling with emotion.

An armored truck belonging to the Bank of the Netherlands drove up. First Irene was carried in, asleep in her puppy basket. Then Trix and Renée, clutching their dolls and chattering gaily, climbed in with Zussie. They were followed by an aide-de-camp and his wife chosen by Queen Wilhelmina to accompany the family.

Juliana turned and searched the pretty face of her intimate friend Martine. "You're sure you want to go without William?"

Martine hesitated. She looked very close to tears. "Yes," she finally replied. "We have come this far. We might as well see it through."

Bernhard, machine gun under his arm, was the last to climb into the armored truck. As there were no seats, everyone sat on mattresses on the floor.

Next to the driver up front sat a detective named Welbergen. Carefully balanced on his knee was a rather battered-looking white cardboard box. Nobody paid any attention to it. Zussie discovered later it contained the Dutch crown jewels.

The drive from The Hague to the seaport of IJmuiden usually takes about an hour. That evening it took four hours. The armored bank truck was accompanied by two cars filled with soldiers and security officers. It was feared the convoy would be an obvious target on the main highways where the slashing Luftwaffe roared up and down. So they stuck to small secondary roads with many detours and doublings back and forth because of bomb craters and fallen buildings and trees.

The women sat in total darkness, unable to see out as the truck had only one small window, and that was at the back near Bernhard. Trix was wearing a cotton training suit with long pants and sat on her nurse's lap. Renée stayed by her mother and Irene slept on Juliana's lap.

The adults kept talking in quiet tones. They all minimized the situation. In no time at all they would be heading back to Soestdijk. Soon French and English troops would pour in by the thousands and push back the Germans. Only the words of Mr. Sesink, who was not given to rash statements, lingered uncomfortably in their minds. "We won't be back for five years, at least," he had said. He was following behind them now. "Five years!" scoffed the prince. "What nonsense!"

"Can you fight?" Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president of Harvard University, once asked a young professor who had gone to him with a disconcerting problem.

"Why, yes," the man replied; "that is, I think I can."

"Can you fight when you are in the minority?"

"I have done so occasionally."

"Can you fight when everybody is against you—when not one man is ready to lend you support?"

"I am ready to try it if necessary."

"Then you need have no fear. But if you have convictions, it will sometimes be necessary to do no less."

—ROLLO WALTER BROWN
Lonely Americans (Coward-McCann, Inc.)

Never a man who enjoys sitting still, Bernhard fidgeted as they bumped, crawled and jolted to sudden stops. He told the women what he could see out the window—the whole street, he said, was filled with people with as many possessions as they could push or carry. Bomb craters were everywhere and the German planes must have recently strafed the refugees. Zussie could hear babies crying and her heart went out to them.

They had left Noordeinde at twilight. Now it was night. Zussie thought suddenly of the Dutch-Nazi café and wondered if a sniper could have seen their departure. If so, he would surely inform the Germans. Supposing at this very instant Storm Troopers were setting up a road block ahead?

She held Trix tighter and prayed silently that they would reach England safely. Her thoughts turned to her family in Hilversum. Were they all right? Would they think her dead when she disappeared without a word or sign?

Hours later, when the coast was finally reached, Bernhard climbed out and locked the women and children in the truck. Then it was driven aboard a ferry. Bernhard announced through the small window in back that he was going out on deck. When his footsteps died away, all was silence.

They could feel the ferry motors throbbing as she pulled away from the dock, headed for the opposite side of the North Sea Canal where the destroyer was waiting. The boat had barely got up steam and was moving slowly against a strong current when they heard a plane overhead.

"Stuka!" they heard Bernhard exclaim. At the same time they heard the antiaircraft batteries start up on the shore.

Zussie's blood froze. The Germans knew of their escape after all. What a terrible way to die, she thought. Drowned in a locked truck. What possible chance is there to escape?

Then she thought, It's pitch dark. Maybe the planes won't see us.

They could hear shouts and running feet and then a burst of gunfire. "Don't shoot," they heard Mr. Sesink yelling. Then the prince's voice, almost at the same time, "Don't shoot you idiot!"

It's all over, Zussie thought. The machine-gun fire from the deck of the blacked-out ves Rex wants in, and does mom know it!

Paw marks on the door sure show it!
Never mind, Rex, you didn't mean it.
A Du Pont Sponge'll quickly clean it.

So handy for cleaning . . .

-LONG-WEARING-

DU PONT SPONGES

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

MORE CASH FOR YOU!

YES, you can have more cash in your pocket if you put your spare time to work. Write for our money-making plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
104 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Aux Fine Herbs

Now Sexton blends for you the secret potpourri that Paris chefs have long guarded . . . an exquisite bouquet of herbs that transforms soups and stews . . . that makes roasts and steaks truly Lucullan. Aux Fine Herbs is so subtle it defies description.

It's one of many Sexton spices, gathered from sunny hillsides of far-away lands and herb gardens here at home. Aromatic ingredients milled, blended and instantly sealed in Sexton's spice plants to lend piquancy to almost any favorite dish.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Sexton
Quality Foods

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

would surely disclose their location. There was no sound in the truck except for the measured breathing of the sleeping children.

The roar of the plane increased. Now the pilot was going into a dive. The nurse could not control the chattering of her teeth. Louder and louder roared the dive bomber; now it must be directly on them. She tensed, bending her body over Trix, waiting for the bombs to fall.

Instead, the sound diminished and the plane roared away. A few minutes later Bernhard's face appeared in the truck window. "It's all right," he reassured them. "He didn't get us or the destroyer. He was just dropping mines in the harbor."

Now we'll have floating mines to contend with, thought Zussie. How will the captain ever see them in the dark?

Nausea gripped her stomach. I can't get sick, she told herself. Not now!

"This is the first time we've ever traveled on a Whitsunday," reflected Juliana in a calm voice. Everyone laughed.

A few minutes later the ferry came to a stop and Bernhard commanded, "All ashore!" He unlocked the truck door and helped the women and babies off the ship to the jetty where loomed the slim gray bulk of a darkened destroyer. The warship had barely headed out of the harbor into rough waters when the nurse was ill over the side of the ship.

"Poor Zussie!" sympathized the princess. "I'm afraid she is no sailor. Would you mind taking Trix and Renée into your cabin, Martine?"

Martine agreed readily and disappeared below with the two girls. Juliana took Irene with her and Zussie collapsed gratefully into bed as the destroyer started zigzagging through the Channel mine fields. When in the early hours of the morning they reached the English coast, Martine confessed to Zussie, "I was terrified. All I could think of was how I could possibly save two husky two-year-olds if we were torpedoed."

From Harwich the royal family took a train to London, where they moved into the Dutch Legation until other quarters could be found. As they drove in a palace Rolls-Royce through the London streets Zussie saw mounds of sandbags piled against St. Paul's Cathedral. On every lamppost were black-and-white A.R.P. posters giving air-raid instructions. Gas masks hung from almost every arm, far more than she had ever seen in Holland.

THE indomitable Queen Wilhelmina arrived in London the next day, with nothing more than the clothes on her back. On that day, most of The Netherlands had capitulated after a terrible air attack ravaged the heart of Rotterdam. Queen Wilhelmina had been headed for Zeeland in Southern Holland where the Dutch were still holding out when she was reluctantly persuaded by her ministers to board a ship to England instead. At Liverpool Station, King George VI kissed the Dutch monarch on both cheeks, then tactfully turned aside while she embraced Bernhard and Juliana.

"It is just about over," she told them, adding bitterly, "It was a five-day war."

Zussie, hearing this, recalled some information Princess Armgard had sent along to them from Germany a few months before. Friends of hers high in government circles had asked Hitler what he intended to do with Holland and Belgium. "Go through them like that," announced the Fuhrer, slicing the air with a vicious gesture of his hand.

And so he had, she thought, and the Low Countries had been just as unprepared as he expected.

Within a few days, Queen Wilhelmina was established in a small house in London, later at Maidenhead. One by one her Cabinet ministers straggled across the English Channel and with their help she opened up Dutch government headquarters in London. The rest of the royal family was invited by Lord Bledisloe to use his cottage at Lydney Park in Gloucestershire. When they gratefully accepted his invitation, the English lord moved his family out but thoughtfully left his servant staff behind.

Prince Bernhard saw his family settled and then took off by plane for Zeeuws Vlaanderen in the southwest of Holland, where the Dutch were still fighting.

Comes the day when little feet get up and walk!
Stride Rite Firsties . . . and other "beginner" shoes . . .
are carefully made with the features most frequently recommended for the first walking year . . . and made with Stride Rites' superb fit and quality, too.

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

One morning Juliana opened a brown-paper parcel which had arrived addressed to the princesses and lifted out a small Scottish doll in Highland costume. "How amazing the British are!" she marveled. "To think at a time like this—when every moment they expect to see the Germans descend from the skies—they still take the trouble to be kind to two small strangers."

The news from across the Channel grew steadily worse. On May twenty-eighth King Leopold of Belgium surrendered his army and the British troops on the Continent began their retreat to the sea. Just before the evacuation of troops at Dunkirk was completed, Bernhard returned to England from Paris, dodging in a small ship the umbrella of the Luftwaffe. He strolled into the cottage at teatime in his rumpled and stained Dutch-army uniform, his shoulders sagging with fatigue. Juliana gave a little cry and flew into his arms.

That evening they had a long session of what the practical Bernhard called "facing the facts." He doubted very much that the French would be able to hold out. With the fall of France, the invasion of England was almost certain.

"Your mother and I will take the risk and stay," he told Juliana. "Our biggest and most important job is to keep up Dutch morale until the Germans are beaten. We can't do that from some mountain peak in the Andes. We must stay in close contact. Also, it will be necessary for someone outside of the country who knows the over-all strategy of the Allies to direct sabotage, someone whom the Dutch absolutely trust. I hope to be that person.

"Now then, about you and the children. You are not queen yet and there is no need for you to put your neck in a noose. In fact, if you and the girls were on some other continent, far from danger, this would be a great consolation to the Dutch. If they figured the next generation of the House of Orange was safe, it would help to keep their hopes alive."

Juliana reflected, then said, "Aunt Alice tol me that her husband is going to be the nex governor-general of Canada. She invited u to stay with them in Ottawa."

"Perfect!" announced Bernhard. "But w must arrange it quickly, before the submarine get any worse. We'll get a Dutch warship. With a glance at her somber face, he added "Come now, you're not going to Mars, yo know." He added, trying to make her smil "And the skiing is wonderful, I hear."

The princess leaned her fair head wordless against her husband's khaki shoulder.

"I'll only be a day away from you by plane, the prince was telling her as Zussie slippe quietly from the room.

Only a month after they had fled fro Holland, the group again fled the Nazis, th time heading for the Welsh coast to board Dutch cruiser.

Bernhard and Juliana rode ahead with th aide-de-camp and his wife, who were going int exile with the princess.

Behind them in a second car provided b Buckingham Palace—a black Daimler with glass partition and pale-gray upholstery—roo Zussie and Martine and the children. M Sesink and two detectives, the small securi force which Queen Wilhelmina ordered accompany the royal family, followed in third car. Detective Welbergen, Zussie notice still clutched the bulging white cardboard bo in which rattled the diamonds and sapphir and rubies of the House of Orange-Nassau.

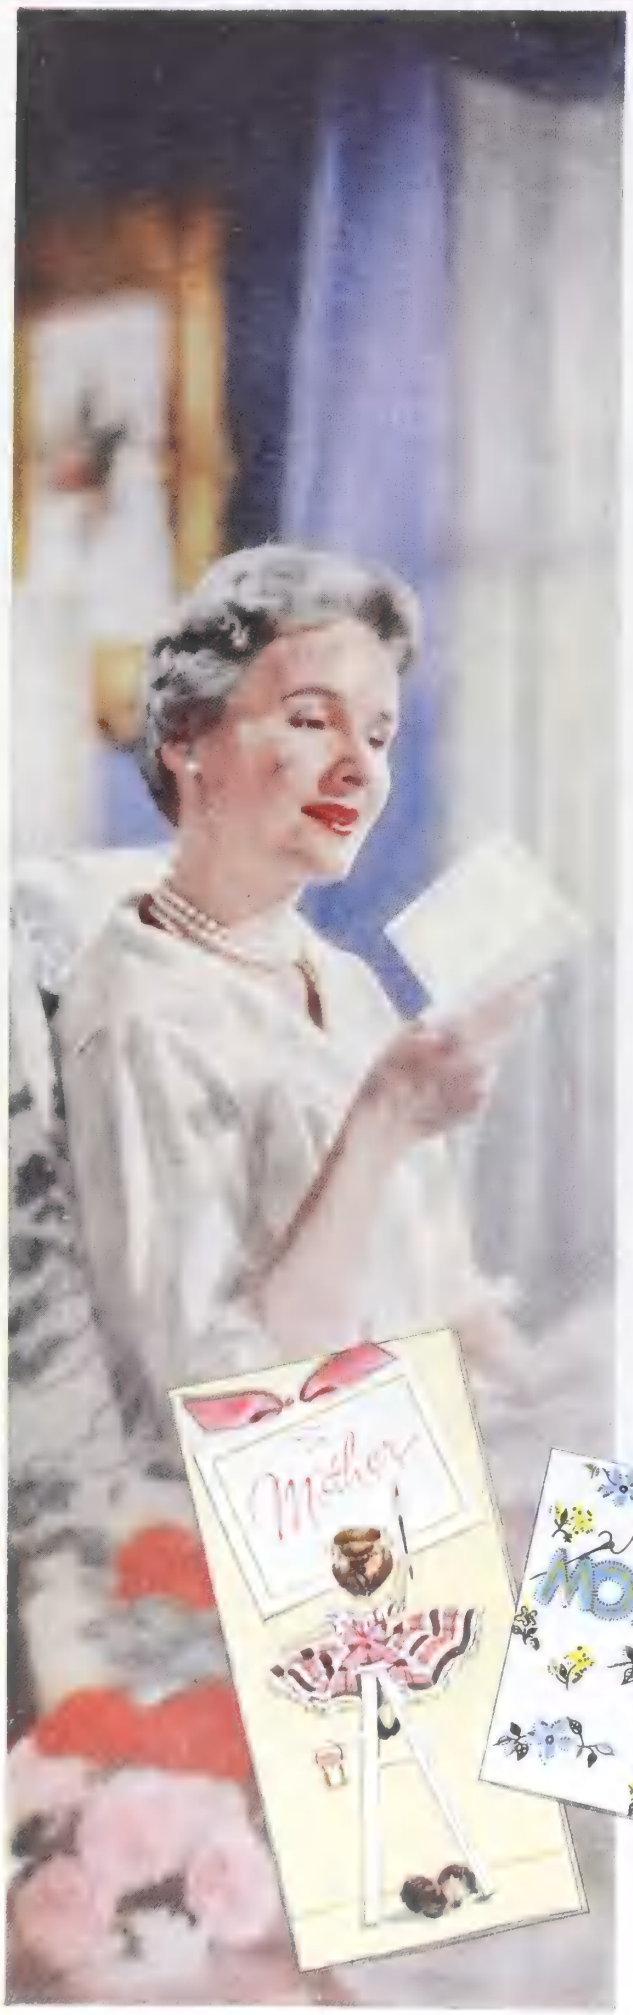
Although it was a very mild June day, Tr was wrapped in blankets until only her flushe cheeks showed. The night before she had su denly developed a temperature of 104°.

"There's sure to be a good Dutch doctor the ship," reassured Juliana. "No use to c in an English one now."

The cushioned seats in the British limo sines were so soft and the route to the coast full of hills and twists and turns that Zuss felt she was bouncing up and down like marionette. Before long she began to feel qu carsick. Soon small Renée lost her lunch, th Trix began. Each time, Zussie would sign the driver to stop. She and Martine wou attempt to clean up the mess with handk chiefs and, finally, clean diapers, wh Bernhard sat fidgeting in the car ahead.

At the fourth stop, he ran back to the "We've got to keep going or we'll miss t ship. She's leaving promptly at five and I not sure they know we're coming. Make o the best you can, but don't stop!"

The rest of the drive from Gloucestersh to Milford Haven in Wales was misery Zussie. All their clothes as well as the limo sine reeked horribly. And Martine was weari her only suit. C'est la guerre, the nurse t herself giddily as the towering dock derric at last came into view.



THEIR departure was a well-kept secret. T Dutch captain of the cruiser Sumatra—t only person on board who knew that passengers would be the House of Orange waited until the bedraggled-looking party tually started up the gangplank before he dered the four best cabins on the ship p pared for them. His own quarters he turn over to Princess Juliana, who, however, lected the first officer's cabin.

The instant her cabin was ready, Zus slipped below deck and stretched out on bunk. Shortly afterward Juliana came down see what was the matter.

"I'll send the doctor here at once. And do worry. I'll take the baby in with me; T might as well stay here and you can be s together."

The doctor diagnosed Trix's fever as German measles. Zussie was acutely seasi She longed for fresh air, but as the ship completely blacked out with heavy black per pasted over all the portholes, she co not open the window.

"We're not allowed to smoke on dec Martine advised her the next morning. "' captain says a lighted cigarette at night can seen two miles. By the way, the sailors thrilled to have us aboard. They're putting a net around the upper deck, so Trix Renée won't fall overboard, and making th life belts out of string and gin-bottle cork

Something very special for May 8th!

GIBSON

Mother's Day Cards

with an appealing new look

New eye-catching designs—new heart-hugging sentiments—the most delightful Mother's Day Cards you've ever seen. Everyone knows there's nothing nicer than a Gibson Card. Mother will, too.

THE GIBSON ART COMPANY
CINCINNATI, OHIO
PUBLISHERS SINCE 1850

"Oh, dear," moaned the nurse. "I hadn't thought of that. Supposing they do fall overboard? I must watch them." She struggled to get on her feet. "And what about Irene's formula? Who's fixing it?"

"Now lie down and stop worrying," Martine directed her. "The steward told me he knows all about feeding babies."

Several days later Zussie discovered that the steward was serving the ten-month-old Irene sailor-sized portions of baked brown beans with bacon and bowls of erwtensoep, a very rich green-pea soup with hunks of pork and fat and marrow floating on top. She also enjoyed ice cream with thick chocolate sauce.

Trix, too, experimented with new foods on shipboard. She was found squatting behind the hatch one day, sipping from a straw a nearly empty bottle of Dutch gin. She screamed when the bottle was taken away, but admitted later not liking the "lemonade" too much.

When Zussie got rather wobblingly back on her feet she sat with the children in the sun on their net-enclosed upper deck. Closely behind the big cruiser followed their only escort, the Dutch destroyer Heemskerk. The nurse found her eyes straying often to the swelling sea. Once she gave an involuntary little shudder as she thought she saw the spider leg of a periscope slipping through the whitecaps.

On the third day out the submarine alarm sounded. Down in her cabin Zussie slipped her milky life preserver over her head. She grabbed the tiny life belt which the sailors had made for Trix and hurried on deck.

Juliana and Martine were standing there with the Dutch detectives. Clinging to their mothers' hands were Trix and Renée.

The cruiser's engines were throbbing at full speed as she started to twist and turn through the water.

"The Heemskerk crew thought they spotted an enemy submarine," Mr. Sesink advised Zussie. "They're going off to investigate."

They watched silently as the gray destroyer zipped away at high speed. They stood on deck until the smoke from its funnels vanished. Presently the captain joined them. He spoke reassuringly to Mr. Sesink. "There's no sign of a German sub now. Everyone can go below if they like, but please tell their Royal Highnesses and Mrs. Roell and Miss Feith to keep their life preservers within reach at all times." To the Princess Juliana he said, "I shall advise Your Royal Highness the instant the Heemskerk returns."

All afternoon and evening they waited for the destroyer. The ocean suddenly seemed immensely lonely. Until the sun set, Zussie found herself scanning the horizon for a glimpse of a tiny gray silhouette.

By the next morning the Heemskerk still had not returned, and no word had been received from her. If she has been torpedoed by a submarine, then surely the sub will now be attacking us, Zussie thought, glancing nervously over the rail at the sea.

She went down to the cabin and threw a few things into a suitcase. Now what shall I pack for a lifeboat? she thought, and gave a little giggle. She was surely becoming lightheaded. Sunburn lotion would be a good thing, if only I had some.

A sailor knocked on the cabin door and handed her a pile of baby's diapers fresh from the ship's laundry. He looked embarrassed and retreated hastily.

In another moment there was a second knock at the door. Standing in the corridor was a bashful sailor holding a wooden toy. He passed it into Zussie's hands.

"It's for the Princess Beatrix," he mumbled. Zussie could see that it was a toy locomotive, hand-carved and painstakingly sanded and painted.

"I guess it isn't much of a present for a girl," he added apologetically. "You see, I have a boy about Princess Beatrix's age. I intended it for him on our last cruise. I was going to give it to him when the ship got back to Holland."

He turned and shot off down the ship's corridor. "Wait, wait!" Zussie cried after him. "It's a beautiful toy. Don't you want to ——" But he was gone. The nurse sat down on the bed and began to cry. She felt as though the woes of the world were upon her.

The evening of the fourth day, the Heemskerk suddenly reappeared. She had lost the Sumatra trying to track the submarine.

Her safe return put everyone in high spirits. Soon they would be in Halifax. Zussie suddenly realized that when they left the Dutch ship and stepped on Canadian shores the last link with their homeland would be severed.

No more submarine alerts marred their trip. When they anchored at last off Halifax, Princess Juliana felt that a speech of gratitude was in order. She spoke from the main deck of the cruiser, and three hundred Dutch tars in their dress uniforms with brass buttons brightly polished lined up to hear her.

Princess Juliana's message was one of faith and courage and expressed the hope that they would soon all meet again on the soil of home. When Zussie thought of the sailors' families in Holland, helpless and unprotected, and the sailors' own stern duty elsewhere, she began to cry. Indeed, from the captain to the youngest mess boy, faces crumpled and tears fell. Even the imperturbable Mr. Sesink stood blinking by Juliana's side.

The royal party went ashore and the Sumatra headed to the Netherlands East Indies. Fully half of her crew never returned.

The royal party soon left Halifax and motored to Ottawa, where they had been invited to be the guests of Juliana's Aunt Alice and her husband, the Earl of Athlone. Trix refused to be parted from her toy locomotive and carried it under her arm; she also insisted that they take along the small string hammocks and life belts made for them by the Sumatra's crew.

The thin dark spires and steeples of Ottawa brought vividly to Zussie's mind a picture of the Houses of Parliament along the Thames. The royal party moved into Government House, a large stone Victorian-looking mansion set in a fenced park in the suburbs of Ottawa. Zussie found the atmosphere awfully English. She urged Trix not to shout as she Good Morning, darling . . .

You were so pretty sleeping this morning that I could not wake you. You looked as you must have when you were a child . . . warm, relaxed and dreaming about something quite wonderful. You had a little smile on your face and some of that blue-violet blanket against your cheek . . . and a lump came into my throat as I looked at you.

Beloved things are always beautiful . . . the woman for the wonder of her . . . the St. Marys Blanket for the color it casts across a cheek . . . for the sun-warmth it gives in darkness . . . for the years its soft strength comforts and contents.

ST. MARYS BLANKETS

ST. MARYS, OHIO

St. Marys

© 1954
St. Marys Woolen Mfg. Co.

TWIN BED, DOUBLE BED AND KING SIZE BLANKETS • AUTOMATIC BLANKETS • BABY BLANKETS • ST. MARYS FABRICS ran through its silent corridors and tried to make her tiptoe past the governor-general's study when they went out to play.

Evening dress was required each night, which vexed the ladies, as of course they had none with them.

At Soestdijk, evening dress was seldom worn and one was apt to see the ladies in the same gown time after time. Even Princess Juliana thought nothing of making a dress "do" two or three years. But Zussie noticed that the diplomats' wives she met at Government House seldom appeared in the same costume twice. She had never seen women with such extensive wardrobes. In the end, however, Juliana and Martine and Zussie each bought one evening dress in an Ottawa department store and wore it every night.

When Princess Juliana took the children to a pediatrician for routine checkups, Trix passed the examination with flying colors. The doctor also pronounced Irene in excellent health. He prescribed for her six meals a day of milk formula and strained baby foods. Zussie glanced over at Juliana and they both burst out laughing.

The first German air raids on the British Isles had begun, and Juliana worried increasingly about Bernhard in London. Soon five hundred Luftwaffe planes a night would be pounding the British capital.

"My husband is one of the most tireless people I know," she confided in a radio address to the Canadian people. "My only fear is that he will expose himself to too many dangers, because of his reckless nature and his complete disregard for his own safety."

Juliana wrote the speech herself, as usual, and from the reactions Zussie gathered later, the Dutch princess' simplicity moved her listeners deeply. "And then there are my two children," she remarked. "You will see them quite often among you, for we do not like to lock ourselves up. It is just not in our nature. I hope that you will be kind to them. I think that they are very sweet children. Above all things, they smile quite easily. Please give them your smile and they will be happy."

The princess was anxious not to impose upon her Aunt Alice any longer than necessary. She urged the aide-de-camp to find the exiles a place of their own. The group was quite strapped for money and did not know at this time what funds would be available to them in Canada, so the princess suggested a furnished house at a moderate rent. During Ottawa's wartime boom, this was not easy to find.

At length he located a house for rent on Lansdowne Road, in a wooded section on the outskirts of the Canadian capital. It was a gray fieldstone house with French windows and overlooked a small lake. Similar moderate-sized homes surrounded it on one- and two-acre plots. Juliana was enchanted with the place, and throughout their stay stoutly maintained that it was perfectly comfortable.

"When you forget something upstairs at Soestdijk," she would remind dissenters, "you have to walk a mile to get it."

Somehow eleven people of both sexes and all ages were crowded into the six-bedroom house. Juliana organized the sleeping arrangements. The biggest and best bedroom, which had two dressing rooms and a bath, she gave to the aide-de-camp and his wife. Juliana, Zussie and Martine took the remaining three bedrooms on the second floor, the princess taking both her young daughters in with her. If Irene were sick during the night, or Trix woke up and cried, their royal parent was only three feet away.

The same small bathroom was shared by Princess Juliana, Zussie and Martine and the three children.

A rumpus room in the basement became the sleeping quarters for the two detectives. However, to use the bathroom they had to go up three flights of stairs to the attic. There Colonel Sesink and the cook slept in two small dormer bedrooms.

The first floor of the house had a living room, small dining room, very small and inadequate kitchen, and a front den with a fireplace. This last room was about the pleasantest in the house. The aide-de-camp used it for his office. The children turned the upstairs hall into a playroom where their tricycles and roller skates often tripped up the detectives headed for the attic.

ONE male member of the household was a dour pessimist. He remarked often that none of them would ever return to Holland. The Germans had taken over the country for good, he said.

His pronouncements always provoked an argument. "Please, please!" Juliana would remark. "Let's keep our tempers and try to act like one big happy family."

Friends in Ottawa helped the princess to secure a servant, an English cook, who struggled along for a while but soon threw up her hands and left. After her came a long succession of French-Canadian women whose tolerant attitude toward dust and dirt often horrified Zussie. At her Hilversum home the servants scrubbed the front steps and sidewalk daily and every brass doorknob shone bright as a mirror.

Finally there came a time when there was no servant at all and everyone pitched in.

Juliana and Martine did the marketing by turns. At first the princess was not too familiar with quantities and was apt to bring home one bunch of carrots and ten pounds of onions for supper for eleven. However, they managed to keep the household running with everyone helping with the dusting and making beds.

The Dutch princess adored shopping for clothes in Ottawa where nobody recognized the blue-eyed blond woman in a cotton dress and sensible shoes. Often she went from store to store comparing prices, something she never could have done at home without starting a riot. Her motto was, "The best possible quality at the lowest possible price," for she was never fooled by inferior materials or workmanship. Finally Juliana became quite an expert on Ottawa shops, and if Zussie managed to find a free moment to rush into town to buy something, the princess would examine seamless stockings born for bare shoes

by Hanes

efully in her fingers and sometimes say, 's very nice, but if you had gone to such-d-such shop I think you might have done ittle better for the money."

One day the Groningen girl was startled to d Martine Roell in the cramped little kitchen ng on a big white cook's apron. Martine s a tall, attractive brunette with an excellent ure and fine carriage. Zussie recalled how autiful she had looked in a red satin gown dinner parties at Soestdijk. "If you will take e of the children and the laundry, I will do cooking," announced Mrs. Roell.

One of the big difficulties in keeping a cook d been that this Dutch group ate not three six meals a day if one counted teatime and venses, and the children's supper. The stacks dishes and pans were enormous. Fortu-ely the house had something the women d never seen before—an automatic dish-sher.

n breakfast Martine prepared a typical tch breakfast of white bread, yellow cheese d tea. To this, Juliana soon added her new covery of orange juice, cider or other fresh it juices as well as cornflakes.

At eleven A.M. café au lait was served, a de-ous beverage of coffee and warm milk and am, very frothy on top. At Soestdijk the tmen carried about the silver coffee trays different parts of the palace. At Lansdowne ad, it was Juliana herself who carried in the in crockery coffee-and milk pitcher d cups.

Dinner was at mid-and consisted of a am soup, a meat h, potatoes, vege-les, sweet dessert or it. Juliana had er tasted broccoli ore and was ecstatic r corn on the cob, egetable unsuited to lland's short, wet nmers.

Zussie loved Dutch serts, marvelous coctions of cream, ringue, ices, sauces d inevitably a great scoop of whipped cream. wever, Juliana was on a diet and requested it for dessert. She was delighted with an-er new food discovery: American salads.

The two detectives downstairs were not ppy about the menu. Occasionally, after a midday meal which ended with an apple tead of the traditional sweet dish, they uld sneak into the kitchen and attempt to ip up a dessert that tasted like home. After hile, the smell of something burning would d Juliana flying into the kitchen and the barrassed detectives back to the basement.

Tea was served at four, sometimes with et pastries, but usually with a few simple kies. The infants had their supper at six . and the adults sat down at the same time something known in Holland as "coffee le," a cold meal consisting of bread, cheese, d sliced meat and coffee.

Each morning Zussie descended to the ement to attend to the laundry. Within an r she was soaked with perspiration, for she s not accustomed to the hot Canadian sum-r. As she scrubbed and sorted and ironed ens of cotton frocks, she smiled to recall time when she had done little but sit by x's crib in a stiffly starched blue uniform. She had been out of uniform since leaving gland, and at that particular moment the ond heir to the Dutch throne—she noted ough the basement window—was allowing eighborhood mongrel to lick her lollipop.

"Trix was my bungle cloth," Juliana had harked the day before, referring to the ce of material on which Dutch girls first ctice their sewing.

There was no doubt that their new life eed with the princesses. Behind the field-ne house, a tiny white frame playhouse was lt for them, about the size of a tool shed. iana's playhouse as a child she inherited m Wilhelmina—a many-roomed, red-tile-fed Swiss chalet with its own goat barn and icken run, hothouse and dovecot. But the ls were enchanted with their bare little shack.

Trix was getting quite chubby on ice-cream cones, which she adored. She told Zussie that she loved the cozy feeling of a small house and having her mother home so much.

During the early part of the war, before the Pearl Harbor attack, the exiles managed to receive quite a lot of mail from home via the United States. After the entrance of the U. S. into the war, all mail communication with Nazi-held countries ceased, but some letters still trickled in, written in code and readdressed to Lansdowne Road by intermediaries in neutral countries such as Switzerland and Portugal and even Persia.

Bernhard saw to it that Zussie's family was notified of her whereabouts. It was with tremendous relief that she received a letter from her mother one day, telling her they were all safe and that food stocks were still plentiful. The letter mentioned that the Germans had forbidden, under penalty of death, the honoring of any living member of the House of Orange.

One day Trix asked her mother why none of the stamps on letters from home were pasted in the upper right-hand corner, but always a little to the left. Juliana explained to her daughter that bad soldiers had burned up all the Dutch postage stamps with granny's picture. The Dutch refused to paste the new Nazi stamps in "the queen's corner."

Juliana was deeply touched when she was told about the spontaneous demonstration in Holland on Bernhard's birthday on June 29, 1940, six weeks after the Nazi occupation began, when hundreds of Dutchmen appeared on the streets wearing white carnations. When the German police realized that this was a tribute to the absent prince, they began ripping them off. Soon they were yelping with pain, blood spurting from their slashed fingers. The canny Dutch had threaded the stems through razor blades before attaching them to their lapels.

I think a man and woman should choose each other for life, for the simple reason that a long life with all its accidents is barely enough for a man and a woman to understand each other; and to understand is to love. The man who understands one woman is qualified to understand pretty well everything.

—J. B. YEATS
Irish Digest
(C. J. Fallon, Ltd.)

In England, however, Zussie gathered, the prince was being treated with considerable coldness and suspicion. Even the personal intervention of King George VI failed to persuade British Intelligence to give the former German prince an assignment. "A leopard can't change its spots," remarked a high-ranking English officer to Bernhard's intense chagrin. But although bitterly disappointed at his reception, the prince was not sitting idly by as the Battle of Britain raged in the skies. He was already in training with the Royal Air Force.

It was a year before Juliana saw her husband again. One June evening in 1941, Mr. Sesink announced unexpectedly that Bernhard would arrive the next day. Juliana stared at her security officer unbelievingly, then rushed to tell the whole household the wonderful news.

It was decided to put another bed in Juliana's room and to move the children in with Zussie. Far into the night Zussie and Martine worked, cleaning out closets and bureau drawers and getting the room in spotless order for the meticulous Bernhard.

Martine tried to act gay and excited, but Zussie wasn't fooled. Nor was Juliana, who came up and put an arm about her shoulders.

"I wish that your William was coming," she told her. "Perhaps next time."

The pretty brunette shook her head and tried to smile. "He will never leave, Jula. You know that. Well," she added more cheerfully, "perhaps the prince will have news of him."

"Seyss-Inquart [Holland's Führer] has been to Soestdijk, and so has the Gestapo chief Himmler!" Bernhard told them almost as soon as he arrived. He was dressed in the uniform of the Royal Air Force, his newly won wings gleaming on his chest.

He explained that Soestdijk had been converted into a recreation center for the German armed forces. William Roell, Martine's husband, was now intendant of the palace. Before the Germans arrived, he had gone through all the rooms of Soestdijk, removing as many objects of value as he dared. The Aubusson carpets, the French porcelain, all the good silver and china and linens he hid piecemeal in the attics and barns of trusted palace servants. He even emptied the wine cellar.

The big bulky pieces which were too difficult to move, such as the malachite-topped antiques of Queen Anna Paulowna, he simply left in Queen Wilhelmina's section of the palace, roped off as in a museum. The German officers who took over the palace made one shivering tour through the cold unheated central section, then never went near Queen Anna's treasures again.

William Roell was waiting in the front hall of the central section the day Himmler was expected. Seyss-Inquart, the dictator of Holland, also waited for more than an hour, shivering and fidgeting on the broad stone steps. Finally the sound of motorcycles going very fast announced the arrival of the Gestapo chief.

In the middle of a cavalcade of cycles was an enormous black car bristling with machine guns and SS guards standing on the running boards. The sinister procession charged in

CONTINUED ON PAGE 129

THIS MOTHER'S DAY

Say it with Flowers-By-Wire

If you can't be with Mother on May 8, let the beauty of your fresh, living Flowers-By-Wire tell her of your love. Delivery worldwide, telegraph-fast, is guaranteed by your F.T.D. florist. Be sure to choose the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit Your F.T.D. Florist

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

New easy way to clean a whole house

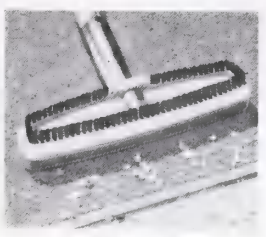
NEW G-E Roll-around Cleaner

only $69.95* COMPLETE

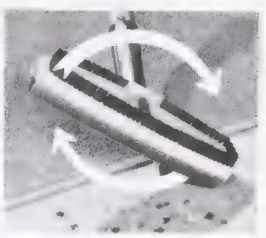
*Manufacturer's Fair Trade or suggested retail price. Complete with caddy and full set of attachments.

The new G-E Roll-around Cleaner is mounted on smooth-running wheels. You can roll it effortlessly all through the house. And it's light in weight—easy to take up and down stairs.

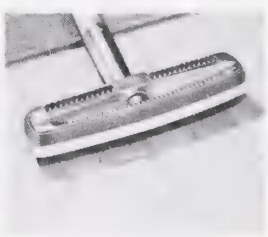
It's always ready for action! With its new 2-in-1 floor and rug cleaning unit attached, you're ready to clean rugs, carpets and floors (and that's 85% of the cleaning you do)! And it's so versatile! There's an attachment for every cleaning purpose.



See the new Roll-around Cleaner at your G-E dealer's soon. General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

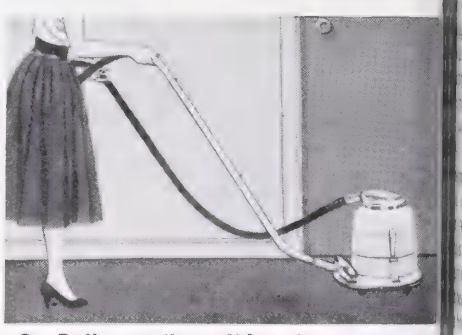


1. Stores easily — this new cleaner fi compactly into any corner or close Completely assembled—it's ready for a tion. Just roll it out . . .

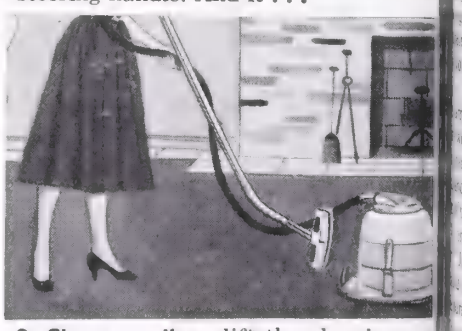


You can do two cleaning jobs easily with one attachment!

IT CLEANS RUGS!



LIFT, IT TURNS ITSELF OVER!



IT CLEANS FLOORS!

You clean your rugs with a powerful tool that gets up even "deep-below-the-nap" dirt. Then, lift the lightweight wand . . . the attachment turns itself over and . . . you clean your floors with a powerful tool that gets up even "deep-in-the-cracks" dirt! Only General Electric has it!

It's the most beautiful cleaner in the world . . . color styled by Freda Diamond.

2. Rolls easily—glides from room room, over scatter rugs and door sill Cleaning wand acts as a convenie steering handle. And it . . .

3. Cleans easily — lift the cleaning un from the built-in carrying cradle—clea rugs, carpets and floors without ev changing attachments.

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 127

ough the palace gates and Himmler, dressed in black, hurried up the steps, nodding ightily to the cringing Inquart.

William Roell was summoned to conduct Nazi hangman through the palace.

On entering the dining room, stripped of its herlands Antilles wall hanging and drapery and silver, Himmler asked in disbelief if royal family really dined in a room as bare uninviting as that. Roell replied that their al Highnesses were very simple and sober ple, who disliked luxury. Himmler soon ame bored and left, mumbling something ut turning the whole place into a museum.

How is William?" Martine wanted to w. "His letters are so gay—but how is husband really? Can he ever escape?"

He could escape, but doesn't want to," nhard replied slowly. is doing very valu- work in Holland."

ernhard at this time interviewing every ch refugee who man- l to escape to Eng-

Oh!" said Martine, lip trembling.

ne prince then told e stories to make n laugh. The Dutch, aid, loved to deride conquerors' boast rossing the English nnel, a boast which emptier and emp- s the months passed the British Isles re- ied uninvaded.

ernhard told of a ey-car conductor in terdam who watch- a German officer o aboard, his uni- dripping wet with What?" cried the luctor in a loud e. "Back so soon?" d then there was meek-looking clerk worked in Amster- s Social Security ing by day and nitted daring acts abotage by night. tually the Gestapo ed of his activities one day two burly ards marched into office building to t him. As they came gain, dragging the ch underground by the arms, every- n the street stopped watch sorrow- But the heroic merely remarked mildly over his shoulder milk vender, "No milk tomorrow!"

April, 1942, the Prince flew to Canada s wife's birthday. This time he made the tic crossing in an unheated Army er. The plane had no seats and for six- ours he lay on the metal floor in a flying ith an oxygen mask. The temperature in ane, he told them was 29 degrees below A crew member was assigned to keep ng and kicking Bernhard and the other gers to keep them awake. If they dozed eir oxygen supply might freeze and then would never awaken.

arrived at 6 A.M. and at once went up- with Juliana to wake the children. But tared at him without a sign of recogni- nd Irene hid under the bedclothes at the of this uniformed stranger.

only there had been time to prepare " Juliana moaned later. "Poor Bernhard. id their not recognizing him was like a urning in his heart."

morning of his arrival at 128 Lansdowne the prince was startled to find detective rgen pushing a vacuum cleaner in the room.

When he learned they had no servant whatsoever, Bernhard decided Martine was the most overworked. First of all, he said, they should hire a cook. Everyone agreed, but explained to him the servant problem. The prince went briskly to the telephone. In no time at all, the Dutch army delivered a cook at their doorstep from the training center in Ontario. The best part about the arrangement, Bernhard explained, was that as a soldier this cook was in no position to give notice.

EVERYTHING went along fine for six months until the cook developed stomach ulcers, and got a medical discharge. On his next visit, Prince Bernhard contacted the Dutch navy. They sent over a submarine cook whose nerves were somewhat shattered by twenty months' continuous undersea duty in the Norwegian fiords.

If anyone came into the cramped kitchen and rattled him, he threw pots and pans. When, shortly after his arrival, this Dutchman was told that Queen Wilhelmina was coming to the house for a visit, he crawled into bed and stayed there for four days. However, on the day the queen was due he got up and fixed a fine dinner without so much as a clatter of a pan.

During Bernhard's visit to Canada the next year, he helped Juliana rent a much larger house on Acacia Avenue in Ottawa. Even though the aide-de-camp couple had left, she needed still more room, for by this time a new baby was on the way. An excellent French-Canadian maid joined the household and when the submarine cook's nerves calmed down life became much more comfortable.

The prince managed to see them several times in 1942 when he was inspecting Dutch flight training at Jackson, Mississippi. Trix and Renée had begun nursery school and Bernhard was delighted with the speed with which they picked up English. During that summer they vacationed in the Berkshires in Massachusetts, and began using lots of slang with a Canadian accent.

Juliana had little knowledge of American slang. This sometimes caused embarrassing moments.

Once while on her way to a cocktail party, squeezed into the back seat of a car with several diplomats, she remarked to the gentleman next to her, "Are you a bit tight?"

"Not yet, Your Royal Highness," replied the Canadian cabinet minister.

Juliana was mystified until the joke was explained to her. Then she laughed harder than anyone.

When news that a royal child was expected was released to the press, baby gifts began arriving from all parts of Canada and the U.S.A. The princess told reporters that she intended to distribute all the presents to Dutch children at the end of the war. Some of the garments were exquisite—far nicer than the ones Juliana bought for the expected child. But everything was opened and admired, then carefully packed away for the day of their return, which seemed very, very distant in 1942.

The Canadian obstetrician insisted that the princess have her baby in a hospital. Juliana protested that this was entirely unnecessary

LINES WITH A HIGH MORAL TONE

BY GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

There is a lady in our town,
And sky-blue are her Cadillacs.
Headwaiters tremble at her frown,
And mink and ermine are her slacks.
Her mammoth penthouse with its terrace
Provides a place to lay her head
When she gets bored with Rome or Paris.
She has a spouse in oil, it's said.

And sad to tell, there are some girls
Who'd give the teeth they gnash to be
That lady with her furs and pearls.
But I'm not one of them. Let me
Just be my own sweet simple self,
From humble virtues never swerving—
But loaded with that bale of pelf,
Of which I'm sure I'm more deserving!

and Zussie was sure she secretly hoped the child would arrive in her own bed. But one January day in 1943 the princess suddenly came down with the mumps—which she caught from Trix—and the doctor wasted no time in getting her to the hospital, delighted that events had played so nicely into his hands.

A small four-room wing of the Civic Hospital in Ottawa was set aside for the delivery. The detectives occupied one room, Juliana's secretary another. By special act of the Canadian Parliament it was decreed that whatever spot the child was born in would be extra-territorial, so that there could be no doubt about the royal child's Dutch nationality. The baby was born at seven o'clock in the evening of January nineteenth.

Within an hour after the baby's birth, Bernhard, who had arrived a week earlier, was on the radiotelephone to England. "It's a girl," he told his mother-in-law, "and we're going to call her Margriet." (The name means "daisy," which had become in occupied Holland a symbol of those fallen in the war.)

"I am very, very glad," came back the cultivated voice of the queen. "Please kiss Juliana for me."

Margriet was put in a room next to her mother's. Still, all the hospital rules applied to her, and the little dresses which Zussie had brought from Acacia Avenue were all thoroughly cooked in the sterilizer before she was allowed to wear them. Zussie thought some of these newfangled procedures a bunch of nonsense. Besides, it ruined the clothes. They all became scorched or broke out in yellow spots. A fine way to show off a new baby! But it could not be helped.

Since the hospital was very crowded, Juliana kept urging her two nurses to help out with the other patients on the floor. "I can manage very well by myself," she insisted. When her aunt, Princess Alice, wife of the governor-general of Canada, came to visit, the nurses usually served tea. But Juliana did not approve of this, as tea was strictly rationed.

The day after the baby was born, Bernhard carried Margriet into a sunroom of the hospital for the official registration of a new member of the House of Orange. Juliana, in bed down the corridor, was still grossly swollen from the mumps, so that swallowing was most painful. However, she kept on gamely drinking quantities of liquid so that she could continue to nurse the baby.

Bernhard wore the insignia of a Dutch colonel. As chief liaison officer with the British army, navy and air force, he now "belonged." The new princess was wearing white organdy. She had lovely fine features, skin rather paler than her sisters', and light brown hair. She slept throughout the brief ceremony. Pinned to her pillow was an old family jewel, shaped like the daisy her name signified, with a pearl in the center and diamond petals.

Trix and Irene were allowed once in the hospital to see their new sister, although it was against the rules. They wore pale blue dresses and long white kid leggings with white buttons. Trix, now five years old, was terribly excited. "Bring her home right now, right away, while she's still little," she instructed Zussie. "I want to play with her before she grows up."

NEWS of the third princess' birth was relayed to Holland in a Dutch newscast from England. Although the Dutch were forbidden to listen to any broadcasts except German ones, the word spread as swiftly as though the great-throated cannon were booming out the news to the eleven occupied provinces.

"Our Julie has had her baby," a Zeeland woman wrote to her son in a concentration camp.

The German censor saw through the simple ruse, but this one had a sense of humor. He let through the information about the banished House of Orange, and even scribbled a postscript. "The name is Margriet."

Juliana was relieved to get home again with the new baby, but it was some time before she recovered from the mumps. Then Bernhard commenced to swell about the jaws. His wife's kiss of welcome when he arrived from overseas had given him the mumps as well. It was a kiss that saved his life, as Zussie and Juliana agreed many times later.

This is a remarkable story. For his return to England after the birth of Margriet, the prince was invited to fly one of a new series of B-25 Mitchell bombers from Florida to the fighting forces in North Africa. Because of his illness, however, he was forced to delay his departure by two weeks. When he was all recovered and ready to leave, he was told that his plane had been grounded indefinitely. The metal casing for the ball bearings, installed in Kansas City during the cold weather, had failed to withstand the intense heat of the tropics, he was told. Of the twelve planes which attempted the flight across the Atlantic, nine crashed, killing all their crews.

The young princesses in exile soon became used to their father's sudden comings and goings. Their mother, too, began to make many good-will trips, to Surinam and the Dutch Antilles, to Hyde Park, N. Y., to visit the Roosevelts, and to other parts of the United States. Occasionally their parents would take them into the Laurentians for a week of skiing. In summertime, they went to the lakes for swimming or boating. The children looked forward to the prince's visits enormously. Trix especially began to long to have him with them all the time. She could remember little of their life at Soestdijk, but she realized dimly that her real home was far away, across an ocean.

"Why can't we go back to Holland?" asked her mother one day when they had been talking about home.

Juliana replied, "There are good soldiers and bad soldiers in the world. Right now, the bad ones are in Holland. After a while they will be chased out and then we shall all go back."

"Daddy too?" asked Irene.

"Daddy too," sighed Juliana.

Soon afterward Juliana received a delegation of the Dutch armed forces at their home on Acacia Avenue. Trix and Irene were brought in to shake hands and curtsy. Irene searched each Dutch soldier's face carefully

Kitchens Make News

Glamour comes into the kitchen with appliances in colors to match walls and cabinets, and other revolutionary changes for the adventurous in kitchen planning.

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

Refrigerator hangs on wall at comfortable height so entire store of fresh and frozen food is easy to see and reach. Cabinet just over 5′ wide has 8-cubic-foot refrigerator plus 2-cubic-foot freezer. Motor on top uses space beyond arm's reach. Doors have no handles, so are cleaned in simple strokes. Finger grips at the bottom open them and lifetime magnets hold them shut. Here, the counter space that we feel should always be near a refrigerator is part of the pass-through to the dining room.

Built-in Appliances are Here. There's hardly a homemaker who hasn't muttered, "Why don't they do something?" as she mopped spilled soup from around the range or fished an odoriferous onion from behind the refrigerator. Built-in appliances now available for kitchens eliminate crevices and inaccessible, dirt-collecting openings, reduce laborious cleaning. They have a planned look too. Some of the new built-ins have ingenious features. . . . Separate 3′-wide refrigerator (8-cubic-foot) and freezer (6-cubic-foot) sections can be fitted one on top of the other in the space normally allotted to a refrigerator. . . . Two makes of refrigerators, one gas, the other electric, have frames for standard models that close the cracks yet allow the mechanism breathing space. . . . A double-door feature of an electric oven, installed flush at any height, pleases us, for there's no reaching over a door of the drop-leaf variety to take out a turkey or cake. . . . The modern cook can compose her own gas or electric cookery top from sections with different groupings, some including griddles and well cookers. . . . There is even a complete kitchen center with oven, cooking top, dishwasher and combination washer-dryer that fits under a continuous top of stainless steel. . . . A sensible variation of built-in ranges: separate units, completely finished on the outside. They still allow for flexibility in arrangement, but because they stack on instead of fit into cabinets they save installing costs. . . . And right here a memo to manufacturers: Installed appliances have a permanency, so please design so adjustments can be made from the front.

en asked, "Mommy, are these all good ldiers?"

When the answer was affirmative, Irene in- ted, "Now I want to see a bad soldier."

Then one day came the sad news of William ell's death. His activities had finally been scovered by the Nazis.

Everyone at Acacia Avenue felt the loss of e gay and valiant William. Martine moved rough the days pale and lifeless as a ghost. en little Renée, who could not remember r father, went about with a sad and stricken e. The war—a far-off and meaningless state affairs to Trix—suddenly meant the death her best friend's daddy.

The Christmas following William Roell's execution was a melancholy affair. Always before the group had drawn comfort from the thought that surely by next Christmas they would all be reunited with their families in Holland. Now this would never happen. At this time of year they were all more than a little homesick, anyway. The traditional English carols fell strangely on their ears. And of course in Ottawa there was no Sint Nicolaas.

None, that is, until Juliana tapped Mr. Welbergen. She and Zussie put their heads earnestly together over the transformation of the elderly detective into a medieval bishop from Spain. Zussie found a scarlet curtain hanging over a bookcase in the basement which they stitched into a handsome red robe. Welbergen himself fashioned a mitered bishop's hat of cardboard, and covered a wooden staff with gilt paint. Martine sewed a sack for toys, and gathered a handful of switches for the good saint to carry. Juliana helped paste on his white cotton beard.

All that Welbergen lacked was a white horse to ride and dozens of Moroccan pages in velvet tunics with black shoe polish smeared on their faces. But Trix and Renée and Irene, never having seen the colorful pageant of Sint Nicolaas' arrival at home, were none the wiser.

Zussie was sure that they never guessed the identity of their visitor who arrived yearly on December sixth for the Feast of Sint Nicolaas. But after he had played the role the third time, Trix began to wonder out loud, where was Mr. Welbergen?

The next year Juliana decided it was time to try someone new, so she asked Zussie. The nurse, covered with grease paint and whiskers, and with pillows stuffed under her scarlet robe, had a hard time not laughing at Trix. The oldest princess was torn between hiding her hands behind her back and reaching out for presents from the sack. Her fingernails were bitten down to the quick, and obviously she didn't want the saint to know. To naughty children he gave only switches.

Irene never said a word, but watched the saint's face intently. Afterward she remarked, "It was Zussie."

"Whatever makes you think so?" asked her mother.

Irene shrugged and said in the calm, offhand way in which she can make beautifully pointed observations, "I recognized a wrinkle in her forehead."

Zussie laughed when she heard the story, but it made her feel old too. Irene, who had been snatched from the Nazis in a puppy basket, was now almost five years old. Soon, however, very soon, they expected the Allies to invade Occupied Europe.

Queen Wilhelmina often discussed with Bernhard what her return to Holland would be like. Undoubtedly the retreating Germans would raze every royal residence and she would be homeless. She pictured herself knocking on some Dutch farmer's door and asking for a meal and a bed.

It seemed to Zussie that her monarch almost enjoyed the prospect. During the war, the Dutch queen received in her Maidenhead home every bona fide Dutchman who managed to cross the English Channel. By kind, searching questions she drew forth from her countrymen every detail of their lives under Nazi rule.

Not since the time of William the Silent has the proud House of Orange been so close to its people, reflected Zussie.

Princess Juliana planned to join her mother in her return from exile. When D day came in June, 1944, the princess jubilantly began preparations to go home. But it was not until the Belgian seaport of Antwerp was freed in September that she received word to fly to England to be on hand for the Dutch liberation.

She had been gone only a few weeks, however, when the Allied attack on Holland ended in the disastrous Battle of Arnhem. When the winter of 1944 began, Holland was still in the hands of the Nazis, except for a narrow corridor held by the Allies in the south. Sickened and depressed at the unexpected turn of events, Juliana took a military plane back to Canada.

When Queen Wilhelmina learned that the Germans were not likely to be dislodged from her country for some time, she insisted upon visiting a sector of the Dutch liberated zone. Allied commanders threw up their hands at the mere mention of such a hazardous undertaking. They pointed out that in some places the Allied corridor in Holland was only half a mile wide, and German snipers were active everywhere.

Prince Bernhard, who was then helping to direct the various Dutch resistance groups from Allied Headquarters in Southern Holland, replied, "I agree completely. The trip is far too dangerous and Her Majesty is very likely to get killed. But the queen wants it, and that is that."

Now came the news to the liberated Dutch village of Eede-Aardenburg in the Allied-held corridor in South Holland that within an hour Queen Wilhelmina would arrive. There was no time to hang out flags or to prepare speeches. The town crier beat on a big copper drum and the burghers, lacking any white paint, spilled a precious bag of flour on the ground to mark the line between Belgium and Holland.

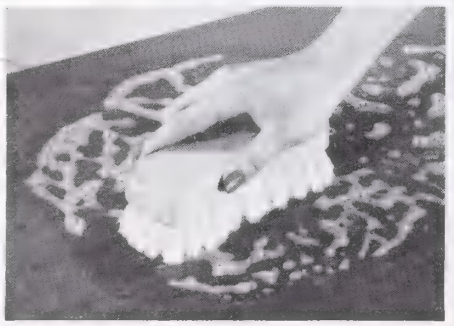
Part of the Netherlands had boundaries and a queen again.

Next month: Home to Holland: Trix and Irene bridesmaids at Zussie's wedding.

anges in sections, with separate ovens nd cooking tops, return favorite waist- igh ovens to kitchens! Gas oven at right ith striking black enamel front has easy- eight broiler in drawer below. To ease itchen traffic, surface burners are on an- ther wall. Divided ranges are wonderfully exible, but* JOURNAL *planners caution they ren't convenient unless each section has ork counter and storage near it.

With sliding-door wall cabinets, color combines with sturdy white steel. Doors here are pegboard and can be painted to taste. One of several types, they allow ventilation and provide an interesting surface. Shown on the end of the counter are electric surface units that come in pairs and when not in use fold up to the wall to free counter underneath for other work.

eport on Ranges. We all bless regulators that old the heat line in ovens—for soufflé, Swiss eak or what have you. Now we welcome in- enious controls that control surface cooking o. They feel pan temperatures and regulate eat so carefully there is almost no chance of urning dinner; reduce pot scouring too. . . . We e pleased, too, that new gas-range pilot flames r matchless lighting are throttled down to tiny ots. They burn less hotly, kitchens will be more mfortable. . . . A novel meat thermometer in new-model electric range uses a skewer ar- ngement to register doneness of meat or oultry inside the oven on a lighted dial out- de. . . . Cleaning ovens, which we rank as one the least imaginative kitchen chores, has und an imaginative solution. It's done with il liners which are replaced when they are ease-spattered. . . . The cook creates her own adow in many kitchens with a single ceiling ght. A full-length cool fluorescent light on the ck panel of some gas and electric ranges seems fine solution. It swings to the front for a clear ew of the tapioca or oyster stew. . . . Home- akers who cater to large families have pleaded r bigger ovens. Have heart, many are room- —an electric-range one is 30″ wide!



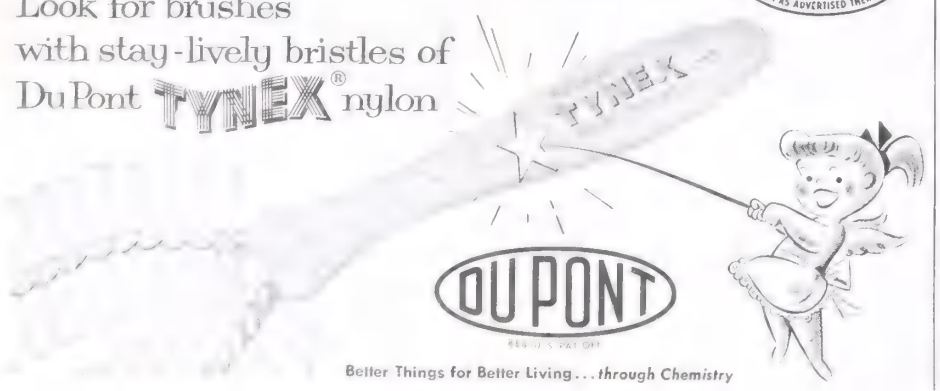
New Freezer Facts. No space for a freezer in the kitchen? Perhaps a new almost pocket-size edition will fit there or in the dinette. It's 30″ x 42″ closed, has a hard plastic top with a drop leaf that opens to become a snack table or work counter. The freezer door at one end has a toe-touch opening control and inside are two drawers that hold as much as 150 pounds of frozen food. . . . A boon to freezer owners, who logically enough have no interest in doubling up on space for frozen food, is a refrigerator with no freezer section—although it does have ice trays. It's an 8-cubic-foot model and holds 30 per cent more fresh food than its companion with a freezer and costs about $100 less. . . . For those starting from scratch, there is a complete cold pantry. An upright freezer and a refrigerator are combined side by side in a single 16-cubic-foot cabinet. The two sections are separated by an insulated wall, and each side has its own door opening from the center out. . . . The appeals from homemakers who would rather take their exercise some other way than stooping to search out meal-to-meal food from the bottom of a refrigerator have been answered—with freezer-at-the-bottom models. This new arrangement is logical enough; for most of us reach for eggs or milk or salad fixings four times more often than for frozen food.

Stay-lively bristles of DuPont TYNEX® nylon almost do the work for you

1. HANDS STAY DRY . . . when you use this long-handled dishwashing brush. Its firm "Tynex" bristles whisk stubborn foods off dishes, won't absorb odors, clean with a rinse and shake!

2. YOU MAKE LIGHT WORK of the toughest jobs with this sturdy scrub brush bristled with "Tynex." And you'll find "Tynex" bristles last 3 to 5 times longer than ordinary bristles.

3. RING TEST shows how "Tynex" bristles squeeze into tightest places, then snap right back as straight and springy as new. Even boiling won't take the life out of "Tynex" nylon bristles!



4. SKIN FEELS GLOWING, REFRESHED! This bath brush with "Tynex" bristles is soft and gentle, yet leaves skin clean and tingly. Be sure your household and personal brushes have "Tynex" bristles.

"Tynex" is the registered trade-mark for genuine Du Pont nylon bristles

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if Not as Advertised Therein

Look for brushes with stay-lively bristles of DuPont TYNEX® nylon

DUPONT

Better Things for Better Living . . . through Chemistry

YOUNG ENOUGH TO KNOW BETTER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55

mother's question reached her. "Going to the beach . . . with the girls," she added.

"All right. Have fun. And be careful." Judy could picture her mother shaking her head a little as she spoke. "Don't know why I say that," she would add. "Not that I don't trust you, baby. It's just that you're so . . . impulsive sometimes."

"Me?" Judy would answer. "Steady, reliable Judy Warren? Impulsive?"

"Go away with you," her mother would say.

Mother was fun, really. She worried too much, of course—but then, Judy thought, she might be like Eleanor's mother, who never left Eleanor alone for a minute, or Annie's, who never paid any attention to her. Dad too. He didn't worry as much about little things as mother, but he got upset sometimes—then she had to watch her step. Like last night.

She put last night firmly out of her mind. Before she'd gone to sleep she had decided that she'd go off alone today, to the beach. She'd spend the day by herself and work out what her family had been trying to tell her, she'd figure out Alan, and then she'd know what to do. But her thoughts had been so confused last night, and she'd been angry—even at dad—and it had been hard to think.

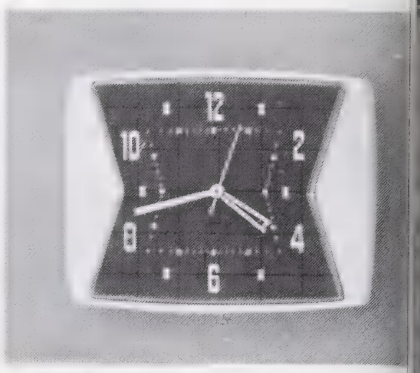
There was a slight tie-up ahead of her at the stop light. There often was at that corner. She was on a parkway that went to the beach and beyond—but this one corner got all the traffic coming to the beach from inland. There was a bus line from the city that connected with the line to the beach, so there were always people standing and waiting for the beach bus, and sometimes the people in cars would give them a lift as they stopped for the light.

You could tell the ones going to the beach, as a rule, because they'd have on sports clothes, be carrying little beach bags—and looking somehow different; men, women and children wearing a holiday look. Judy, waiting for the light to change, mentally picked out the swimmers and sun-bathers. Her eye was stopped by one, a young man, tall and thin. He was looking at her coolly, impertinently. He walked out toward her car. She knew he was going to speak to her and wished the light would change. There was something frightening in the way he stepped off the curb and made his way so definitely to her.

"Going to the beach?" he said, and he had his hand on the door.

"No," she said, and her voice was smaller than she meant it to be.

"Give me a lift to the turnoff?" he asked, reaching for the door handle.



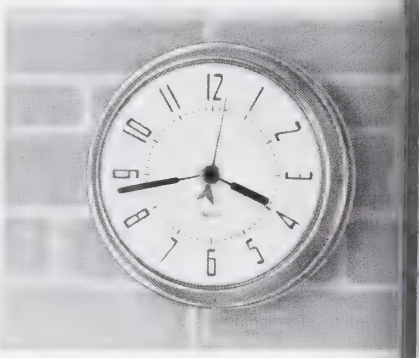
"No," she said again, and this time her voice was louder. At that moment the light changed. "Sorry," she said, and started to move.

His hand left the door and he pushed toward her car for a second, to let another car go by. "O.K., sister," he said, and smiled, a cocky little smile that said, I'm not mad; it's your tough luck.

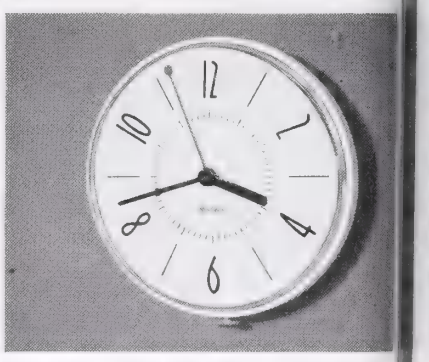
The smile made her angry, but she was a little relieved by it. She had been afraid. There was something so confident and purposeful in the way he'd singled her out and walked toward her. She was sure he would have got in the car if the door hadn't been locked. If the light hadn't changed just then, he would have been able to reach inside and pull up the button. She would have had to drive him, or raise a fuss, and that would have made a scene.

It was early still; the beach didn't fill up until well after lunch on weekdays. She was able to pull into a parking field without trouble, get through the routine of locker and bathhouse in a hurry, and to stake out a place for herself where she liked it, on the south side of the beach, where there was more privacy.

She went into the water fast, and for a few minutes forgot why she had come in the shock of meeting the cold water, and then in the pleasure of beating the big, soft-looking waves. She was a good swimmer, and she enjoyed swimming, the way she enjoyed skiing and horseback riding and golf—she had a body as live and taut and finely tuned as a



ZEST Electric Wall Clock is completely new. Dashing in design and color. White plastic case, only 5¾ inches high. Unique dial in red, charcoal or yellow. Non-breakable crystal. $6.95



Pretty as a Picture

Westclox Wall Clocks

SPICE Electric Wall Clock is terrific value! Non-breakable crystal. 5½-inch dial. Polished aluminum two-tone metal case in red, white or yellow colors. $4.95 Copper-finished case, $5.95.

PRIM Electric Wall Clock is trim beauty at a low price. Only 5¾ inches in diameter. Sturdy metal case. Red, yellow, white or green dials, $3.98. Sparkling chrome case, $4.98.

Prices do not include tax and are subject to change

WESTCLOX Electric Clocks

made by the makers of BIG BEN

La Salle-Peru Illinois

Products of GT General Time Corporation

od musical instrument, and she enjoyed us- it in competition; she liked the feeling of stering the elements, an oddly personal agonist when swimming or skiing or sail-, or the personal opposition in golf or tennis. She dried herself off on a beach towel, then etched out on it to sun and to think about problem.

She'd been out late last night with Alan tler. They'd gone to a movie, stopped at HiHat for a hamburger and a couple of nces. Then he'd taken her home.

Her mother and father had been entertain-, and were still up when she got in. She'd n surprised at that, and when they'd called her from the kitchen her first thought had n that they'd seen her with Alan and had own she'd had a little trouble with him, so was defensive when she answered.

But they hadn't—that wasn't it. They asked he'd been out with Alan again, which they w perfectly well, and she'd said yes, and realized they'd talked it over first.

You're seeing a good deal of him, aren't ?" her mother had said.

Some," she admitted.

I wonder if that's wise, Judy." Her father l it, sounding portentous.

I don't know that it's unwise," she said, ng to be patient. Why couldn't they take up with her some other time, when she n't disturbed? "He's a nice boy."

He's not a boy—that's just it," her father l. "Mind you, I have nothing against Alan. efer him to some of the noisier young men d hanging around. At least, when you go with Alan I'm not afraid you'll fall out of ar because there isn't any door."

So he's not too noisy and his car has rs," she said. "What more can a father ?"

Don't be flip, Judith," her mother said. It funny; Judy could tease her mother and teased right back, but if she started e her father, mother always stood up for as though he couldn't do it himself.

t's this," her father said. "You're eighteen, you may think you know all the answers— we're not sure you do. Alan isn't like the ng men you spend most of your time with— almost ten years older than you. It's a odd for a man of that age to spend so h time with a girl of yours. We'd prefer it if you saw a little less of Alan and a little more of your other friends."

This wasn't only something they had discussed; this was something they considered important, because he was doing the talking. She looked at her father and thought what a nice-looking man he was, sitting there with his coat off and a glass of milk in his hand, trying to tell her something. She wished she could rush over to him, rumple his hair the way she used to do, and say, "Never mind, daddy, I'll do whatever you say."

"You're still my little girl, you know," he said. "And I worry about you."

I'm growing up, she thought, I'm not such a little girl I need to be preached to. She looked straight at her father and said what he had been thinking but finding it hard to say. "If you are worrying that because Alan is older he is apt to be more serious about a girl—that, as you might have put it, he isn't going to keep on being satisfied with a good-night kiss the way the younger boys would—you might as well know ——" And she stopped deliberately, cruelly enjoying the look of shock on her parents' faces. "You might as well know," she went on, "that I'm smart enough to figure that out for myself. And I figured it out. I can take care of myself."

"I'm sure you can—or think you can," her father said quietly after a second. "I'm sure you're more than a match for any of your young friends. But Alan—he has an advantage, because of his age. And we've heard a thing or two about him."

"Don't you know how dangerous it is to say that?" she said. She was surprised at herself for answering like this, lightly but taunting him. "Don't you know you shouldn't tell a young impressionable girl that any man she knows is dangerous? That it adds to his allure?" They were not amused.

Her mother started to talk as though she hadn't answered. "It's not that we don't trust you, dear," she said. "It's just that we worry—that maybe you've got in beyond your depth."

"And we thought if we told you what it was we were worrying about," her father said, "you'd realize it was a problem like any other. It can be licked if faced, and we're here to help you with it."

She stood there, a thin white coat over her arm, a small purse in her hand, and wondered

Conquering a New Disease

By PETER BRIGGS

• Until a few months ago very small premature babies were kept almost continuously under oxygen. Tragically, about 25 per cent of them went blind with a disease that doctors called retrolental fibroplasia. That this can now be prevented is one of the happiest stories of this year's medical research.

Since 1942, it is estimated, more than 8000 premature babies have become permanently blind from retrolental fibroplasia. It is a new affliction. What, doctors worried, was its cause? How could future thousands of babies, born before full-term pregnancy but saved by the new advanced hospital care, be protected from becoming a lifetime burden to themselves and to the country?

To find out, a group of research teams supported by funds from the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness, a Federally financed research organization, went to work. For a total cost of $51,000, it can now be reported, they have solved a tragic enigma whose cost to the nation was already estimated at $800,000,000.

Reasoning from the fact that this was a new disease occurring only in premature babies, the doctors eliminated one by one all possible causes of the blindness with one exception. This was oxygen, given in large amounts to save these tiny lives. Experimenting first on premature rats, the doctors discovered that the blindness could be induced by a full treatment of oxygen but that giving oxygen only in moments of crisis practically eliminated any loss of sight. Later, tried out simultaneously on babies in hospitals throughout the U.S., the experiment was a complete success.

A few babies may still get retrolental fibroplasia, when oxygen is absolutely necessary, but a dreadful man-made disease can be wiped out.

Nevertheless, according to the Journal of Pediatrics in February of this year, "Numerous hospitals have not yet discontinued the routine oxygen administration to premature infants and very few have made adequate provision for testing concentrations. . . . If currently available information is disregarded and an infant becomes blind, the burden that lies on the physician and the hospital is unpleasant to contemplate."

It is to be hoped that the news of this medical discovery will be widely broadcast in the near future.

HARMONY
5-piece place setting 16.75

isn't this a dainty dish to set before your king?

Even simplest meals seem sumptuous on Syracuse' famous fine china. And how the man in your house appreciates this extra quality and beauty—served up daily! Which you can do—for Syracuse has amazing strength. Heavenly smoothness, rich lustre, gay new-looking designs are yours for years of big buffets and little breakfasts. The cost of so much loveliness? That's best of all. Experience and research over the years have shown Syracuse how to make finer china—less expensive.

SYRACUSE China

Beauty that works for a living!

Prices slightly higher west of the Rockies

ALPINE
5-piece place setting 12.75

LYRIC
5-piece place setting 9.75

VICTORIA
5-piece place setting 11.75

FREE Portfolio of Syracuse China patterns in full color . . . with helpful hints on choosing, using and caring for your china. Send for your copy today. Syracuse China, Dept. L-5, Syracuse 1, N.Y.

how she could suddenly see her parents as strangers—how she could feel that they were people apart from her who couldn't really understand her problems—and still love them.

Her mother, young and slim, blond as she was and two inches shorter, her soft pretty face looking a little perplexed—she hated scenes; her father, the streaks in his short dark hair adding to his good looks, his gray eyes searching for an answer, his pleasant mouth, a masculine version of her own, now drawn straight with thought. She knew they loved her, she could see it in their faces—and they were wondering why she suddenly seemed so hostile to them. All she wanted was to be left alone for a little while.

"If I feel I'm in trouble," she told them, "and need your help, I'll let you know." She turned and went upstairs, relenting enough to throw them down a soft "Good night."

Why did they have to pick that night of all nights to talk to her about Alan? She'd been going out with Alan for several months now—all summer—without any thought except that it was pleasant, sometimes exciting. It hadn't been until tonight that she realized she would have to do something about him—either handle him differently or stop seeing him.

It had been an ordinary evening, up to a point. Alan had called for her after dinner, driving out from the city, and they'd gone to a drive-in movie. Alan was usually amusing and she liked going out with him. Only a little taller than she, stocky and broad-shouldered, he danced beautifully and could hold his own at almost any sport. He was always on the move, his body matching his restless, inquiring mind. Most girls thought him handsome because of his vitality and alertness.

Judy liked him, and, being honest with herself, realized that she was flattered by the fact that he liked her and liked to take her out. She wouldn't have deliberately attempted to make an impression on a man as much older as Alan, but she had to admit that having made the impression, it raised her status with the girls of her own age, as well as those glamorous beings a few years older. But going out with Alan so much also had an odd disadvantage; it made her dissatisfied with most of the boys of her own generation. They suffered by comparison with Alan's worldliness and, more important, his confidence.

There had been nothing out of the way at the movie. They'd sat in his car, and he had put his arm around her, but that was neither unexpected nor unusual. His hand had caressed her arm lightly, and she liked it. After the show they went to the HiHat, sat at a booth and talked to other people they knew. They had danced a little, and at the end he'd danced her off the floor and out into a little grove.

Judy was a pretty girl and experienced, in some respects, beyond her years. Because she was smart and because she was pretty, many of her friends and most of her classmates at college were a couple of years older than she was. This wasn't the first time in her life she had been danced off the floor and onto a te race or into another room. Alan kept holdin her as he had when they had danced, and h reached over, as she had known he would, t kiss her. He had kissed her before, not often– but often enough so she knew what it was lik

But not this way. This was different. Th wasn't a nice-to-be-with-you-and-I-like-yo kiss. This was a kiss with fire behind it. Th was a man reaching, searching, pressing. Th was a device, a kiss being used to try to arou her. That had been tried on her before, to and she had always been able to make the bo feel that she wasn't interested, or that the m ment had passed.

Tonight it didn't work. She couldn't brea away. She didn't want to. One part of her mir told her to stop this. But her body was pressir against Alan's, as though of its own accor and she was kissing him back as eagerly as h was kissing her. There was a feeling inside h like an explosion, as though something war had burst and was spreading from her heart all parts of her, not warm and soothing b warm and pleasant and exciting.

Then she came back to her senses and pull back. "We'd better go in," she said, her voi shaky.

"Yes?" Alan said, but he didn't move, h arms remained around her.

"Yes," she said, and her voice was mo solid.

He pulled her back into his embrace. S wanted him to, but she knew she shouldn Something told her that pulling back wou only goad him on; instinctively she becan completely passive and nonresistant. H stopped after a minute and they went back

They didn't say much after that. Al seemed unusually thoughtful, his face set serious lines as he drove her home. Now I hurt him, she thought. But—that was getti too serious. He won't ask me out again no There's that party at the country club Satura night, he'd said something about taking me.

He got out of the car, walked her up to t door and kissed her good night casually. " seeing you," he'd said as she went in.

If they hadn't asked me about him just th she thought again. What could I say: "A kissed me"? But they probably know he kis me good night. I can't explain to them—it w different the way he was kissing me tonig And I liked it. I didn't want him to, and I wan him to again—I wanted to put my arms arou him and kiss him the same way.

There was a nagging thought at the back her head, one she didn't want to admit: They right, mother and dad. And she knew she w not upset because Alan had kissed her t way but because it had made her feel differ than she had ever felt before—and she kn that she didn't really like it.

Now that Alan had kissed her that w would he do the same thing the next time took her out? That's where her parents w right. The boys her own age, she could m

CONTINUED ON PAGE 136

you're swamped with 3500 dishes a month

here's help for dishwashing

Packed in a can as it should be—with a dripless spout

If you've ever felt you were up to your neck in dishes, then Lux Liquid is for you! Made especially for dishwashing, Lux Liquid floats grease off . . . gets plates and glasses sparkling clean, quick and easy.

Just a teaspoonful does a dishpanful . . . one can outlasts several boxes of the leading laundry powder. And so your hands stay nice, Lux Liquid's almost as mild as Lux Toilet Soap. We think Lux Liquid is the finest product of its kind . . . and unless you feel the same way, we'll insist on your taking back whatever you paid for it. Frankly, we expect you'll decide it's as right for dishes as Lux Flakes is for nylons.

A teaspoonful does a dishpanful!

P.S. Buy two cans of Lux Liquid. Use one for the dishes in the kitchen . . . one for washing dainty lingerie in the bathroom.

IT'S THE NEXT BEST THING TO A DISHWASHING MACHINE

QUIZ FOR A MOTHER-IN-LAW WHO KNOWS THE SCORE

By HELEN EVERITT

Test yourself as a mother-in-law:

1. If your bed is a studio couch in the living room, or the children's bed while they sleep in the hall, do you visit more than one week?

Or do you tell your daughter or son that you love to see new places on your own and get a room around the corner?

2. If you are just around the corner, do you tell your daughter when you are coming?

Or do you just drop in and sit?

3. If you occupy a guest room, do you retire to your room at intervals so she can stow skeletons in closets and perform miracles of accomplishment?

Or do you break into every task she starts, saying, "Let me do that for you, dear"?

4. Do you stand around in the kitchen saying, "I'd help you if I only knew where things were"?

Or do you go buy the evening paper and let her get a word with her husband while they do the work?

5. Do you take the children on outings all their own?

Or do you stay home and "assist" their parents in the upbringing?

6. Do you try to steer the conversation onto events about which only your son or daughter knows?

Or do you draw them out on their life of which you are not a part?

Wanda Landowska
Harpsichordist

"People who have nothing in their insides—in their souls—they are poor. But a man or a woman who has a conviction that something is beautiful, something is profound . . . it helps him to overcome his grief in very sad hours."

Bertrand Russell
Philosopher and Mathematician

"I think one of the troubles of the world has been the habit of dogmatically believing something or other . . . I think that we ought always to entertain our opinions with some measure of doubt."

Edward Steichen
Photographer

"Actors and actresses are most difficult to photograph. The thing that makes photography wonderful is getting models to be themselves. Well, actors can't do that. All actors can do is act."

Frank Lloyd Wright
Architect

"Early in life I had to choose between honest arrogance and hypocritical humility. I chose honest arrogance, and have seen no occasion to change, even now . . ."

Robert Frost
Poet

"I have hopes that the past will be found to have been all right for what it was. And the present, I hope will be found to have been all right for what it was, that it will have made its point in history . . ."

CHOOSE

Revere Ware...

THE "WORLD'S FINEST"

ENJOY THE WONDERS OF WATERLESS COOKING!

Revere Ware Sauce Pans – with copper on the bottom and tight-fitting covers – give you the full benefits of waterless cooking. More vitamins! Better tasting foods!

There are six sizes, from one quart to five quarts to meet every cooking need. Gleaming, easy-to-clean, copper-clad stainless steel utensils you'll be proud to own!

See the full line of Revere Ware at your dealer's . . . tea kettles, double boilers, Dutch oven, skillets, coffee makers, sauce pots, mixing bowls, handy pans, canisters, gift sets . . . all of them "Kitchen Jewels"! Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated, Rome Manufacturing Company Division: Rome, N. Y.; Clinton, Ill., Riverside, Calif.

Good cooks everywhere use...

COPPER ON THE BOTTOM MAKES THE DIFFERENCE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 134

age. Alan she wasn't sure of, wasn't sure she could keep any relationship with him if she put him off; wasn't sure she could keep putting him off—that was the trouble.

She moved a little, so the sun would hit another spot. Funny, the way the sand looked so soft, seemed so soft when you first got on it, and how hard and unyielding it became after you'd been lying in the same spot for a while. She should give Alan up—maybe she had? Maybe she wouldn't hear from him again? It was a thought she didn't take too seriously; she would hear from him. But from now on their relationship would be different—she knew that, and she knew that no matter what she told her family, she wasn't sure she could handle it.

She wasn't in love with Alan. She wasn't in love with anyone. She had momentary crushes, that lasted from ten minutes to a few weeks. Except for some of the boys she'd known for years, and with whom she had a pleasant, casual friendship, Alan was her longest-lasting "steady" and she knew he would never be any more than a man she liked to go out with. Of course she could stop seeing him—that would make her family happy, and solve her problem. But it wouldn't be any real solution—it would just be a surrender, an admission—and she didn't want to stop seeing him.

She had been conscious for some time, while concentrating on reliving the events of the night before, that someone was watching her, had been studying her for quite a while. She turned carelessly, as though looking at the wide white beach, to see who it was.

She didn't jump. She looked at the face and past it, casually, as though he were just another person on the beach, as though his deep-set, mocking, almost-green eyes hadn't stopped hers, hadn't looked into hers in a way that was startlingly intimate. For a fraction of a second she felt a physical shock as though they had reached inside her head.

It was the tall, thin young man who had tried to get into her car at the bus stop. She hastily revised her estimate; he wasn't thin. His face was thin and she got a quick impression, looking at it, of a hawk: his cheekbones were prominent and his chin pointed, so that his face seemed to be made up of two triangles pointing in opposite directions, with his thin straight nose bisecting the angle of the slanting eyebrows. His hair was sandy, a little unruly. His shoulders were wide and sloping and she realized he was extremely well built. It was only his height and the thinness of his face that had made him appear thin to her.

SHE looked beyond him, but knew he was still studying her. And she knew he was going to speak to her. But she didn't expect him to smile at her and say, "Hello, Judy Warren."

She turned and looked at him then, because she had to. "Hello," she said guardedly.

She had been lying with her feet pointing to the shore, sunning her back. He was sitting a few feet away, his back to the water, looking her up and down, openly and admiringly. She wasn't unaccustomed to admiring looks at the beach, or envious ones from girls. But now she wanted to blush—for the first time she agreed with her mother that though her black wool Tina Leser bathing suit was flattering to her figure, it was a little skimpy as far as cover-

SONNET

By EDLYN CANTWELL

Pluck the flowering branch from the spring-bright tree,
Turn then to me and hold it out in your arms;
I will reach for the flowers. You must not see
That my finger rests upon your sleeve, the alarms
Of your eyes have long taught me caution; now
I know well not to overstep my place, not to ask
Much of you. For you are careful in a way somehow
Most wild, to avoid my love. Impossible that the mask
Over my yearning heart will long stay in place;
When it does not, when you begin to see in some Tremble or sorrow, love revealed in my face Fear not. When you draw back, I will know and not come Again within your sight. I pray that you will not know Soon of my love. I do not wish to go.

ing went. She turned around quickly and sa up, automatically wrapping her beach tow around her. She knew that was a mistake th minute she did it, but there was no way to und it without making more of a mistake.

"Cold?" he said. It wasn't an expression concern or even curiosity; it was frankly conversational gambit. She refused it.

HE had called her by name. She wondered she had met him somewhere—but she was pos tive she had never seen him before today. Sh wasn't going to do something obvious like g up and leave. She couldn't give him the sat faction of letting him see that he was botheri her. And she had an idea that he would follo her if she got up.

She looked around at the beach. It was mo crowded now, but it was a big place. The were people within a few hundred feet. The was no one too close her. She had chosen spot for privacy, and comparison to some, s had it. Although she f that the young m would have behaved t same way if there h been people ten fe away. She could he the voices of children they went into the wat she could hear peo calling to one anoth It was a peaceful, n mal scene. There was reason for her to nervous.

She could go in water, she thoug There were more peo close to the water's ed he wouldn't bother there. But she knew would make thi worse. He would tak as an invitation, th she was going to water so he could fol her. You're lost if don't and lost if you she thought. If I ge to go he'll follow me if I object it will mak scene; if I stay here try to talk to me and get nasty it will be comfortable.

"You shouldn't d a yellow convertib he said unexpecte "A blonde like should have a dark show her off."

"Maybe I'm not trying to show off," said.

He shrugged. "Then why a bright ye car?"

"It's my father's," she said. And then cause she couldn't resist it, "He's not a blo

"I knew you were coming to the beach you wouldn't give me a lift. Why'd you "Did it ever occur to you that I might p to be alone?" she said coldly. "That I m not want your company?"

"How would you know? I figured it nothing personal, you just didn't know you were missing."

"Now I know," she said.

She pulled up her knees, wrapped her around them, rested her chin on her arms looked out at the ocean beyond him. The versation was over. He should see it w getting him anywhere and leave her alo

Instead he looked out at the ocean to know we haven't been introduced," he "That's no reason for you to high-hat m

"Then how did you know my name?" asked suddenly, and wanted to take it bac minute she said it; she had played int hands.

He looked at her, unable to conceal th that he had wanted her to ask that. "I fi you were on your way to the beach—yo looked as though you were," he said. when I got here—after standing up all th on the bus—I looked for a yellow conve in the parking lot. There was an empty

"Coffee-break"

with

Mary Margaret McBride

Recently, I was invited to "a coffee" and I suddenly realized that this is a new term in our language. "A coffee" is a social function at any time of day, but especially in the ternoon. And I must say that it's most easant. Often it is arranged in connecn with church or club work. A very pular new dictionary—highly authorita-e, too — defines "a coffee" this way: social gathering at which coffee is the in beverage served."

s proper to arrange "a coffee" almost time—and serve almost any sort of propriate snack along with the coffee. t that should be superb. It's so easy make coffee right so that it always is erb—you know, full of body and that cial deep-down good flavor! Here the simple directions of the Coffee wing Institute: Use one Standard Cof- Measure, or two level tablespoons coffee to each ¾ measuring cup of h, cold water. Once you've discovered right timing for your coffee maker, ays stick to it and time it exactly. fee should never be allowed to boil. best, of course, if you serve it the ant it's done. And if you have to let and, keep it hot by putting the pot very hot water—or leave it on an estos pad over a low flame.

Using a Standard Coffee Measure is the most convenient way to get the right amount of coffee y time you make it. You may have d one packed right into your favorite d of coffee. But if you haven't, just l a dime and your name and address to General Manager of the Coffee Brew-Institute at the address below and he send one of these bright-colored plas-coffee measures to you right away.

do remember: measure and time your e right — because there really is noth-so satisfying as a cup of good coffee.

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

551 Fifth Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

lope caught in the door. It was addressed to Miss Judy Warren, One-eighty-seven Oak Street." He moved closer to her. "My name's Ricky," he said. "Ricky Albert."

She couldn't ignore that. She didn't have to say "Pleased to meet you," but she couldn't keep staring at the ocean, so she nodded. An idea was forming in her head. This Ricky Albert was convinced of his attractiveness. He thinks he's God's gift to women, she thought, and in particular thinks he's going to be God's gift to little Judy. He's very sure of himself. He came to the beach to spend the day, decided to pick me up, and he thinks he's doing fine. And the funny thing is, he's going to be doing even better, but he doesn't know that yet, and he won't know why. He is attractive, and he's pretty sure he's irresistible, which may make him irresistible to some. I wonder what he'd do if he thought his little plan was going to work.

"Do you come here often?" she asked.

"Quite a bit," he said. "But you don't."

"Don't I?" she asked. He's going to tell me that he has been here often and has never seen me, and he'd notice a girl as pretty as I am.

"No," he said. "You usually go somewhere else—a swimming pool at a country club, or someone's private beach. You're slumming today—maybe you don't want to see some of your old friends."

She looked up and down the long, curving beach. I underestimated him, she thought. "I'd hardly say slumming," she said.

He chose to take it personally. "Thank you, ma'am," he said with mock humility.

It wasn't as easy to talk to him as she had expected. They had no people or past experiences in common to talk over; they were both playing a game, and that made it harder. It might have been dull—except that he obviously enjoyed talking to a pretty girl. He let her know unmistakably that he liked her looks, and thought she had class.

For her part, she found she had to keep on her toes. He had an exasperating habit, every time she thought she had him classified and could count on his next remark, of saying something she didn't expect. It took her a little while to realize that it was a trick, a different kind of line. He not only was doing it deliberately but would sort of draw back to see how it was working. That's his line, she thought. I can try mine—it's universal. So she started asking him questions. He answered a little suspiciously at first, but then, as she seemed interested, he began to talk about himself.

SHE listened, and she asked the right questions at the right time, and the longer she listened to him the better he liked her. And the more she could understand why he thought he was irresistible. He had been a poor boy, he said proudly. He had been partly supporting his mother, sister and a sick father while still in high school. The minute he graduated, he started to work in a large factory during the day and attended a technical school at night.

Now he was an assistant foreman at the plant, the youngest one they had. His father had died, and he was taking care of his mother and sister, who was still in school. The plant was working seven days a week, and he took his days off in the middle of the week because he was acting foreman when his boss was off. He was a young man on his way up, and very pleased with himself.

He let it be known that the girls he knew considered it an honor to have him call them, that he usually drove to the beach but he'd put his car in the garage to have some work done on it. She knew he was making a point of letting her know he didn't usually come here on the bus—and that she should have picked him up.

He suggested, once, that they go in the water, and they did. He didn't suggest it again. She was a better swimmer than he was, and it was obvious that he didn't like being outdone at anything, particularly by a girl. So they talked some more. He liked to talk about himself and his accomplishments, and she acted properly impressed. She found she had to keep sparring to keep him at arm's length, even verbally. He had a way of speaking elliptically, of saying innocuous things in a manner that made them extremely personal. She would have to keep him on the track, ask him a ques-

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

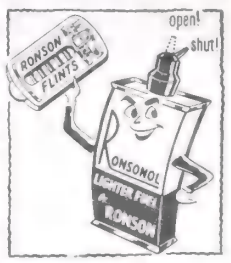
AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

DO YOU GLIDE with a smile in your smart new high heel shoes? You will if you cushion them on Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT CUSHIONS . . . for they instantly relieve painful callouses, tenderness and that burning high heel soreness at the ball of the foot. In fact, they provide the greatest walking ease I've ever experienced and it's easy to understand why . . . because they're soft, cushioning pads made of Latex Foam and nylon which nestle under the ball of your foot. So you see, you actually walk on cushions . . . since the cushion, not you, absorbs the shock of each step! They're scientifically designed and entirely new, too . . . instead of adhesive, Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT CUSHION loops over the toe and stays snugly in place. What's more, they're washable and priced just right . . . only $1 a pair at Drug, Shoe, Dept., 5-10c Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort Shops. Slip on a pair of Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT CUSHIONS today . . . and have happy, smiling feet from now on!

MAYTIME IS A WONDERFUL PLAYTIME for children . . . but even though the weather's warm, there's still a fair chance that your youngsters may suffer from chest cold miseries. So don't be surprised if that happens . . . but be prepared by keeping CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY handy to relieve their discomfort. It's a year-round "must" as far as I'm concerned . . . for you just rub it on a child's chest, neck and throat and it goes to work instantly to help the little one breathe easier and feel better! You can trust it completely . . . because CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY is a mild version of famous regular BEN-GAY (America's favorite rub-in for generations!) . . . and contains the same pain-relieving ingredients plus more lanolin for a child's tender skin! You'll find CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY at your Drug Store in the blue package . . . or I'll send you:

A FREE SAMPLE TUBE . . . to let you judge for yourself how safe and effective it is! To get yours, simply check OFFER #1 in box.

SPRINGTIME is housecleaning time . . . when you want to give special attention to a thorough cleaning of everything in and around the house . . . rugs, upholstered furniture, drapes, winter blankets, etc. That's why the makers of Odorless RENUZIT have chosen this time to make you a very SPECIAL OFFER . . . to help you take care of every dry cleaning chore with very little work and a minimum of expense! So listen carefully . . . during April and May, you can get the regular $1.79 gallon size RENUZIT plus the handy RENUZIT eraser to clean upholstery (a regular 35c value) for just $1.79 . . . the eraser is FREE! And a gallon of RENUZIT goes a long way . . . dry cleans everything that shouldn't be washed, quickly and easily. Furthermore, RENUZIT'S amazing formula contains no water . . . so there's no shrinking, no fading, no matting . . . and no odor, either! Now don't be late . . . get RENUZIT to help you do your Spring cleaning while this SPECIAL OFFER lasts!



MOTHERS KNOW it's important to guard against diaper rash . . . especially now that warm weather's here. That's why I'd like to call your attention to CHIX* Diaper Liners . . . for they're cottoned, not paper, and their cottoned surface is medicated to help prevent diaper rash . . . and keep baby calm, cool and comfortable! CHIX Diaper Liners are simple to use, too . . . just place one inside a regular diaper and when the cottoned liner is soiled, you flush it away. This is certainly a most sanitary way to diaper baby . . . because it eliminates much unpleasant handling of soiled diapers. Furthermore, CHIX Diaper Liners are made by a Johnson & Johnson Company . . . makers of famous Chix* Gauze Diapers, Chux* Disposable Diapers, Chix* Crib Sheets and Redi-Fol* Gauze Diapers. But judge their worth for yourself . . . by writing me for:

SPECIAL SAMPLES . . . to let you try CHIX Diaper Liners before you buy! You can get yours FREE . . . see OFFER #2 in box.

* Trademarks.

ARE YOU EMBARRASSED when your friends can't make your lovely table lighters light . . . because they need fuel? Well, you can now avoid that embarrassment . . . thanks to the exclusive new "Switch-Spout" on the RONSONOL can! You don't have to wait for your husband to fill your lighters . . . you can do it yourself easily . . . in seconds! That's because the new RONSONOL "Switch-Spout" ends complicated, messy lighter filling . . . and there's no cutting or piercing, no little cap to worry about. You simply flip it open, flip it shut . . . and it's sealed air-tight. Best of all, RONSONOL is the finest, most famous lighter fuel made . . . it lights instantly, burns cleanly, smokelessly and lasts so much longer. It's pleasingly scented, too . . . and the price is still only 25c a can . . . so buy 2 at a time to be sure to have some on hand. And get RONSON extra-length flints to keep your lighters sparking brighter . . . for they're 40% longer than ordinary flints and give 500 more lights!

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J-3, 271 Madison Avenue, New York 16, New York for:

☐ OFFER #1 . . . FREE SAMPLE TUBE of CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY

☐ OFFER #2 . . . FREE SAMPLES of CHIX DIAPER LINERS

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

NEW IDEA!

Good Seasons Salad Dressing Mix!

A famous chef put his secret blend of rare herbs and spices into envelopes—named it Good Seasons Mix. You add your own vinegar and oil and get the finest salad dressing you ever tasted. You'll want to try all five mixes, each makes a half pint in seconds—Old Fashion French, California French, Old Fashion Garlic, Exotic Herbs and Bleu Cheese.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY KIT—This Self-Measuring Bottle, 2 different Good Seasons Salad Dressing Mixes and a salad recipe booklet are waiting for you at your food store for only 39c.

FINE NEW PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

tion about something he had said earlier. He would get a little sullen, as though she weren't rising properly to his bait, but then he would start to explain and lose his hostility.

She had a little watch in her bag, but she didn't use it. She knew the hour, roughly, by the position of the sun and the crowded condition of the beach. But she asked him for the time when she felt she should leave. He told her, and she started to gather up her things.

"It's later than I'd thought," she said.

"Do you have to go?" he asked. "Can you have dinner with me?"

"Oh, no," she said. "I have to get back home."

He looked a little sulky, and she realized she had sounded too emphatic. "Some other time?" he asked. "If I called you?"

"I'm afraid not," she said. She tried to soften it with a smile.

It didn't work. "What's the matter?" he asked angrily. "I'm not good enough for you? I didn't go to college, I don't have a fancy car—is that it?"

"That's not it," she said. "I'm sure your car is better than those of most of the boys I go around with. And—you have already accomplished more than many of the boys I know ever will."

"But you won't go out with me," he said. "You think you're too good. You'll spend an afternoon talking to me on the beach—but you won't go out with me where anyone might see you. Anyone you might know."

"I've been talking to you for several hours," she said. "There is a better chance that anyone I might know would see me here than if you took me out."

"Then what is it?"

"You picked me up," she said. "You found out my name, you sought me out here on the beach. I couldn't very well get up and walk away from you without causing a scene. So I stayed and talked to you."

"Was that so bad?"

"It wasn't so good," she said. "I found it fairly interesting—for one afternoon. I can see no reason to repeat it."

She walked away quickly then, toward her locker. She knew he was hurt, that she had done something to his ego. She wouldn't have to turn him down again because he wouldn't risk a refusal by phoning her. She didn't have to look back to see if he was following her—she knew he wasn't.

I did that pretty well, she thought on the way home. Mother and dad would have been pleased if they'd seen the way I handled him. It's funny; he thought he was using me—picking up a strange girl on the beach, it would pass the time and who could tell what it might lead to? I'd gone there to work out how to treat Alan; this Ricky interrupted me—but he served my purpose. I can handle Alan too. Any time—this summer, or next winter if he should show up at school for a weekend. How to do it isn't such a problem; the trick is in knowing what you want to do, and being sure you can do it.

BUT WHAT'S INFLATION?

It was during the depression that one of the late Stephen Leacock's political-economy students asked the humorist to straighten out the terms "recession," "depression" and "panic." This is the answer he got: "Why, sir, it's not at all difficult, once we grasp the basic principle that it's all a matter of degree. Y'see, a recession is a period in which you tighten your belt. In a depression you have no belt to tighten—and when you have no pants left to hold up, that is a panic!"

The world had been full of problems wh she had started out for the beach. Now s was going home after a few hours that hadn been particularly pleasant, and she felt lig and gay and confident.

Her mother and father and Betty were hon by the time she got there. Betty was lickin an ice-cream cone, her mother and fath were sipping drinks on the front porch. Th looked at her as though everything were t same, as though nothing had happened.

"Hi! Have fun?" her mother asked.

She dropped her little beach bag on t porch floor, tried to get a lick of Betty's i cream and sank into a chair. "Sure," she sai

"Beach must have been nice," her fath said. "It was hot in town. Crowded?"

"It got crowded," she said.

"Guess who called?" Betty said, and Ju could hear a teasing coming.

"Who?" She acted bored and disintereste

"I get a nickel f messages," Betty sa "For this one it shou be a dime."

"You still owe m sixty-five cents," Ju countered. "Who w it?"

"Alan," Betty sa "He wanted you to c him. Said somethi about making pla for a dance at t country club Satu day."

"O.K."

Her mother and ther studiously look away from her. S wondered if she co explain to them tha was all right, that wasn't a problem a more.

"Are you going to call Alan?" her moth asked.

"I don't know," Judy said. "Not today. see if anybody else calls me; if not, I'll g him a ring tomorrow. There's plenty of tim

"What if he calls you first?"

"Then I'll talk to him," she said. "I c handle Alan."

"I think she can, too," her father said su denly. "Seems to me our little girl is grow up." And he gave her a smile that made I want to cry, proudly and with happiness. had caught this odd thing she felt, this n feeling of confidence, and he'd understood

She got up and sat on his lap for a seco rumpling his hair the way she used to wh she was younger. "Not so old," she said. "I grown up enough to know a couple of thing

"Such as?" He was teasing her fondly.

"Such as to say I'm sorry for the way I ac last night. And such as"—she jumped up a started inside—"to know that I've got a c ple of the nicest parents in the world."

"That takes in a lot of territory," her fat said quietly, putting down his drink. "But e so—I think we're pretty lucky, your mot and I, to have two of the nicest children."

Betty looked up suddenly. "Me, yes," said. "But what's so great about her?"

"Dad just included you," Judy called b condescendingly, "because you were sitt here and he didn't want to hurt your feelin

She heard her father laugh. "I take it back," he said.

FIRST TRAIN TO BABYLON

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59

The second story appeared on page 18:

June 14—A railroad crew on the Long Island Rail Road, working on the roadbed near St. Albans, just outside the city limits, came upon a strange sight today.

They were replacing an old drainage pipe under the roadbed when they discovered a large leather bag or pouch wedged into the pipe. The pouch turned out to be a bag of U. S. mail. The leather was cracked and moldy, but the pouch lock was still intact and unopened.

Postal Inspectors Thomas J. Harrigan and Arnold Peterson, of the New York District, were quickly summoned and impounded the pouch was then brought to the General Post Office Ninth Avenue and there opened.

The letters which the mail pouch contai still in good condition although faded, postmarked December 22, 1944. In view of unusual circumstances, postal authorities gra the press special permission to examine letters.

The postal inspectors were at a loss to exp how the bag got there. The time of cancella on the letters indicated the bag had been ca on the first train to Babylon, the early mail

CONTINUED ON PAGE 140

NOW! Together at last...to Last a Lifetime!

9" Serrated Edge Bread Knife $2.95

FLINT WITH Genuine Pakkawood TRADE MARK

The world's Finest Blades now have the world's most Luxurious Handles!

FLINT vanadium stainless steel blades with their high carbon content have been recognized for years as the world's finest—the standard of cutlery quality!

FLINT cutlery is hollow-ground to take and hold a keen, sharp edge that makes you quick and deft at carving, cutting, or slicing! And now Ekco has combined those world famous Flint blades with the world's most luxurious handles—handles made of genuine Pakkawood*

Pakkawood* is unlike any other wood.

You can't stain it!
It's impervious to burns!
It will not support disease-carrying bacteria!
It looks like and stays like the finest hand-rubbed imported woods through countless washings . . . through years of use! Pakkawood* handles last as long as Flint vanadium stainless steel blades!

Pakkawood* handles are now a feature of all Flint knives in sets or open stock. Available wherever fine housewares are sold in the United States and Canada.

EKCO®

FLINT

*Pakkawood is owned and manufactured exclusively by Ekco!

...the greatest names in housewares!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 138

on the routine run from Pennsylvania Station to Babylon, Long Island.

They pointed out, however, that the bag had been carried at the height of the Christmas rush when the mail cars are piled high, and that the pouch of first-class mail was thrown from the train without being missed. They believe the thief hid the pouch in the culvert with the idea of retrieving the bag at a later date, but perhaps was frightened off or decided not to run the risk. An investigation has already begun to identify the post-office personnel working the first train to Babylon on that date.

When queried as to what would happen to the letters, Inspector Harrigan said: "As far as the post office is concerned it's still a matter of routine. They'll be stamped 'Delivery Delayed,' and sent on to the people who were supposed to get them, if they can be located. Of course the letters will be ten years late. But," he added with a twinkle in his eye, "better late than never."

Two newspaper items in the June fourteenth issue of the New York Times. But who could have said that one was part of the other, and bound to it, in a strange and irrevocable way? Who would have noted the curious fact that each referred back to the same December day, ten years ago?

Certainly not Charlie Minner, a postman in the town of Norwalk, Connecticut. He read the New York Daily News, and never the Times. But on this bright and hot June morning, Charlie Minner had something special in the heavy mailbag he flung to his shoulder at the Norwalk post office. This was a letter marked "Delivery Delayed." The cancellation date was December 22, 1944. It was readdressed to a Mr. George Radcliffe, 3 Soundview Lane, Greenview Point, Norwalk.

And when Charlie Minner began his daily round at nine A.M. that morning, he did not know, and could not have known, that it would have been better, far better, if he had never delivered it at all.

"Wake up, Martha."

Martha Radcliffe drifted from the languor of her dream, and knew this was the voice of her husband, George.

"Wake up, darling."

His whisper was insistent, and at last she opened her eyes. She saw his face smiling at her, and then he kissed each eye, and finally the tip of her nose, as though it were a ritual, a special ceremonial. Then he grinned.

"Good morning, sleepyhead."

"Hello, darling."

He asked, with a smile, "What was it this time, Martha?"

"What was what?"

"The dream you had."

"How did you know I was dreaming?"

"By the way you were moaning and groaning."

"Darling"—she laughed—"you're a horrible Peeping Tom. Can't a girl have any privacy?"

"From the way you sound"—he grinned—"it must have been a beauty."

"It was."

"Tell me about it."

"I'd rather not."

"Why not?"

"You might be jealous."

"Oh. Then there was another man in it? Tell me about the dream."

"George, it was ridiculous," Martha told him. "Just plain silly."

"No," he insisted. "You can't get away with that. Let's have it."

"Well, I don't know. I was walking along the Champs Élysées in Paris," she said. "Then suddenly a man came galloping up on a big white horse. He was a beautiful man with golden hair, and he wore armor. The next thing I knew, he'd pulled me up on the horse with him, and we were galloping under the Arc de Triomphe."

"Shades of young Lochinvar!" said George.

"I told you it was silly. Anyway, we came to a big place; I guess it was a palace of some kind."

"And then?"

"AND then," she said apologetically, "we got off the horse and started to walk to the palace. And just as we got to the door, he took me in his arms and kissed me."

"Some dream," he said.

"I enjoyed it," she answered defiantly.

"I'll bet you did. You're a little wanton." He grinned.

"George!"

"Well, aren't you? The subconscious really expresses your own true desires."

"George, you're awful."

"I'm right."

"I hate you."

Then he laughed and said, "All I can say is, pretty good for a simple Vermont girl. And the daughter of the minister of the First Methodist Church, at that."

She had been born and brought up in Middlebury, Vermont, and George had met her there while he was a student at the college, and that had been the beginning. Now, this was the twenty-fifth year of their married l He loved to joke about New Englanders, old Yankee variety, and especially Vermo ers. He was from Pittsburgh himself, and sw that he had married her only as a kind missionary to rescue her from a prim a proper and early spinsterhood.

She laughed at all this, knowing tha husband is always looking for something can be tolerant of in his wife, and theref masculine in his superiority. Like all marr couples, they had a running joke that las through the years and was private to th and never got tiresome. And their particu joke was Vermont.

"Martha."

"Yes?"

"TELL me something." He grinned. "truth. How far would you have let this jo in the shining armor really go?"

"I don't know," she said. "You woke up before I could really find out."

They both laughed at this. Then, sudde they were both serious. Now George held close, and kissed her on the lips. Ma thought, This is better than the dream ever This man is a god on earth, and his nam George, and he is husband.

"Why, Marth he said, "you're ing."

"I can't help George. I just c help it. I love yo love you so muc

He wiped her with the corner of sheet, but she tinued to weep a tle, because of joy of it, for it always been this ever since the they had marriec

His head was her breast now, she stroked his the hair showir little iron gray or sides and at the ples, and his tar face was now in c repose, the blue half shut in lang and she thought, forty-eight, and young as a boy.

Simply to look at him, to feel his touc know that he was near, was enough. To his voice over the phone, calling from office, was enough. To sit in the living r or the study with him, she with her kni and he with his book or newspaper, and n a word between them, was enough, for it enough that they were there, and near to other. The warmth of his smile, or the t of his hand on hers, or the way he slippe arm around her waist when they wa through the garden, was enough.

There were Annette, soon to be mar and David, now at Fort Benning, and o West Point two years. And these were children, and she loved them, as any mo But she thought, with a kind of secret The first love is still the man, and he is th always with you when the others go awa make their new lives. The hours he went t office were never a relief, as they are to r women, but instead an interim, and s times these hours were impatient. Now voiced the fear that was in her.

"George."

"Yes?"

"Do you find me possessive?"

"Aren't most women?"

"No. Tell me the truth."

"I like it."

"But I am possessive."

"My dear," he said gravely, "if you your way, you'd chain me in a dungeon li animal, and bring me food, and never le see the light of day, and simply keep m your own amusement." Then he lau "And it wouldn't be anything new. Th cient queens used to do that with slaves fancied."

NEXT MONTH

● When the mayor begged Ma Baggley to take eight underprivileged city kids out to her ramshackle farm for two weeks, Ma started to say no. But she took them . . .

"I should never have tried it," Ma thought. "I should never have taken them in. I wasn't able to look after them right."

What could an old worn-out woman like Ma Baggley do with eight tough kids who didn't like the country?

OFF THE CITY STREETS

By LESTER ATWELL

Complete in the June JOURNAL

Here's the gayest idea since Spring itself . . . expressly designed for the young-at-heart. Royledge has colors gay as a maypole . . . patterns as new as tomorrow . . . a fresh, crisp look to charm even the dreariest shelf in the house. And how Royledge saves time and temper. Why just the lightest dab of a damp cloth keeps the exclusive Plasti-Chrome surface gleaming—with never a worry about fading or curling. The cost?—mere pennies.

Your shelves are showing . . . show them with Royledge

Select from dozens of smart patterns!

Royledge
SHELF LINING PAPER AND EDGING
ALL-IN-ONE

DESIGNED FOR Royal LIVING EVERY DAY!

Remember, Royledge is lining and edging all-in-one . . . available in regular or Xtra-width that goes all the way back on the shelf. Seen and sold at leading Variety, Supermarkets and Department Stores all over town. Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn 1, New York.

(A subsidiary of Eastern Corp.)

And she said, a little angrily, "George, don't silly."

"You asked me, didn't you?"

"But I was being serious."

"So was I."

She could see he would not discuss it. He ared at her a moment. Then, with a quick ile, as though to pull her out of her mood: "Look, we'd better get a move on. I've got a les meeting at eleven."

They rose, and a minute later she heard him ging under the shower. The singing was aim-ss, more like a kind of yelling, but wonder-lly exuberant. She put on a cool, flowered int and a bright blue bandanna, and as she dressed she looked out the window, filling her eyes and her heart with what she saw.

This was the master bedroom. It had three big windows, and when they had bought the house what she wanted was light and air above all, because they had lived in dark little places when they had first been married. There had been the cramped little apartment in Manhattan, when George was struggling to get his start. Both David and Annette were born there. And after that, the tiny, attached house in Freeport, on the island, when George had been so terribly pressed for money.

Finally, luck had smiled on George, and the money had come in like a great flood with almost breath-taking suddenness. That had been ten years ago, and it was then they bought this house, and to this day she could never get over the richness and wonder of it.

SHE stood there now, at the window, and looked out at the wide lawn sloping down to the beach of the Sound, and her beloved garden, and saw Artie Johnson, their gardener, working in the arbor. She noted every tree—the dogwoods, and balsams, and flaming red maples—and their private brook, and even the solitary sailboat on the blue bosom of the Sound seemed to be hers.

Then George came in, wearing his robe, and said, "What are you looking at, Martha?"

"Heaven."

"Pretty small for heaven. Only four acres."

"I wouldn't want it any bigger."

George finished dressing, and they walked downstairs together. They sat in the sunny, pine-paneled dining room with its deep bay and picture window, and it seemed to Martha Radcliffe that Hilda's waffles and bacon had never tasted better than on this particular morning.

Then Annette came downstairs, dressed in a robe, and still without make-up. She said good morning and kissed them both, first her father on the top of his head, then her mother on the cheek. And George grinned, and hummed a snatch of Lohengrin.

"Here comes the bride."

"I wouldn't be so sure, dad."

"No?"

"No. Remember I'm not getting married until the thirtieth. And anything can happen before then."

"What, for instance?"

"Why, anything. Ralph could jilt me, or leave me at the altar."

Martha studied Annette, and thought in a bewildered way, Is this really true? In only a few days she will be a bride, and they will call her Mrs. Ralph Keeler. But only yesterday she was my baby.

Then she watched George, his face gay with the banter of the breakfast, and the warmth glowed in her. And on the wall, just behind George, there was a small, framed picture of David, looking very handsome in his lieutenant's uniform. And she thought, Here we are, the four of us. This is my house and my family, my whole world, and there never was a woman as lucky as I.

Her reverie was broken suddenly by the tinkle of a bicycle bell outside, and she heard the slap of the morning newspaper against the door. She started to rise, but Annette said, "I'll get it, mother."

A moment later Annette was back, staring at the newspaper curiously.

"Dad."

"Yes?"

"Your name's in the paper this morning. It's right on the front page. It's in a story about that clerk who used to work for your company years ago."

"Who?" said George, staring.

"You know, the man who killed that paymaster. William Lehde."

Suddenly it was very still in the room. Suddenly it seemed to Martha Radcliffe that the sun had gone down outside. She stole a look at her husband's face, knowing what she would see there, yet dreading it. The gay smile on it had vanished, and now it was a pale, tight mask, and haunted by some shadow. She had seen George look like this many times throughout the years whenever the name of William Lehde was spoken. And Martha knew that what she saw must be pain, the pain of memory. For it is a terrible thing to speak a word, and point a finger, and thereby send a man to prison for life.

It was George who had seen a man flee from the building on that night long ago. The man had been carrying a small satchel, and had been the same man whom a policeman later chased, but the murderer escaped along the river, and in the dark. George, a minor executive then, and working late at the office, had identified the fleeing man as Lehde, and so testified in court. There was other evidence against Lehde, but the important thing was what George had said. And so the shipping clerk, a man with a wife and two children, had been sentenced to prison for life.

Once she had asked him why he was so disturbed. And he had answered, "My testimony put this man in jail for life, Martha."

"But, George, he was guilty. He murdered an innocent man. You did what you had to do."

"I know, I know," he had said. "But still . . . how can a man forget a thing like this?"

Always, at these times, George had been moody and strange, with the black curtain around him. And Martha always thought, when she watched his face at times like this, Now I do not know this man, now he is a stranger.

"Dad," said Annette.

EFTOVER CHICKEN
MADE EXTRA TEMPTING, EXTRA FLAVORFUL

with
B in B Broiled in Butter MUSHROOMS

n B Mushrooms add a touch of elegance—nouth-watering flavor to even the simplest, w-cost meal! That's because these tender uties are specially grown in hothouses and broiled in butter to a golden brown . . . n packed in their own delicious broth! So thrifty, too—because there's no peeling, no trimming, no waste!

3 Convenient Styles!
B in B Whole Crowns
B in B Sliced Mushrooms
B in B Chopped Mushrooms
READY TO HEAT AND SERVE!

You'll Make Rich, Appetizing BROWN GRAVY Every Time with B KITCHEN Bouquet

CCESS
ERY
E!

Good Cooks have a secret 75 years old: A little KITCHEN BOUQUET makes gravy richer, tastier, extra brown! It's a natural vegetable product. And for a crowning touch, add B in B Broiled in Butter Sliced Mushrooms—right from the can.
COSTS SO LITTLE!

DESERT FLOWER in Turquoise and White.
Complete sets, open stock, serving pieces available.

It's made of melmac® for guaranteed break-resistance!

MELMAC is a registered trade-mark of American Cyanamid Company, N. Y. 20, N. Y., supplier of Melmac Molding Compounds to manufacturers who fashion high-quality dinnerware in a variety of designs and colors. Desert Flower, shown here, is an exclusive design of International Molded Plastics, Incorporated, Cleveland 9, Ohio.

What a delightful pattern to highlight your important dinners, to brighten every casual meal! Every plate has a delicate flower design molded right in—an exclusive feature. Made of Melmac molding material, it stays whole for years of happy use.

Replacement Guaranteed

Free replacement, either where you bought it or from International Molded Plastics, Inc., if any dish breaks, cracks or chips in normal household use within one year from date of purchase. Look for International's guarantee certificate—and look, too, for the tag that says MELMAC, sure sign you're getting quality dinnerware!

Slate Blue Pink
Navajo Brown
Canyon Gold
Black
Pebble Gray
Sage Green

"Yes?"

She was staring at her father. "Anything wrong?"

He saw that both Martha and Annette were watching him. With an effort he drove away the mood, and smiled. "Wrong? Nothing's wrong, Annette." Then casually, almost too casually, he said, "What's the story about?"

"He tried to get a pardon, but they wouldn't give it to him."

"Let's see the paper."

Annette gave him the paper, and he scanned it quickly, without any change of expression.

"That's the second time he's been turned down, Martha."

"Yes."

"That wife of his is a pretty persistent woman."

"I don't blame her."

"What do you mean?"

"If you were in jail for life, George, I'd be persistent too."

"I'll bet you would." Then he smiled faintly, and tossed the paper on the table. She was relieved to see that his mood had passed. "You'll drive me to the station, Martha?"

"Of course," she said.

A few moments later they were heading down the Point Road. They were just passing the golf course when Martha sighted Charlie Minner plodding along, sweating under the weight of his heavy bag. She waved in greeting, and the postman stopped and waved back, half expecting them to pause and pick up their mail. But they continued toward the town and the station.

"Oh, by the way, Martha, better pack my bags tonight."

"Oh, no, George. You're not going away again."

"Sorry, my dear. I have to."

"Where to this time?"

"Cleveland. I'll be taking the nine-thirty plane out of LaGuardia tomorrow morning."

"When will you be home?"

"I'm not sure yet. I'll let you know."

"Cleveland," she said. "Why on earth must you go there?"

"Business."

Then she smiled and said, "You sure it isn't monkey business?"

"Like what?"

"Oh," she said lightly, "like some other woman."

"It could be." He grinned.

"Is she prettier than I?"

"Much prettier."

She pinched him on the arm, so he winced, and said, "George Radcliffe, you are a liar."

"And you are a very suspicious woman." Then he grinned. "The truth is, that 'she' is a 'he.' A man named Regan. He runs our Cleveland warehouse, and he's made a mess of things. I've got to go out there and straighten things out."

"You know what, George?"

"What?"

"I didn't even know you had a Cleveland warehouse. How's that for a stupid wife?"

"Pretty stupid." He smiled.

"But then, you never tell me anything about business."

"I never mix business with pleasure."

"Thank you, darling. But you can't get away with it. Other women know all about their husbands' businesses."

"Other men are crazy to tell them."

"George," she said, and she was only half jesting now, "do you know I have no idea what you do at the office?"

"Now wait a minute, Martha. After all ——"

"No, it's true. Oh, of course I have a general idea. You're in the trucking and warehouse business. You're a vice-president. The name of the company is the Atlantic Carrier Corporation, with branches all over the country." He started to interrupt, but she said, "I have a vague idea that you have conferences with big men who smoke big cigars, and luncheon appointments, and make trips here and there to straighten out what you call 'bugs' in the organization. In fact, you're always straightening someone out, like this—this man Regan in Cleveland."

"I'm the best little straightener outer you ever saw," he said.

"And to complete this picture of a wife's intimate knowledge of her husband's business, I know you make forty thousand dollars a year, plus some kind of bonus. Only I haven't the faintest idea what the bonus is."

"I never know myself," he said. "Depends on what kind of year we have. Good year, good bonus. Bad year, bad bonus." Then he grinned. "Simple, isn't it?"

"George Radcliffe, you're laughing at me."

"Of course. I think you're very funny."

Now they were talking about money, and the word jogged Martha's memory, and she sobered a little, for there was a time when they spoke of money in a different way, in bitterness and desperation. And Martha said, "George, remember Freeport? Remember when we didn't have any money?"

"I'd like to forget it."

She saw his face cloud with the memory, and she knew that he could never forget it. Neither could she. Ten years is a long time, long enough to heal almost any scar. But not one like this.

At that time they had the house on Long Island, the small budget house in Freeport, and George was a kind of junior executive with only a modest salary. Even then he was an able and brilliant man, and felt himself thwarted, because he knew the business of the Atlantic Mothers!

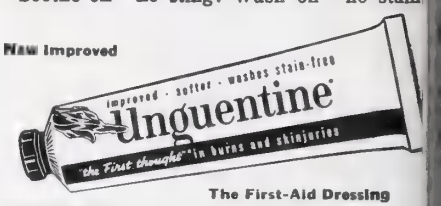
Wonderful New First Aid for Children's Skin Injuries!



Unlike iodine and other harsh antiseptics which may sting and actually burn delicate tissues—new Unguentine works 4 ways:

1. Relieves pain fast!
2. Fights infection!
3. Promotes faster healing!
4. Prevents gauze from sticking to the injur

For scrapes and burns—helps ease the pain Soothe on—no sting! Wash off—no stain

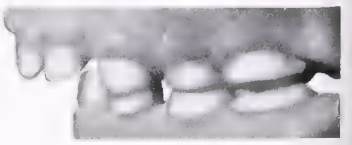
New Improved

The First-Aid Dressing

A Norwich Product

UNGUENTINE

LOOKING FOR A SMART BABY GIFT?



It's new! It's differen Mother will love it! I "SLEEPY-DRYE"* t all-cotton diaper cover th solves baby's wetness pro lems! Made with durab water-repellent! Worn ov diapers. Triple-reinforc crotch locks wetness in diaper! No more w beds, wet nightclothes! No hot plastic rubber lining! Lets air in—lets irritati ammonia out! No more diaper rash! N baby's body breathes! Approved for lasti repellency by the Better Fabrics Testi Bureau. Won't crack, peel, stiffen! Was able! 5 nursery colors. Sizes to 5. At all lea ing department and infants' wear sto $1.25. Buy "SLEEPY-DRYE," the diap cover that really works!

"Sleepy-Drye" MODELLA MFG. C PORT CHESTER, N.

* Patented—#2,695,6

THUMBSUCKING

since infancy caused this malocclusion.

ACCEPTED FOR ADVERTISING IN PUBLICATIONS OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

THUM broke the habit and teeth returned to normal position.

THUM TRADE MA

Get Thum at your drug counter. Only 60

r Corporation better than its top execu-
It was at this time he started to play the market, and it was not till later that she how he had got the money for it. She knew just what he bought or what he ecause her world was the home and the n. She remembered dimly that he was in things like sugar and grain and cote things called commodities.
n came a time when he had what he sure information. He was exhilarated.
spoke of was the "killing" he was go-make, and after this the money would there was no killing, and she knew George's haunted face that somehow ning had gone wrong. And the fear be-more primitive, and hit deep, because ss had turned bad at the office, and they ot know from one day to the next r George would go. Each evening she watch him come up the walk, and try to by his walk whether he was still a man job or not.

one night he came home and she saw face the beaten look, the paleness of ation, and weariness close to death.
remembered it all so clearly now. She bered his throwing his coat on the nd sitting at the white-enameled table iny kitchenette, and looking at her with at did not see her, and eyes she herself ever seen. And she had asked him, ge, what is it? Is it the job?"
. They haven't fired me—yet." en what is it?"
ad not answered then, but had risen lked into the living room, and she had d him, saying, "George, what is it?"
en, as though hunted, and at bay, he rtha, we're in trouble. Bad trouble." at kind of trouble?"

got to have twenty thousand dollars."
nty thousand dollars?"
had thought then that he was joking, e was joking. But then he told her that borrowed ten thousand dollars from friends and gone into the market with speculated. There were words strange hat he mentioned, "margin," and "sell-rt," and other words she did not under-
But things had not gone as he had exand he had taken every cent they had ngs, and borrowed still more from other
All this had happened without her dge, for he possessed the bankbooks ew the accounts, and never bothered h them. The sum he needed had gone venty thousand dollars, and his debtors essing him. She remembered him sayartha, if I knew where I could steal the money, I would." And then he had put his head in his arms, and hid his face from her.

She had comforted him in his defeat and grief, and said, "It is not the end of the world, it is only money and we will get it somehow." And he had asked, "How, where shall we get it?"

And to this she had no answer. She had suggested that they sell the cottage in Vermont, the summer cottage her father had left them on Lake Dunmore. But it was really no answer, for it would bring little, and they did not bother even to put it up for sale.

Then shortly afterward the turn had come, and what she would always think of as the Miracle.

The Miracle was the money, and it came like a flood, from where she never knew. When she asked George he said, "It's the market, Martha, it's gone my way at last." But when she asked him about the details, he said, "Let me worry about that. You just spend the money."

She came out of her reverie to see the 9:14 come in at Norwalk station.

"'By, darling. See you this evening."

He took her hand, and squeezed it hard, he kissed her, and sprinted for the train. She sat watching him as he just managed to squeeze through the door before the train started. Then she turned the car around and drove home.

When she arrived, the mail was on the table. And Annette, now dressed to go out, said:

"Mother, look at this letter. It's for dad."

Annette handed her a green and faded envelope, and Martha examined it blankly, until Annette said:

"It was mailed ten years ago. Never got here until today. Look at the postmark."

Martha looked at the postmark, and saw that the cancellation date was December 22, 1944, and the place of origin, New York City. The letter had been rubber-stamped, in bold and black letters, "Delivery Delayed." It had been addressed to George at the old house in Freeport, in a man's handwriting, and this address had been crossed out and their present address substituted.

On the back flap was a name, but no return address. The name was Jeremiah Clay.

"Mother, would you have any idea who this Jeremiah Clay is?"

Jeremiah Clay, she thought. Jeremiah Clay. I have heard the name somewhere, but I cannot remember now, it is out of long ago.

"The name's familiar, Annette. But I can't place it right now." She stared at the letter. "How on earth did this happen?"

"Charlie Minner told me all about it. It seems that they found this stolen mail pouch in a culvert on the Long Island Rail Road."

Annette picked up the Times. "The whole story's right here in the paper."

After she had finished reading the story, Martha thought again, Where have I heard of Jeremiah Clay? And somehow, somewhere, a nerve quivered, and her memory spoke of some unpleasant association. She examined the letter a moment longer, then walked to the desk and picked up the letter opener that was on it.

"You're going to open it, mother?"

"Why not?"

"But it's addressed to dad."

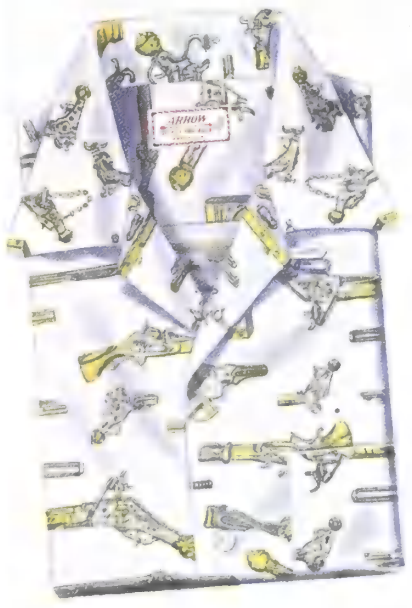
"Darling," smiled Martha, "we've been opening each other's mail for years."

"Well," said Annette, "all I can say is this: When Ralph and I are married, we're going to respect each other as individuals. His mail's going to be his, and mine mine."

Martha smiled tolerantly and opened the letter. The first thing she noticed was an address at the top of the letter, a number on Ninth Avenue. And the letter read:

Radcliffe: You said you saw Lehde kill Spindell, and that was enough to send him to jail. You fooled everybody else, but you didn't fool me. Because I know the truth. I saw you kill Spindell and take the money.

It'll cost you $25,000 to keep my mouth shut. And I want it in cash. I want it by next Saturday,



"Do you feel well enough to be cheered up?"

Arrow Collectors' Items

...and what boy isn't a collector?

Your son will be the top collector on the block in these authentic Arrow patterns. They're colorful, exciting, and (ask your boy) wonderful to wear. Above, left, Ships-in-bottles for Juniors. Above, right, a colorful stamp pattern for Grads. Below, authentic prints of antique guns for Grads.

These perfectly tailored shirts wash like a handkerchief . . . are "Sanforized"-labeled for lasting fit. In Junior sizes, 4-12, $2.95 up; Grad sizes, 12-20, $3.50 up.

ARROW

SHIRTS FOR BOYS

by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc

Curity®
DIAPERS
2 TYPES • DAY & NIGHT

Wash bowl or washing machine . . . Curity Diapers "come clean" with no effort, in hardly any time at all! Stains can't stay in their open, surgical weave. Remember, too, that only Curity has the woven-in, easy-to-follow FOLDLINES that make an expert of anyone. Furthermore, Curity Diapers . . .

Dry Faster — Indoors or out, Curity Diapers are faster drying.

Wash Easier — Their open weave means quick-cleansing ease in Ivory Flakes or Ivory Snow.

Absorb Fully — Their thirsty surgical weave soaks up moisture like a sponge.

Longer Wearing — Curity Diapers are made of full weight, full size gauze. And, for dress up and gifts . . . ask to see Curity pastel tints and Dandi-Dots.

NOW — NEW COMPANION TO CURITY DIAPERS —

PATENTED

Curity DIAPER LINERS

Send 25c (coins only) for a sample Curity Diaper with Curity Diaper Liners to: Kendall Mills — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J 55. (Only one set of samples to a family.)

and if you don't come through I'll go to the police. And I mean this, Radcliffe. You pushed me off once, but you won't do it again.

JEREMIAH CLAY

She was aware of no particular sensation. Not shock, not fear, not anything. Not then. Strangely, she felt quite calm. Why, she did not know.

Her hand was steady as she folded the letter, and put it in her pocket. It might have been a bill from the grocer, or simply an advertisement, or an invitation to dinner.

"What's it all about, mother? Who's this man Clay?"

"A friend of your father's—an old schoolmate from Middlebury." How easy it was to lie.

"Yes? What did he want?"

"He was in New York from Chicago for a day or two, and he wanted to meet your father and have lunch." The lie was glib, it came so easily.

Annette was disappointed. "Is that all?"

"That's all."

Suddenly, and mercifully, a horn blew outside. It was Ralph Keeler, in the convertible. Martha mentally blessed her future son-in-law, as Annette kissed her good-by and ran outside. She stood by the window and watched them go.

And she thought calmly, It is, of course, a lie. For whoever this man Clay is, he is talking about my husband. He is saying that George stole the company's money, and killed a man. But this letter is some kind of ugly jest. For the man does not know George. I have been his wife for twenty-five years, and I know this. The letter is a lie.

She could not get over the feeling that this whole thing was unreal. But she took the letter from her pocket again, and it was real enough.

Then, for a moment, she thought, Why not ignore it? Tear it up. Forget it. But that is not my way, nor George's. We have never kept anything from each other, in this way.

This evening, when I pick him up at the train, I will show him the letter. Then I can see his face and his eyes kill the lie, as well as hear it from his mouth. He will tell me the simple and direct truth, that the letter is a lie. And that will be the end of it.

But as Martha folded the letter carefully and put it in her purse, a nerve quivered. A picture came into her mind, and the picture was George's face, and the shadow that always filled it whenever he was reminded of William Lehde.

All that day she was possessed of a vague and uneasy feeling of dread. Of course, she reasoned, it is because of the letter. Naturally, a thing like this would upset anyone.

An old lady told me once that she had lunched with the Dickens family when she was a child (you must imagine a tableful of children) and that Dickens had sat down without a word, leaning his head on his hand in an attitude of profound despondency. One of the Dickens children whispered to her, in commiseration and explanation, "Poor papa is in love again."

—DESMOND McCARTHY:
Criticism (Putnam & Company, Ltd.)

She picked up George when he got off the 6:55, but somehow she could not bring herself to tell him immediately. She saw that he was tired, a little edgy, and had obviously gone through a hard day at the office. And almost with relief, she thought, I will tell him after dinner, when he is more relaxed. Then, suddenly, the nerve quivered somewhere from deep within, the same nerve as before, and its name was Fear. And it spoke to her in a muffled but insistent way, "Why do you really delay, Martha? Is it because you are afraid of what you will hear?" Dear God, of course it is not true. But suppose it is. "Suppose it is."

Again, and angrily, she buried the voice, and would not listen to it. On the drive home, she talked to George of inconsequential things. Then, when they came around the corner of Soundview Lane, George said:

"Martha, it seems we have a visitor."

There was an empty car in the driveway. It was a small car, and dusty, not the kind any neighbor at the Point would possess. On the back was a tiny metal sign, and the sign said "Press."

"Now what would the newspapers want with me?" said George.

Then her heart quickened, and in her mind echoed the same thing, What do they want with him? But she said, "I don't know, George. I have no idea."

They went inside, and a man was waiting in the living room, a stocky man with a red face, and uncomfortably warm in a tweed suit. He rose when they came in and said to George:

"Mr. Radcliffe, my name is John Platt. I'm with the New York Times. Your maid said you'd be back any minute."

"Yes?" said George. "What can I do for you?"

"We're running an article in the Sunday Times, on that missing mail pouch they found. I thought perhaps you might give me a general idea of the letter you got. We're looking for human-interest material, a kind of twist." He laughed apologetically. "You know, whether it was important at the time, or even changed the course of your life in any way."

"LETTER?" George was staring at the man blankly. "What letter?"

"Oh," said the reporter, puzzled, "you haven't received it yet?"

"I don't even know what you're talking about."

Then the man's face cleared. He showed George the article in the morning Times, saying, "Of course. I should have thought of it in the first place. Your maid told me your wife just picked you up at the railroad station. Naturally, you haven't had a chance to see the mail yet. But one of those letters was scheduled to be delivered to you today." He smiled at Martha. "I guess you haven't had a chance to tell him yet, Mrs. Radcliffe."

"What about this, Martha?" said George. "What's this about a letter?"

She saw George staring at her, and suddenly panic gripped her. And she thought, Why did it have to happen this way? What a fool I was, not to tell him at the station.

"Is this true, Martha? Was there a letter?"

"Yes."

"Well," said George impatiently, "who was it from?"

And she blurted out, "From a man named Jeremiah Clay."

"Jeremiah Clay?"

The name sprang from his throat, he could not stop it. And there was this sudden glare in his eyes, not hot or flaming, but rather cold and incandescent. He repeated the name, "Jeremiah Clay."

"George ——"

She did not go on, for she knew he would not hear her. And she thought, He is looking at me, but he does not really see me. He is looking somewhere else, inward toward the memory, and she shuddered then with horror, for she knew this memory, whatever it was, was something ugly and evil.

Then she remembered with a kind of panic that they were not alone, that the man from the Times was there, in the same room. The reporter was staring curiously at George.

"Mr. Radcliffe, who is Jeremiah Clay?"

George started a little as he heard Platt's voice. Then he said carefully:

"I'm sorry, Mr. Platt. But I'd rather not discuss it."

"I don't want to intrude in what may be some sort of personal affair, sir. Still ——"

"I said I don't want to talk about it."

But the man was eager for the story, and would not be put off. "Mr. Radcliffe, you have my promise that we'll eliminate any names in the letter you may wish. It's just the general idea, the story idea, we're after."

Then George moved to the man, and his eyes were blazing. "Can't you take no for an answer? Get out!"

The reporter stared. "If you feel that way ——"

For brand-new Toms, Dicks and Harrys
For little Saras, Janes and Carries
There's no gift nicer, softer, stronger
None more welcome, none lasts longer
None so guaranteed to please
The brand-new sprouts on family trees..
So for all future Johns and Jerries—

Baby Blankets by St. Marys!

The softest, drowsiest baby blankets ever. All washable and deeply ribbon bound. White, pink and blue and the very fashionable mint green and buttercup yellow. Crib, carriage and junior bed sizes. At better Infants' Departments and Specialty Shops. Write for name of store nearest you.

St Marys
baby blankets
ST. MARYS, OHIO

Fine leathers deserve mel-O-wax

Mel-O-Wax is so different from all other leather polishes. It penetrates, cleans and polishes leather to a rich lustre, preserves it for years! Non-greasy, neutral in color for any kind or color smooth leather. Use on handbags, shoes, luggage, leather & plastic upholstery, all novelty leathers. For free Leather Care folder and nearest dealer, write MEL-O-WAX PRODUCTS, WYNNEWOOD, PA.

do feel that way. Now go on! Get out!"
he man left, his face tight and hostile, and tha watched him through the window as alked to the drive and got into the car and e off. She turned back to George, and saw storm in his face.
Martha, why didn't you phone me about
? Why didn't you tell me at the station?"
I thought I'd wait until after dinner."
e looked at her as though she were bereft er senses. "You read the letter, Martha?"
Yes."
That's fine." His voice was a knife. "A calls me a murderer, and you plan to wait l after dinner to tell me about it."
George," said Martha slowly, "how did know what was in this letter? You n't even seen it yet."
e did not answer this, but said, instead, here is it?"
George ——"
Give me the letter."
artha reached into her purse and gave him etter. He read it quickly through narrowed
. Then he said sharply:
Has anyone else seen this?"
Annette was here when it came."
But does she know?"
No. I lied to her, George. I told her it was an old schoolmate of yours."
e took a long breath. Then he took the r, and tore it into tiny pieces, and after tore those pieces into fragments even ler, and threw them into the wastebasket, ng, "God knows what would have hapd if you lost this letter, Martha, if some-else had seen it. Do you realize the head-a thing like this would make?"
hen he noted her look, and saw her staring e wastebasket.
What is it, Martha? What's the matter?"
e asked, simply and directly, "George, etter was a lie, wasn't it?"
or a while it was very quiet there in the h. For a while, he did not speak, nor
e.
What do you think, Martha?"
Of course it is a lie."
Then why did you ask me?"
just wanted to hear you say so."
ddenly he seized her wrist. He said nly, "What was the real reason?"
told you."
You're sure that was the only reason?"
sked.
Yes. Oh yes, George, yes."
e cried aloud at the pain in her wrist. And ire suddenly died from his eyes, as he drew his grasp, realizing that he had hurt

Forgive me, Martha. I'm sorry. I didn't e ——" George."
Yes?"
Why were you so rude to that reporter?
way you looked at him ——"

t's get this straight, Martha," he said.
s upset, yes. This thing happened rather enly, as you know. And it isn't every day one calls me a murderer. You can under-that, can't you?"
es. Yes, of course." She reddened and he heat of her shame, and she thought, is the matter with me? I believe him, I he is innocent. Why am I so hateful? Why sk him questions?
m sorry," she said contritely. "I didn't anything by it. Of course you were
. I was, too, when I saw that letter."
it down, Martha," he said quietly. "I to tell you everything I know about it."
ou don't have to."
want to. Sit down."
e sat on the couch, and he went on:
irst of all, you remember Jeremiah Clay?"
e shook her head. "All I remember is ame."
his man Clay used to be the janitor in ffice building. Remember? The man who ed me in the corridor at the courthouse, wanted to talk to me. It was right after e's trial. You were with me."
w it came back to her, vaguely, and she ed, I remember, I remember.
Well," George was saying, "Clay turned be a swindler and a blackmailer. Right in the corridor, he tried to extort money from me with the same lie you read in the letter."

"But why? How would he dare to do a thing like that?"

"I don't know," said George. "He must have been mad. He knew I'd been at the office that night, and probably had some idea that he could scare me into paying him money, by claiming that he saw me kill Spindell."

"But I just don't understand ——"

"Neither do I." He shrugged. Now he seemed casual, almost too casual. "At the time, I thought it was one of those things. You know, most every murder trial, especially if it's on the sensational side, always brings up its quota of cranks and crackpots. I guess Jeremiah Clay was one of them. Anyway, he actually threatened to go to the police if I didn't pay him."

"George, he wanted twenty-five thousand dollars. In cash."

"Yes."

"Where on earth did he think you'd get all that money?"

"I don't know."

"But he must have had some reason ——"

"Some reason for what?" George interrupted a little sharply.

"Why, I don't know. I ——"

"Martha, what are you trying to say?"

His face began to darken again, and he was staring at her again. She stammered, "I mean, well, how would he dare, how would he possibly dare ——"

"I told you, he must have been crazy."

"What did you tell him?"

"I told him that this little fantasy of his might backfire right into his face. That I'd go to the police and drag him in for blackmail. I thought I was rid of him. I never knew, of course, that he'd followed up with a letter until today. But if I'd received that letter I would have taken it straight to the police."

"You never heard from this man Clay again?"

"No," said George carefully. "Not until just now. But he never went to the police. I'd say that was proof enough that he was bluffing, wouldn't you?"

"Yes." Then she hesitated. "Only one thing."

"Well?"

"The thing I don't understand is the evidence against Lehde ——"

"What about it, Martha?" interrupted George sharply. "Lehde got what was coming to him. He was guilty. I tell you he was guilty."

He seemed suddenly agitated and vehement, and Martha stared at him. "What on earth is the matter with you, George?"

"Nothing."

"All I was trying to say was this: The evidence was so overwhelming against Lehde that I can't possibly see how this man Clay would dare try and blackmail you."

"Oh," said George. The tautness left him, and he rose and came to Martha, putting his hands on her shoulders.

"Martha, I'm sorry."

"About what?"

"I guess I was a little edgy, at that. You see, this whole thing brought back memories I'd like to forget. As far as I'm concerned, the matter's closed. And that goes for you, too, Martha. Forget you ever heard the name of Clay. The letter was never written, and it never came here, it's a filthy lie, and not worth another thought. Understand?"

"I understand," said Martha. "But, George, "why didn't you tell me about this Clay situation long ago? Why did you keep it from me?"

For a moment he hesitated. Then he smiled, a queer and almost crooked little smile.

"Because I didn't want to upset you, Martha. I knew Clay was bluffing, and the whole thing would blow over."

"And that's all?"

"Yes," he said. "That's the whole story."

"Darling," she said quietly, "don't you know that a wife wants to be worried, if it's her husband's worry too?"

Then she was in his arms, her face in his shoulder, rubbing her cheek against the rough cloth of his coat and feeling her tears wet the collar of his shirt, and crying, George, George, because it was over and done with, and that which had come between them had gone.

That night she slept soundly in his arms. And the next morning she drove him to the airport. Then, just before his plane took off for Cleveland, he said:

"Martha."

"Yes?"

"Suppose I had killed Spindell? What would you do then?"

"George, please ——"

"No, I mean it," he went on. "What would you do?"

"I'd go on loving you," she said.

Then he smiled, and took her in his arms, and kissed her, saying, "I'll phone you from Cleveland."

After that, he disappeared through the gate. And as she drove home the sweet taste of his kiss lingered on her lips.

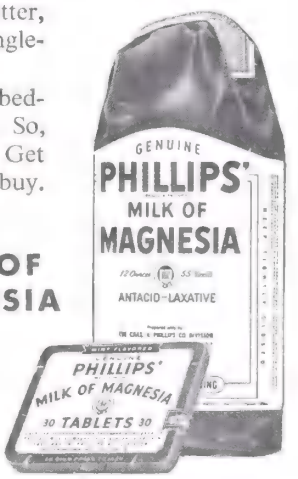
But then, suddenly, it was gone.

For now the turmoil came up in her, from some deep and hidden and inner swamp, and out of it came a question. She hated it, and tried to fight it down. But she could not.

Where did George get the money?

Where did he get all the money he had made when they lived in Freeport? He had said he made it in the market. But had he? Had he really?

Her mind slipped back into the past, and with growing dread she remembered a re-



My family's constipation worries are over!

They all use this ALKALIZING LAXATIVE that gives MORE COMPLETE RELIEF!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the ideal family laxative because it does both things you need for complete relief! It gives wonderfully gentle and effective relief from constipation, and—because it's an alkalizing laxative—Phillips' also relieves the acid indigestion that usually accompanies irregularity. Thus, Phillips' gives you better, much more complete relief than you get from any single-purpose preparation!

What's more, two to four tablespoonfuls taken at bedtime work leisurely—without embarrassing urgency. So, when morning comes, you start the day feeling fine. Get Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—the best laxative money can buy.

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA

LIQUID or TABLETS
The convenient 4-ounce size ..... 28¢
The economical 12-ounce size ..... 55¢
The money-saving 26-ounce size ..... 85¢
Also available in tablet form, 30 tablets 28¢

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

says Candy Jones

(Mrs. Harry Conover)

Beauty Director of New York's Noted Conover School

Countless Conover Students have proved this wholesome beauty care!

"The Conover School teaches ambitious girls how to improve their personal appearance for top careers in every field," says Candy Jones. "Since an eye-catching complexion is a 'must', I urge our students to use gentle Cashmere Bouquet Soap. I know from years of experience that any kind of skin—dry, normal or oily—thrives on this wholesome beauty care. The 'beauty-wash' method we teach at Conover's can produce the same exciting results for you that it does for Conover Career girls. Twice a day cream Cashmere Bouquet's fluffy, fragrant lather over your face with your fingertips. Rinse and pat dry. Then see how quickly this regular care brings you that fresh, glowing Conover-Girl Complexion!"

Complexion and big bath sizes

P.S. Getting your picture taken? Make the most of your Cashmere Bouquet complexion by using medium—never dark—lipstick, slightly darker powder than normal, and moderate eye make-up.

Candy

morseless sequence of time. She remembered now that the bonanza had come only a few months after the payroll money had been stolen, and Spindell murdered. Only a short time after William Lehde had been sent to prison for life. Not before, but after.

And Martha Radcliffe cried to herself, It is coincidence, of course, merely coincidence. But the other voice, the one in the deep dark place, cried, "Was it, was it?" Was this not strange? Especially since Lehde had sworn he had never seen the money? Especially since it had never been recovered?

Now there was not one question, but many. Would a man like Clay really dare this kind of blackmail unless he was pretty sure of his ground? And that shadow on George's face, that strange and tormented shadow. Where did it come from, and why? Why was it always there, like some unwanted ghost, every time he was reminded of William Lehde?

Now Martha Radcliffe drove home, across the Bronx-Whitestone Bridge and up the Merritt Parkway. And all the way it seemed to her that George's face was superimposed upon the windshield of the car, and the shadow was on it, and now it seemed to assume an identity that she had never noticed before.

And she thought, Lord in heaven, is it guilt? Is it guilt?

She tried desperately to tell herself, You are acting the fool, Martha. This whole thing is nonsense, the letter is a lie. You know George Radcliffe, and you know he is incapable of a monstrous thing like this.

Yet, where did he get all the money?

She drove up the winding drive of Greenview Point, past the golf course and the great houses, until she finally came in sight of her own, Normandy in style, with its warm red brick, hand-hewn mellow brown shingles, and gleaming slate roof. Always before she had regarded it with pride and joy, thinking with wonderment, Is it ours, is it really George's and mine?

Now she thought again, Is it ours? But in a different and frightened way.

She parked the car in the driveway and walked into the house, telling herself, Why not settle this thing in your mind, Martha? After all, there is a simple way to prove George's innocence, if you must reassure yourself.

Frank Wheeler is his broker. And Susan Wheeler, his wife, is a close friend of yours. There is the phone. You can drop in at the Wheelers' tonight, and in a casual way get the information you want from Frank. And that will be the end of it. The suspicion, the doubt, this absurd fear of yours.

She went to the phone and lifted the receiver. She heard Susan's voice saying, "Why, Martha darling," and "how nice." Then Martha said:

"Susan, will you be in tonight?"

"Why, of course."

"George is in Cleveland, and I thought ——"

"WE'LL be happy to see you. Come for dinner. It must be lonely rattling around in that big house of yours while George is away. I know Annette's around, but you take a girl in love, how much company can she be? How about seven o'clock?"

"All right, Susan." Then Martha held her breath a moment. "Will Frank be there?"

"Frank? Oh, he'll be here all right. He's a little edgy; the market's been crazy. But you and I always have loads to talk about, and if he falls asleep, so much the better. All right?"

"Yes."

"Fine," said Susan. "See you at seven."

Martha hung up the receiver slowly, thinking, It is done, it is done, and there is no turning back.

At seven o'clock in the evening, Martha Radcliffe swung off the blacktop and onto the dirt road leading to the Georgian house of Frank and Susan Wheeler.

She had slept a little, and after that had luxuriated in a hot bath. Miraculously, her spirits had lifted, and the fear that had gripped her had drifted away.

Now the letter seemed part of some vague nightmare. George had explained everything, and that was enough. She would have given the world to have him beside her now, to reassure him, and tell him her suspicions w foolish. She felt guilty about the phone c and the reason for it. She told herself, I am interested in asking Frank Wheeler how Geo made the money. I will keep the conversat with the Wheelers where it belongs—the gar club, the community library, politics, who ha baby, who got married or who got a divorce. not about the money, not about the money.

"Well, Martha! Come in, come in!"

Susan Wheeler brought her in, a warm a welcoming smile on her tanned face, and her on the couch and said, "This is an oc sion. We haven't seen you for ages."

"I've been pretty busy."

"You don't have to tell me. I know. T wedding. Frank is upstairs, just out of shower. He'll be down in a minute. How lo will George be away?"

"I'm not sure yet. A few days."

"I must say you don't look worried."

"Why should I be?"

"I'D be worried if Frank had to take th little trips now and then. Business trips mean. Of course the chances are he'd be wo ing all day, then going to his hotel, exhaus at night, falling into bed and dreaming of r But still, there's a chance he wouldn't. C thing about men, they're almost too hum Primitive, I mean. And the world's full attractive women. How would I know t Frank wasn't fooling around with anyo The answer is, I wouldn't. I'm a girl wit very vivid imagination."

"I don't feel that way about George."

"I know. I think it's marvelous. The perf marriage of Greenview Point. All those beau fully serene years you've had—well, it's alm unnatural. I envy you."

Then Martha laughed. And thought, as did, This is the first time I have laughed in w seems a very long time.

"You really don't mean that, Susan."

"No, I suppose I don't. Personally, I lik little scrap now and then, just to liven thi up. But Frank's pretty easygoing, it's hard irritate him. And now I'm going to take ba what I said about Frank gallivanting abou he were in Cleveland. The truth is, he's darned transparent and predictable, it's alm infuriating. I wish there were a little m mystery about him, like George."

"George?"

"Yes. Now you take your husband, M tha. There's a man a woman could wo about. Now, darling, don't get alarmed. I sure George is old faithful from way back, a never told a lie in his life. I'm just saying has that look. . . . Well, never mind. Do take it seriously. I'm sure there isn't a th about George you don't know, just as th isn't anything about Frank I don't know."

Now there was a sudden beat in Martha kind of quiver, and, Of course, she thoug Susan is just chattering away, in her usual a aimless way. And her friend must ha sensed some change in Martha's mood, she changed the subject, and went on to t about the wedding: how many guests were ing invited, and what was Annette's weddi dress like.

Then Frank Wheeler came downstairs, we ing brown slacks and sports jacket. Smili he took Martha's hands in his.

"It's good to see you again. Sue tells you're up to your ears in Annette's weddin

"Yes."

Strange, the effect a simple remark can ha a random and aimless observation, when th is soil already there to nourish it. Sus Wheeler was the breezy type who never he tated to talk frankly of everything, includi other women's husbands. And what had said about George? Now there's a man woman could worry about. And Mart thought, Of course it is silly. She meant no ing by it.

Yet it began to upset her. At dinner, had no appetite. She sat there at the table, it was only a blur of white napery and glea ing silver. She was aware that the Wheel were watching her and sensed her mood. A she thought, miserably, Why did I come he How I wish I were alone.

"Martha, what is it? What's the matte

Susan was staring at her, in a queer kind way, and Martha tried to smile. "Matter?"

s. You look so sad you could cry. I've seen you in the dumps like this before."
n sorry. It's just a mood."
lonely mood," said Frank. "If George ere, it would be different. One thing's Martha. You can't be worried about , like the rest of us. Not the way George es in the market."
e market?"
ny, yes. If all my clients were like your nd, Martha, I'd starve to death," told her.

I not bring it up, but he has, she thought nic. It is almost as though the answer is ed, that it is forced on me and I must hear ther I want to or not. And she thought, e the subject quickly. But instead, she ent. And Frank was rambling on:

nny. When I first represented George on rket, he lost his shirt, a real crazy man oney. I kept trying to advise him, but ldn't listen. Bought the world's wildest, peculative stuff." Frank lit a cigar, and ued righteously, "After that, he decided n to me. Trouble was, he went too con- ve. Scared to death, I guess. I hate to it, Martha, but your husband is not, ver was, one of my more profitable " poke casually enough. But it seemed to t each word would be recorded on her orever, as one records words on wax or nd in this way they would always be ed, just as they were, to be played back nd again. It seemed to her now that a d invaded the room. Perhaps it was a sprung up from the oaks outside, by the last spume of the recent rain, dying through the open window.

watched Frank lean back and contem- is cigar and Martha thought, He is such l oracle. It irritated her that he seemed ked, so much at ease. The words he had should have been spoken gravely, or or at least with sympathy. But of he did not know, he could not know.

nk," she said, "I've got a horrible y; when did George first start to do s with you?"

eaned back then, and became for a t dreamy in memory. "Let's see, I'd was about ten years ago. As I recall, March of forty-five."

rch, nineteen forty-five?"

t was a month or two before we talked o moving to the Point," said Susan. mber, Martha? You bought this house ter Memorial Day."

," said Martha. "Of course. Now I re- r."

"Funny the way George came in," chuckled Frank. "He said he'd heard of me that I was a good sound man. We got to talking, and I guess we hit it off together. Anyway, the next thing I knew, we had a new client in the firm, with around a hundred thousand dollars in cash to invest."

And Martha said, slowly, "A hundred thousand?"

"Why, yes. Around that, I think." Then he laughed. "But why should I remember, Martha? You're his wife. You'd know."

And Martha heard herself say, "Of course." Then casually, "I suppose George didn't tell you where he got it all."

Frank shrugged. "No. He didn't. And I didn't ask him. I never care where my clients get it. All I'm interested in is what they're going to do with it."

"Where did he get it all, Martha?" asked Susan lightly. "Rob a bank?"

Martha smiled—how she never knew—and said nothing. But to them, her smile was secret and knowing. As if to say, This is something confidential between a man and his wife, and what difference does it make?

But she knew the difference. For her mind had quickly turned the calendar, and she read the pages with growing horror.

March, 1945. Three months after the trial—the trial had been in late December. Spindell had been murdered and the money stolen in October, 1944. October to the following March. Six months, more or less. Could this be an interval just long enough to be discreet? William Lehde had already been sentenced, the case had been closed. Certainly the police would not now be curious about George's sudden wealth. A hundred thousand dollars, and Susan Wheeler had lightly and gaily asked, "Where did he get it all, Martha?"

And Martha thought, Now I know, now I can tell you.

After that they played Scrabble, for the Wheelers were inveterate players of the word game. And all through it Martha constructed one word after another, with the others.

But when the game was over, and she looked at the Scrabble board, she saw only three, and all three were words she had made. And the words were liar, trial and murder.

On the way home, her mind slipped back to the courtroom, and the trial of ten years ago. She saw the chalk white of George's face and the way he trembled when he was called to the stand. She remembered how he averted his eyes from the Lehdes, as though in some secret shame, when he mumbled "I saw him, the man was Lehde," his voice so low it could hardly

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

To the question, "What is the most wonderful thing that ever happened to you?" a woman answered, "Holding the baby you've been told by experts you will never have."

"I want my son to learn young what it means to work," said a father recently. "He must never think that potatoes come peeled."

"One thing I don't like about him, mother; he's always showering me with compliments."

"The thing about bachelors which impresses me most," says a wife in our neighborhood, "is their ability to dress themselves."

Last-word department: "All right, I'll go," stormed a six-year-old, when he was sent back to the bathroom to do a better job on his hands, "but I'm never coming back."

A young girl lists a few reasons why it is preferable to have a steady boy friend on another campus instead of her own: "You have time to talk to the girls after lunch, you have time to look up words in the dictionary, and you don't have to run to wash your hands every time you get ink on your fingers."

A woman took her son fishing and came home boasting of her catch. When asked by her husband if she had procured a license first, she looked surprised, then exclaimed, "What! Me, a mother!"

If the teen-agers only meant it when they say, "Let's face the facts."

A male parent was elated recently when his daughter announced she had broken a record. Then he learned it consisted of writing the most letters to a boys' boarding school in a two-week period.

Want a good group project this spring?

☐ An off-beat treat ☐ Bird watching ☐ A Maypole party

Posies 'n' candy are dandy—but ask the crowd: how about planning something extra, this Mother's Day? A really off-beat treat for their moms? Then pool your wits and wallets; throw a theatre party with the mothers as honored guests. They'll love it—this fun way of thanking them for being "the most," pal-wise! And wasn't it your mom, too, who taught you how to smile through certain days? Yes. Because she helped you choose *Kotex for softness, safety you can trust . . . the complete absorbency you need. You see, she knew that confidence and Kotex go together!

Which helps "elevate" a low brow?

☐ Symphony sessions ☐ Dating the psych prof ☐ A bang on the head

Neither "long-hair" concerts nor brain bait can lift the kind of brow we mean! If your forehead's low, part your hair higher on your head, parallel to eyebrows. Now make a short bang that conceals your real hairline. Different girls have different needs—in grooming aids, and in sanitary protection. That's why Kotex gives a choice of 3 sizes. Try Regular, Junior, Super: see which is for you. Each has chafe-free softness; holds its shape; keeps its comfortable fit.

At first glance, would you say she's a—

☐ Gold digger ☐ Mixed up kid ☐ Shrinking violet

She may be a living razor at repartee, but in clothes savvy she's got her lines mixed. Example: that short flared coat calls for a stem-slim skirt, not the full-skirted style she's wearing. Bone up on what fashion lines combine best. Just as you've learned that (at calendar time) Kotex and those flat pressed ends are your best insurance against revealing lines. And with Kotex, no "wrong side" mix-up! You can wear this napkin on either side, safely.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins

P.S. When "that" day arrives for the first time, will you be prepared? Send today for the new free booklet "You're a Young Lady Now"! Written for girls 9 to 12, it tells all you need to know, beforehand. Easy-reading. Button-bright! Write P.O. Box 3434, Dept. 1855, Chicago 54, Illinois.

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

be heard: how Mildred Lehde had leaped to her feet, and pointed at George, screaming, "He did it, not my husband. He was alone with Spindell, my husband wasn't even there. Ask him where the money is!"

The courtroom erupted then, and Martha remembered Mildred Lehde screaming at the top of her voice, and being dragged from the courtroom by two bailiffs on order of the judge. After this, the judge had cautioned the jury not to consider the outburst of this hysterical woman, and to strike it from their minds and memories.

But this was ten years later, and Martha Radcliffe realized that she had not stricken it from her memory, that it had risen again to taunt and torment her like some monstrous ghoul.

When she walked into the house, she went straight to the magazine rack and saw that the New York Times of the day before was still there. She read the item again, of Mildred Lehde's ceaseless efforts over ten years to get a pardon for her husband, and finally the statement William Lehde had made:

"I am an innocent man. Others have crucified me. I can only pray that someday the real murderer will be found."

"Others have crucified me."

Who?

Now, as though in a dream, Martha noted Mildred Lehde's address in the story, a number on East 106th Street. Then, suddenly, she threw herself on the couch and began to weep.

For she knew that now she must talk to Mildred Lehde. This was the forbidden door, and she had opened it wide. She could not turn back now; it was too late.

The street was noisy and squalid, a slum area of cold-water tenements.

Martha Radcliffe stood uncertainly at the entrance of the dirty and dilapidated building, uncertain whether to enter the dark and squalid hallway, or flee back into the sun. The stench of the place struck her almos physical force.

She noted on one of the rusty ma that Mildred Lehde lived on the fourt Slowly she mounted the rickety steps u came to the door. Then she knocked, a door opened, and Mildred Lehde was ing there.

"Yes?"

The woman spoke, looking at Mart lenly, and without recognition. She wa ing a greasy wrapper, and her face, as had remembered it ten years befor been meager enough, but now it was The woman's hair, which she had remem as black, was now gray, and the eyes su bagged. Mildred Lehde stared in hosti

"Well? What do you want?"

"You don't remember me, Mrs. L Martha asked.

"Remember you? Why should I —"

Then the woman's eyes opened wid her mouth sagged open in stunned su

"Radcliffe. Mrs. Radcliffe."

"Yes. May I come in?"

But Mildred Lehde could only stan and stare at her, and then two childre from the room and looked at her cu one about twelve, a boy, and the other somewhat younger. Their dirty faces w and pinched, with the look of never enough to eat.

"What do you want?"

"I must talk to you, Mrs. Lehde."

There was a moment of silence, and saw the hatred in the woman, the vi hatred. Then the hatred died reluctan this moment, and turned to curiosit opened the door wide.

"Come in."

Martha entered. There was an unma in the room, and a cot in the corner. T was cluttered with remnants of food—a of milk, a half-empty bowl of corn f few half-eaten slices of bread lying cracked dish. Mildred Lehde saw the Martha's face, and she said, both cynica defiantly:

"Oh, you get used to it, Mrs. Ra When you live on public welfare, you g to almost anything."

MARTHA made no answer to this, fo was no answer to make. The two childr staring at her. Martha thought, They sh in school, but remembered quickly. Thi urday. And the mother turned to the b girl.

"Carla. You, too, Tommy. Better ge

"But where'll we go?"

"Go? Go anywhere. Outside and pl remember, stay off the street. And d near those Lopez kids, d'you hear? get you both into trouble."

Then the children left, and Martha them clattering down the stairs, and s her attention was caught by a small photograph standing on the bureau. smiled from within the cheap frame, face was of a man, William Lehde. T ture must have been taken a long time the face was young, and gay, and la and showed no fear. Martha could n her eyes from the photograph, thinkin this be the same haggard and fear-ridde saw at the trial? Is this the same old an face in the newspaper? And she t George, George, is this what you have

"What do you want, Mrs. Radcliff did you come here?"

"I had to come, Mrs. Lehde."

"Why?"

"You've been working for ten years your husband a pardon."

"Well?"

"What makes you so sure he's inn

Mildred Lehde's eyes narrowed, and there was a sudden gleam of triumph, must have seen something in Martha And she persisted, cruelly:

"Now, look, Mrs. Radcliffe. You come here just to go slumming. It was conscience, wasn't it?"

"Mrs. Lehde, please —"

"Bill was innocent. They sent the man to prison. You know it. And your p George knows it."

"But the evidence was all against h

NEW sparkling fluted bottles . . . new packages with a hand-painted air in colorings of charcoal, blue and gold. As unique as the fragrance of roses-and-spice they adorn. An elegance befitting the special love of women everywhere for America's own fragrance classic.

Enjoy Early American Old Spice in a complete fragrance series . . . from bath crystals to purse perfume . . . including gift sets. 1.00 to 2.50 plus tax

SHULTON

New York Toronto

"Your husband was against him," said the woman. "He was the evidence."

"But I'm talking about proof."

"Proof? You want proof, Mrs. Radcliffe?" Mildred Lehde went to a drawer in the bureau, took out the copy of the Times, and flung it on the table in front of Martha. "It's all in here. The Parole Board offered Bill a pardon if he'd only tell them where the money was. Do you know that?"

"Yes."

"Only he didn't tell them. And you know why? Because he didn't know. Do you think he'd stay in jail, and let his family rot in a place like this, if he could produce the money?" She moved toward Martha, her face white. "And where is the real murderer? I'll tell you where he is. Up in a big house at Greenview Point, living off the fat of the land. On the money he said my husband took!"

"Mrs. Lehde, I'm not going to listen ——"

"Oh, yes you are! Your husband wasn't a big shot at the company then. Where did he get all the money to build a big, beautiful house like that? Answer me, Mrs. Radcliffe. Where did he get it?" But Martha had no answer. And the woman continued, "And all the time you knew it. All this time, you let my husband rot in jail ——"

And Martha answered, in agony, "No, no, Mrs. Lehde. Believe me, I never knew any such thing. I only thought it possible when ——"

Then she stopped, realizing that she had almost spoken of the letter, and Mildred Lehde said:

"When what?"

And Martha would not answer, and the woman again pressed her cruelly, crying:

"When what, Mrs. Radcliffe? When what?"

"I don't know. I don't know."

"I see. You don't know." Then she looked at Martha in hatred and contempt, and said quietly:

"Do you know what it means to be the wife of a man they call a murderer? To take the train, once a week, up to Ossining, to Sing Sing, and wait for them to bring him to you like a caged animal, and live for the few minutes you get the chance to hold his hand? You saw my children. Do you know what it means to have other children chase yours, and throw rocks at them and yell, 'Your old man is a jailbird, your old man is a killer!'?" Her face was pale in anger. "They should have been yelling it at your children, not mine!"

At this, Martha sank into a chair and started to weep. Each word Mildred Lehde had said to her was a whip across her face.

"Mrs. Radcliffe, listen to me. For God's sake, do the right thing. If you won't tell me, go to the police. Tell them what you know."

"Speak against my own husband?"

"Look at it another way. Against a thief and a murderer. Against a man who sent another man to jail."

"No," said Martha. "I cannot."

"But it's the only decent thing to do, the only honest thing to do. Please, Mrs. Radcliffe, give us back our lives, give my children a chance. Your husband's already stolen ten years of their lives."

Martha rose, and went to the door, moaning, "I won't listen to any more. I don't want to hear any more."

"Then I pity you, Mrs. Radcliffe," said Mildred Lehde quietly. "Because of what you'll carry on your conscience for the rest of your life."

Somehow, Martha got downstairs. She walked along the hot and crowded street, thinking, Why did I ever go to see her? Every step I have taken leads to George, everything points a finger at George. And all this is my lonely secret, the pain must be mine alone, for it is something I can talk of to no other person. When she got into the car, she put her head in her arms, and leaned on the steering wheel and wept, crying, I love him, and how can I turn against him, no matter what he has done?

As Martha drove up to the house, she saw a delivery truck turn into her driveway, and on it the name, Allen Florists.

The driver saw her, and gave her the long box, and she signed for it and then went in and opened it. There were twelve long-stemmed American Beauties, wired from Cleveland, and a card that said, "Believe me, George."

She stood there for a moment, staring at the card, and as she did Annette came downstairs.

"Mother, David just called from Fort Benning. They gave him leave, for the wedding. He's flying in to Idlewild on Wednesday morning."

"Annette, that's wonderful." Martha tried to smile, thinking, I am at home now, and I must put on a face for all this; I must be careful before others.

"Oh, and another thing," said Annette. "David says his captaincy's a sure thing now. The papers are all in, his commanding officer's recommendation, everything. It's just a matter of days."

"That's fine," Martha said dully.

Annette looked at her closely, and a little puzzled. "Mother, what's wrong?"

"Wrong?"

"You look a little low. Something on your mind?"

"No."

"You can tell me."

"It's nothing."

And Annette shrugged and said, "All right. But something's been depressing you for the last few days. I've noticed it."

"It's nothing," repeated Martha. Then she lied: "The wedding, perhaps, I don't know."

"Well," smiled Annette, "you and dad wanted the church wedding, not Ralph and I. Of course if you make us a reasonable offer, we'd be glad to elope."

"Don't be silly," said Martha.

Annette noted the roses, then picked up the card. She smiled, a little tenderly. "You know what, mother?"

"What?"

"You're a very lucky woman. If Ralph is half as wonderful as dad, after we've been married twenty-five years—well, I wouldn't want anything more."

The seam's the secret... that's what full-fashioned means. On the leg it plummets in a fine, straight line to fool the eye: slimming, trimming, making legs look longer. And Berkshire prolongs this pretty illusion with Nylace twin run-stops that end top and toe runs forever! From $1.35. sheer sheer BERKSHIRE STOCKINGS

ASK Mary Gordon OF TWA

HOW TO GET READY

FOR A TRIP TO EUROPE

What to take . . . Mary Gordon of TWA will tell you her travel secret is to take mix-and-match separates, clothes that shrug off wrinkles, wash quickly, need no ironing. Her booklet "Basic Travel Wardrobes," including packing tips, will help you be fashion-right, as you travel light, whether you're Europe-bound or off to see America first.

How to go . . . Fly TWA to Europe, or from coast to coast in a few short hours. On the way, enjoy TWA's service . . . the finest at home or abroad. In Europe, for example, a friendly TWA hostess meets you, assists you through customs, explains foreign currencies. You're at home in every country when you fly TWA.

How to pay... Use TWA's "Time Pay Plan." The smallest down payment flies you anywhere in the world. As little as $56.00 down, for instance, starts you from New York to Paris . . . $10.90 down, and you're on your way coast to coast. Pay the balance in monthly installments, spread over as long as 20 months. For more information, mail the coupon below, or for help with a special travel problem, write Mary Gordon of TWA.

Mary Gordon's packing tips show you how to pack in a third the space . . . avoid repacking on your trip.

Ask your local TWA office, travel agent or Mary Gordon about TWA bargain tours to Europe, or the coast.

FILL OUT AND MAIL

Mary Gordon of TWA, Dept. J55
Trans World Airlines, 380 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Please send me the following free booklets

☐ Basic Travel Wardrobes, including packing tips ☐ Skyliner Tours of Europe
☐ East Coast Tours
☐ "Time Pay Plan"

NAME_____
PLEASE PRINT
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____ ZONE____ STATE_____

Annette ran upstairs, and Martha fingered the card George had sent. And she thought, Believe what, George?

Why do you ask me to believe a lie?

We have lived a lie all these years, and it is only through this lie that we are here, in this fine, big house, and Mildred Lehde and her children are there. For if the truth had been told, it would be the other way around.

Now, what shall I do? Stay silent, and live with my conscience?

The agony of this decision was more than she could endure. She was tempted to run upstairs, and tell Annette the whole story, and say, "This is my dilemma. What shall I do?"

Suddenly she was aware that the phone had been ringing, and now she heard Annette's voice from upstairs, "Mother. Pick up the phone. It's dad. He's calling from Cleveland."

And she thought with sudden panic, I cannot talk to him, how can I talk to him now? But she steeled herself, knowing that she must.

"Hello, George."

"Martha. How are you?"

"Fine. Where are you staying?"

"At the Statler."

"How are things going in Cleveland?"

"It's an awful mess. But I think I can clear it up. I want to get home as soon as I can."

She told him of David, and the fact that his captaincy looked sure. And he crowed with pride, saying, "That's my boy." Then, "You got my flowers, Martha?"

"Yes. Thank you, George. They're beautiful."

"I'll tell you something, darling."

"Yes?"

Chinese description of piano playing: You fight him in the teeth, he cry.

—MONTREALER

"I miss you."

"Do you?"

"These hotel rooms get lonelier all the time. I should have taken you with me."

They went on to talk of small things, and although Martha tried desperately to keep her voice light and gay, she knew that the strain came through it. Finally there was a pause — the pause when there is nothing more to be said, and it is time to say good-by. And George said suddenly, "Martha, what's wrong?"

"Nothing."

"Yes, there is." Then a pause. "It's the letter, isn't it? You still think it might be true."

"No, George. No."

She knew that her denial was unconvincing. There was a long moment of silence, so long that she thought the phone had gone dead. Then, "Martha, let's face the unpleasant fact."

"Yes?"

"You either believe Clay or you believe me. It's just as simple as that."

"George, please ——"

"No, let me finish. All the time I've been here in Cleveland, I've been thinking about it. I still can't believe that letter ever came. But it has. And because it has, it's created a new situation between us, Martha. The choice is yours. It's all up to you. If you believe me, really believe me, then nothing has really changed. But if you don't ——"

He left the rest unsaid, but the meaning was clear. And Martha cried, in her agony, "George, no. Don't say things like that."

"I've only one more thing to say, and I want you to listen carefully, Martha."

"Yes?"

His voice came over the wire, suddenly low and quiet and tender. He said, "I love you. Always remember that. Good night, darling."

He hung up then, and for this moment, this brief moment, and in her exhilaration, she told herself, I believe, I believe. How could I have doubted this man? If I were with him now, I would know how to make him forget I ever doubted him.

But the moment was brief and quickly drowned in the turmoil and the agony surging up in her again, and the question, What shall I do, what shall I do?

The best is always a

PRO

Get PRO "59" Child's Size— the tooth brush designed especially for children. Softer bristles for tender young gums; correct size for young mouths. PRO "59" Child's Size with multiple nylon bristles cleans better, massages gums gently. And, there's a free prize in every package. Remember—

for the best—go PRO

PRO-PHY-LAC-TIC BRUSH CO.
Division of The Lambert Company, Florence, Mass.

WIPE AWAY FACIAL HAIR

NEW ZiP CREAM HAIR REMOVER

CONTAINS LANOLIN AND THE WONDER INGREDIENT EMORAL

Medically Approved . . . Odorless

A new, exclusive formula, created by superfluous hair specialists of more than 40 years experience, ZiP CREAM HAIR REMOVER answers Milady's fondest dream: A pure white fragrant cream for removing facial hair, containing two beneficial and protective agents, Lanolin and Emoral. Leaves skin petal-smooth. No bristly regrowth; no stubble.

Perfectly Simple . . . Simply Perfect for quickly and easily washing hair off the face as well as off the arms, legs, and body. You will be delighted — amazed!

ZiP – IT'S OFF!

Good stores . . $1.50 . . 89¢ . . 50¢

JORDEAU • FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK

On Wednesday morning, Martha picked up
David at Idlewild airport. When they got home surprise awaited them, for George was there.
Martha stared at him, saying, "George, when id you get here?" And he nodded toward his npacked bags in the living room.
"Just got in a few minutes ago. Called the ouse, but you were gone. Annette picked me p at LaGuardia."
He spoke quickly, and over his shoulder, r he was grinning at David, and David at
m. Then they embraced the way men who e close embrace, clapping each other on e back, each laughing in their pleasure.
"Congratulations, captain."
"Thanks for the promotion, dad. But aren't u a little premature?"
"I've heard all about it. I'm proud of you.
e been telling everybody downtown of your liant deeds in battle."
Then David said, grinning, "You know very ll I never heard a shot fired in anger."
"Sure," said George. "I know it. You know
But do they have to know it?"
Now Annette came running downstairs and w David. She squealed with delight and ran him. He lifted her off the floor, and whirled r around and around, laughing, "Here comes e bride." The room was gay with all of them, e chatter going back and forth, and Martha ddcliffe watched them, and her heart was ht for the moment. For she thought, This the way it used to be, my house is full again.
After that, they went into the dining room a second breakfast. And through this artha spoke to the children, and George oke to them, but George and Martha did t speak directly to each other.
Then as they lingered over the coffee, artha saw Charlie Minner coming up the lk, carrying his heavy mailbag. She rose d took the mail from him, and then went o the study, with the intention of sorting it, d getting back to her family.
Then, with a shock, she saw the letter on bottom was from Mildred Lehde.
With trembling fingers, she opened the velope. It was a simple piece of lined yellow tepaper. And on it were written only six rds: "Give my husband back to me."
Dully, Martha tore up the note and emptied pieces into the wastebasket. And as she shed, Annette came toward the study.
Mother, what are you doing here? Come on nd join the party."
And Martha quickly slipped the envelope a drawer of the desk, saying, "I'll be right
dear."
After that, she went into the dining room,
the sun-bright room with all its gaiety, laughed as loudly as any of them.

All day long, they studiously avoided the ject. All day long they were husband and e, yet they were strangers.
low it was night, and they had retired to r room. She sat at the dressing table, brush-her hair, and she could see his reflection as ay on the bed, smoking and watching her dily. And this upset her so that she turned face away from the mirror. And she ught, This is ridiculous. We are both acting children. But it was George who spoke the word.
"Martha, we'd better talk this out, once for all."

"es," she said tightly.
"You still think I killed Spindell?"
"I don't know," she said miserably. "I don't w."
"Hadn't you better make up your mind?"
said coldly.
Then she turned toward him, and the words t from her: "George, why did you lie to
?"
"Lie?" He stared. "What are you talking t? How did I lie to you, Martha?"
"About the money. About all that money we ght the house with, everything. You see, I d to Frank."
"Frank Wheeler?"
"Yes."
His face drained white, but his eyes were
. "What did he tell you?"
"He said you never made that money in market."
"I see. So you went behind my back."

"George, I had to know."
"All right," he said. "Now you know."
She cried out in anguish, "George, George, tell me the truth, where did you get the money?"
And he answered bitterly, "Try asking Frank Wheeler again."
"George, you must have some kind of answer, you must!"
"All right. I have an answer. Suppose I told you I made the money through another broker?"
"What other broker?"
"You want the name, Martha?"
"Yes."
"Why?" he said cruelly. "So you can check up on me again?"
"But if you're telling the truth ——"
"There'd never be any way for you to find out, Martha." He smiled mirthlessly. "You see, this other broker's dead. Been dead for years. His office was liquidated. All the records destroyed."
"I see," she said hopelessly. "He's dead."
"I suppose you don't believe this, either."
"No," she said. "I'm sorry, George. If you'd only explain ——"
"Why should I bother?" he said. "I'm convicted already, as far as you're concerned. Why should I waste my breath? You wouldn't know the difference between the truth and a lie, anyway. Not any more. At least, not from me." She started to say something, but he interrupted her with a harsh laugh. "Let's stop all this fencing, Martha. You can cut it any way you want, but the fact is this: You think I killed Spindell and stole that money. You think I sent Lehde to jail to cover up for myself. All right, let's leave it that way. I'm a murderer. The question is, what are you going to do about it?" He watched her, waiting. And she squirmed, thinking, George, what is going on in that brain of yours, what kind of answer do you expect? How can I answer, if I do not know the truth, for you have not told it to me?

Beauty Tips for Sunny Feet!

1. Dance and have a summer of fun in LAUREL LEI! White, Black, Blue, Red, Peacock, Watermelon.

2. Sun your toes in cool CAPRI SHELL! Soft straps and tapered heels. Red, White, many colors!

3. Tie GAY ESPADRILLE a new way every day! Light Cork 'n Crepe soles. Cushiony. Favorite colors.

4. Match your steps to his in SALUDOS! Mr. and Mrs. styles in Red, Blue, Brown, Black, White.

U.S. Kedettes®
THE WASHABLE CASUALS

Just 4 of many from 3.50 to 5.95

US RUBBER

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

Keep him rash-free

Keep him happy with Lanolin-rich, oil-rich

Finally, he turned and went to the closet, and took out his robe, and stuffed cigarettes and matches in the pocket. Then he picked up the pillow on his bed, and tucked it under his arm.

"George. Where are you going?"

"I'm sleeping in the guest room."

"But that's ridiculous!"

"Is it?" Then he laughed cruelly. "Surely, Martha, you don't want to sleep in the same room with a murderer, do you? How could you be sure I wouldn't strangle you some dark night?"

"Please," she said, in a kind of panic, "please, don't, George. Stay here."

"Why?" he wanted to know. "Why should we be hypocrites? Do you really think we can stay husband and wife after this?"

And Martha wanted to cry out, George, we can, we can. If only you had told me the truth, I might have forgiven you even this. For you must know that I love you enough.

But before she could answer, he was gone. She heard the door of the guest room open, and slam shut. And she thought, It is the first time in twenty-five years we have ever been separated under the same roof.

It was about ten in the morning when Martha reached the address which she had remembered on Jeremiah Clay's letter.

The superintendent told her that Clay had moved from the building some three years ago. But fortunately he still had kept the forwarding address, a number on Third Avenue, and he gave it to Martha.

Now she parked the car under the el, and saw that the entrance was situated between a shabby pawnshop and a tavern. She walked into the dim vestibule and peered at the mailboxes.

And then she saw the name, a scrawl on a card. Jeremiah Clay. Apartment 2C.

She pressed the bell, thinking dully, Perhaps I have pressed the button to my own execution. The buzzer sounded on the door, and she opened it. The dark hall had the same smell she had noted at the Lehdes', the smell of the poor. And from somewhere above the flight of the wooden steps, a hoarse voice called, "Up here." And Martha realized it was a woman's voice.

Then, with heavy and reluctant feet, she slowly mounted the stairs. She saw the woman waiting at an open door, a huge and uncorseted slattern shapeless with fat, the eyes cold and fishy in a suspicious, pock-marked face. Her hands were wet, she had apparently been washing dishes or clothes, and now she rubbed them on her dirty apron as she stared at Martha.

"Yes? What is it?"

"I'd like to see Mr. Clay."

Then the woman stared at Martha up and down, in a faintly hostile yet curious way.

"What do you want to see him about?"

Before Martha could answer, a voice came from the room, the voice of an old and tired man, calling peevishly, "Who is it, Stella?"

"A lady to see you."

"Well, bring her in, bring her in."

Then the woman stepped aside to let Martha pass, staring at her all the while, her eyes insolent and yet wondering, and Martha entered the room.

The room was dark, for it was shadowed by a pillar of the el outside, and in it was the sour smell of the sick. The bed was still unmade, revealing the filthy sheet, and the floor was littered untidily with a chaos of crumpled garments. She saw a wash bucket on the grimy sink, and some damp underwear just wrung from the wash; and aside from the bed, there was no other furniture but a battered bureau topped by a cracked mirror, a wooden table, and two straw-backed chairs.

Jeremiah Clay was sitting next to the window, staring at her. He was dressed in a tattered striped bathrobe, and beneath this his thin veined legs were naked, and his feet covered by a pair of dirty scuffs. But it was his face that made her gasp, for it was terribly emaciated, the skeletal bones showing beneath the taut and parchment-white skin, and if there was any look on his face that might be given a name, it was death. Only his eyes seemed bright and animated, and they watched her suspiciously, but without recognition.

And Martha thought, How thin he is, and how he has aged. I would have never recognized him now, not out of my memory.

"What can I do for you?"

"You don't remember me, Mr. Clay?"

He peered at her and shook his head.

"My name is Martha Radcliffe. I'm George Radcliffe's wife."

"George Radcliffe's wife?"

He stared at her and half rose from his seat, his mouth dropping in astonishment. Then recognition came back to him, and he sank back. And after a long time, asked:

"What do you want?"

Martha turned toward the doorway, for the slattern was still there, the woman Clay had called Stella. But she did not budge, she was staring at Martha. It was obvious that she knew the name of Radcliffe, and had heard it before.

"I must talk to you privately," said Martha.

Now! Waterproof make-up..

Now you can swim or swelter–

Smooth Helena Rubinstein's Silk-Tone Foundation evenly over entire face with up-and-out strokes. Apply Silk-Tone Rouge in a 3-dot triangle, as above; blend up and outward. Then use Eye Shadow Stick.

Now, waterproof the COET way! Moisten a COET, quilted cotton square; in cold water press dry. Pat over entire face. Don't be timid! Damp COET won't streak your make-up– they set it, smoothly, evenly.

Coets and Helena

Quilted Cotton Squares

Then Clay turned to the woman, and said harshly, "Get out, Stella."

And the woman answered angrily, "You're a fine one to order me around, Jeremiah."

"I told you to make yourself scarce. This is none of your business."

The woman glared at him sullenly, as if undecided whether to go, or whether to defy him and stay. But finally she turned and went out into the corridor, and Clay rose, slamming the door behind her. Then he turned to Martha, still staring at her as though she were some kind of apparition.

"Well, Mrs. Radcliffe? What have we got to talk about?"

Then Martha told him only of the letter, and how it had come to their house after ten years, and why it had been delayed. He listened to her without a word, his face a study in growing astonishment. And finally Martha concluded:

"Mr. Clay, I know you must think I'm mad coming here. But I had to, don't you see? I've got to find out the truth from you. Was that letter of yours a lie? Was it?"

But the old man did not seem to hear her. Instead, he pounded his bony fist on the window sill in a kind of angry frustration.

"So that was it, eh? The mail got lost. No wonder he never answered my letter. And all these years, I thought he had bluffed me out ——"

Then he thought better of continuing, and his face became shrewd and a little furtive.

And Martha repeated, in agony, "Was that letter of yours a lie, Mr. Clay?"

He studied her carefully, trying to probe for some kind of trick. But he saw none, only the agony and the desperation.

"No," he said slowly. "My letter was the truth. Your husband was Spindell's murderer, Mrs. Radcliffe."

"But how do you know George did this?"

"Because I saw him."

"You saw him?"

Now he eyed her with a kind of secret amusement, and waved her to the other chair.

"Sit down, Mrs. Radcliffe. I see no harm in telling you what happened now. In fact, the more I think of it, the more I'm sure there may be some good in it for both of us."

"I don't understand ——"

"Patience, Mrs. Radcliffe, patience." He smiled. "You wouldn't think it to look at me now, but I've had some education, and I'll try to tell you what happened in an intelligent kind of way. That is, if you're ready to listen."

"Yes. Oh, yes."

"All right. Now suppose we begin at the beginning. The night Spindell was killed. It so happened that this particular night was my night off, but we'd been having boiler trouble all that week. Anyway, I decided to drop in anyway, just to see that everything was all right with the oil lines, and so forth. You follow me, Mrs. Radcliffe?"

"Yes."

HE leaned back with his eyes half closed, as though savoring the memory, and continued:

"I can't say I ever had a more interesting evening. You see, I'd just checked the boiler, and was coming up the cellar steps toward the first floor, when I heard someone coming downstairs from the second floor. That man was your husband."

"George?"

"No mistake about it. I saw him very clearly, but he didn't see me. I was on the lower stairs, as I said, and he was too interested in Eli Spindell's office. He walked straight down the corridor toward it. I knew Spindell and Lehde were both in the building, but your husband was a surprise to me. Even then, I might not have looked twice. But his face was pale, dead white. And he was carrying a small black bag, and wearing gloves."

And Martha said dully, "I see."

"To go on. I saw your husband open Spindell's door softly. Then he pushed the light switch next to the door, throwing the room in darkness. Then I heard Spindell yell out, 'Lehde!' As far as Spindell knew, the clerk was the only other man in the building, and since it was dark, he couldn't see your husband. A moment later George Radcliffe came out of Spindell's office with the bag, only now it was full. He opened the window and threw it outside to another man, a confederate. It was very clever of your husband, Mrs. Radcliffe. I take off my hat to him. He'd planned to put himself in the clear by simply phoning the police and waiting there till they came, without having to hide the money somewhere in the building. Later on, he met his friend, and they disposed of the money between them." He smiled sardonically. "And if I know your husband, he certainly took the lion's share."

"But this accomplice," said Martha. "Who could he have been?"

"Nobody will ever know," said the old man. "Except your husband, of course. But whoever he is, he's keeping quiet about it. And you can't blame him. After all, he didn't know George Radcliffe was going to kill Spindell. Robbery's one thing, you see. But being an accessory to a murder, that's something else. Whoever he is, you can't blame him for being quiet."

"It doesn't seem possible," whispered Martha. "The whole thing, I can't believe it's possible. I can understand the money, perhaps. But why did he have to kill?"

"My dear Mrs. Radcliffe. Whatever your husband is, he's no fool. Spindell dead was much safer than Spindell alive. Especially when they found the paymaster with Bill Lehde's letter opener in him."

The old man coughed spasmodically, and took a spoonful of medicine from a bottle on the window sill. Then he wiped his mouth and smiled.

"Anyway, I've got to hand it to your husband. He was not only a born thief, Mrs. Radcliffe, but a born actor. The way he did it in court. The way he sent poor Lehde to jail." Clay chuckled, his bright little eyes gleaming. "All the play-acting. The way he squirmed and bit his nails. The white face and hanging head. The good citizen doing his reluctant duty. I'll say this, he fooled the court with it. And he would have fooled me, if I hadn't known."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 1

with Helena Rubinstein and Coets!

and your make-up stays perfect! Just do this . . .

—don't rub—Silk-Screen Powder on face and throat with a soft COET. Repeat three times, dust away excess with a clean COET. COETS are much softer than ordinary cotton because they don't "fuzz"!

Etch brows in short, feathery strokes with Everpoint Eye Pencil. Brush Helena Rubinstein's Waterproof Mascara on upper lashes. (This mascara won't smudge, smear or streak . . . lashes look thicker, lovelier!)

Now, set the waterproof! Moisten a COET and press all over face and eye area. (COETS won't wad up when wet—handier than plain cotton.) Last, apply creamy Stay-Long Lipstick and blot with a damp COET.

See! Thanks to Helena Rubinstein and COETS, your make-up is completely waterproof—all set for a dunking or a downpour! And it's the smoothest, most natural-looking make-up ever to face summer!

Rubinstein® cosmetics go together!

Box of 80—43¢ • Box of 40—23¢

BUXTON, INC. • SPRINGFIELD, MASS. ©1955

you put your bills in the billfold...

you take them out of the coin purse!

Here's CONVENIENCE and SECURITY.
Open the coin purse — and you can slip out both bills and coins without unfolding the purse. And for the important big bills, there's a separate secret compartment that keeps them securely hidden. Shown in Saddle Cowhide $5.
Other leathers and colors from $7.50 to $10.
ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

it's the new FRENCH PURSE by LADY BUXTON best for your money

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 153

Each word hit Martha like a blow in the ice, and thickened the nausea in her throat. nd she remembered again George sitting in he witness chair, with downcast face, and say- g, "I saw the man and it was Lehde."

"You knew all this," she whispered to Clay. You saw all this. Yet you said nothing."

"Exactly. I figured my silence would be orth something, Mrs. Radcliffe. Twenty-five ousand dollars, to be exact. You may be a oman of conscience, you must be, in order to ave come here in the first place. Believe me, I lmire this quality in you. But not in me. The ought struck me at the time that your hus- nd had suddenly come into a lot of money, d he could afford to take a little off the top r a poor man. I asked him to take care of me, the corridor of the courthouse, right after e trial. But he refused. I even threatened to to the police. He told me to go ahead."

"Then why didn't you go?"

"Your husband very cleverly pointed out the t that the evidence had already been given, d Lehde convicted. If I went to the police, it isn't necessarily true that they'd believe me. d even if I did, I'd be in trouble myself. For rjury in testimony. For withholding evi- nce. And for blackmail. You understand?"

"Yes."

"In a way," Clay said with an ironical smile, he whole thing was a pity. It would have en so easy for both of us to agree, instead of hting each other."

"Then George never paid you a cent?" ed Martha.

"No."

"And you never went to the police?"

"No. After that, I wrote him the letter you erred to. I thought he'd come around, after had a chance to think it over. And when I n't hear from him, I figured he'd simply bluffed me. I didn't know he never got t letter until you just walked in and told "

Now the room shimmered and swam in the r of Martha Radcliffe's tears, and something ner shrieked, Get out, get out of this horrible ce, away from this diseased and evil man, into the clean air and the sun! Now she w. She had walked the full length of the bidden road, and this was the end, and e was no longer any doubt. And she wept de, George, George, what have you done? It ie end of us all.

he started to walk woodenly toward the r. And then:

One moment, Mrs. Radcliffe."

She turned and faced him again, and now she saw a cold smile on his face.

"Haven't you forgotten something?"

"What do you mean?"

"Why, the money."

"What money?"

He grinned evilly. "My dear Mrs. Radcliffe, our business is still unfinished. Surely you wouldn't leave a poor and dying old man empty-handed, without making some kind of contribution."

She stared at him, saying again, "What do you mean?" And he went on craftily:

"Why, it's very simple. Your visit here was a godsend, Mrs. Radcliffe. A fresh wind out of the past, you might say. In fact, it has renewed my interest in this whole affair. I am willing to write off the past ten years. Let us say my poverty has been due to this unfortunate accident, this misplaced letter. But now the letter has arrived, has it not? And you must see that the situation hasn't really changed. Your husband is still at large, the murderer of Eli Spindell, and I still know what I know."

"You mean you intend to blackmail my husband all over again?"

"Why not?"

Now she saw the hypocrisy in his face, and the confidence. And she heard herself saying, "Mr. Clay, you're making a mistake."

"Am I? Why?"

"If my husband refused to be blackmailed then, I'm sure he won't change his mind now."

"Then it's up to you to persuade him, Mrs. Radcliffe."

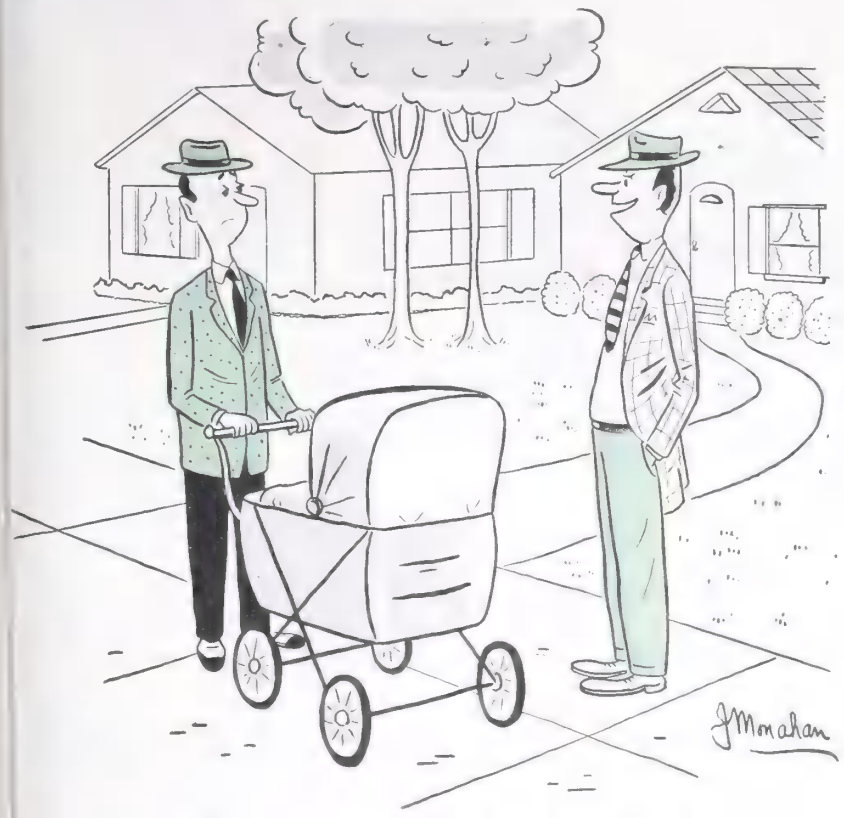
"I?"

"You."



She saw the trap in his face, it was so plain now. She was to be the instrument for this, she was caught and she knew that there was greed here, and there would be no quarter and no mercy. And she cried desperately, "But I can't. I don't dare tell him I was here."

"I can see your husband's point of view," smiled Clay maliciously. "Naturally, he's going to be upset. It must be obvious to you, Mrs. Radcliffe, that coming here was a very stupid thing to do. It would have been much better to let well enough alone. But now you're involved, and I suggest that you be sensible about it."

"Mr. Clay ——"

"I am not a greedy man, as I told you. I am not even interested in a large lump sum of money, as I was originally. I should be very glad to settle for something on a weekly basis. Say two hundred a week. Every week."

"But I can't do it."

"Why don't you assert yourself? In our house, I just change mine, feed him and walk the floor with him."

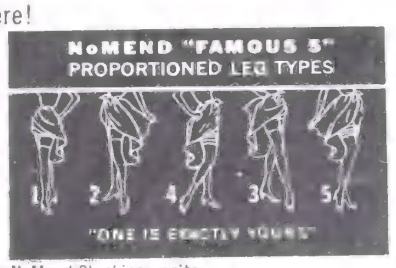
The best stockings you can buy are your best buy

NoMend®

Stockings of Fashion

In stockings, as in everything else, you get exactly what you pay for. In NoMend Stockings, full-fashioned or NoSeam you get even a little MORE!

ONLY NoMEND brings you the "FAMOUS 5"® Proportioned Leg Types... knit to fit perfectly from toe to top. "One is exactly yours." You are actually measured for your NoMends by a trained fitter. No wonder they fit and wear so well!



ONLY NoMEND comes in the new FASHION-PRESCRIBED COLOURS, co-ordinated with all the new season's fabric and leather colours. No wonder they're so smart!

ONLY NoMEND stockings bear the coveted seal of the BETTER FABRICS TESTING BUREAU for first quality. No wonder they look so lovely!

TESTED and APPROVED by Better Fabrics Testing Bureau for HIGHEST QUALITY

These exclusive quality features in NoMend nylons make them cost a little more but the untold satisfaction in wear, and the flattery they lend your legs, make them the best stockings you can buy... anywhere!

TYPE 1—Small • TYPE 2—Average
TYPE 3—Tall
TYPE 4—Average, larger above the knee
TYPE 5—Tall, larger above the knee

Depend on NoMEND Stockings of Fashion

For the name of the store nearest you selling NoMend Stockings write NoMend Hosiery Inc., 350 Fifth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

"You'd better do it."

"If I told George I'd been here ——"

"Perhaps it won't be necessary to tell him, Mrs. Radcliffe."

"What do you mean?"

"Of course this is your problem," he said, smiling. "But I'm only trying to help you with it. All I want is two hundred a week. And personally, I don't care whether it comes out of his pocket . . . or yours. Just as long as it comes."

"Are you suggesting that I ——"

"Why not?" He shrugged. "You're a wealthy woman, Mrs. Radcliffe. I have no doubt that you have funds of your own."

"Suppose I refuse," she said slowly.

"Then I'd go to the police," Jeremiah Clay told her.

"But if you didn't dare tell them before ——"

"Ah," he said. "Ten years is a long time. And things have changed." Then his face grew grim, and he tapped his chest. "Mrs. Radcliffe, I'm going to tell you something you don't know. The doctors tell me I'm very sick—very sick in here. They give me another year. Perhaps two. I can afford to gamble now. What can I lose? Suppose the police did throw me in prison? I couldn't be any worse off than I am now."

Somewhere downstairs a door slammed. Somewhere she heard a raucous voice. Something about staying off the street, and a child's irreverent answer. It seemed that she heard a rustling outside the room, somewhere in the corridor. Was it only her imagination? She did not know.

"I'll give you until next Saturday, Mrs. Radcliffe," Jeremiah Clay was saying. "No longer. Two hundred dollars in cash—the first installment. You can simply mail it to me. If I don't get it by then, I'm going to the police."

Somehow she got out of the room, and stumbled down the stairs, and finally out on the sidewalk.

After that, she crossed the cobbled stre under the el, and got into her car, and beg the long drive home.

My husband is a thief and a murderer.

Martha Radcliffe spoke the words to h self, over and over, all the way home.

Yet their meaning did not seem to penetra They had an almost casual ring. The way y might say to a new acquaintance, "My h band is a lawyer," or "My husband is merchant." They sounded as though someo else had spoken them, some other wom about some other man.

And as she drove along the parkway, made her decision. I must keep silent. I m find some way to meet Jeremiah Clay's mands, and keep him silent. I cannot and I not destroy my own family, no matter w George has done. I am flesh and blood, a hur being. I am not a saint, and there is a pl where a conscience must stop. I am sorry William Lehde, and his wife, and his child very sorry. I will do everything I can for th for they have been cruelly wronged. But my family must come first, my obligation is to tect them first. Is this so wrong? Is what I doing a sin? Would not any woman, any o woman, do the same?

All through the evening Martha Radc persuaded herself, and rationalized th things, and even managed to feel righteous a little while:

But later, as she lay in bed, she tossed turned fitfully, and the face of Mildred Le became clearer, and the thin faces of her dren, and the face of the young man smi from the picture on the bureau.

And she knew that she had lived the da fantasy, and the way out she had chosen not the way at all. For if anything was c it was this: there was not enough room in for both George and her conscience, sooner or later she must keep one, and the door on the other.

Finally she drifted off into uneasy s crying to herself, What shall I do? Ga heaven, what shall I do?

There was a voice in her ear, and the v was harsh and unpleasant. It was say "Wake up, Martha, wake up," and she k it was George's. She tried to sink back int darkness of her sleep, knowing that the was dark and pleasant and warm and, a all, safe. But the voice would not let her. now she was aware that George was sha her, and she opened her eyes.

"What is it, George?"

He took an envelope from his pocket held it out to her, and Martha saw that i the envelope of the note Mildred Lehde sent to her. And Martha could not speak stare. And he said quietly, "It seems tha got some mail."

And she said stupidly, "Where did yo it?"

"I was looking for some papers, and f it in the study desk." Then he said s "Why did Mildred Lehde write you a l Martha?" She could not answer, and he on coldly, "You read my mail. Now I'd l know what was in yours."

And then she began to weep, c "George, George, what can I say?"

And he answered, "You can tell m truth! What was in this letter?"

THEN she told him the whole story, beginning to end, about her suspicions the visits to Mildred Lehde and Jer Clay. And as she went on, the storm face darkened, and his eyes seemed to fanatically with the coldness of his ange

"So you talked to Clay, eh?"

And she cried, "Yes, yes, I had to, G don't you see, I had to."

And he lashed at her, "You and your of right and wrong. You and that pr conscience of yours. Why couldn't y well enough alone?"

"George ——"

And he paced the floor back and for the fury was upon him. "Do you know you've done? You've opened up this thing again, got us all involved. Why d go to see Clay, why?"

"I'm sorry, George. But I ——"

Look! We'll glamour-stitch your sheet or towel free!

See why the amazing new 1955 NECCHI out-sews other automatics!

Call your nearest Necchi dealer; he'll come to your home and turn your plain sheet or towel into a stunning show-piece, with you! Free!

Why is Necchi the most famous automatic in the world? • It's the most advanced and easiest to use. • It's the fool-proof, proven automatic. • It alone, does straight and fancy sewing even without a disc.

Makes buttonholes! Sews on buttons; darns, blindstitches. Smocks, appliques, embroiders; automatically! Richwood cabinets; for every decor.

U. S. Testing Co. seal of approval. It's America's first automatic, first with new sewing wonders. Don't buy any until you see it! FREE Sewing Lessons. Straight stitch model only . . $98.95

You sit like a lady, while IT sews like a genius!

NECCHI AUTOMATIC

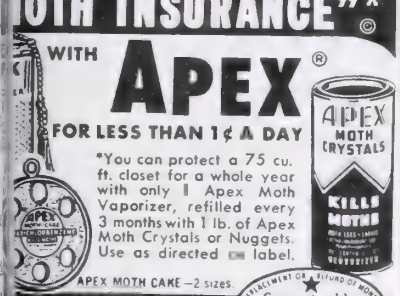
Amazing one-finger lift-up Lifts, lowers like a feather. No strain. A touch of your finger does it! An exclusive needle light prevents eye strain.

14 different fancy stitches with each wonder wheel. No need to keep switching discs. Each multi-stitch wonder wheel (just slip it on!) makes 14 basic stitches plus "1001" more no other machine can make; like the "crochet" edge! Does 2-needle, 2-color sewing.

FREE! [illegible] "Modern Sewing for Modern Living." Dept. Y542, Necchi Sewing Machine Sales Corp., 164 W. 25 St., N. Y. C. 1, N. Y. [illegible] Montreal, Canada. America's largest group of Sewing Circles; see phone book. Nationwide service. Parts always available.

ow! A blind that makes your room

w Flexalum
TWI-NIGHTER®



so tight, you can turn day into night! ou sleep later. Helps baby's nap. Darkens room for brilliant movies or TV. Only w Flexalum Twi-Nighter blind gives you te light control, snap back slats, wipe apes and other famous features.

corating booklet.
Hunter Douglas Corp.,
3, 150 Broadway,
rk 38, N.Y.
ada: Hunter Douglas Ltd.,
8C, 9500 St. Lawrence
Montreal, Que.)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

You Get ALL-YEAR
MOTH INSURANCE"* © WITH APEX®
FOR LESS THAN 1¢ A DAY

*You can protect a 75 cu. ft. closet for a whole year with only 1 Apex Moth Vaporizer, refilled every 3 months with 1 lb. of Apex Moth Crystals or Nuggets. Use as directed on label.

APEX MOTH CAKE—2 sizes

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

MOTH HOLES...
IF YOU USE APEX!

Beautiful floors
Quick and easy with wax-o-matic
floor waxer by Master

No kneeling, bending, splashing, scrubbing . . . Wax floors from the comfort level . . . with Wax-O-Matic trigger control.

Non-clogging . . . easy to clean . . . three year guarantee.

Get Wax-O-Matic at your favorite store.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

3.95 complete
replacement applicator 1.50

STER MANUFACTURING CO.
LORAIN, OHIO

"You're sorry." He laughed harshly at this. "You're sorry. Well, Martha, that's just fine. Only it's too late. Now you've got that swindler interested all over again. And that means nothing but trouble! Even if the police don't believe him, there'll be some kind of new investigation, a lot of bad publicity. And even though I'm innocent, a lot of people will always suspect and believe that I did kill Spindell." Then he exploded angrily, "Martha, why did you give him this chance?"

"I couldn't help it, George. I had to see him!"

"When did Clay say he wanted the money?"

"Saturday."

And he pounded his fist in the palm of his hand, again and again, saying "Saturday, Saturday." Then slowly he seemed to calm, and finally:

"Martha, I want to be clear about something. Absolutely clear."

"Yes?"

"You're still convinced I killed Spindell?"

And she nodded, saying quietly, "I know you did, George."

"No doubts at all?"

"No."

"I see."

THEN he lit a cigarette, very slowly and very deliberately, as though his mind were keeping pace with what his fingers were doing, in the same careful way, his face veiled and showing no emotion, no anger, not even disappointment or regret. And finally he said:

"Now that you know, what are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know, I don't know!"

"You must have some idea!"

He demanded an answer, and she wanted desperately to evade the question, for it was the one that plagued her, and had all night, and long before that. And always there was the grain of comfort, I have time, I have time to decide. But now there was no more time. And she said desperately:

"George, suppose you went to the police?"

"The police?"

"Yes," she said. "Yes. Suppose you went and told them everything. Threw yourself on their mercy. Perhaps if you told them you didn't know what you were doing, it was an accident ——"

"Do you think I'm crazy?"

"But ——"

"You must take me for a fool," he said. "Or worse, an idiot."

"But what about Lehde? He's been in jail ten years. George, in the name of heaven, how can you let him stay there ——"

"So you can't sleep nights, worrying about Lehde. Is that it?"

"Yes. Yes!"

"Then you go to the police."

"I?"

And he shrugged, and said, "It's your conscience that's bothering you. Not mine. I find I can live with mine very well." Then he said coldly, "Well, Martha? It's up to you. Where do we go from here?"

And she cried desperately, "I don't know, I don't know. All I know is that I love you."

"If you do," he said angrily, "you've a strange way of showing it. If your idea of love is to ruin and destroy us all, and everything we've built and worked for, then it's beyond my understanding, and I want none of it. Surely you must recognize the consequences of going to the police? Think of your children alone! What about Annette? Do you think Ralph would marry her if you went to the police? Do you think anybody would marry her after that? And your son. What about David? What about his career in the Army? The son of a murderer. He'd be ruined. Do you want all this to happen?"

"No, George, no."

"Then think it over, Martha. Of course you can do whatever you wish. Keep silent. Or go to the police. If you go, I suppose I can't stop you. But all I ask is this: Wait till the wedding is over. Give Annette her chance to marry. Give David his Army promotion. Then, at least, you'll be doing a little less harm than you're capable of now. We'll live together, of course, until the wedding's over. Just to keep up appearances. After that—well, I just don't care any more."

Then she came to him, and tried to put her arms around his neck and cling to him. "Darling, don't say that. Please, I can't stand it, I can't stand it."

"Let me alone."

"George ——"

"I said let me alone!"

He tore her arms from him, and pushed her away. There was no compassion in his eyes, and no softness, only what seemed to her contempt. Then they narrowed, and he said bitterly:

"I can thank Clay for this. If it hadn't been for him, and that letter, none of this would have happened."

He turned on his heel and started for the door, and she called after him, "George, wait." But he did not hear her, or did not care, and slammed the door behind him.

All that day, and into the night, she never left her room. To Annette and David she pleaded a headache, and they were solicitous, and Annette offered to stay home with her. But a girl who is a few days away from marriage has no time for the sick. And Martha said, "No, Annette, you go about your business. You've a thousand things to do, and I'll be all right."

Hilda came in with a tray of food, but Martha could eat nothing. For her stomach

Add more room for Work
...Have more time for Play with low-cost KENTILE floors

Kentile Colors shown are: Lunel and Napoleon Gray with ThemeTile

Install KENTILE yourself... average 8'x10' floor costs only $16.50*

Remodeling, refurbishing or building anew? Let the long-wearing, easy-cleaning gaiety of Kentile Floors help you create new carefree areas for hobbies, playrooms or dens. Styrene-fortified Kentile goes down every place from expansion attics to busy kitchens. It's ideal for basementless homes where concrete underfloors contact the earth.

Choose from dozens of colors... create your own designs. Each fashion-smart, tile deep color is guaranteed not to wear off; tiles not to wear out. Visit your Kentile Dealer now... he's listed under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Book. Kentile, Inc., 58 2nd Avenue, Brooklyn 15, N. Y.

*Price depends on colors chosen and freight rates to your city.

KENTILE®
the asphalt tile of enduring beauty

Copyright 1955 Kentile, Inc.

KENTILE, INC.
GUARANTEE
Kentile, Inc., will furnish new tile without charge for any Kentile, Inc. Flooring Product that wears out... and on which colors wear off ...during your own occupancy of your own home wherein you have installed the product or have had it installed by an authorized Kentile, Inc. Dealer. This guarantee does not apply to damage caused by your improper handling or your failure to follow the instructions for installation and/or maintenance available at your Kentile, Inc. Dealer's. This guarantee must be presented if claim is made for new tile.

KENTILE ■ KENCORK ■ KENRUBBER ✻ KENFLEX ■ KENFLOR ■ *REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

How to Make My Chocolate Smoothie Pie

—says Marie Gifford, Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

When you make this best-loved pie of all, the tender pie crust actually stays flaky-crisp until the last crumb is gone! The secret is wonderful New-Type Armour Star Lard.

Your crust stays crisp because Armour Star is unlike ordinary lards. This New-Type Lard has new texture and flavor. It's fluffy, creams quickly and easily, and digests like butter. You get better-tasting, flakier crusts than with expensive shortenings. And, it keeps without refrigeration.

To make the flaky crust use my 5-Minute Pastry Method for a single crust pie. It's on every tin or carton of Armour Star Lard.

For the Chocolate Smoothie Filling, soften 1 envelope plain gelatine in ½ cup cold water. Melt 2 squares bitter chocolate in ¾ cup water in top of double boiler. Add 3 slightly beaten egg yolks. Cook and stir over hot water for 2 min. Stir in gelatine, ¼ tsp. salt, 1 tsp. vanilla and continue stirring until smooth.

Beat 3 egg whites until fluffy. Add ½ cup sugar gradually. Beat until meringue is stiff and fine-textured. Fold chocolate custard into meringue until well blended. Fill baked pie shell and refrigerate several hours. Before serving, pretty your pie with unsweetened whipped cream.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET

32 new pie recipes. How-to-do-it illustrations. Write to: Marie Gifford, Dept. 156, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. A carton top will be appreciated.

Armour Star Lard

The Modern New-Type Lard That Makes Flakier Crusts

was already full, bloated with a great lump of fear. And Hilda said, "Shall I send for the doctor, Mrs. Radcliffe?" and Martha lied again, saying, "It is only a headache, and I will be all right later." Then she told Hilda to pull out the plug of the bedroom telephone, knowing she could talk to no one that day.

For as the time passed, something began to grow in her mind, and this was the answer to her dilemma. It did not come as a flash, or a revelation, but rather it grew slowly and certainly, through that day and into the evening, and she realized it had been deep in her for a long time, but she had never dared bring it to mind.

She looked at the idea, straight in its face, and studied it, almost without emotion. It seemed to her a new road, straight and clear, where there had been none before. And she thought, Of course, of course, it is the only way. How simple it is, how sure.

So she made her decision, and knew she must carry it out. For the first time in days she felt at peace, and without turmoil. And at this moment there was a knock at the door and it was Hilda. She came in with a tray, and on it toast and tea.

"How do you feel, Mrs. Radcliffe?"

"Much better, Hilda. Much better."

Martha was surprised to find she was ravenously hungry, and she devoured what was on the tray while Hilda waited. Then Hilda said:

"Mr. Radcliffe called."

"Yes?"

"He said to tell you he's working tonight at the office, and he won't be home till late."

"All right, Hilda."

Martha yawned and stretched, and suddenly felt very drowsy. When Hilda left the room, she turned her head away from the wall, and buried her face in her pillow, and wept a little. And finally, there was sleep.

She awoke to the sound of a car coming to a stop on the bluestone drive. She lay there a moment, listening to the motor idling in the stillness of the night. She looked at the glowing hands of the night clock on her bed table, and they said ten minutes to four. And she thought, It is George, of course. But he has never stayed at the office this late before. Why has he not put the car in the garage, as always? This is not like him at all.

Then she almost drifted back to sleep, but not quite. She heard the front door open and close, and then the tread of his feet on the carpeted stairs. She waited for them to turn off into the guest room, but they did not. Instead, they came right on, toward the door of her room.

She heard the door open slowly and, feigning sleep, sensed George's presence in the room. He stood over her, breathing heavily, and the sound of it was like that of some animal, frightening in the quiet and darkness of the room. And she knew he was standing over her, and watching her, and suddenly she smelled the reek of alcohol.

Still she kept her eyes shut, as though in sleep. And it seemed that he stood there over her for a full minute. And she thought He has been drinking, and what is he up to? Why does he stand over me in the darkness, and watch me like this?

THEN she felt his hand on her arm, and its touch was gentle. And he bent over, and kissed her lightly on the forehead, once. A moment later, she heard the door to her room close gently. And he was gone.

After a long time, and because she could not sleep, and because the print of his lips was still cool and sweet on her forehead, she arose. She arose, and put on her night robe and tiptoed down to the guest room, and opened the door slowly and carefully, just a chink, for she did not want him to know that she was there.

She heard his hard and almost painful breathing, the kind that comes in sleep after too much to drink, and tiptoed inside. He was lying on his back, one arm limp over the side of the bed, and the sheets were in disarray, and his clothes flung about the room.

She watched his face now, in the repose of sleep, and thought, How young he looks now; this is the face of a troubled boy. She looked at him in pity and tenderness and love, and wondered, Is this true of most women, do they see their men as children, when they sleep? Or is it just I?

She covered him with the blanket, which he had kicked from him, and tucked the blanket under, gently, ever so gently, so that she would not wake him. After this, she put his shoes away and hung up his clothes, and opened the window and drew the blinds. Then she came to him, and leaned down and kissed him gently on his forehead, as he had kissed her.

He stirred fitfully, and mumbled something, and turned over on his face. And she tiptoed from the room.

It was after nine when Martha came downstairs. Strangely, she was at peace now, the peace of resignation to the decision she had made. But she knew that the fear was still there, the doubt and terror would come later. She went into the dining room, and Annette and David were there, but not George. They

MARY TUDOR'S SONG

By ELIZABETH COATSWORTH

In Aragon, my mother's land,
The hills are stern and stone,
And in the hollows, oak trees grow
And a shepherd sings alone,
Singing, singing,
Singing all alone,
"The Virgin sits in the height of heaven
With seven stars for her throne."

In Aragon, my mother's land,
The towns are white and bare,
Old bells and small red-footed doves
The windy towers share,
Singing, singing,
So high up in the air,
"The Virgin's spindle is of gold,
As golden as her hair."

In Aragon, my mother's land,
The spirit may find rest,
In solemn joy the heart may sing
Within a quiet breast,
Singing, singing,
"The silent songs are best.
The Virgin bends her happy head
To the baby at her breast."

both looked at her, and smiled, and Annette said:

"How do you feel, mother?"

"Much better."

And David said, "Something you ate, no doubt."

And Martha answered, with a smile, "No doubt." And then she asked, "Where is your father?"

"He left early," said David.

"And the way he looked," added Annette. "If I ever saw a horrible hang-over, he had it. Since when has dad been such a lush, mother?"

And Martha answered, "It was just that he was working late at the office."

And David grinned, saying, "On this performance this morning, he looks more as though he were working late with some blonde."

Finally, they both kissed her, and left. When they did this, she wanted to weep, but she told herself, I cannot, I cannot, until they have gone. Then she picked up the morning paper, and went out on the terrace, and sat in the chaise, and opened the paper. But for a while she did not see the print, for the blur of the tears. And the tears were for self-pity, and the cry, Why does it have to end this way, and to me?

Suddenly her eyes focused on a small line and a block of print beneath it. It v item buried on an inside page, and the seemed to leap up and scream at her.

For the story was about Jeremiah Cl had been murdered by some mysterio sailant the night before. There were sig struggle, and someone had smothered t man in his pillow, and left him dead bed. The police were hunting the killer

Now Martha put the paper down. the bitter depth of her shock, she th There are only a few more days before t ding. After that, I will do what I have p to do. After that, I shall be free.

At last it was over. Everything wa and gone, and done with. First the we And now, finally, the reception. Th guests had just departed, and George w side, seeing them to their car.

Now Martha sat on the couch, and su the living room. It seemed to her that t lam was still in her ears, the gay chatt congratulations, the high, shrill laugh relatives and friends. The debris of t cent presence was everywhere. In the ash trays, in the empty champagne bott the half-empty glasses, in the crumbs of cake littering the table, the cold an coffee cups, and the confetti littering t Annette had left with Ralph, and Da time only for the wedding before cat plane back to Fort Benning. Now th seemed to her so empty and so for seemed to brood.

David and Annette are gone, I ha good-by to them and there is only Geor In a moment he will come in, and we alone. He will come in, and then what say to him? What shall we say to each In these last days we have been actors performance, walking and talking and l acting like devoted husband and wife, ea being careful to pull the right string at moment, each playing the game out.

But now it is all over. The time for pr over.

And she thought, He does not know. not know that I know what happened miah Clay. It was a small item and bu back page, and since I did not mention sure I have not seen it. But he will neve for I shall not speak of it to him. A should I speak of it to him, when I have to leave him? Is there not enough guilt it is?

The door closed, and George came room, and sat down opposite her. cigarette and stared at her without s For a while they both sat there, saying each painfully aware of the silence them, each reluctant to say the firs Finally, George spoke.

"Well, Martha, we're alone. I thin the time to understand each other."

"Yes."

"What have you decided to do?"

"Nothing."

He stared. "Nothing?"

His mouth dropped open, for it w that he expected some kind of impo cision. And Martha thought, Be you cannot, of course, tell him the tr is the time you must play your role, a hearsed it, and choose the words caref say them with sincerity. For, above all never know.

"Is that so surprising, George?"

"But I thought ——"

"What did you think?"

He was genuinely taken aback, floundered. "I—well, I don't know. pected you to go to the police. Or at least, leave me."

"You know me better than that, she said. "I could never leave you."

"But you think I killed Spindell."

"I thought you did. But I know n wrong."

"What?"

"George, can you ever forgive me such a fool?"

"Martha, I don't understand." H his head in bewilderment. "Only a ago, you were so sure!"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 160

It's somebody's birthday today

Send your best wishes by Long Distance

There's no more thoughtful way to send your birthday greetings than by telephone.

Along with the words you say, Long Distance carries the warmth of your voice. It's almost like an actual visit. Personal. And satisfying. Yet it costs so little.

Suggestion: mark your calendar in advance right now so you will remember those birthday Long Distance calls you should make.

Long Distance Rates Are Low

Here are some examples:

Cleveland to Pittsburgh	45¢
Boston to Philadelphia	70¢
Dallas to New Orleans	95¢
New York to Atlanta	$1.20
Milwaukee to Los Angeles	$1.75

These are the Station-to-Station rates for the first three minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include the federal excise tax.

Call by Number. It's Twice as Fast.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

You'll find this year's newest colors in

Super Kem-Tone

the washable LATEX wall paint

$1.78 QUART $5.59 GALLON
(Deep tones $5.85 a gallon)
No thinning
Just Stir and Apply

You can get wall colors beautiful beyond your dreams . . . more than a hundred lovely, velvet-rich SUPER KEM-TONE colors that will thrill you. You're sure to find the perfect color to go with your furnishings. Redecorate in less than a day! . . . SUPER KEM-TONE goes on so easily over wallpaper, plaster, wallboard or painted walls and it dries in an hour. One coat covers most surfaces. You can be sure of lasting loveliness because SUPER KEM-TONE is guaranteed washable. And it's so inexpensive . . . a gallon does the walls of the average room.

THE SHERWIN WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Kem-Glo are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit . . . W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh . . . The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton . . . John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia . . . The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago . . . Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

For Kitchens, Bathrooms and Woodwork Throughout Your Home!

KEM-GLO

Looks and washes like baked enamel. Resists steam, cooking spatters, grease, and alcoholic beverages. Same lovely colors as SUPER KEM-TONE.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 158

"I know, I know. I must have been out of my mind. The way things happened, George. I don't know, the letter, everything. But then I began to think it over. And the more I thought of it, the more I saw that I'd been acting like a hysterical schoolgirl."

"I don't know," he said, still shaking his head. "I just don't get it."

"Don't you see, George? I condemned and convicted you on what a lot of other people said. Without any real proof, just what they said. Mildred Lehde, for instance. When I really began to reason it out, I knew she'd be willing to blame anybody to get her husband out of jail. Even you. Certainly I would have done the same in her position."

"But after you spoke to Clay, you seemed so sure."

And she thought, Be careful, Martha, think of each word before you say it. "I thought that through too. And again I realized all I had was his word for it. Then I told myself, 'Why should I take the word of this man, an obvious blackmailer, against the word of my own husband?' Not only that, there was all the evidence. In court. Against Lehde. Why should I be the only one to ignore it, when a whole jury, and everyone else, believed it? And there's one more thing, George."

"Yes?"

"I love you," she said quietly. "And I know you. And I must have known all along that you couldn't possibly be capable of doing a horrible thing like this."

Then he was coming toward her, and saying, "Martha, Martha." And she thought dully, I have carried it off, I have carried it off, he believes and is convinced.

"I'm only sorry that I got us all involved with Clay."

"Don't worry about Clay. I'll handle him, Martha. He won't bother us."

No, reflected Martha, he won't bother us. Not any more.

Then she was in George's arms, and he was saying, "Martha, Martha, let's start all over." He kissed her, and for the first moment she was cold, and resisted it. But then her arms went around his neck and she clung to him, because she could not help it.

Then, finally, he released her, and held her at arm's length, his face smiling and eyes glowing.

"Martha, Martha, where have we been? What happened to us?"

"It doesn't matter, George," she told him. "As long as it's all over. As long as things are the same again."

"Martha," he said suddenly, "let's get out of here."

"What?"

"Away from the house, I mean. Let's get in the car tomorrow morning, and drive to Vermont."

"You mean to the cottage?"

"Why not? The lake will be beautiful now. A little fishing, a little swimming, driving around the country, lazying on the porch—what could be better right now? After what's happened, all this trouble we've had, and the wedding on top of that—well, we both need it, Martha. It'll give us a chance, both of us, to think things over." Then he added softly, "For one thing, we've been apart too long, much too long. We can make this—well, a kind of honeymoon of our own."

"A honeymoon of our own," she said.

And he smiled and said, "Why should the kids have all the fun? What's wrong with us? We'll pack tonight, and leave first thing in the morning."

"All right, George."

HE laughed gaily, and picked her up in his arms, and whirled her around. And she thought giddily, What I must do, I can do in Vermont as well as here. How queer it is, this idea of a honeymoon now. And yet, why not?

For there is not much time. And why should we not enjoy these last few hours together, as we once did?

She did not sleep throughout that night, although George never knew it.

In the morning they went downstairs together, and had breakfast together, as always. And she thought, This is the last breakfast we shall have here in this room. And the fe knotted in her like a fist, at the thought what she was about to do. And a voice cried her, Martha, you cannot, you cannot. But a other, and much stronger, cried, You mus For it is the only way.

George was in high good humor, and during the long ride north he laughed a joked, for the ordeal of their strain was ov And Martha found herself laughing at H jokes too quickly, and too easily, in a gid lightheaded way. And she thought, Lord, Lor let us get there quickly; let me get it over wit

AT last they reached the winding road hu ging the lake, and then their entrance off t blacktop, the rocky dirt road which apparen ran down into the woods to nowhere. A there was the white mailbox, and the sha wooden arrow pinned to the tree, pointi downward, and inscribed with faded wood letters, G. Radcliffe. And they bumped a bounced down the road, and under the gras ing and leafy arms of the jealous trees, a finally there it was, the grove of birches, a the sparkle of the lake, and at the edge, t neat white cottage, looking as it always d

The grass needed cutting, and the boat w on its back, and covered with a tarpaulin. minnow trap, its two mesh jaws opene waited forlornly on the dock, and a pair George's swimming trunks, forgotten the su mer before, hung stiffly in the fork of a tr The droppings of the birches were thick on t picnic table, and the grate to the open fi place was rusted. The cottage was shutte and stood there lonely, its windows like e watching them in reproach. Everything th spoke of being away too long.

This was their cool retreat from the heat the summer, and from the rest of the wor They had often spoken to each other ab "getting away," and it was never discussed to where, for the cottage was always the swer, and understood. Many times Geo and she had come up out of season, and liv by the roaring fire in the great hearth. A many times, when pressed with work, he h brought up bulging brief cases full of pape and sworn that he could do more work at cottage in a single day than he could at office in a week. They had always maintai the spell of its isolation, and never even stalled a telephone.

They entered the spacious, knotty-pine terior, and unpacked. And in a kind of h dream she went through all the motions of packing, and stocking the refrigerator w the meats and vegetables they had bought Rutland, and opening every window wide. that the air could eddy through and refr the staleness of long confinement. She m the beds, and then dusted the furniture ligh and it was miraculous that her hands could all this, for they were disembodied from rest of her and disconnected from what wa her mind.

And after this, George got into his old faded denims, the kind he always wore aro the cottage, and sighed. "I guess I'd be get started."

And she heard herself say, "Started w what, George?"

And he answered, "On cutting that gr If it gets any higher, it'll be bulrushes. Aft scythe it down, if I still have any ambition, dust off the Adirondack chairs and bring out."

Then he looked at the shed, and sig again, for it was there that they kept the to and the old furniture, and the firewood, paint supplies and odds and ends they stored through the years. Finally he rose, went to the screen door, and as he did cried suddenly, "George!"

He turned and stared at her, for there something in her cry that puzzled him, a might have been that it had been a little l or too intense. But she did not give him tim think or reflect on this, and went to quickly, and put her arms around him kissed him, once. She kissed him and held for a long time, and then he held her at a length, and smiled. "Why, Martha."

And she said, "Just to remind you much I love you." Then he rumpled her affectionately and walked out, and into shed, and was gone.

he heard him rummaging around within. she thought, Now, now. She ran into the room, and changed into her bathing suit, king in a feverish kind of way, I must finish uickly, and not delay. Otherwise, I shall lose courage.

low she walked down to the dock and od at its edge, staring into the cold, clear er. I have come to this decision, she thought, it is the only way I can take. Perhaps I am ward, and this is the easy way and the weak , but I'm not strong enough to face any r. For I cannot live with George, knowing t I know, yet keeping silent.

nd I cannot go to the police, and tell them t I know, and destroy those I love, and live bitter and empty house. Either way, my ny is my conscience, and I must answer to nd either way, my life would be ended in all neaning, if not in fact, and I could not bear ain of it, and this is the way I have decided, ring it to an end.

he dove into the water, and began to swim er clumsy fashion, for she was not a good nmer. And far ss the lake she saw rown summer ho- nd thought, When down, that will be last thing I shall n this life. And as began to put dis- e between herself the dock, it seemed er that her body ested the dictate er mind, and re- d against it, and ed to submit. For ould not seem to but felt that some- she was being be- ed, and could on forever.

t gradually the iness stole upon ike a determined shadowing thief, ner arms began to and numb a lit- nd were harder t from the water, still harder. And rned once to look , and saw the and the dock the shed, and ght, If I turn back I can still return. not too late, and still return, and there is warmth est and life, and all, the man I The time to recon- is now, for there will be no other time but and later will be too late.

w, in her indecision, and in her agony, topped swimming, and began to tread l, and her muscles urged her not to linger but to go, go back. The cold began to and convulse her, and her teeth were ering now, and she thought, I cannot, in heaven, I cannot. I cannot go on, for I fraid. Then she saw George come out of ed, and he was carrying something under m, although what it was she could not or it was too far away.

en he saw her, and walked down to the of the dock and shaded his eyes, peering , and began to wave, come back, come And Martha sobbed Come back to George, I cannot come back. And the of him decided her, and gave her the ge, and she turned and started to swim rd again.

artha, come back!"

heard his cry, echoing across the lake, and again, "Come back, come back." e did not turn. Her arms were turning to now, the water seemed to clutch them eep them down, her legs labored pitibreath stabbed and choked through gs and still she swam on, thinking, It is e, it is already too late. How big the lake d now, how vast and empty the expanse of water ahead. And the hotel on the other side, how far away it was.

Then the mist came before her eyes, and she could no longer kick her legs, nor raise her arms. Now she was paralyzed with the fatigue, and sobbing, and trying to say to herself some kind of prayer, The Lord is my shepherd. Then she went under and felt herself dropping deep into the chilly depths, and then suddenly fought to the top again, thinking in anguish, I want to live, oh God, I want to live. And she thrashed about, but her body was like a stone and she could not lift her arms above the water, and the lake pulled her under again, and as she sobbed the water poured into her lungs, and once more she fought feebly for air and life. Once more she bobbed to the surface, and through the mist saw someone swimming toward her and shouting her name. And she saw that it was George, and it seemed to her he was very far away.

THE lake embraced her for the last time, and wound its watery arms around her, and pulled her down. Now she knew it would not be denied, and she ceased to struggle, thinking, Take me, take me, I can fight no more. Then her lungs seemed to explode, and there was a horrible roaring in her ears, and she felt herself spinning, round and round, down into the deep. Finally the pain left her, and there was nothing now but the darkness.

The voice came from very far away, calling her name. It seemed to move forward and backward, now distinct, now faint. It was cold where she was, and very dark, and she seemed to lie deep in some kind of abyss, a place of peace. And the voice came again, from high up and far away, and she thought, Go away, go away and let me sleep.

Finally she opened her eyes, and saw the sun and the sky, but only for a moment. For a shadow obscured it, and she saw that it was George's face bending over her, and he was sobbing, "Martha, Martha!" And this was the voice she had heard. She realized that she was lying on the dock, and thought, I am alive, I am alive.

Then she spoke his name: "George." And he said, "Darling, darling." And she saw tears in his eyes, and he kissed her on the mouth. Then she tried to gasp out something, but she could not, for the water was still running from her mouth, and the agony sharp in her chest. And he said gently, "Don't try to talk, darling. Not now."

He lifted her up, and carried her into the house, and placed her on the couch. He pulled the couch before the fireplace and wrapped her in a heavy blanket, and then built a great blaze in the hearth. And the grateful warmth began to permeate her flesh, so that the cold melted away, and her shivering stopped. Then George took off his soaked underwear, and put on a warm robe, and sat on the couch beside her. And for a long time neither spoke, but merely stared into the fire, thinking their own thoughts.

And finally he said gravely, "Why did you do it, Martha?"

"George, I can't tell you."

"Why did you do it?"

Then she told him why, and he listened without interruption. And when she had finished, the tears blurred his eyes.

"Martha, you fool!" he said then. "You crazy fool!"

Our constitution does not copy the laws of neighboring states; we are rather a pattern to others than imitators ourselves. Its administration favors the many instead of the few; this is why it is called a democracy. If we look to the laws, they afford equal justice to all in their private differences; if to social standing, advancement in public life falls to reputation for capacity, class considerations not being allowed to interfere with merit; nor again does poverty bar the way, if a man is able to serve the state he is not hindered by the obscurity of his condition. The freedom which we enjoy in our government extends also to our ordinary life. There, far from exercising a jealous surveillance over each other, we do not feel called upon to be angry with our neighbor for doing what he likes. . . . But all this ease in our private relations does not make us lawless as citizens. . . .

If we turn to our military policy, there also we differ from our antagonists . . . while in education, where our rivals from their very cradles by a painful discipline seek after manliness . . . we live exactly as we please, and yet are just as ready to encounter every legitimate danger.

—THUCYDIDES

It's New! It's Exciting! It's Beautiful!

SUPER KEM-TONE Applikay

lovely designs you ROLL ON your walls

You don't know how lovely APPLIKAY is until you've seen it . . . how easy it is, until you've tried it. In the shortest time ever, you can give your walls distinctive "patterns in paint" . . . in exactly the color scheme you prefer. You need no special skill . . . an amazing twin roller does the work . . . rolls on APPLIKAY designs right over SUPER KEM-TONE. APPLIKAY bonds itself to Super KEM-TONE smooth as printed silk . . . and, when dry, both are completely washable. See countless, exquisite APPLIKAY effects wherever SUPER KEM-TONE is sold.

$2.19 Pint
. . . enough to do the average room

FREE!

"The Home Decorator"

. . . 44 colorful pages full of wonderful decorating ideas. Write Sherwin-Williams, 1106 Midland Bldg., Cleveland 1, O.

THE SHERWIN WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Applikay are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit . . . W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh . . . The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton . . . John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia . . . The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago . . . Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

And she said, "I didn't know any other way."

"Then you lied to me. You still think I'm a murderer."

"George, George, what else can I think?"

He looked at her a long time, but without anger and without reproach, running his hand through her hair. Then he rose, saying, "I'll be right back, Martha."

And she cried, "Don't leave me, George."

But he said, again, "I'll be right back."

She heard him go outside, and a moment later he returned, and she saw that he carried a faded red cardboard portfolio in his hands, the kind used to store away papers and documents. And he said, "Martha, when I went into the shed looking for the scythe, I stumbled on a box of old papers I'd stored away years ago. Then I thought maybe what I needed was among those papers, and I started to go through the box. And I found this."

She stared at the portfolio. "But George, what is it?"

And he said quietly, "Proof."

"Proof? Of what?"

"Of my innocence."

"George ——"

"You asked me where I got all that money."

"Yes."

"And I told you I made it in stocks and bonds."

"Yes."

"All right," he said. "Look at these."

He reached into the portfolio, and took out a batch of long slips, yellowed with age. And she saw they were records of stock transactions, the kind brokers send to their clients. She stared at them, at the names of the stocks, the number of shares, the price paid, and the broker's commission, but they were meaningless figures swimming before her eyes.

"If you want to add these up, Martha," he said, "you'll find out where I made the money ——"

"George ——"

"No, let me finish. I tried to get the originals of these records. You don't know how hard I tried to get them, knowing what you were thinking. I finally tracked down one of the former employees of the Masterson firm. He told me that they'd held the transaction records in storage for a few years after the office had closed, and then, having no further use for them, had destroyed them. Then I remembered I must have had my own duplicates somewheres. You see, every time they put through a stock transaction on your account, they always send you a duplicate of the purchase or sale, like these. I went all through the house, but never found them. I stayed awake nights, trying to think of where I might have put them. But after all, it was eleven years ago, and I couldn't remember."

"And you brought them here one weekend, George. Along with some other papers ——"

"Yes."

And now she was crying, "Then this is where you got the money, and you did not steal it, and you did not kill Spindell, it was William Lehde who did it after all."

"Of course it was, Martha, of course it was, I tried to tell you that all along."

And she continued to babble, "It was Lehde after all," and he kept answering, "I tried to tell you." And she cried out, "What have I done? How can you ever forgive me, George, why did I not love you enough?" And she buried her face in his shoulder, and he stroked her hair, and whispered in her ear, "You little fool, Martha, you little fool."

After a long time the fire died to embers and they fell into slumber, the two of them together, on the couch. And all through this there was a singing in Martha, and she thought, I have been given back my life again. But then suddenly there was a harsh and discordant note, the shock of memory.

What about Jeremiah Clay?

THE percolator was bubbling the next morning when she heard the knock on the door. And the man standing there was Sam Wilson, who ran the combination public beach, general store and tiny post office, next to the hotel across the lake. And he smiled:

"'Morning, Mrs. Radcliffe. Glad to see you folks back."

"We're glad to be here, Mr. Wilson. How's your wife?"

"Ailing pretty much through the winter. But she feels fine now."

"Good. You tell her I'll drive over and say hello, the first chance I get."

"I'll tell her."

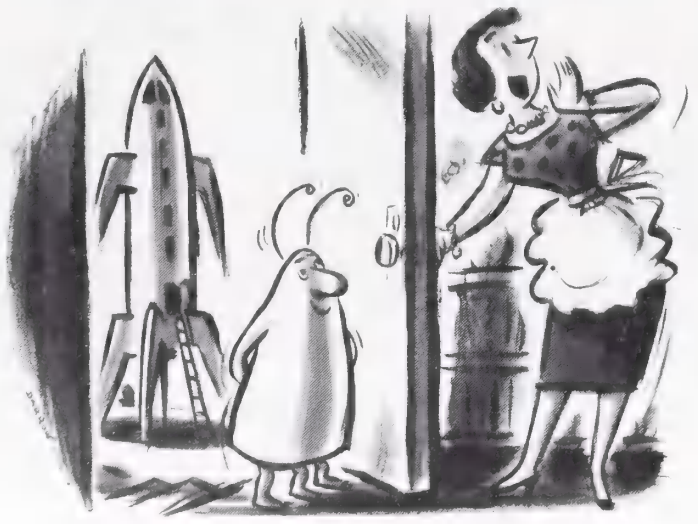
"Would you like a cup of coffee?"

And he said, "Thank you, Mrs. Radcliffe. But no. I've got to be getting on." Then he took a telegram from his pocket, and said:

"This here's for Mr. Radcliffe. Came in this morning.

Martha thanked him, and the man left, and she stared at the telegram. And she thought, Who would know we were here? Then she remembered. Of course Hilda knew, and anyone could have got the information from her. And for a moment, in the mechanical way of an old habit, she started to tear the telegram open. Suddenly she shuddered a little, thinking of the letter, and the way she had opened it, and what it had brought her. No, she thought. This time I will let George open it.

Then she woke him, and he yawned, and she handed him the telegram. He lay there on the couch, blinking at it a moment, and then opened it. He glanced at it quickly, and suddenly the sleep left his face, and he sat upright, reading it again.



"Sorry—you'll have to wait—this is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains."

A sink's best friend is Drāno—when it comes to getting rid of dangerous sewer germs that lurk in every drain. Those germs breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. But Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck, keeps drains germ-free and free-running. Make one day a week Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Won't harm septic tanks. Makes them work even better. Get Drāno at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like Drāno . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Says his windows are dirty. He'd like to borrow some Windex Spray!"

Windex Spray is really "out of this world" for getting windows clean! SWISH—spray it on! WHISH—wipe it off! Windows, mirrors, all glass surfaces get sparkling bright—even stay bright longer because there's no waxy film left to attract dust. And Windex Spray is such a thrifty buy, specially in the large 20-oz. refill size. Ask for Windex Spray at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also sold in Canada.

So quick, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

Try this Tuna
Quick-alilli Made with FORMAN'S
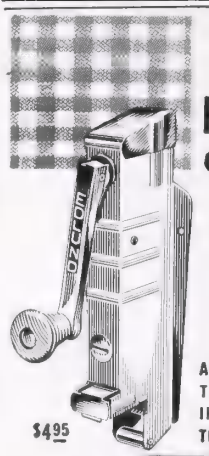
Piccalilli

To 1 can tuna, ¼ c. Forman's P lilli, 1 c. dry b crumbs, 1 be egg, ¼ c. milk, ½ salt. Shape into ties and fry.

FULL
1 lb.
JAR

53 NEW FREE RECIPES for lunch- eon and supper treats with Forman's Piccalilli. Write: Dept. L-5-55



FORMAN'S
PICCALILLI
Pittsford, N. Y.

REAL FRUIT JUICE REFRESHMENT . . .

REAL GOLD

Guaranteed Good Housek IF NOT AS ADVERTISED

Just mix with water... Ready-to-Drink, Instantly. Each economical 6 oz. can makes a big family quart of ... Wonderful refreshment plus... Energy Rebound.

the FLAT-TO-W
CAN OPEN

- Easy, one-handle operation
- Built-in magnet ho cut-out lid
- 5-year money-back guarantee

$4.95

ANOTHER POPULAR KIT TOOL MADE BY EDLUN INC., BURLINGTON, VT. & THROUGHOUT THE WORL

Edlund

"George, what is it?"

"It's from Joe Herrick."

"Herrick?"

Herrick was George's lawyer, and had been for fifteen years. And George was still staring at the telegram, and mumbling, over and over:

"It's crazy, crazy. I don't understand it."

"But what does it say?"

He handed her the telegram, and she read:

IMPERATIVE THAT YOU RETURN TO NEW YORK AT ONCE STOP COME DIRECTLY TO MY OFFICE STOP HAVE PROMISED AUTHORITIES YOU WILL BE HERE STOP FOR FULL EXPLANATION READ THIS MORNING'S NEW YORK TIMES PAGE 5.
JOE HERRICK.

"I don't understand it," George was saying. "All this stuff about the authorities, I don't get it."

And a hand seized Martha about the throat again, with the cold clutch of fear. And she thought, It must be about Clay, Jeremiah Clay. She looked at George's face, and saw that it was pale and worried, and she thought, He knows, he knows, as well as I.

Then he dressed quickly, and said, "I'm going over to Wilson's and get the Times."

And she said, "But today's Times won't be there till late this afternoon." And he answered, "The telegram's dated yesterday. Herrick's talking about yesterday's Times. They're sure to have it over there now."

"I'll go with you."

And he said, "No. No, I'd rather go alone."

"But, George ——"

"I'd rather go alone," he said. "I'll be right back."

Then he went out, and got into the car, and drove up the dirt road, and disappeared. And she watched him through the window till he was gone.

When the car came down the road again, and George got out, the newspaper in his hand, she could see the shock in his face.

He came toward the porch, his face ashen-white, stumbling a little, like a drunken man.

"George, what is it?"

He thrust the newspaper in her hand, and said brokenly, "Martha, Clay's been murdered. And I sent Lehde to jail. I sent him to jail."

"Lehde?" she said blankly.

"Read it," he mumbled, like a man bereft of his sense. "Read it."

He turned away from her in the agony of his pain, and walked toward the bedroom.

"George, wait."

But he did not seem to hear her, and slammed the door behind him. And with trembling fingers, she opened the paper to page 5, and there was the story.

Now she read that the police had captured Jeremiah Clay's murderer, and it was the woman, Stella Ryba, who had lived with Clay as his common-law wife for many years. And Martha remembered the woman, and the ugliness of her, the look of her in that dismal corridor on that hot day. And she thought, it was she, it was she who had done this to Clay, and not George, not George. And the woman had confessed to this, she had confessed in writing and signed her name, and it was the printed confession that whirled before Martha's eyes, and drained her of strength so that she felt faint and had to sit down to read it. And there it was, the truth, printed word for word, paraphrased by the police out of the woman's own mouth:

"I have been living with Jeremiah Clay for over twelve years, as his common-law wife. He murdered his paymaster, Eli Spindell, at the place where he worked, the Atlantic Carrier Corporation, ten years ago. He is the real killer, and no one else. William Lehde is innocent.

"The way it happened was this: My husband came there that night, and no one saw him. It was his night off, and no one expected him. He put on a pair of gloves, and went to Lehde's office, and got his letter opener. Then he entered Spindell's office. Spindell's back was turned, and he did not see Jeremiah.

"Jeremiah turned out the light, and Spindell turned and shouted Lehde's name, thinking it was the clerk, and not being able to see in the dark. This is the cry Mr. George Radcliffe heard, and that is why he named the wrong man at the trial. But it was not Lehde at all. Then Jeremiah stabbed Spindell, and put the money in a bag and ran outside. He had just got clear of the building, and was running along the river, when a policeman saw him, and started to run after him. I guess Jeremiah lost his nerve, or he did not want to get caught with the goods. So he threw the bag and all the money in the river.

"When he got home, he was almost crazy about losing the money. Then he saw a way to get it back, another way. He thought up this scheme and he wrote a letter to George Radcliffe and said he would testify that Mr. Radcliffe was the killer, and not Lehde, unless Radcliffe paid up. But I don't know, somehow the letter got lost, and Jeremiah never heard from him. Then it was found by Mrs. Radcliffe, somehow, I'm not sure. And she came to see Jeremiah, and he blackmailed her, and she promised to send him money to keep him quiet.

"All the years I lived with Jeremiah, I took care of him, hand and foot, sacrificed for him, gave him my life. I guess I must have been in love with him, what difference does it make? For years we didn't have a cent, hardly anything to eat, living miserably because he was sick a long time and couldn't work. He was a very sick man, it was in the lungs. I know I was crazy to do it, now, but I stuck by him, and took care of him, and if it wasn't for me, he would have died years ago.

"Anyway, he was going to get some money now, and for the first time in our lives we had a chance to live decent. But then Jeremiah tried to freeze me out, and wouldn't share with me. He wanted all the money for himself. He told me to get out, he was through with me.

"At first I couldn't believe it. But then I saw that he meant it. I couldn't stand that. I thought I deserved better than that. I tried to tell him, but he spat in my face, and called me a fat, dirty hag, and kicked me out of his house.

"I thought about this, and all I done for him. And I guess I went a little crazy. Then I made up my mind that a man as low as this didn't deserve to live.

"A few nights later I went to his room. He was still up. I begged him for the last time to show me more kindness. All he did was laugh at me. Then we fought, and he was old and weak, and it wasn't very hard for me to handle him. I pushed him down on the bed and smothered him to death with his own pillow.

"And that's all. I'm glad I did it. A man like that doesn't deserve to live."

Signed,
STELLA RYBA

There was more. There was something about the police finding some negotiable securities belonging to the Atlantic Carrier Corporation, finding them in a closet shelf in Jeremiah Clay's room. The woman explained that he had stuffed these securities in his pocket at the

"Don't know why I have to help. You married her."

TEXTURED and easy to clean

COLORFUL and long wearing textured Masland Duran®

PLASTIC UPHOLSTERY

Here is all of the touch-tempting beauty of texture in lively colors and the most fashion-perfect patterns . . . textured beauty that cleans easily and stands up to everyday wear. Available, too, with elastic fabric back for upholstered furniture.

Write for free folder with sample.
The Masland Duraleather Company,
Dept. L-5, Philadelphia 34, Pa.

Pagan pattern on dining furniture by Daystrom Furniture, Olean, N. Y.

time he had killed Spindell and never had the courage to try and cash them afterward. There was more, but Martha did not read on.

For she was overwhelmed by a great wave of pity, and tenderness, and she thought, Why do I sit here, when he is in there and suffers alone? Why am I here, when he is there, and needs me now, as he has never needed me before? And she put the paper aside, and opened the bedroom door, and went in.

He was lying on the bed, on his back, with an arm thrown across his face, as though to hide it, not only from her, but from the world itself. And she sat down on the bed, and took his other hand in hers, and said gently, "George."

And he cried, "Martha, let me alone, let me alone."

And she answered, "No, George, I am staying here with you."

And he cried again, "Martha, I swear to God I thought it was Lehde. I thought it was!"

"But you weren't sure?"

"I don't know," he said. "I don't know. I thought it was. When I saw the man outside the window that night, the man with the bag, I was sure of it, Martha, sure. I was sure of it in court. Now, I know it wasn't. Ten years too late. I don't know, when I heard Spindell yell Lehde's name, it must have done something to me. I must have put the name and the man together, automatically assumed it was Lehde I saw outside, told myself it must have been he, who else could it be?"

"George, you told the truth as you saw it."

"Martha, listen. All these years, I wondered, and sometimes it drove me crazy. Had I really seen Lehde outside the window? Had I? Had I? I don't know, I'd been so sure, but there was this germ of doubt in me somewhere, and I never could quite kill it. And when I heard Lehde's name mentioned, or remembered about him, I got a little sick with the doubt of it. I don't know how many times I thought of going to the police and saying, 'Look, maybe I was wrong. Maybe I've made a horrible mistake.' But I didn't have the courage, Martha. I didn't have the courage."

"Why didn't you tell me about this?"

"How could I? How could I talk to anyone about it? It's the kind of thing a man has to carry alone, Martha."

"Yes," she said quietly. "I think I know what you mean, George."

And he was saying brokenly, "Martha, I sent a man to prison for ten years. An innocent man. I cheated him out of ten years of his life, and ruined his family. What can I do to make it up to them? I can see that they have all the money they'll ever need, I can see that they'll never be in want again. But it'll never be enough, Martha. It's a debt I can never really pay, no matter what I do. How do you pay a man for a part of his life you've stolen?"

He buried his head in her shoulder wearily, in his anguish and his guilt, and she said, "George, George, it will be all right, everything will be all right. Because you are not alone in your pain, I am here to share it with you. And this is the important thing. Together, and not alone." END over the cervix. This assures that the semen stays in place and also affords a measure of protection against a vaginal secretion which might be of a hostile nature. Some successes have been reported from this method.

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

"Another way is to dilute the seminal fluid with warm salt solution and inject it by means of a syringe into the cervical canal above its internal mouth. By this method it is assured that the solution reaches the interior of the uterine cavity and possibly even that of the Fallopian tubes. There is no question but that success can be obtained in a certain percentage of cases by this means, and there seems to be no ethical or legal objection. The physician is merely lending Nature a hand."

"And you will try this method for us?"

"I promise you that I'll try the last two mentioned repeatedly, if necessary."

"Thank you, Doctor. Thank you, so much." END

CAN THIS CHILD BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 77

wined his feet and arms around the chimney o he wouldn't tumble to the ground. Whenver the poor kid dozed off, his feet would ip and rake the shingles—scratch-scratch—nd that was the sound I'd heard. I looked t Jimmy clinging there—alone and so panetic—and for a moment I thought my heart ould break. Afterward he told me that he ad climbed a tree to the roof. He thought e could get in the attic window from the oof, but he couldn't.

"Now that's just not right," said Mrs. Robson. "No father should so frighten a younger that he's afraid to enter his own home. ver since Miller was discharged from the rmy—Jimmy was nine then—he has been ghting with the boy. Even when Jimmy was orn, Miller didn't act cocky and proud like he average man. Jimmy came along barely en months after our marriage, and that, in is dad's opinion, was far too soon. The day e fetched us from the hospital Miller frankly old me we should have postponed starting our mily, that both he and I should have kept n working until we had saved enough to ake a down payment on a house.

"When Jimmy was little we hadn't the oney to buy a house or anything else. mmy's baby clothes were hand-me-downs. did buy a pretty layette which I charged at a eighborhood store. Miller promptly returned e layette and got a few rags to cover our baby begging worn-out things from his older sters. That's the kind of husband and father is. Stingy, unreasonable, incessantly comaining.

"The three of us lived in a furnished room, nd I had an awful time keeping it tidy. The oom was so cramped and ugly that cleaning ardly seemed worth the effort. Miller never ook that fact into consideration. Nor when he bjected to my cooking did he reflect that he dn't provide me with the money to buy tasty od. To this day, my grocery allowance is tiful. It almost kills Miller to part with cash. s been months since he has given Jimmy a in dime.

"The best times Jimmy ever had were during e years his dad was stationed overseas," dered Mary Robinson. "My mother opened boardinghouse for aircraft workers and the y and I moved in there. I took a war job d my mother looked after Jimmy in addi- to taking care of eighteen boarders. othing Jimmy could do was wrong in his andma's eyes. In no time he had her wound ound his little finger. I recall the September was six and supposed to start in school. s grandma took him to the school every orning for a week and each morning he uld burst into tears and she would lead n home with her. Finally one of the teachers ught on to what was happening and she conced Jimmy that school was a good idea. ter that, for a long while he seemed to enjoy studies. His teachers sent good reports on n, except once in a while they would write d ask me to come to the school and discuss fact that Jimmy was fighting and showing too much. I never had the time to go. And sides, it seemed to me that disciplining mmy was the teachers' business.

JIMMY was always big for his age. Soon became bold. His grandmother and I considered his cockiness kind of cute. Most of the arders agreed with us. They, too, made a of him. Money was free in those days and boarders used to pay Jimmy for any little ng he did for them. I guess his grandmother s responsible; she paid him too. I remember evening in particular when Jimmy went to corner drugstore and bought one of the rders a newspaper. He received a dollar. dollar was too much, of course, but I don't pose Jimmy thought so. As a little tyke he s used to having quite a sizable amount of ney in his pocket.

There were dozens of kids living near the rdinghouse, and Jimmy was a regular g among them. He would visit the other ngsters at his pleasure and often he would his supper with them. Afterward he would t the crowd—as many as six or seven youngsters—to ice-cream cones and candy. One time he stayed all night with a schoolmate and forgot to telephone his grandmother. She and I were worried sick until he turned up in the morning. That time I had to scold him.

"I hated to scold Jimmy and I seldom did," Jimmy's mother admitted. "I worked the night shift and I had little chance to see my son. Consequently when we could be together I liked to see that he had fun. If I wasn't working on a Saturday he and I would go into the city and spend most of the day at the movies. We would go from one theater to the next and Jimmy would pay both of our admissions from the money I put in his hand. Jimmy loved to be my escort. Those Saturdays were wonderful to him.

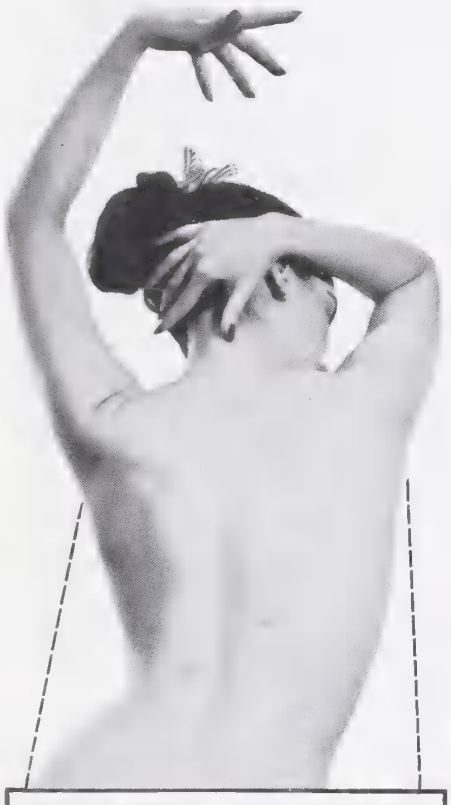
"Our Saturdays ended when Miller came home," Mrs. Robinson said flatly. "Everything changed for Jimmy. We moved out of my mother's house and he had to leave behind his friends and playmates and enter a different school. Miller at last had accumulated the savings to buy a house. The house he bought was in a nice neighborhood, but it needed a new roof, new floors, new plaster, new everything. The upstairs wasn't finished at all. There was no bedroom for Jimmy; there was just an open space in the attic. Miller promised he would wall in a bedroom for our boy, but so far he hasn't.

"When our twin girls were born," said she, "Miller built them a pleasant bedroom in the attic quick enough. Jimmy pretended he didn't care, but I'm sure he did care and still does care. In fact, I think jealousy is the main reason he isn't fond of his little sisters. When I brought the two babies from the hospital Jimmy wouldn't even look at them. His father had to drag him to their bedroom and force him to look in the crib. Miller is partial to our

Love Letters

By some kind of magic (magic that spans time and distance) words whisper on this gently-tinted, sheer-as-organdy letter paper. To be had in several beautiful boxes, for yourself, for gifts . . . but always the same paper, the envelopes strewn with tiny moss roses. All five tints, $2; a single favorite color, $1; two-tint combination, $1.50.

If your quest be beauty



EATON'S

FINE LETTER PAPERS

EATON PAPER CORPORATION PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

NEW!
DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

Safely stops odor 24 hours a day!

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—New MUM won't dry out in the jar.

NEW MUM®
cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3 girls. Personally, I believe Jimmy might be a better boy if he had a better and more loving father."

HIS FATHER'S STORY:

"So far as I'm concerned, Jimmy has been bad news from the first," said Miller Robinson, a harried-looking man whose pale indoor complexion combined oddly with his truculent air. He had broad, powerful shoulders, and was about the same height as his tall, gangling son. "Mary and I got married in the midst of the depression—both our families were on relief—and my ambition was for us to work and save and rise a little in the world. I was only twenty when I married, but I did have a few dollars in the bank I'd managed to hide out from my father. Jimmy's birth picked me clean. I even had to sell my jalopy in order to settle the hospital expenses.

"Until Jimmy was a year old and I got another secondhand car I walked two miles back and forth to my job. And when I walked in home, believe me, I found no comfort. Mary was young and as husky as a horse, but she would neither work at a job nor at being a wife and mother. She would be lying on the bed complaining of a headache or a backache or some other kind of ache while Jimmy lay in the crib I built for him—I don't suppose she told you I built all his baby furniture out of scrap lumber—and he would be screaming with colic or with hunger. Much as his mother claimed she loved the baby, she was too lazy to bestir herself to look after him and clean up our place. My parents were so poor they often sat in the dark to save electricity, but my mother believed in using soap and water. Not so Mary.

"One evening I remember I came in and stumbled over a pail of diapers that should have been washed and hanging on the line the day before. Furthermore, supper wasn't cooking on the stove. Indeed, there wasn't a scrap of food on the premises. Mary, who had just breezed in, had spent the grocery money going to the movies. I got so mad I grabbed the pail of diapers and tossed the whole works down the air shaft.

"Jimmy was walking by then and I guess he took fright. Anyway, he ran and hid behind her skirts and I pulled him away from her and gave him a first-class spanking. Maybe I should have restrained my temper, but I simply couldn't help blowing up. That particular trick of Jimmy's has always made me see red—the way he plainly shows his preference for his mother and reacts to me as though I were a devil with horns. No wonder I take more pleasure in the twins. My little girls climb on my lap occasionally and put their arms around me and show they love me.

"Jimmy doesn't care a row of pins for me. Neither he nor his mother cares how hard I work or how sick I feel most of the time. I'm trying now to save my money so I can buy a small electrical-repair shop someday and be my own boss and work easier hours. Then maybe my nerves will ease off and my health may improve. At seven in the morning I report to work and I don't reach home until five in the afternoon. By then I'm all fagged out and more often than not my plaguy stomach is kicking up.

"So when I get home I like to relax and take a nap. Naturally five o'clock is the exact hour Jimmy, who gets home from school at three o'clock, used to choose to practice on his clarinet. One afternoon about a year ago when he was tootling away practically at my bedroom door I rushed out and broke his clarinet over my knee. That was the last of his being in the school band. Ever since the kid has had it in for me and Mary has called me selfish and unreasonable.

"Jimmy is a big strong kid and I could use his help around the house. I certainly don't get it. Unless you call it helpful for Jimmy to borrow my tools for projects of his own and leave them scattered everywhere. Last Saturday I was on a ladder painting the shutters and I called on him to lend me a hand. He refused to stir unless I agreed to pay him seventy-five cents an hour. By the time I jumped off the ladder to show him what I thought of that attitude, he was out of the yard and gone.

"Jimmy won't do anything for me or his mother either unless he is paid in cold cash. He got the habit of thinking his smallest services should be rewarded while I was gone during the war. His grandma spoiled him rotten and so did her boarders. Jimmy was sorry to see me come back from overseas, as he didn't hesitate to announce. While I was away I'd sort of pictured a new deal for the boy and the wife and myself. I supposed Jimmy would enjoy living in his own home and I'd pictured us sharing a workshop and my teaching him carpentry and stuff. Instead the boy kicked like a steer at the idea of moving away from his grandma.

"Jimmy claims he would like a room of his own, and in the beginning I planned just that for him. There is still plenty of unused space in our attic. I wouldn't object to building a room for the kid, provided he was willing to cooperate. Darned if I will pay him laborer's wages for his help, and that is what he is demanding.

"Any Saturday the weather is fine and he is in the mood Jimmy can earn five or six dollars caddying at the golf course. I don't ask him what he does with that money. When I was his age and working at odd jobs I had to turn in every penny to my dad. Why should I give Jimmy a dollar and a quarter for a haircut? The last time he wheedled the dollar and a quarter from me he came back from the barber with one of those 'duck-bill' jobs; his hair was still so long you couldn't tell he'd been within a mile of scissors. If I buy him a suit of clothes, he takes no care of it. He slops around and tears the pants or else he snags the coat or has some other calamity. Then, without permission, he borrows my good suit—I do take care of my clothes in spite of the bedlam in our house—and he uses my good suit as badly as his own.

"When I get mad you can hear me yelling for blocks around," said Miller Robinson. "But, truthfully, my bark is worse than my bite. When I order Jimmy to get out of the house, I don't half mean what I'm saying. It's nerves speaking. It's my stomach speaking. I don't intend for Jimmy to feel he has to stay away from his home for hours on end. In five or ten minutes I've usually cooled off and am sorry I sent him packing. There's no cause for him to be afraid of me the way Mary insists he is.

"Jimmy should have had a father like my old man," said Miller Robinson with sudden bitterness, "and then he would be in a position to realize how lucky he is. My dad thought nothing of clouting me with anything that happened to be in reach. Once I was chopping wood in the back yard and I didn't chop to suit him and he threw a heavy log that knocked me to the ground. Then he kicked me until our next-door neighbor stopped him by threatening to call the cops.

"I can still see myself as a kid younger than Jimmy running out of our house with my father yelling bloody murder and right at my heels. There was a big advertising signboard across the street. I would race for the signboard and I would shinny up the back like a monkey and then lie stretched along the top peeping down at my old man scurrying around below in search of me. And my heart would bang with fear and my stomach would tie itself in knots and hurt almost as much as it hurts now.

"That's the way I was raised," said Jimmy's father in conclusion. "And yet I wasn't picked up by the police for breaking street lamps and school windows and destroying stuff. I think kids these days have it too soft."

LEGACY IN BRASS

By JESSIE FARNHAM

My mother's beehive candlesticks
Were wrought of burnished brass,
How patiently she polished them
As bright as looking glass.

How often I was witness to
This furbishing routine,
So beautifully the facets caught
The sun as though to preen.

But far more lovely when her hand
Touched candle tips with flame,
Her eyes gave back the golden light
While shadow formed a frame.

Then as she moved away it seemed
The shadows somehow parted
As though the light would go with her
Whatever path she charted.

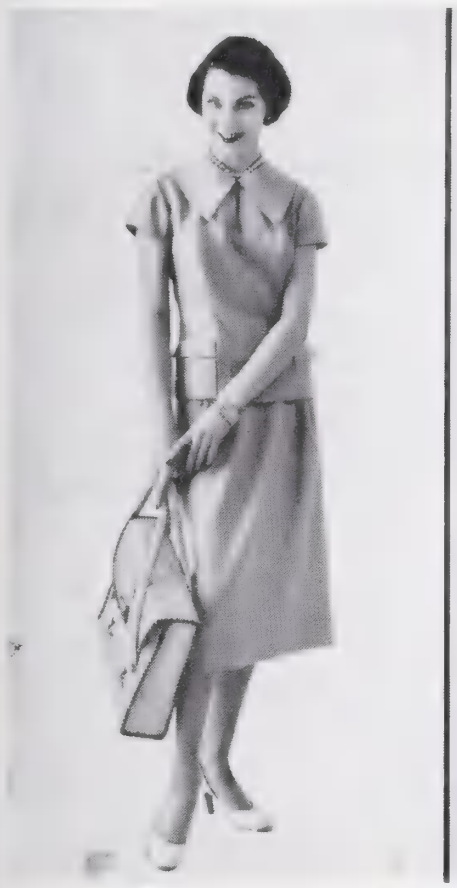
Though some may doubt that brass can hold
Such magic in its base,
Each time I light her candlesticks
I see my mother's face.

THE COURT'S STORY:

"Jimmy was a difficult youngster to work with," said the probation officer to whom Judge Smyth assigned the case. "The boy had been rejected by his father and neglected by his mother and in the process he had acquired a deep suspicion of adults. At fourteen he was in active rebellion against any kind of authority. Drawing on his long experience and his personal knowledge of Jimmy gained by numerous interviews, Judge Smyth advised me to proceed cautiously and tactfully.

"Jimmy was typical of many of the boys who appear before our court, although he came from a higher-than-average economic level.

"Miller Robinson was a skilled electrical worker who, after well-remembered hard times, was earning about $7000 a year. Jimmy and his father were strikingly alike in appearance and personality; their similarities—the stubbornness, the quick temper and nervous disposition they shared—undoubtedly accounted for some of their clashes. The battles that sent Jimmy to the street, of course, drove him straight into the company of bad companions—unhappy, foot-loose boys like himself. Furthermore, Jimmy carried away from a materialistic home neither ideals nor adequate moral standards.



"His mother loved him in an aimless sort of way, but she took no physical care of the boy and she seemed to be incapable of thinking about his ultimate welfare. While her husband was in the Army, Mary Robinson had allowed her son to run completely wild. Endowed with too much money, he had become a 'big shot' among the neighborhood small fry, and his cockiness was a good deal less admirable than his mother and grandmother imagined. In this period, the judge believes, the foundations for his future misdeeds were laid.

"During his father's absence Jimmy occupied a cot in his mother's room, and, at the age of nine, regarded himself as the man of the family. When Miller Robinson returned and the living arrangements were revised, Jimmy turned sulky and defiant. Miller Robinson was not a man of insight. How could he understand the inchoate resentments and jealousies of a little boy who had been exiled from his place in the sun? Or fathom his distaste for a new family home where his sleeping quarters were a drafty and unfinished attic?

